Get the sinners under the sound of the word, and the worse they are, oftentimes, the more does God love to display the greatness of His grace in casting down the power of their sin. Believe great things of God. I can honestly say this—that since God saved me I never doubted His power to save anybody. All things are possible now that He has brought me to His feet, and kept me these years as His loving child. I must think great things of God who has done such great things for so great a sinner as I am.

Christ Himself shall come: be you looking for Him every day, but be constant in his service, working for Him every hour. Believe, too, that He shall reign among His ancients gloriously, and where amid Judea's glades Christ has been dishonored and the false prophet has ruled, there too shall He reign, and Jew and Gentile shall worship and adore His ever-blessed name. I say again, magnify the Lord with all your souls. Greaten God. Expect great things in the future, and with the cheery note of confidence go forward to battle for him whose is the victory for ever and ever.

V. Once more, and I have done. Our text should be used as

A GUIDE IN OUR THEOLOGY.

We will finish with that. Here is a very useful test for young disciples who are beginning to study God's word. "My soul doth magnify the Lord." If you will carry this with you it will often save you from error, and guide you into truth. There is a certain teaching which makes a great deal of man: it talks much of man's free-will, ability, capacity, and natural dignity. It evidently makes man the centre and end of all things, and God is placed in a position of service to his creature.

Dear brethren, let those have this theology who like it, but do not touch it even with a pair of tongs. It is of no use to man, for it mistakes his position, and only ministers to his pride. Man's place is not on the throne, but at the foot of the cross. Listen to another theology, in which the sinner is laid low, his sinfulness is exposed, his corruption is unfolded, Christ's redemption is magnified, free grace is extolled, and the Holy Ghost is adored. That is the theology for you, believe it: that is the theology of the Scriptures, accept it. I do not think that you will often be led wrong if this be your mode of judgment: that which glorifies God is true, and that which does not glorify God is false.

Sometimes you will meet with an undoubted teaching of God's word which you do not understand. You know that the doctrine is taught in the word, but you cannot make it coincide with some other truth, and you cannot quite see, perhaps, how it glorifies God. Then, dear brother, dear sister, glorify God by believing it. To believe a doctrine which you see to be true by mere reason is nothing very wonderful. There is no very great glory to God in believing what is as clear as the sun in the heavens; but to believe a truth when it staggers you—oh, gracious faith! oh, blessed faith!

You will perhaps remember an illustration taken from Mr. Gough, where the little boy says, "If mother says it is so, it is so if it is not so." That is the kind of believing for a child toward its mother, and that is the sort of believing we ought to exercise toward God. I do not see the fact, and I cannot quite apprehend it, but God says it is so, and I believe Him.

If all the philosophers in the world should contradict the Scriptures, so much the worse for the philosophers; their contradiction makes no difference to our faith. Half a grain of God's word weighs more with us than a thousand tons of words or thoughts of all the modern theologians, philosophers, and scientists that exist on the face of the earth; for God knows more about his own works than they do. They do but think, but the Lord knows.

So, then, I come back to where I started. Let us go forth and practically try to magnify the name of the Lord. Go home and speak well of His name: gather your children together and tell them what a good and great God He has been. Some of you who have a swarm of youngsters could not do better than spend half an hour in telling them of His goodness to you in all your times of trouble. Leave to your children the heirloom of gratitude. Tell them how good the Lord was to their father, and how good He will be to His children: tell your servants, tell your work-people, tell anybody with whom you come in contact what a blessed God the Lord is. For my part, I never can speak well enough of His adorable name. He is the best of masters, His service is delight; He is the best of fathers, His commands are pleasure. Was there ever such a god as our God, our enemies themselves being judges?

Magnify His name by the brightness of your countenances. Rejoice and be glad in Him. When you are in sorrow and must needs fast, yet appear not unto men to fast, but anoint your faces and still wear a smile. Let not the world think that the servants of a king go mourning all their days. Make the world feel what a great God you serve, and what a blessed Saviour Christ is, and thus evermore let your soul magnify the Lord. God grant you grace to do so, for Jesus' sake. Amen.

[Portion of Scripture read before Sermon—PSALM 34.]

[The prayers of the readers of this Journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors in America and England, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and for its weekly circulation of more than 165,000 copies to be blessed by the Holy Spirit to the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Mr. Spurgeon and Dr. Talmage especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

TWO COUNTRY GIRLS IN LONDON.

THE great value of the Homes for Friendless and Fallen Young Women in London was demonstrated recently in the case of two girls who arrived there from a distant country village: a case in which the help came in its best form—that of prevention, in all ways so much better than cure. They were the daughters of a poor widow, who had been left with no other means for her support but the rent of two small houses which only realized about $250 a year.

The widow's daughters had received no education after the death of their father but such as the mother was able to impart. They had been reared carefully, in that pure and strengthening atmosphere of the home from which was excluded that knowledge of the outside world so coveted by young people of both sexes, and which, when obtained, so often brings sorrow and shame. When they attained the ages respectively of fifteen and seventeen, the question arose how they should support themselves, and it was finally decided that they should be placed in a milliner's work-room. The places were obtained, but the remuneration was so small that it barely sufficed to provide clothing for them.

While engaged in this occupation, they made the acquaintance of a woman who had once lived in London, and who dazzled the imagination of the girls by glowing accounts of life in the great city, and the salaries to be obtained there. They soon became dissatisfied with their manner of life, and resolved to "try their fortunes" in London. With great misgiving and with many tears, the widowed mother yielded a reluctant consent to the scheme, scarcely realizing what she was doing, and not aware that there is no solitude like the solitude of a great city.

The girls packed their scanty wardrobe, bade a tender farewell to their mother, and with high spirits set out for the vast unknown city. One evening they found themselves standing unknown in a hurrying crowd, on the railroad platform at Paddington terminus. A more desolate position can scarcely be imagined; they saw their fellow-passengers departing to their destinations, while with sinking hearts they realized their utter loneliness. This was London, but where to go or what to do, they knew not. At length a railroad porter, seeing their bewilderment, approached them, and finding out something of the position, sympathetically directed them to a place where they might obtain cheap lodging for the night.

The next day began their quest for employment. The history of that day was one of successive disappointments and humiliations. Their country dress and manners were not appreciated by the business men who had been raised amid the artificial ways and hardening influences of city life, so with more or less brusqueness the girls received from each employer a decided refusal. Their friend in the country had dwelt on the glories of Regent Street as the Eldorado of milliners, and to this street they directed their steps, applying as they went, at places where there seemed to be some prospect of success. They reached Regent Street about three in the afternoon, and found it crowded with the equipages of the aristocracy, with fashionably-dressed ladies passing to and from their carriages to places of business, grander than they had ever conceived of. They were afraid even to apply at stores so magnificent, and agreed to postpone further application till next day, and to try in some more humble locality.

In a dreamy, bewildered state of mind they wandered up and down that wonderful street for hours, until it became dark and the street lamps were lit. Still they walked on, admiring the windows and the finery displayed there. At length they turned eastward, and were soon in a crowd of persons unlike any they had ever seen. Dressed like ladies, these were talking and laughing loudly, and their bold and impudent demeanor astonished the two strangers. Becoming alarmed at their position, they turned into a side street, and there in the comparative quiet breathed more freely.

They were tired and unable to find their way to their resting-place of last night, and seeing in a window a card with the announcement that a room was to let within, they applied for it. A look of surprise showed itself on the face of the woman who answered their knock, but on receiving the rent for one day in advance, she inducted them into an attic bedroom, in which they could rest their weary limbs.

After an hour or two spent in conversation, they received a visit in their room from a showily dressed female, who had received from her servant a description of the new lodgers. She was one of those wicked women who make a trade out of the fall of their sisters, and when she saw the two simple country girls her busy brain speedily concocted a scheme to effect their ruin and fill her own purse.

An invitation to supper was given and gladly accepted, and the two girls readily descended to a lower room, where a meal was laid. Other girls like those they had met in the street were there, and with them men, whose jokes and laughter filled the room with merriment. Instinctively the girls shrank from the scene, and when one of the men advanced to welcome "the new acquisition to the circle," and attempted to embrace the younger of them, they turned to make their escape. They rushed into the street, resolved if they were followed to appeal for protection to the police.

Near the door a man stood distributing invitations to a midnight meeting, who, seeing the excited state of the two girls, unbonneted and excited, hurriedly leaving the house, addressed them kindly. He heard their story, and succeeded in obtaining, with the aid of the police, the garments they had left behind; he conducted them to the well-known mission house in which Baptist Noel and other eminent philanthropists took so lively an interest. There they were welcomed with true pleasure, and cared for by the sympathetic matron. After a few days spent in that quiet shelter they returned to their village home, thankful for their escape from the dangers they had encountered, and disillusioned as to the delights of City life.

PROPHECY OF THE FOUR LOCUSTS.

THE REV. J. BENNETT, at the Centenary Hall prayer-meeting on January 15th, in his address remarked on Joel 2:25: "And I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, the cankerworm, and the caterpillar, and the palmerworm, my great army which I sent among you." There is no doubt, I believe, that those are four kinds of locusts. According to the original they denote this — the gnawing locust, the multiplying locust, the licking locust, and the devouring locust—four different kinds of plagues, acting in four different ways. I believe it is generally admitted that in these four locusts you have an allusion to the four different empires which have trodden down Israel from the time of Nebuchadnezzar to the present day—Babylon, Persia, Greece, Rome. I have seen it stated, and, I think, proved, by an eminent Hebraist who is now gone, that in these four words for the four locusts you have an allusion to the number of years during which each power actually trod down Jerusalem. Most of you know that in Hebrew every letter has a numerical signification. They had no numbers, therefore they used their letters for numbers, and if you take the sum total of the numerical value of the letters in the first locust, you will find the exact number of years during which Babylon trod down Jerusalem. And so on with the other three locusts. I do not think that can be a mere coincidence; and it seems to me we have there God's statement concerning his people Israel in regard to the future. They have been oppressed, but the hour is coming when He will administer blessing in the Millennium. Such will be their blessing in days to come that it will be like restoring all the years during which they have been trampled under foot.

ANTICHRIST—TYPE AND ANTITYPE

By the Rev. Francis Gell, M.A.

Importance of the Inquiry—Anticipated by t Early Church—St. John's Warning as "Many Antichrists"—Triple Sigificance of t Word "Antichrist"—The Last Antichrist Apostate—The Diabolic Trinity—Probal Time of Antichrist's Appearance—The Myste of Iniquity a Parody of the Mystery of God The Church's Escape.

IT is not a little remarkable, as a sign of t last days, that the great question in all propheti inquiry—that on which all systems of prophe cal interpretation turn—is the same as it was the very first age—"Who or what is A christ?" In 1 John 2:18 the term is used i way which shows that in the apostle's lifeti this question had been eagerly debated. " have heard that THE Antichrist (see Gre should come; even now there are many A christs."

A new dispensation had dawned on th Was it to be the last? These and such questi were keenly debated among the inter-commu cating churches, as the inspired letters of great apostles passed from one to another, fore the canon of the New Testament was f formed. They had apparently come to the c clusion that the various forms of evil w soon consummate in a person; and though clearer revelations of the Apocalypse were before them then, they had, no doubt, pi together scattered fragments of prophetic tr inspired and uninspired, till an erroneous chatology had arisen, which St. John now w —as the survivor of the apostolic band correct.

Very solemnly does the aged divine warn churches that it was, indeed, in which he was then writing; i.e., that no ther proof was to be afforded of what fallen is, and will do.

THE LAST DISPENSATION,

My dear children, he says, it is indeed the time or dispensation; and it is true, as ye heard, that Antichrist should come. Bu not let your expectation of the last Antic deceive you into supposing there is but There is one, indeed, as brother Paul hath who shall come last, and who shall mar most fully and perfectly all the evil prin that ever have or ever will range thems against the Lord Jesus; but even now thos principles are manifested in many form persons.

St. John had to designate those who lapsed into the doctrinal Gnostic errors o own time; but in so doing he laid dow method for detecting the Antichrists of t ture. Denial of some part of the work Lord Jesus Christ, or depravation of His pe is whatever may be the guise in which it c and however it may be recommended by th cerity or religious zeal of those who intr it. Therefore, he concludes, hold fast wh have heard from the beginning.

THE ESSENCE OF ALL ANTICHRISTIAN

There is no progress in theology, no the development, and no truth in any system denies the absolute perfection of the reve already given. Abide, abide, ABIDE in that when He shall appear we may have dence and not be ashamed before Him coming.

But while the Apostle directs the minds disciples to the prevailing forms of christianism at that time, and points them from the last Antichrist, in the then far he does not lead us to doubt that all early of Antichrist led on to the grand final festation of him, now so near. As in the dom of good, first the blade, then the ear the full corn in the ear; so in the king evil: Gnosticism, "the blade;" Popery ear," Infidelity, "the full corn in the ear." more and more clearly in the course of ti innate tendencies of things intensify; so in almost the closing sentences of Revelat read. "He that is lawless let him be lawless still or still more lawless; he which is filthy let him be still more filthy; he that is righteous, shall be still more righteous; and he that is holy, shall be still more holy."

It is not without deep and awful meaning that we hear that the word "Antichrist" carries within itself which covers these varied manifestations. Antichrist is first the "Adversary of Christ." In this sense it applies, as St. John uses it, to all who are, or ever have been, in opposition to the Gospel. Secondly, it means "instead of Christ." In this sense it fits, at once, with singular exactness, the head of that great masterpiece of Satan who blasphemously denotes himself the Vicar of Christ on earth, thereby arrogating the office of the Blessed Spirit.

A TRIPLE SIGNIFICATION,

Thirdly, the word Antichrist means a false Christ, who withstands Christ (see Alford in loco) and in this sense it points unmistakably beyond the pope, as the representation of all false sacerdotalism, to one who shall not only pretend to be the Vicar or representative on earth of Christ in heaven, but who shall himself claim as the pope has never done, to be himself the Christ. He will be invested with all the miracle-working deceivableness and incarnate power of the son of perdition who opposeth, and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; sitting, not in a so-called Christian Church at Rome, but in the Temple of God at Jerusalem, showing himself that he is God.

Now, in studying attentively that word in which there is nothing superfluous and nothing insignificant, we find a deep intention in the fact that the very word used in 2 Thess. 2 : 3 to describe the last Antichrist, is used by our Lord (John 17 : 12) as the description of the first—namely, Judas Iscariot. It would appear that in the betrayer of Jesus we see an apostate follower of the Lord Jesus Christ who, having possessed himself of the purse of the Church (he bore the bag and stole what was put therein—John 12 : 6), stimulated by covetousness, which is Idolatry, and by carnal ambition, sat down with our Lord at the Holy Supper.

THE TRUE TYPE OF THE ANTICHRIST:

If this be so, the anxious inquiry of the disciples as to who it was to be who should betray Him, finds its antitype in the eager inquiry of the Church as to who is to be the final Antichrist. Simon Peter, as spokesman of their [illegible] anxious to know, and unable to discover without some special sign from Jesus, beckons the disciple whom Jesus loved, to ask Him. He then, lying back upon that bosom till he could whisper his inquiry unheard by the disciples, asks, "Lord, who is it?"

A sign is given full of significance to us: connecting the action of the betrayer, as the first Antichrist, with the Lord's Supper. This sign is privately given to that disciple who has ever represented all who lie closest to the bosom of their Lord, all loving, leaning, listening souls. Then, privately also, to Judas himself, by assent to a question unheard by the rest, the Lord intimated that he knew his plans, giving him the sop, which signified special regard, to fulfil Psalm 42.

Immediately after that, the devil, that old serpent, enters into full possession of the traitor's heart, affording an acted parable for all after times.

THE MYSTERIOUS CONNECTION between the supper and his entire possession by Satan, indicated by the words "after the sop," giving him to do quickly that which he had probably determined to do conditionally—"he went out"—here the open apostacy from the Church, of the last Antichrist is shown—"and it was night"—here the terrible darkness, moral and spiritual, of that world into which he went out. Night prophetically, as well as in his own soul, and in the outer world.

Now the earthly life of Jesus, as has been seen by several deep students of Scripture, is the type of the temporal history of His body the Church. "As He was, so are we in this world" (see John 4 : 17). If so, what do we find? One who had eaten the meat of God with Him lifted up his heel against Him. And so it will be at last. A baptized man, in full communion, but filled with the covetousness which is idolatry, at length fully possessed by Satan, and driven on beyond his own intentions by that terrible possession into becoming the betrayer, with the kiss of hollow peace, of Christ's mystical body.

He will be one who knows the places where they resort, and who offers the mockery of a false reverence ("Hail! Master"), while he comes backed by all the evil secular powers of the Church and the world to betray them to a cruel death. In this false apostle, then, we find the FIRST of a long series of Antichrists, shadowing out some aspects of the nature, the methods, and the end of him who shall be the LAST.

But it has been observed that the true key to unlock the mystery of the last Antichrist is to be found in the antagonistic resemblance he must bear to that Divine nature of which he is the great opponent. For as in Scripture the nature of God is revealed in three persons, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, so the powers of evil have

A THREEFOLD MANIFESTATION.

First, that old serpent, the Dragon: the "liar from the beginning"—Satan, the Devil of Rev. 20 : 2. Second, the false prophet or religious teacher of lies. And third, the personal incarnation of evil, the Man of Sin.

Of the first person in this diabolic trinity I will not now speak, except to say that he seems frequently confounded with the second and third in the writings of men; though clearly discriminated from them in the book of God (see Rev. 20 : 10; 16 : 13), where all three persons together are finally seen cast into the lake of fire to be tormented day and night for ever.

The second person in the Satanic parallel of the Holy Trinity must be sought for in some continuous antichristian action in usurpation of the functions of the Holy Spirit in the Church of Christ. For this we have not far to seek; for the very essence of the universal system of sacerdotalism which finds its chief head in Papal Rome, is this claiming for a man on earth—or rather for a succession of men—the functions of the Holy Spirit, as the executive on earth, by application to the individual conscience of the work which the great High Priest is conducting in heaven.

The false prophet of Rome assumes these offices. Usurping and misappropriating the gift, she claims to be the dispenser or withholder of all the benefits of the death of Christ, by giving the Holy Spirit to her priests, and planting them between the Saviour and the sinner, in the very place of the Holy Spirit, diabolic wickedness, indeed, the perpetration of which has entailed on its successive representatives the guilt of destroying a hecatomb of souls.

But this usurpation can only last till He, the great High Priest, comes out at last, from the Holiest, to bless His people. Then that imposture must be exploded for ever. And then, as I suppose, in anticipative opposition, by false imitation of the ways of God (which is the key to all satanic manifestation), then, before the day of Christ's coming to judge the inhabitants of the world for their iniquity, will appear upon the earth in the shadows of her darkest night, and amid the tribulations of her last days, the last and greatest and

WICKEDEST OF ALL THE ANTICHRISTS.

A very religious man! But though he can work miracles in co-operation with the false prophet (Rev. 19 : 20), they shall be wrought to destroy the supreme authority of the Word of God, and to deceive all "whose names are not written in the Book of the Lamb's life."

As to the time when He shall appear, may God forbid that we should with an unhallowed confidence speak of those times and seasons which are in the sole power of God; but I incline to believe that it will be between the first appearance of Christ in heaven with a shout with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God, suddenly and unexpectedly unheeded by the world, to steal away His Church "like a thief in the night," and the second act of the Second Advent when "He shall come in flaming fire to take vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of His dear Son;" when the Man of Sin shall have fully and adequately fulfilled, 2 Thess. 2 : 4, and Dan. 11 : 36–45 (as the King of Babylon), as Lucifer, (Isa. 14), the Wilful King (Dan. 11), the "Beast" of Rev. 13; the number of whose name is 666, having falsely imitated the King of Glory in each act of His divine procedure as Incarnate Lord.

As the great Mystery of Godliness is God manifest in the flesh, so the great Mystery of Ungodliness will be

SATAN MANIFEST IN THE FLESH.

A man, heading up and developing to their ultimate issues all the false principles of previous antichrists, papal or infidel, in one gigantic form of evil; fit antitype of that typical man of whom the Lord said, "it were good for that man that he had never been born."

The intimate association between the sacerdotal or papal, and the infidel or atheistic Antichrist, is revealed in Rev. 17 : 4, where the scarlet-colored beast or form of life, full of names of blasphemy, carries that drunken whore on whose forehead is written "Mystery, Babylon the Great, Mother of Harlots, and Abominations of the Earth," in the seven-hilled city of Rome—indicating that the last Antichrist must, at first, be in the professing Church, as Judas was, and for a while support it. But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse.

As the tragedy of sin rolls on to its consummation, that spirit which now worketh in the children of disobedience, unhindered by the grieved and departed Spirit of God, unpurified by the salt of the Church, shall pervade all institutions of government, all avenues of knowledge, all sources of power. Man shall make his last effort to be happy without God! Ensnaring and irresistible delusions shall spread their wiles on every path, while demon-worship prepares men's minds to worship the Man of Sin himself. Hero-worship shall culminate in Devil-worship, and intellect divorced from goodness shall rise supreme. A terrible vision of that time to which we are rapidly hastening fills the mind, for these things have begun to come to pass.

But where is the dove?

(Canticles 6 : 9). She has gone, undefiled, to her rest in the clefts of the rock. Though she lay long among the potsherds, yet suddenly her wings are covered with silver and her feathers with yellow gold! There! winging her upward way, far from the uproar of this distracted earth, to the heaven of her Saviour's presence; they who "have kept the word of Christ's patience" (Rev. 3 : 10) "are kept from the hour of temptation which shall come upon all the world, to try them which dwell upon the earth." Like the primitive Christians from the heights of Pella, they hear the rumors of that destruction, from which they have been by faith in Christ's word, themselves delivered. Even so, come, Lord Jesus!

The Revised New Testament.—It having been stated that the revised edition of the New Testament, soon to appear, will be sold at advanced rates to cover the expenses of revision, the reply is made on authority that the entire expenses of the English revisers have been assumed by the University presses, in return for the exclusive right of printing the revision. The expenses of the American revisers are paid by voluntary subscriptions, and none of the revisers expects any compensation. Therefore, it will be unnecessary to raise the price of the revised edition for the reimbursement of the revisers. There will be no copyright of the book in this country.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 79.)

The Wanderer's Return.

THE conversation between Mrs. Cilfford and Mrs. Britton having turned upon Rose and her father's treatment of her, the two ladies settled matters with the complacency people generally display when they are criticising the way parents of their acquaintance bring up their families.

Mrs. Clifford paused, and tossed the long lappets of her lace cap behind her shoulders and folded her jewelled hands upon her lap. Her dress was very becoming to her. She would not have looked so well, probably, in a dark stuff gown and common cap; but in a rich violet silk dress, and an abundance of handsome lace about her, she was a very handsome woman, quite worthy of taking a place in London as Ernest Clifford's mother. This was part of her grievance; she might as well have been wearing her costly attire at one of Lady Fortescue's parties, instead of sitting here, with no admiring eyes upon her except Mrs. Britton's and Jenny's.

"Look at my life!" she resumed, "a widow at twenty, with not a penny of my own. No, Mrs. Britton, not a single penny of my own. I was only twenty-six when poor Mr. Clifford married me, and everybody knows what a neglected wife I was after my second son was born. Every thing had to give way to Charles, just as every thing gives way now to Rose. Ernest might take warning!

It was not of the least use remonstrating with Mr. Clifford; he would ruin my poor Charlie. I often think, though, if Charlie had succeeded to his father's estate he would not have forsaken me in my gray hairs. It is going gray, Mrs. Britton; I have counted several gray hairs since they went to London. Charlie was a most affectionate boy, quite different from Ernest, who is always cold and hard. You have noticed how hard and cold Ernest is?"

"A little so; a very little, perhaps," admitted Mrs. Britton guardedly.

"Very cold and hard," pursued Mrs. Clifford; "so different poor Charlie was! Sometimes I think he grudges me having a right to be mistress of Clifford Grange! Ah! it would have been quite the other way if poor Charlie had only been master; he would have been delighted. But it was very wise of my poor dear husband to leave me mistress; for Ruth Symons would have been here before now, and where should I have been? Did you never notice that, Mrs. Britton? Dear, dear! where are your eyes?"

"I never thought of such a thing!" cried Mrs. Britton with warmth; and it was quite true she never had. Ruth Symons was one of her husband's special favorites, a peerless paragon, and Mrs. Britton did not see many attractions in her.

"But I've seen it years ago," said Ernest's mother, shaking her head; "if it had not been for poor Mr. Clifford's will, she would have been mistress here.

OF course Rose knows nothing, and Jenny must not breathe a word about it to her. Ernest goes there two or three times every week, and Rose spends half her time with her. Poor Charlie! he would never have wished to throw his own mother into the background; or gone to London for a season while she was ailing at home. I must say that for Charlie.

"It was very sad to lose him," observed Mrs. Britton.

"Ah! I know what trouble is!" she sighed, "nobody better. And that is just what Rose wants; yes, and Ernest too. He hardly knows what sorrow is. Look at him coming into such a good position, and all through me! Up in London, hand and glove with all kinds of grand people; and me to thank for it all!"

"I can't help blaming him for being ungrateful to you, after you've been such a mother to him!" said Mrs. Britton.

"He never forgave me for marrying again," she went on. "He was only a little boy; but he laid it up against me for a grudge. Yet where would he have been now if I had not married again? He owes every penny he has to me. It isn't as if he inherited from his own father; but he forgets all that! But he inherits through me; and it makes it all the harder for him and Rose to forsake me, and go alone to London."

"And my husband thinks all the world of him!" cried Mrs. Britton, in a tone of suppressed indignation. "I believe he thinks more of his religion than mine!"

"Ah! my dear, they are men," said Mrs. Clifford; "and what men see in one another to have such wonderful friendships, I cannot think. They are a great mystery, Mrs. Britton. I advise Jenny to have nothing to say to them."

"I should love any man that was like my papa," answered Jenny boldly, though with a flushed face, "or like Mr. Clifford."

"Oh, my dear, hush!" cried her mother, in a voice of awe. But Mrs. Clifford only laughed at the girl good-humoredly enough, and called her an innocent simpleton. Mrs. Britton seized the first opportunity to give Jenny a good scolding, reminding her that Mr. Clifford was quite young enough to marry a girl no older than herself if he chose, and his mother would get that notion into her head if they did not take care.

"Then you'll be forbidden the Grange," said Mrs. Britton, as if that would be the worst fate possible for Jenny. But Jenny felt that all her innocent affection and admiration for her father's friend, and her friend Rose's father, had been suddenly nipped by a cruel east wind, and she cried herself to sleep over the idea her mother had just put into her head. So time passed on, and the absentees began to be expected home again.

Twice Ernest fixed the day for returning to Clifford, and twice it was put off at the last moment, after all the preparations had been made for receiving them with a festive welcome. Mrs. Clifford was naturally very much annoyed, though she had partly forgotten her original grievance, and after one or two severe bronchial attacks, had graciously conceded that perhaps Dr. Welsh had been right in prohibiting a London season.

But the prolonged absence of Ernest and Rose was a fresh injury, and their indecision as to the time of their return added fuel to the fire. It was ridiculous to erect arches of evergreens and spring flowers down the village street, and see them wither away in the warm sunshine twice over. "When Ernest and Rose come home now," said Mrs. Clifford, "They must just come like ordinary people—the Brittons for instance."

The second set of decorations were fading fast; the laurels hung limp, and the flowers were shedding their petals, in spite of all the efforts of the village children, who kept them well watered. But they looked bright and gay at a distance, as Julia Rush thought, when she caught sight of them from the cliffs lying between Clifford and Rockwood. The crisis of Squire Symons's illness had long been past, but Julia retained her place as nurse during his slow and fitful recovery from it, and this was the first real holiday she had had since entering upon her duties.

Her long confinement in the squire's sick-room had probably made her more than usually susceptible to the influences of the soft, fresh air, and cheerful sunshine, and gleeful songs of birds. She paused in the cool shadow of the wall under the terrace walk at the Grange to look down on the valley below, with its almost dazzlingly white road stretching up from the bay, and running between green hedgerows till it turned out of sight round the spur of the hill.

The church bells were chiming for evening service, and the clang of the bells sounded up to her ears with a tone of solemn mirth. In Julia's lifetime there had never occurred any occasion for decorating her native village; no coming of age, and no marriage of the heir. But she had heard often of the great rejoicing that had been made when Charles Clifford was born; and the tears started to her black eyes as she looked and listened.

"If it was only for Master Charlie comin' back," she said, aloud, "I'd be almost willin' die."

There was a rustling in the ivy overhe which made her look up quickly, and she s the faces of Mrs. Clifford and Jenny Britton b inquisitively over the wall above her.

"Oh, it's you. Julia!" said Mrs. Clifc "We heard voices, and we wished to see v was there. Why! you must have been talk to yourself!"

"Yes, ma'am; I just said a word or two, maybe you heard 'em," answered Julia.

"No; I did not, indeed," replied Mrs. ford.

"Them arches and flags," said Julia, fi her glittering eyes on Mrs. Clifford's face, "m me think of Master Charlie. There's beer rejoicing since he was born; and I was thin of him, and his merry ways, and his hands face, God bless it! And to think his doited father should cut him off from his own lar We poor folks could never have done that! the quality that's hard upon their own flesh blood."

"It was very hard, Julia," whimpered Clifford, "but I hadn't a word to say to it. Clifford never asked what I thought of it; dear boy!"

"I suppose all that's for Master Erne continued Julia, pointing disdainfully at the orations. "When is he comin' back from don, ma'am? Is it soon?"

"I don't know when they are coming,' swered Mrs. Clifford; "they have put i twice, and I'll prepare for them no more. is the old squire, Julia?"

"He's been awful tedious," she rep "It's not fit for Miss Ruth to be with often; he worries her as he daren't worr I've sent her away scores o' times looki white as a curtain. He's took down my and my strength a little, though I've go upper hand of him. I feel as weak as a this evenin', and ready to cry any minute. Jenny, do you see anybody comin' dow road into the village?"

The white road lay clear and sunny i light all along its course; and a few minut fore a man's figure had come into sight. been sauntering slowly toward the villag was now standing still, with his face towa He was too far away for them to distir more than his general appearance, but in and bearing he was like the master of Cliff

"It's Mr. Clifford!" said Jenny shyl with the frank outburst of surprise of a few ago. "But where is Rose? and why is he ing home on foot?"

"Hush!" cried Julia, "wait! Oh, it be true!"

She had turned very pale, and both her were pressed against her beating heart. straining eyes were riveted on the figure distance. She looked frightened, yet eag triumphant. The last note of the churc echoed along the valley; and then the w moved on again.

"It's him come back!" screamed Julia Master Charlie!"

"Julia! Julia!" cried Mrs. Clifford, " it? What did you say? My boy! Oh me to him! Bring him here, quick, Where is he?"

But Julia did not answer. She was s her eyes with her hands, shutting out ev ject from their vision, except the one spo the tall dark figure was standing, for h paused once more, as if uncertain what to take. It would have been impossible f to speak just then. The deep devotion s cherished for Charles Clifford from her girlhood made her dumb. She had ne trayed it to any one; and now she mus her guard, if indeed it was true that thi indistinct form, standing irresolute in th ing light, should prove to be the long-l Her eyelids were smarting with unshe but she forced them to look steadily distance.

The eight, and the vigorous, upright bearing re he Master Ernest; but there was a slight, descbable difference, perceptible to her eager es He did not come onward with the quiet, sure step of a master drawing near to his n d rs. This wanderer loitered and lingered his ay, as one to whom no house is open, epun inn. Julia drew a long deep sigh of ngl agony and gladness, and lifted up her le fe to Mrs. Clifford and Jenny, who were tchg her, open-eyed and wondering.

"It Master Charlie!" she said, again, in an stey voice; "he's come home at last!"

Witout another word she darted from them, d sp swiftly downward into the valley, along e dve, through a coppice of young trees, nte by Ernest since he came into possession. e nst reach him before he entered the village. here was no one else to welcome him; t ev his own mother, she thought bitterly. e w come back from his long wanderings; d te was no place for him in his own home. She ined the white road before he passed the te athe entrance of the drive; and she stood der he hawthorn hedge waiting for his apoac her breath coming and going, and her nds ressed again upon her heavily throbbing art. She could see him plainly now, a tall, llet powerful-looking man, with a sunburnt e d with large brown hands, swinging with ery ep he took.

Sheelt her throat was dry, and her lips were rch; but as he came up to her, she dropped n a old-fashioned courtesy; a salutation she d n deigned to bestow on any personage ce r early childhood. He looked at her inisitely and stood still.

"ster Charlie!" she gasped, with tremuls.

"D you know me then?" he asked, with a sh pleasure over his sunburnt face. "Yes! n Carles Clifford. But I do not remember u."

"I Julia Rush," she faltered, still too agied answer steadily. "I used to mind the sea n the cliffs."

"A! I recollect," he said.

He alked on down the road, the evening ht sting his long shadow behind him; while e f owed a step or two behind, too breath- t venture upon speaking again. There was en of blank disappointment tugging at her art It was as if a cup had been lifted to the s one parched with thirst, and found to be pt.

He ong years of faithful yearning and waitg fo his return were over; and this was the d c hem! There had been a headlong, pantg rn to welcome him home; and now nothg t. a feeling of dull dissatisfaction. She d it even touched his hand. His face had ghned for a moment at her recognition of m ut he was tramping on again, not lookg rnd at her.

Hisdress was very old and shabby; and the an oots he had on his feet were much worn, ite with dust. But he did not look altothe like a tramp. His step and bearing were ose of a gentleman, thought Julia; and her art melted again into tenderness.

"ster Charlie," she said softly, "don't go rou the village like that! Don't go there al."

"here am I to go?" he asked, turning un sharply. "Is there nobody in Clifford ll ge me a night's lodging?"

"," she sobbed, "your mother's watchin' d witin' for you! We saw you a long way off d an to meet you, and bid you welcome. m traight up to the Grange, Master Charlie. m long the new drive that Master Ernest's ade and nobody 'ill see you in the village. ou ghtn't to be seen like that."

He turned quickly about and entered the ive while Julia crept behind him, not secretly, t mbly and deprecatingly; like a dog that s en chidden, but not absolutely forbidden fow his master.

(To be continued.)

THE TONGUE AND THE TEMPER.

S. S. Lesson for February 15th.—Matt. 5 : 33–48.
Golden Text, ver. 48. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

"Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." This is our golden text; and a Christian who looks to anything lower than to perfection as his aim is not worthy of the name of Christ which he bears. To seek a relative holiness when God Himself is perfect, is to have little understanding of Him. When He called Abraham to enter into covenant with Him by circumcision, He said, "I am the Almighty God, walk before me and be thou perfect" (Gen. 17 : 1). In Heb. 6 : 1, we are exhorted "Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection.

But having such an aim, how are we to arrive at it? Let us take two or three passages. First, Heb. 10 : 14. This is the ground and foundation of all perfection, "For by one offering (of His body once for all. Ver. 10), He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified." Thus we find that Christ's finished work avails not only for our justification, but also for r sanctification.

But this is not the only passage on subject. We read (Luke 6 : 40) "The d le is not above his master; but every one th perfect shall be as his Master," or "sha fected as his Master" (see margin). was He perfected? "It became Him, om are all things, and by whom are all in bringing many sons unto glory to he Captain of their salvation perfect throu rings" (Heb. 2 : 10). "We must thro tribulation enter into the kingdom of G 14 : 22). Our Master was tried, and we tried unto the very utmost, all real faith love must be put to the proof. In Christ sess by faith a perfect standing before God, tried and proved that we may learn to yield ev inch of ground save that which is heavenly ground and holy ground, and which is inaccessible by Satan.

Yet another passage, in Ja ly brethren count it all joy when ye rs temptations; knowing this that the trial of your faith worketh patience. But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." Here we see clearly that perfection in patience is perfection indeed. And how far off from it are we, especially those who are full of energy and zeal? Patience and faith go hand in hand; it is only as we learn by faith to see all things in their relation to God, and to look above persons and things that we can be patient.

Now the "Tongue and the Temper," the subjects of our lesson, are just the things in which the great imperfection of God's children mostly manifests itself. A man whose patience is perfect we have already seen to be "perfect and entire, wanting nothing," and the apostle James teaches us "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body" (James 3 : 2). Thus if the tongue and the temper are right, all is right. "Who is a wise man and endued with knowledge among you?" says James, "let him shew out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom" (James 3 : 13).

Our Lord in dealing with the sins of the tongue first begins with swearing. He says "Ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, 'Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths,'" as enforced in those three strong passages of the law, Lev. 19 : 12; Nu. 30 : 2; Deut. 23 : 23. "But," he adds, "I say unto you, swear not at all; neither by heaven, for it is God's throne, nor by the earth, for it is His footstool; neither by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the great king." God has a right to expect from us the awe and reverence which is His right. We have no right to make use of God's throne, or His footstool, or His city to enforce what we say.

The Lord continues to contrast the law with the "newness of life" (Rom. 6 : 4) which He came to live and to teach among us, "Ye have heard that it hath been said an eye for an eye; a tooth for a tooth; but I say unto you that ye resist not evil." This is perhaps one of the most difficult precepts of Christianity to carry into practice. One may argue that if I do not resist I am encouraging evil doings. God is responsible for the consequences of all which He commands. If we who are Christians really carry out this unearthly principle into practice, it will go farther to convince honest sceptics of the truth of Christianity than all the most elaborate logic in the world. They know there must be a power stronger than anything which they themselves have experienced, which can influence a man to act thus against one of the strongest instincts of his nature.

But where do we find men and women who do not resist evil? who turn the left cheek when the right is smitten? who give their cloak to the robber of their coat? and who go two miles with one who compels them to go one? One may meet with many children of God without finding such an one. He continues, "Give to him that asketh thee; and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away." But this is to encourage beggary say many. Not if we take a little trouble and find work for those in want, for this is the kindest way of helping them. Only let us not turn away. Let the needy know that in a Christian help is always to be found, if it is only in the succor of their prayers. "Silver and gold have I none," said Peter, "but such as I have give I thee" (Acts 3 : 6); and it ought to be so with every child of God.

Ye have heard that it hath been said "Thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy" (Lev. 19 : 18; Deut. 23 : 6). But I say unto you, "Love your enemies," this is something more than tolerating them, for the Lord shews us in what manner our love is to be practical. It is to be no mere passing sentiment, but must be equal to blessing them that curse us, and the blessing is not to remain a thing of words, we are to do good to them which hate us, and then we are to pray for them which despitefully use us and persecute us. Is this possible? Is it not an ideal standard of perfection which we are to come as near to as we can? God forbid. True, in our own nature we can only be natural men; but by faith in the Son of God, His very instincts become ours—bitterness, revenge, retaliation—which would be only common justice if we lived our own life, become impossible when Christ liveth in us: our self is unaltered, but it is crucified, and He is become our new self.

And the Lord Jesus gives us a glorious reason for thus practically living Christ, "That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven, etc." But you will say "We are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus" (Gal. 3 : 26); how can we then be the children of God by loving our enemies, which seems to partake more of works than of faith? Such a question could never be asked by one who had really learned to love his enemies, for he knows by bitter experience that no efforts can produce love in our hearts; it is only as by faith we love Christ who is love, that we can love those who wound us and wrong us, because we are able by His grace alone to recognize what God would teach us by our trials with them; and we learn not to consider them in their relation to us, but to God.

"For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? do not even the publicans the same? And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others? Do not even the publicans so?" It is to be expected that they in whom God dwells, they who are His own begotten children by the Word of Truth should be somewhat different from such as follow mere natural instincts. Oh, let us be jealous for the high-toned newness of life, of which we are called to be the witnesses. Let our lives be in distinct contrast to all those who live unto themselves that in tongue and in temper and also in our inmost hearts we may become perfect, even as our Father which is in heaven is perfect.

FOREIGN TOPICS.

The Attention of British Politicians is just now concentrated on the election of a member of Parliament for Liverpool, in the place of Mr. Torr, who died recently. The deceased member was a stanch supporter of Lord Beaconsfield, and the Conservative managers are using all their efforts to elect a candidate of the same political opinions. The election is regarded on all sides as a test of the current of public opinion. The candidates who are contesting the borough are diametrically opposed on the foreign policy of the government and on the best way of dealing with the Irish difficulty. Liverpool is generally regarded as a Conservative borough, but it contains many Irish electors and many Conservative electors who are influenced by the Earl of Derby. This nobleman's influence is now for the first time in many years exerted in favor of the Liberal candidate, and the Irish voters are also drawn in the same direction by a promise to support a motion in Parliament for an inquiry into Irish affairs.

Reports from the Irish Famine Districts contain details of a most distressing character. The Lord Mayor of Dublin writes to the effect that the English people fail to realize the gravity of the Irish crisis, and that except prompt assistance be forthcoming tens of thousands of Irish people must surely die of starvation. He complains that England has contributed less to the Mansion House fund than Melbourne. It is believed that this is occasioned by the serious disturbances that have occurred in Ireland and the agitation set on foot by Mr. Parnell, and by the statements he is making in his speeches in America, which persons who ought to know characterize as "gross falsehoods." Lord Godolphin Osborne reports that the distress is vastly underrated. Unfortunately quarrels have arisen in the management of the different Irish relief funds, but it is hoped that the government will devise some method of concentrating the various charities under one general head. Mr. John Bright advocated in a speech delivered last week the compulsory sale of certain lands held by the London Guilds in Ireland; and that the English Government should assist tenants to purchase them by lending them three fourths of the purchase money on easy terms. Mr. W. H. Smith, a prominent member of Lord Beaconsfield's government, referred in contemptuous terms to Mr. Bright's proposal, which he called "a sham remedy," but it is not stated what Lord Beaconsfield and his colleagues intend doing in the matter.

Another Nihilist Plot in Russia has been Discovered. From the preliminary examination of several Nihilist prisoners arrested recently, it would appear that a second gunpowder plot was on foot in every way similar to that of the 1st of December, both as to the aim in view and the means by which it was to be attained. The conspirators intended to blow up the Czar on his next journey to Moscow. It was in his Palace of the Kremlin that the revolutionists intended to execute their plot. When this terrible intelligence was communicated to the Czar, his emotion was so violent that for a moment those of his courtiers who were present were in fear of a fatal nervous attack. The Czar thought that the attempt made on his life at Moscow was the work of one single individual, and he is now terrified on discovering that at Moscow, as at St. Petersburg, there is a veritable committee, organized by the revolutionary party, which has declared against him a merciless war.

Germany is Showing Signs of Uneasiness. She eyes with a great deal of suspicion the movements of Russia. The sovereigns of the two countries appear to be on friendly terms, but the military party in both countries are decidedly antagonistic. Reports have been freely circulated of Russia's mustering immense forces along her Western frontier, and it is hinted that their object is the invasion of Germany. Whatever the object is, these movements create considerable uneasiness in that country. It is inferred from the tone of Bismarck's recent utterances that he finds complications of some sort or other growing up around him. His latest utterance has led to the inference that he believes that France and Russia are approaching each other, and that an alliance between them is possible, if not immediately probable. This he regards as an evil sign for Germany. He is not blind to the rapid growth and increased efficiency of the French army. He hints to France that Germany would regard with disfavor any alliance on her part with Russia, whom she regards as one of her most powerful rivals.

A Famine in Persia is Reported. It is so severe that people are selling their children for food. Mr. Cochran, one of the American missionaries in Persia, has forwarded an appeal which says: "Already bread riots and mob violence have ruled in the markets two days the past week; some have died of hunger, and the signs are that many more must perish. The Christians are the poorer and more oppressed and suffer the most. In the direction of Bagdad the fa[illegible]ne is very severe, and many are fleeing hither[illegible] The condition now is terrible, and before us is [illegible]kness and darkness. The help needed is be[illegible] our power to give, and we know not of who[illegible] ask for help, except first to entreat that [illegible]ercies of the Lord may turn again to [illegible]n to ask the merciful aid of Christians [illegible]God has given more abundantly. This [illegible]peal of 5000 Christian families in our im[illegible] vicinity, and indirectly of ten times as m[illegible]sulmans and Jews in this district."

[illegible]nell's Mission in America is the [illegible] severe condemnation in the press of [illegible]itain. A popular journal says of it: [illegible]erprise is daily growing more danger[illegible]s accompanied by systematic resistance [illegible]and is carried on by appeals to a foreign [illegible] thought by him to be hostile to the [illegible]sh Empire, and the object of which is nothing less than a revolutionary transformation of society by the destruction of one of the accepted for[illegible]n which society is based."

[illegible]of Two French Statesmen is ann[illegible] Duke de Gramont died January 1[illegible]Minister of Foreign Affairs in the Ol[illegible] under the Empire, and conducted[illegible]ions which ended in the Franco-Ge[illegible]War. Since the fall of the Empire the duke has lived in retirement.

Jules Favre died January 20th. He had held office under the Republic which preceded the seizure of power by Napoleon III., and during the existence of the Empire strenuously and persistently opposed its policy, more especially its war with Germany. At the downfall of the Empire he served under M. Thiers, and with him signed the treaty of peace. He was throughout his life a thorough and consistent Republican.

A Protest against the Mode of Conducting the war in Afghanistan.—The United Presbyterian Presbytery of Edinburgh has adopted a resolution calling on the Queen "to exercise her authority to put a stop to the atrocities which are being perpetrated in Afghanistan in burning villages, and in leaving helpless women and children to die of cold and hunger—proceedings at variance not only with the dictates of Christianity, but even with the laws of civilized warfare."

Roman Catholic Priest Shot at in London.—The church of St. Peter, London, was the scene of a shocking outrage a fortnight ago. The mass was being celebrated by a Polish priest, when a pistol-shot was fired at the priest by a man in the body of the church, and the bullet lodged in the altar. The acolyte who was serving mass immediately fled into the sacristy, and locked the door behind him; so that the priest in following was unable to enter. Here his assailant fired two more shots, one of which became imbedded in the crown of the arch over the sacristy door, and the other in the side of the door. The priest at length succeeded in getting round to the front of the church and made his escape. Two more shots were fired after him, one of them piercing the back of a chair at the top of the right aisle of the church. The man rushed to the back of the altar, and seizing son massive candlesticks, dashed them to the breaking them into fragments. He th up the altar steps and wrenched away t and framework of the tabernacle and s the contents on the ground. After struggle he was overcome and the taken from him. He is supposed to be

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon at Mentone.—The at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, Jan. 4 conducted by the Rev. James A. Spurg the announcement was made that chee ings continue to be received from the pa his letters Mr. Spurgeon speaks in r terms of the lovely weather and the c land of his sojourn; remarking that the
"as the days of heaven upon earth," w nights are scarcely less beautiful. In some remaining weakness, it is believed invalid daily gains strength; and if the separation shall have so far benefited hi lessen the severity and duration of his attack, his family will bless God and bear his absence. While good news con France, our readers will be grieved to le Mrs. Spurgeon has been very ill indeed.
intervals of weakness, however, she co with a perseverance and energy which fe exemplify under the circumstances, t life of self-sacrifice for the good of other

Christian Work in Venice.—A Centra
ing, with its chief entrance on the Squar Marco, has been secured at Venice for t of the Free Italian Church. Although for the purposes of Italian evangelizati believed that services can also be held English. During the past year more tha has been secured for the church in this by Mr. Arrighi, its agent, and much la is hoped for in the coming year. Money sent through Mr. Roswell Smith, of Sc
Co., this city, or directly to the Rev.
McDougall, at Florence, Italy.

The Conversion of a Japanese Physi cently announced demonstrates the gr fulness of mission schools. Mr. Curtis sionary at Osaka, gives the follow[illegible] his conversion: "This physician had t the oldest being a troublesome fellow; d a bad boy. When about thirteen year ran away from home. The father turne Christians, with whom he had become so intimate, for advice. They said, 'Send to the Christian school at Kiato.
God's grace may change his heart and he a good boy!' So his father sent the bo and to the delight of all he became boy—gentle and good, and his father w that a religion that could work such a c worth having. He attended church r himself, had Christians come and hold m in his house, and teach him, his wife, h dren, his servants, and now they all b And so in this case the prophecy was fulfil little child shall lead them."

Killed by a Wolf.—A little girl, shut punishment for some fault in her father at Baud (a French village), has been kil winter by a wolf, which, by climbing a heap, was able to enter by the roof. The had been at work in the fields at some d and on the father opening the door to the child the wolf sprang out and made o ing on the floor the half-devoured remair victim. This reminds us of the manner i the great enemy of mankind takes advan
the parental correction with which Goc His children. In the noontide of their seeks by every plausible means to compa ruin, but when the Father comes again to and comfort His child, then the adversa to flight. In the most painful circumst child of God may say, "Rejoice not agai O mine enemy!" (Micah 7 : 8). The stance also reminds us that Satan like an wolf tries to break through every safegua he may destroy the immortal souls c Happy are they who can say, "We ignorant of his devices" (2 Cor. 2 : 11).

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

gle Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1880. 14th Year. No. 7—New Series.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

RAITS AND LIVES OF DEAN STANLEY A THE BISHOP OF MANCHESTER, with h of the Bishop's Marriage.

OMING RELIGION. A New Sermon by Dr. Ta [illegible] of Nonconform roughout Great Britain. He has some- ntertained them hospitably at the deanery, s shown his freedom from all clerical big-

TIMES OF REFRESHING, by Dr. A. J. Gordon.

The Black List—Perils at Sebastopol.

CURRENT EVENTS: The Pennsylvania Convention—The Removal of the Poncas—The Herald Irish Relief Fund—Mr. Parnell's Mission—Col. Ingersoll and the Clergy—A Remarkable Will, etc.

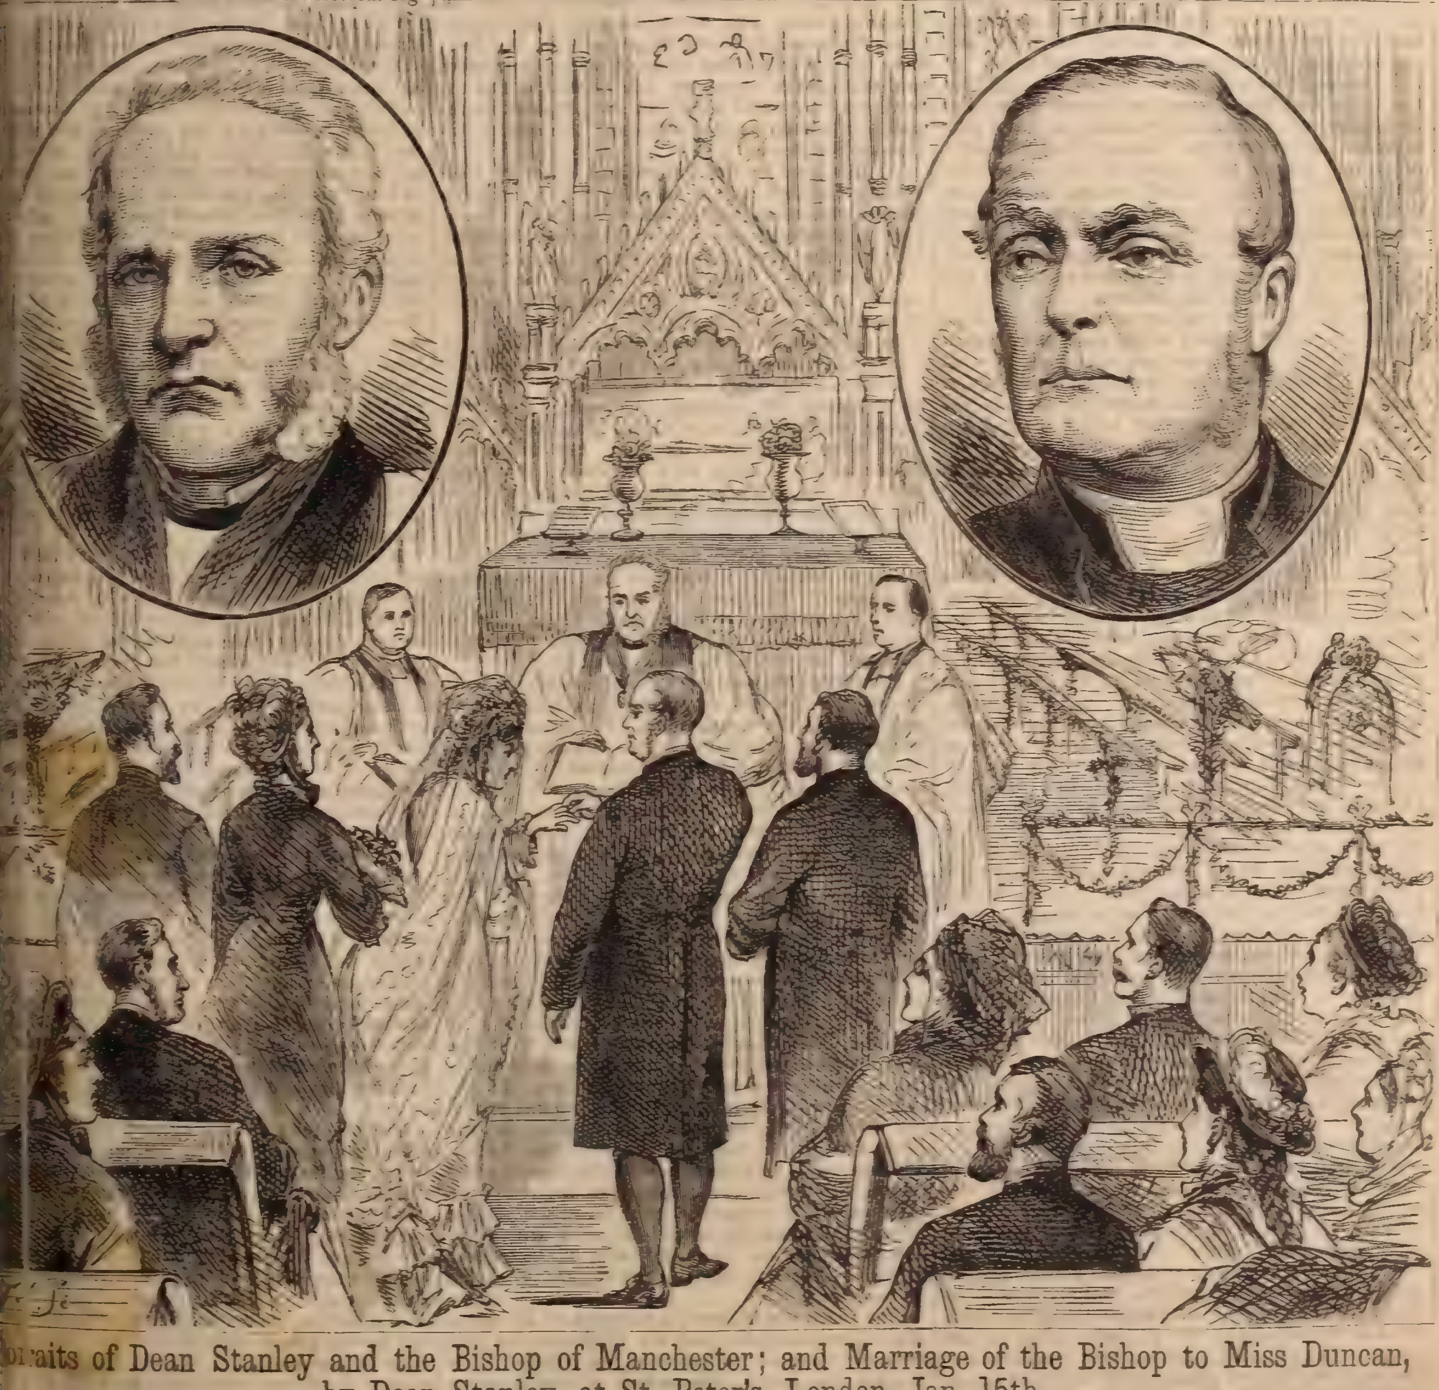
THE JEWS, GOD'S WITNESSES, by Dr. Horatius Bonar—The Bishop's Mother.

A WOMAN OF A SORROWFUL SPIRIT. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH. (Continued.)

Giving and Praying. S. S. Lesson by Mrs. M. Baxter.

FOREIGN TOPICS: British Parliament Opened—Irish Distress—Russian Intrigues—Mr. Spurgeon's Recovery—The Pope's Banker Absconding—Death of an English Nobleman, etc.



raits of Dean Stanley and the Bishop of Manchester; and Marriage of the Bishop to Miss Duncan, by Dean Stanley, at St. Peter's, London, Jan. 15th.

DEAN STANLEY.

Ancestry—School Life—College Distinctions—"Life of Arnold"—The Oxford "Don"—Canon of Canterbury—Dean of Westminster—Visit to the Holy Land—Literary Work—Visit to America.

WE give to-day the portraits of two of the most eminent living men in the Christian ministry—Dean Stanley and the Bishop of Manchester. For high intellectual gifts, breadth of capacity, clear-headedness, strength of understanding, fearless courage, warm-hearted and far-reaching sympathy, and the absence of littleness of every kind, they have few equals on either side of the Atlantic. The Dean for his keen-sighted exposure of the follies of Ritualism, and the Bishop for his resolute advocacy of the temperance cause, deserve the admiration and confidence of all right-thinking men. The influence of these two men is doubly important in this age of uncertain views and equivocal utterances, and their powerful influence is operative for good in this country as well as in Great Britain. So we feel that our readers will be pleased to see the portraits and know the history of these two mainstays of society and champions of right.

It would, however, be wrong to conceal that the Dean and the Bishop are widely distrusted by evangelical Christians because of their pronounced adhesion to the "Broad Church" party, of which, indeed, the former is the recognized leader. That party is fatally in error on two cardinal points of the Gospel message. It denies man's inherited and inherent depravity, and it repudiates the great act of redemption in which Christ took the sinner's place and sacrificed His life for the world's atonement.

Thus all their work of benevolence is fruitless, except in as far as they stand upon the level of the world's great temporal benefactors. Beyond this we may not judge them; to their Maker they stand or fall. It is better to point to the integrity of their characters and the unselfish purpose of their lives, and to indulge a regret that with so much to raise them to a towering height in the love and admiration of men, their eyes are closed to the ineffable glory of "the Lamb for sinners slain." It is also our privilege to pray without ceasing that God will give them further enlightenment, and enable them yet to consecrate their wonderful talents and their large hearts to setting forth what Bishop Gilbert Haven in his dying moments called "a complete Gospel, a whole Christ." Especially in the case of Dr. Fraser, who now, late in life, has taken to himself a wife, we may unite our congratulations with those of his numerous friends, and hope that he will be spared to enjoy years of happiness and of useful service.

The Very Rev. Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, Dean of the ancient historical Abbey of Westminster, is the second son of a former Bishop of Norwich, who is well remembered for the nautical enthusiasm which he possessed through life (he longed to be a sailor when a boy), for his love of natural science, and for his singular freedom from religious intolerance, standing on the same platform as Father Mathew, the Irish priest and temperance pioneer. He also preached a funeral sermon on Joseph Gurney, the Quaker philanthropist. For thirty-two years the father was rector of Alderley, where he won all hearts, and it is pleasant to observe how many of his traits appear in the son. The honored mother of Dean Stanley was Catherine, daughter of the Rev. Oswald Leycester, rector of Stoke-upon-Trent.

The subject of our present notice was born in the year 1815, and at the age of fourteen was sent to Rugby School, of which the year previously the renowned Thomas Arnold had been appointed head master. In 1834 he proceeded to University College, Oxford, where he obtained numerous distinctions, and laid the foundation of the accomplished scholarship for which he is so remarkable. He gained a prize for his poem "The Gypsies," took a first class in classics, won the Ireland scholarship, a Balliol scholarship, and the Newdigate prize, the Latin Essay prize, the Theological prize, and the English Essay prize.

In 1842 occurred Dr. Arnold's sudden death; and Mr. A. P. Stanley, who had been for five years his favorite pupil and for eight years afterward his intimate friend, preached the funeral sermon in Rugby School chapel. Two years later he published the work which first drew attention to the many high qualities of the Dean—his one of the finest specimens of biography in the English language. In its whole plan and execution it was a model memoir of a noble man, by one whose relation to him is far from being adequately described in the statement that he was a favorite pupil. For though a reverent disciple, the biographer was also the respected friend whom Arnold thought it useful to consult, as his letters show, not merely upon literary matters, but also on other subjects of practical moment. The "Life of Arnold" exerted a powerful influence in this country, not only upon the teaching class, who drew abundant inspiration from the example of the Rugby master, but likewise upon a numerous body of young ministers and students of theology, who found in the utterances of Arnold help in their perplexities respecting Christian doctrine and the interpretation of Scripture.

"LIFE OF THOMAS ARNOLD,"

At this time he was Fellow and Tutor of University College, where he endeared himself to several generations of undergraduates by his unvarying kindness and almost fatherly sympathy. He was the very reverse of the usual type of "Oxford don," between whom and the youths he has to teach there is too often an absence of sympathetic feeling.

In 1851 Dr. Stanley was appointed Canon of Canterbury, and during this period he wrote his "Historical Memorials of Canterbury." In 1858 he resigned his canonry, becoming instead a Canon of Christ Church, and chaplain to Dr. Tait, then Bishop of London, but now well known as Archbishop of Canterbury. In 1864, when Dr. Trench was made Archbishop of Dublin, Dr. Stanley was appointed Dean of Westminster, and he still retains the position.

His literary fame, as first evidenced by his "Life of Arnold," is equal to his fame as a public speaker. The book "Sinai and Palestine," which he wrote after visiting the Holy Land in 1852, is probably the best book yet published on those interesting regions.

He also published a commentary on the Epistles to the Corinthians, which has been widely read and highly commended. He has also written a copious "History of the Jewish People," in which the Old Testament history is presented with so much clearness, eloquence of style, and historic and literary illustration, not to speak of learning and calmness of judgment, that not theologians alone, but also cultivated readers generally, are drawn to its pages. The last published volume in the series, which treats of the period intermediate between the Old Testament and the New, is not surpassed as a piece of historical writing by any of the later works of this class which have emanated from the English press. In point of style it takes rank with Macaulay's history, and the best chapters of Froude. The Maccabean period and the reign of Herod are described in a manner to fascinate the attention of every cultivated reader.

But the volume which of late years has probably attained the widest circulation of all the Dean's works is that on Westminster Abbey, with its tombs and monuments. No journeyings among the tombs can compare in interest with this last production, where the Dean's wealth of historical knowledge and familiarity with English literature are employed, with characteristic grace, to illustrate the records of this venerable mausoleum.

Our space forbids even a mention of his many other compositions, and we shall not dwell on the excellence of his sermons, especially of his funeral discourses. One which attracted much attention was preached when a certain gifted writer was buried in Westminster Abbey.
that occasion he showed how our Saviou practically illustrated the "use, the value the sacredness of fictitious narrative," when, in conclusion, he referred to some a the ideal children of the departed author, " ing that grave," he observed, "seem to who crowd around it as though it were the grave of those little innocents whom he hac created for our companionship, for our in tion, for our delight and solace."

HIS VISIT TO AMERICA in the fall of 1878, and the cordial mann which he was then received by all Christia nominations, and even by the Jewish me of the community, will be fresh in the men of our readers.

While here he was the guest of Mr.
Field, and during his stay, Mr. Field's hous [illegible] a remarkable sermon in Church, New York, in which, with g strokes, he sketched the rise and progress different schools of religious thought whic left their impress on Christendom. On the evening an enthusiastic reception was acc to Dean Stanley by the bishops and past the Methodist Episcopal Church, at whi address engrossed on parchment was pres to him. In the course of the address he in reply, the dean related how some eight years ago the President of the Wesleyan C ence waited upon him, and in courteous asked that a monument might be admitte
Westminster Abbey to the memory of C Wesley, "the sweet psalmist of our Engli rael," and he had then said, "And wh John?" A monument to the memory of t illustrious brothers was accordingly erected Poet's Corner of Westminster Abbey, clos monument erected a century before to the ory of the poet Isaac Watts. "I rejoiced, the Dean, "to have his monument among of the kings and the great lights, whether o ature or science, that adorn the walls of minster Abbey."

A delegation of Baptist ministers also on Dean Stanley to express the pleasure which they welcomed his visit to Americ to whom he spoke in the same liberal, genial he had shown to the ministers of other de nations. The Century Club also entertain Dean at their house in New York. There a distinguished company of literary and e astical celebrities, who cordially united in e sions of esteem and fraternal regard. Th Dean fully appreciated the enthusiastic we he had received from the American peopl evident from his remarks at that meeting said that he had been told in England t would be met with kindness and hospita America, but he had not been led to expe thing like what he had experienced. He r to the pleasant homes in which he had be tertained during the delightful two m which he had spent in this country; an cluded by saying that he was delighted at fresh bond that cemented and strengthen kindly feelings already existing between E and America, and that he wished to retu heartfelt thanks for all that had been do said for him and his friends during their s here.

On his return to England the deck steamer was crowded by eminent men, a to see the last of the distinguished Engli itor, and not until the last bell rang were t farewells said.

His arrival in England was sadly opportu
the Queen was shortly afterwards plun grief by the death of her beloved daught Princess Alice; and to no other voice d give so willing an ear as to that of Dean S and he was able to offer her the precious c tions of the Gospel. There has for man existed a sincere friendship between the family of England and the Dean, which others' sides been one of evident respect and esteem. It was remarked a short time ago that Queen Victoria who has shown an unconquerable aversion to visiting London since the death of Prince Albert, came all the way from the Isle of Wight to pay a visit of condolence to Dean Stanley, on hearing of the death of his wife. This lady was Lady Augusta Bruce, daughter of the seventh Earl of Elgin, whose name is remembered in connection with the Elgin marbles, and sister of the eighth Earl of Elgin, who died while holding the Viceroyalty of India. A widespread feeling of sympathy for the Dean in this bereavement was expressed by all sections of the Church, even by those who regret his views of theology. It only remains to add, that personally he is one of the most kind and amiable of men, and the most popular Dean of Westminster that has ever been known. He fraternizes most cordially with the leading representatives of Nonconformity throughout Great Britain. He has sometimes entertained them hospitably at the deanery, and has shown his freedom from all clerical bigotry. We trust our readers will pray that the Holy Spirit will abundantly enlighten and bless him during the declining years of his life.

THE BISHOP OF MANCHESTER.

Early Life—College Honors—Ecclesiastical Preferments—Interest in Education—Election to the Episcopal Bench—Personal Appearance—Sphere of Work—Marriage.

The Right Rev. James Fraser, D.D., Bishop of Manchester, England, was born at Prestbury, near Cheltenham, in the year 1818. Having received a preparatory education at the public schools of Bridgnorth and Shrewsbury, he was subsequently entered as an alumnus at Lincoln College, Oxford.

He obtained the Ireland Scholarship in that University in the year 1839, and proceeded to take his B.A. degree the same year, gaining a first class in classics. In 1840 he was elected a fellow of Oriel College. In 1847 he became rector of Childerton, Wiltshire, and from 1858 to 1860 discharged the honorable functions of Chancellor of Salisbury Cathedral.

Having been appointed what is called "Select Preacher" in the University of Oxford in 1854 and again in 1862, Mr. Fraser's interest in the cause of popular education led to his being selected as Assistant-Commissioner in the important inquiry of 1858-60. To the Schools Inquiry Commission in 1865 he presented an elaborate report on the educational systems of the United States and Canada. He was officially connected also with the commission appointed in 1867 to inquire into the employment of women and children in agriculture.

In the year 1870 he was selected by Mr. Gladstone who was then Prime Minister, to succeed the late Dr. Prince Lee in the bishopric of Manchester. He was accordingly consecrated on March 25th, 1870, having on the third of the previous month been created D.D. at Oxford by diploma.

Bishops, like other men, are of different characters. The English Church has to-day the energetic bishop, the controversial bishop, the letter-writing bishop, the hospitable bishop, and the platform bishop. These and sundry other varieties are, with more or less distinctness of marking, to be found now, as in the hierarchies of all times. But Mr. Gladstone's appointment to the bench added another type, who may be fairly set down as the eminently practical bishop. There is perhaps no one bishop on the English bench at this moment who is so pre-eminently a practical man, in the best sense of the word, as the Bishop of Manchester. He knows his Divine Master's work, and finds an unwearied delight in doing it, not only when he gains the applause of an admiring diocese, but in the teeth of the best organized opposition

His personal appearance is in his favor. He has a pleasant and genial face, a sturdy figure, and an easy and attractive manner. His voice is clear as a bell, sweet when he is pathetic, and thrilling when he is solemn. Persons who have heard him refer to evangelistic work in the slums of the east end of London most fully appreciate his capacity for sympathy and pathos. Plainly does he put the issues of life and death before his congregation. He is free from bigotry of any kind, and very friendly toward Dissenters.

Manchester, too, of English cities is precisely the place for such a man to find a scope for his labors. The moral and social change in Manchester is one of the most significant signs of the times. The city which was once the very symbol and seat of all simple money-making and manufacturing ideas, has itself imbibed the liberal ideas of the world which it has conquered. In former days the birthplace and paradise of the "cotton-lord," it has long ceased to be identified with the notion that calico-making and calico-printing are the great ends either of its own energies or of humanity.

If it has liberalized the whole country in the matter of free-trade, it has liberalized itself in the matter of the arts and literary cultivation. A vehement onslaught on the humanizing influences of the belles-lettres, including the Latin and Greek of Oxford itself, would now be as little popular among the leading men of Manchester as a denunciation of the principles of political economy. In few places is the architecture of the once despised Middle Ages more loved or more successfully cultivated than in Manchester. And last, though not least, the personal character and views of its estimable bishop are a matter of real interest and not of contempt in the very centre of the old cotton-making and bishop-scorning interest. Dr. Fraser fills exactly the position for which his character and the gift of God's grace have pre-eminently qualified him, and he never falters in his outspoken denunciation of wrong and earnest proclamation of the Divine mercy.

The work he has done in Manchester is everywhere visible in that great city. There is no name there which commands the respect of all classes so thoroughly as that of Bishop Fraser. Ever intent on ameliorating the condition of the poor, he is prominent in all movements for the organization of schemes of relief. Among the operatives his voice is constantly heard giving wise practical counsel; advocating moderation in their trades-unions, teetotalism and thrift in their homes, and the cause of education for their children. To the employers he speaks in the frank, manly way of a man of the world denouncing the wretched "supply and demand principle," which too often governs the relations of employer and the employed, and which leads the employer to believe that his responsibility to his work-people ceases when he has given them the lowest market rate of pay for their labor. He has taught them that they have other and higher responsibilities, and they have given heed to his teachings. Even those who differ from him on theological grounds confess that the Bishop of Manchester has brought out in the city the living practical influences of religion, and has made his position a power for good in the city which from its devotion to one branch of manufacture has acquired the soubriquet of "Cottonopolis."

MARRIAGE OF THE BISHOP OF MANCHESTER.

The marriage of the Bishop of Manchester with Agnes Ellen Frances, eldest daughter and heiress of the late John Shute Duncan, LL.D., of Bath, England, took place on January 15th at St. Peter's, Brompton, London, the Dean of Westminster officiating. The right reverend bridegroom, accompanied by Canon Pearson and the very reverend Dean, arrived at the church at half-past ten. The bride, attired in a bright, silver-gray satin dress and tulle veil, accompanied by her bridesmaids and Mr. H. T. Welch, her cousin, at whose residence she was staying, arrived at a quarter to eleven, and the ceremony at once proceeded. A few friends had assembled, but although paragraphs had appeared in the newspapers mentioning the day, the place where the wedding was to take place was not generally known, and not more than thirty persons were present.

The Dean, who was assisted by the Rev. N. J. Devereux and the Rev. J. Farrington Downes, read the service in a most impressive manner, and instead of the usual exhortation at the close of the ceremony, substituted a short address.

After some remarks upon the happiness of Christian matrimony, he said it was not only the blending together of two souls for mutual society and comfort, not only a constant giving and receiving of mutual sympathy and support, but a new starting-point in life—a new starting-point for a more holy and a more consistent walk before God, an encouragement to embark in new strength and hope upon the duties and best objects of life. A new pledge was given, not as the philosopher said, of new hostages to fortune, but a Christian pledge to God and man that they would fulfil those duties faithfully and well.

Each had secured a new second self—each would rejoice and would sorrow as the other. None else could have so great or so complete a stake in the happiness of each; none else could know so well the character of the other; none else could have the same interest in the welfare, the grace, the goodness of the other, as must be inspired by the thought of that indissoluble union which should be the happiness and glory of both. Many hearts of absent friends were with them at that moment. Many devout aspirations, many manly expectations, many humble prayers, were going up here and elsewhere that the new wedded life now opening might be richly blessed. The day long expected had come at last, and it was the earnest prayer of all that a rich harvest of joy and happiness would follow. "May you," (said the Dean, addressing the newly-married pair) "abound in every good and perfect work! May God guide you with His wisdom continually, so that you may show forth His glory to this generation and His power to all they who are yet to come!"

The newly-wedded couple and their friends then retired to the vestry to sign the register, and shortly afterwards returned to the residence of Mr. Welch, from whence, after partaking of breakfast, they departed to Torquay for the honeymoon.

In regard to the personal appearance of the bride at the ceremony, we may observe that she seemed to be nearly as tall as the bridegroom, and to be characterized by a very intelligent and prepossessing countenance, as represented in the picture on our frontispiece.

CHARACTERISTIC BENEVOLENCE.

On the marriage morning, Mr. James Smith, secretary to the Manchester and Salford District Provident Society, received a check for 250*l.* (equal to about $1250) from the Bishop. The letter accompanying the check was as follows:

> "Bishop's Court, Manchester, January 14, 1880.
>
> "Dear Mr. Smith: To-morrow, all being well, will be my wedding-day, and in the midst of my own happiness I should like to mark the day by some little effort to promote the comfort of others in the midst of whom I live. I know of no organization that will carry out my wishes so effectually as the District Provident Society, and if you, as its agent, would kindly undertake to distribute for me the sum of 250*l.*, for which I inclose a check, among the deserving and necessitous poor of those parishes in Manchester and Salford in which at the present time there seems to be most distress, you would lay me under an obligation. After much reflection, I cannot think of any better way of showing my appreciation of the kind interest which people of all classes in Manchester have taken in an event so materially affecting my happiness, for which I am deeply grateful to them.—I remain, dear Mr. Smith, yours faithfully, J. Manchester."

The Bishop also sent a check for 50*l.* ($250) to the secretary of the Manchester Young Men's Christian Association, to be distributed in helpful gifts to persons who have seen better days, but who are now suffering acutely from the present depression of trade. On the receipt of the news of the marriage in Manchester, the bells of the town hall and the cathedral rang a merry peal, and the organist at the cathedral played a wedding march.

THE COMING RELIGION.

A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage, Preached on Sunday Morning, February 8, 1880.

"And the children of Israel pitched before them like two little flocks of kids."—1 KINGS 20 : 27.

Some People Think the Bible Behind the Age—An Appeal to Facts—The Bible the Most Popular Book on the Planet—The Church Nearer the Sympathies of the People than ever—Infidelity not so Bold as it was—No War between Science and Christianity—Scientific Theorists at War with Each Other—Christianity the only Exact Science—A Great Trial—The Coming Religion—An Encouraging Fact—The Secular Press Spreading the Truth—The International S. S. Lessons—Science Fails to Comfort the Mourner—The Whole Land a Church—The English Squire's Son and the Workman—Never Talk Scepticism.

WITH thirty-three kings intoxicated in one tent, this chapter opens. They were allies plotting for the overthrow of the Lord's Israel. You know that if a lion roar, a flock of kids will shiver and huddle together. One lion could conquer a thousand kids. The battle opens. There are a great multitude of Syrians under General Ben-hadad, strong as lions. The Israelites are few and weak, like two little flocks of kids. Who beat? The lions, of course. Oh, no; the kids. For it all depends whether God is on the side of the lions or the kids. After the battle, one hundred thousand Syrians lay dead on the field, and twenty-seven thousand, attempting to fly, came along by a great wall, which toppled and crushed them to death.

Which was the stronger weapon—great Goliath's sword or little David's sling? David had five smooth stones from the brook. He only used one in striking down Goliath. He had a surplus of ammunition; he had enough to take down four more giants if they had appeared in the way. It all depends upon whether God is on the side of the shepherd boy, or on the side of the giant.

There have been many in our day who have ventured the opinion that Christianity is falling back, and that in fifty years it will be extinct. They found their opinion on the assumed fact that the Bible is not as much of a book as it used to be, and that portions of it are repulsive to the people. I reply by asking, Which one of the publishing houses of New York, Philadelphia, Boston, or Chicago are publishing the Bible today with the omission of a single verse or chapter? Are not our publishers intelligent men? And would they, contrary to their financial interests, continue to publish the Bible without the omission of a single chapter or a single verse if it was becoming an unpopular book, and the people did not want it? If Harper, or Appleton, or Ticknor, or Lippincott should publish a Bible with the omission of one chapter, they would not sell ten copies in ten years. The fact that throughout Christendom there are hundreds of printing presses printing the Word of God without the omission of a chapter or a verse, proves that the Bible is popular; and the fact that there are more being printed in this decade than any other decade, proves that the Bible is increasing in popularity.

I go through the court-rooms of the country. Wherever I find a judge's bench, or a clerk's desk, I find the Bible. By what other book would they take solemn oath? What is very apt to be among the bride's presents? The Bible. What is very apt to be put in the trunk of the young man when he starts for city life? The Bible. Voltaire predicted that the Bible during the nineteenth century would become an obsolete book. Well, we are pretty nearly through the nineteenth century; the Bible is not obsolete yet; there is not much prospect of its becoming obsolete; but I have to tell you that that room—the very room in which Voltaire wrote that prediction—some time ago was crowded from floor to ceiling with Bibles for Switzerland.

Suppose the Congress of the United States should pass a law that no Bibles should be printed in the United States. If there are thirty million grown men and women in the country, then there would be thirty million people armed against such a law. But suppose the Congress of the United States should pass a law that Macaulay's History, or Gladstone's Tracts, should not be read—could you get half as large an army, or the fourth as large an army? In other words, there are, as you know and I know, a thousand men who would die for their Bibles, where there are fifty men who would die for any other book. The fact that there are now more Bibles being printed than ever before, that publishers find it a financial interest for them to continue the publication of the Bible, proves that this book is still on the planet.

THE MOST POPULAR BOOK

"But" say those who are antagonistic, "Christianity is falling back, from the fact that the church is not as much respected as it used to be, and is not as influential." I reply to that with the statistic that one denomination—the Methodist Church—according to a statistic given me by one of their bishops, dedicates on an average a new church every day of the year. Three hundred and sixty-five new churches in one denomination in a year, and over a thousand new churches built every year in this country. Does that look as though the church were failing in its power, and were becoming a worn-out institution?

Around which institution in our communities gather the most ardent affections? The post-office, the hotel, the court-house, the city hall, or the churches? Why, when our old Tabernacle was burning, there were hundreds of men standing in the streets who never went to church, tears raining down their cheeks. It is because the Church of God stands nearer the sympathies of the American people than any other institution.

Men may caricature the Church, and call it a collection of hypocrites; but when their children are swept off with the diphtheria, for whom do they send? To the postmaster, to the attorney-general, to the aldermen, or to the pastors of the churches? And if there be not room for the obsequies in the private house, what building do they solicit? The Academy of Music, the hotel, public hall, court-house? No; the churches. And if they want music on the sad occasion, do they select the Marseillaise Hymn, or God Save the Queen, or our own grand national air? No; they want the old hymn with which we sang their old Christian mother to sleep; they want the Sunday-school hymn that their little girl sang the last Sabbath afternoon she was out before she was seized with the awful sickness that broke father's heart and mother's heart. Oh, you know as well as I do—I shall not dwell on it any longer—the Church of God, instead of being a worn-out institution, stands nearer the sympathies of the people than it ever did, and eclipses all other institutions.

But our antagonists go on and say that Christianity is falling back, in the fact that Infidelity is bolder now and more blatant than it ever was. I deny the statement.

INFIDELITY

is not near so bold now as it was in the days of our fathers and grandfathers. There were times in this country when men who were openly and above-board infidel and antagonistic to Christianity could be elected to high office. Now, let some man wishing high position in the State proclaim himself the foe of Christianity and an infidel, how many States of the Union would he carry? how many counties? how many wards in Brooklyn? Not one.

Ah! my friends, Infidelity in this day is not half as bold as it used to be. If it comes now, it is apt to come under the disguise of rhetoric or fantastic sentimentality. I know if a man with great intelligence does become an infidel, and begins an attack on Christianity, it makes great excitement—of course it does, and people come to the conclusion, weak-minded Christians come to the conclusion, that every thing is going overboard because some man of strong intellect sails Christianity.

If a man jumps overboard from a Cuna steamer, he makes more excitement than all t five hundred sane passengers who continue in t berths or on the decks; but does that stop t ship? does that wreck all the five hundred p sengers? It makes great excitement when man leaps from a platform or a pulpit into fidelity; but does that hinder our glorious Bi from taking its millions into the skies. I tell y Infidelity is not half as bold now as it used be.

Do you suppose such things could be enac now as were enacted in the days of Robespier when a shameless woman was elected to be g dess, and she was carried in a golden chair t cathedral, and the people bowed down to her a divine being, and burned incense before he she to take the place of the Bible, and of Ch tianity, and of the Lord Almighty? And wl that ceremony was going on in the cathedral, the chapels, and in the corridors adjoining cathedral, scenes of drunkenness and debauch and obscenity enacted such as the world l never seen. Could such a thing as that tr spire now? No, sir. The police would sw on it, whether in Paris or New York. Infide is not half as bold now as it used to be.

"But," say our antagonists, "Christianit falling back because its chief enemy, is triumphing over it." No deny that there is any war between science revelation. There is not a fact in science may not be made to harmonize with the st ments of the Bible. So said Hugh Miller, said Joseph Henry, so said Professor Hi cock, so said Professor Silliman, so said Pro sor Mitchell.

SCIENCE,

Joseph Henry, the leading scientist of A ica, better known and honored in the royal s ties transatlantic than any other Ameri lived and died a believer in the religion of J Christ. He knew, Joseph Henry knew, all facts of Geology, and yet believed the Boo Genesis. He knew all the facts of Astron and yet believed the Book of Joshua, the and moon standing still. Joseph Henry k all the anatomy of man and fish, and yet lieved the Book of Jonah.

If the scientists of the day were all agreed, they came up with solid front to attack Christianity, perhaps they might make some pression upon it; but they are not agreed. often said that we religionists are failing in advocacy of Christianity because we differ in theology. I tell you we do not differ inside church in theology half as much as they d outside the church in science. If they reject religion because we differ on some minor po we might just as well reject science becau scientists differ; but as far as I can tell, the of infidel science against Christianity is n severe as it used to be, because these me antagonistic to each other;—and as far a tell, it is going to be a war between telesco telescope, Leyden jar and Leyden jar, che apparatus and chemical apparatus. They d agree on any thing.

Do you suppose that this Bible theory a the origin of life is going to be overthrow men who have different theories—fifty diff theories—about the origin of life? And v Agassiz comes out and puts both feet on the trine of evolution, and says in regard to scientists, "I notice that these young nat ists are adopting as theories in science t which have not passed under observati Agassiz saw what we all see—that there are who talk very wisely who know but very l and that just as soon as a young scientist out the difference between the feelers of a and the horns of a beetle, he begins to patr the Almighty, and go about talking about cu as though it were spelled c-u-l-c-h-a-r—culc

It makes me sick to see these literary fop ing down the street with a copy of Darwin one arm and a case of transfixed grassho terflies under the other arm, talking e "Survival of the Fittest," and "Hux- otoplasm," and the "Nebular Hypothe- talking to us common men as though fools! If they agreed in their theories up with solid front against Christianity, rhaps they might make some impres- t they do not agree. Darwin charges march, Wallace upon Cope, Herschel rged upon Ferguson. They do not out the gradation of the species; they do about embryology. What do they agree iel wrote a whole chapter on what he "Errors in Astronomy." La Place t the moon was not put in the right at if it had been put four times the dis- om our world, there would have been rmony in the universe. But Lionville just in time to prove that the Lord and put the moon in the right place. ny colors woven into the light? Seven, vton. Three, says David Brewster. h is the Aurora Borealis? Two and a s high, says Lias. One hundred and miles, says Twinig. How far is the the earth? Seventy-six million miles, aille; eighty-two million miles, says t; ninety million miles, says Hender- hundred and four million miles says Only a little difference of twenty-eight miles! These men say we do not agree on. Do they agree in science? Have e up with solid front to assault our Christianity?

nathematicians do not agree. Taylor's ms are found to have faults in them. nch metric system has wrong calcula- 'alk about exact science! They are in- As far as with my little knowledge I have to explore, the only exact scienee is ity. There is nothing under which you ppropriately write, "Quod erat demon-"*

lemen of the jury, have you agreed upon dict?" the court or the clerk says to having been out all night, on coming ave you agreed on your verdict?" If yes, the verdict is taken and recorded. ay, "No, we have not agreed," they back to the jury-room. If one juryman y, "I think the man is guilty of mur- another juryman should say, "I think ty of manslaughter," and another jury- ld say, "I think he is guilty of assault ery with intent to kill," the judge e his patience, and say, "Go back to n now, and make up a verdict; agree hing."

ny friends, there has been

A GREAT TRIAL

for centuries and for ages, between n, the plaintiff, versus Christianity, ndant. The scientists have been d and sworn on the jury. They have e for centuries, some of them, and e back, and we say, "Gentlemen of the e you agreed upon a verdict?" They , we have not agreed." Then we say, k for a few more centuries, and then nd see if you can agree, see if you can me verdict." Now, there is not the prisoner in the Tombs Court who would mned by a jury that could not agree, ou expect us to renounce our glorious ity for such a miserable verdict as these rendered, they themselves not having to agree.

subject shall no longer be defensive; aggressive. I must show you that in- Christianity falling back, it is on the nd that orld is to be the religion of the Lord rist ten thousand times intensified. It possession of every thing—of all laws, rs, all customs, all cities, all nations. It is going to be so mighty as co[illegible] what it has been, so much more mig[illegible] will seem almost like a new religion.

THE COMING RELIGION

I am disposed to think this, I adc[illegible] theory, because Christianity has gone on st[illegible] ahead notwithstanding all the bombardmen[illegible] and Infidelity has not destroyed a church, or crippled a minister, or rooted out one verse of the Bible, and now their ammunition seems to be pretty much exhausted. They cannot get any thing new against Christianity; and if Christianity has gone on under the bombardment of centuries and still continues to advance, may we not conclude that as the powder and shot of the other side seem to be exhausted, Christianity is going on with more rapid stride?

I find an encouraging fact in the thought that the secular press in this day and the pulpit seem harnessed in the same team for the proclamation of the Gospel. To-morrow there will not be a banker on Wall Street who will not have in his pocket or on his table treatises on Christianity, calls to repentance and Scripture passages, twenty and thirty of them, in the reports of the Christian churches of this city and other cities. Why, that thing would have been impossible a few years ago. Now, on Monday morning and Monday evening, the secular press spreads abroad more religious truth than all the tract societies of the country spread in the other six days. Blessed be the tract societies! We hail them, and we hail these others.

I say it would have been impossible a few years ago. Hundreds of letters would have come to the secular newspaper offices, saying: "Stop my paper; we have religion on Sunday; don't give us any through the week. Stop my paper." But I have been told that many of the secular papers have their largest circulation on Monday morning, and the whole population of this country are gradually becoming sermon readers. Besides that, have you not noticed that papers proclaiming themselves merely secular almost every week have religious discussion in them?

Go back to three years ago, when there was not a decent paper in the United States—decent secular paper—that had not a discussion on the doctrine of eternal punishment. Small wits made merry, I know; but there was not an intelligent man in the United States that as a result of that controversy in regard to eternal punishment did not ask himself the question, "What is to be my eternal destiny?" And so seven or eight years ago, when Tyndall offered his prayer gauge, there was not a secular paper in the United States that did not discuss the question: "Does God ever answer prayer? May the creature impress the Creator?" Are not all these facts encouraging to every Christian and every philanthropist?

Besides that, the rising generation are being saturated with Gospel truth as no other generation, by this International Series of Sunday-school lessons. Formerly, the children were expected only to nibble at the little infantile Scripture stories, but now they are taken from Genesis to Revelation, the strongest minds of the country explaining the lessons to the teachers, and the teachers explaining them to the classes; and we are going to have in this country five million youth forestalled for Christianity. Hear it! Hear it!

Besides that, you must have noticed if you have talked on these great themes that they are finding out that while science is grand in secular directions, worldly philosophy grand in secular directions, they cannot give any COMFORT TO A SOUL IN TROUBLE.

Talking with men on steamboats and in rail-cars, I find they are coming back to the comfort of the Gospel. They say: "Somehow human science don't comfort me when I have any trouble, and I must try something else;" and they are trying the Gospel.

Take your scientific consolation to that mother who has just lost her child. Apply the doctrine of the "Survival of the Fittest;" tell her that her child died because its life was not worth [illegible] and go [illegible] your [illegible] see if he is comforted.

Go to that woman who has lost her husband, and tell her it was a geological necessity that that man passed out of existence, just as the megatherium disappeared in order to make room for a higher style of creation, and go on with your consolation and tell her that there is a possibility that ten million years from now we ourselves may be geological specimens on the geological shelf, petrified specimens of the extinct human race!

And after you have got all through with your consolation, if the poor afflicted soul is not utterly crazed, I will send out the plainest Christian from my church, and with one half hour of prayer and the reading of Scripture promises, the tears will be stayed, and the consolation, and the joy in that house will be like the calmness of an Indian summer sunset. There will be a glory flooding the house from floor to cupola. Oh! people are finding out themselves—and they all have troubles—they find that philosophy and human science do not keep them when there is a dead babe in the house. They are coming back to our glorious old-fashioned sympathetic religion.

Oh young man! do not be ashamed to be found on the side of the Bible. Do not join those young men who in this day put their thumbs in their vest, and swagger about the streets and the stores, talking about the glorious nineteenth century, about its light being sufficient without any Bible, and without any Christ, and without any God. The time is coming—we may not live to see it, but I should not be surprised if we did see it—when this whole country is to be one great church, the forests the aisles, the Alleghany and the Rocky Mountains the pillars, the chain of inland lakes the baptismal font, and the worship the Hallelujah Chorus unto Him who was, and is, and shall be evermore. Oh! come over to the majority—come under the banners of Emanuel.

Vernon was

THE SON OF AN ENGLISH SQUIRE.

He was brought up in great elegance. There was a man working on the place by the name of Ralph. Vernon used to often talk with Ralph. After a while Vernon went off to college, and came back with his mind full of scepticism. He talked his scepticism to Ralph the workman.

After a while Vernon went from home again, was gone for years, came back, and among his first questions when getting home was, "Where is Ralph?" "Oh!" said the father, "Ralph is in prison waiting for the day of execution." Vernon hastened to see Ralph. Ralph, looking through the wicket of the prison, said, "Vernon, how good you are to come and see me! I am glad to see you. I hardly expected you would come and see me. I don't blame you, I don't blame anybody: I only blame myself; but, Vernon, I want you to promise me one thing. Will you?" Vernon replied, "I will." "I want you to promise me never to talk scepticism in the presence of young men, or indeed in the presence of anybody. You see it might do them harm. When you used to say there was nothing in the Bible, and it didn't make any difference how we lived, we would come out happy at the last, somehow it had a bad influence upon me, and I went from bad to worse until I am here, and I must die for my crimes."

By almost superhuman effort the sentence was changed, and he was to be transported to another country for life. The ship going there was wrecked on Van Diemen's Land. Among those who perished was Ralph, the victim of Vernon's scepticism. Vernon tells the story to-day with tears and a broken heart; but it is too late! Oh! do not talk scepticism, do not talk scepticism. Let God be true, though every man be found a liar!

---

* Which was to be proved.

Arthur Lemaire Discovers to his sister his Anxiety—He Suggests that she should Appeal to Percival for him—She Indignantly Refuses—He Threatens her—Percival hears of the Forgery by Arthur Lemaire.

Arthur at first did not reveal to Lucie the criminal origin of his necessity—his heart drew back from the burning secret and felt a sort of shrivelling, as it were, at its touch. The words, however, "I must have, and that within a week, £3000, or I am lost," were quite enough to startle and even dismay Lucie without any knowledge of the guilty fact which lay behind them.

"Three thousand pounds!" exclaimed Lucie in alarmed surprise. "What do you mean, Arthur? or what can you have been doing? You greatly agitate me."

"I know I do," he replied sulkily. "I am very sorry, and indeed I am greatly agitated myself; but without entering into particulars, which, of course, you, as a girl, could not be expected to understand, I am so fixed, Lucie, that unless I get the amount I have named, in some way or other, within seven days, I am forever ruined!" and Lucie trembled as she marked, while he spoke, the black despair which sat upon his countenance.

After pondering a while she said, "£3000 seems almost a fabulous sum to me, Arthur, but perhaps it is only because, as you say, I am a girl. Can papa let you have it, do you suppose? He is, I know, very fond of you, Arthur, as his only son; and I am certain if it be at all in his power, will stoop to any sacrifice to help you. He will be home from the Castle, you know, in an hour. Tell him confidently of your need, Arthur, or, if you like, I will open up the subject to him; and, indeed, perhaps that will be the better way both for you and him, for I dread the effect upon him of a sudden announcement of your dreadful jeopardy."

"It would be no use in the world," answered Arthur; and, in a tone full of despondency, "I know all about my father's affairs, Lucie, for he makes me his confidant. He has, it is true, resources much above £3000, but, as I have said, the sum I want must be in my hands in less than a week, and my father's money, I certainly know, is so locked up by his method of investment that it is not realizable. Oh, Lucie, what am I to do? If you knew all you would see that fate, black as night, is gathering over me;" and he stooped his head upon her shoulder for support in his mental agony.

The young girl was greatly affected, and tears gathered in her eyes; observing them, upon looking up for a moment, Arthur got courage to propose what, without such indications of sympathy, notwithstanding his dread extremity, he would not have ventured upon. "Lucie," he said, "there is one that could relieve me—one over whom you have unbounded influence," and he gave her a meaning look. "Yes, one word of my great exigency to Percival (and it was long since he had used the familiar word), one word to him from you, and especially with an intimation from you of a wish that he would help me, would get me the £3000 in a moment. Ay, and that too with very little inconvenience to him, for I can tell you, Lucie, he has a large balance at his banker's." Arthur spoke this in a very insinuating and hesitating way, for, mean of soul as he was, he felt, in spite of himself, ashamed of his proposal.

"Ask Percival to favor you with £3000!" said Lucie, "and use his love to me as a lever to secure it! What kind of a woman, Arthur, do you suppose me to be? or what can be your notion of propriety and honor? Not for all the world would I bear such a request to Percival, and, above all, such a request, Arthur, from you! I need not remind you of the faithlessness and of your conduct toward him. nor in his presence for some time own me you are fully conscious of the ng past.' As your sister, I am bound to m sorry, very sorry, you are in the ex- ity you speak of—one which you say threatens ruin; but if there be no method of saving you, as you assert, but that which you have mentioned, why, then, Arthur, I must only sorrowfully and reluctantly leave you to your fate, and that though it bring upon our happy home, as I fear, a night of tears."

She was about to leave the room, when Arthur retained her.

"Stop for a moment or two!" he cried; "stop, to give me time to say that my ruin will bring far more than tears to this house; it will bring dark obloquy and shame;" and how this would come to pass he explained by informing her with something of fierceness in his manner of the criminal act he had committed.

"Get me this money from Percival," he concluded, "or make up your mind to have me sent into penal servitude, and you yourself thus made the sister of a felon."

Lucie had not sufficient knowledge of the business world to fully comprehend the serious nature of the crime of forgery, or to understand the stigma which was put upon it by society in general. She knew enough, however, to perceive that it was some act very evil indeed, and that it more or less entailed disgrace and social ostracism both upon the forger himself and his relations, and the thought of this caused warm resentment to rise up within her. Beside all this, that it was the name of her lover, presuming upon his connection with the family, which Arthur had used in his felonious deed, also moved her to anger.

"Arthur!" she said, "I feel as though I can scarcely speak to you, or that I can ever again call you brother, you have so dishonored our name. In days past, it is true, to my sorrow, I have been forced to form no very exalted conception of your moral nature. You have in a hundred ways compelled me to place it at a low estimate, which fact has been a mortification and a pain to me, but never could I suppose that a Lemaire could stoop to such a disreputable act as you say you have committed. You are unworthy of your father, and I feel as though I could almost disown you."

"Hush, Lucie!" cried Arthur, becoming in his turn incensed. "I did not come here, my lady, to be lectured by you—a thing which, I must tell you plainly, you have been rather too prone to of late. What I came about was to get your good services, and in a matter which, you will please remember, concerns your interests as well as mine, and indeed, perhaps, yours more than mine, for if the affair I have spoken of gets wind, as without question it must unless you interfere as I have proposed, it will lead to a break-up between you and Percival Montaigne, for, of course, you must see at a glance he would never marry the sister of a felon. No," he continued, "it isn't at all likely he would. No one for a moment could suppose it.

"I see this view of the matter, as, indeed, it well may, strikes you forcibly, Lucie," he added. She had looked at him with parted lips and a scared expression. "And, to tell you the truth, I don't wonder at your alarm, Lucie, for no girl," he said, with vulgar sarcasm, "would like to lose such a good catch as, with the willingness of your sex, you have contrived to make by hooking Percival. I will, therefore, leave you for a little to ponder the subject I have put before you; and I feel certain that reflection will prove to you that there is nothing for it, in regard to both our interests, but that you use your influence, as I have proposed, to obtain the money which, without delay, I must have from Percival." Feeling confident of the irresistible force of his argument, and concluding that Lucie would now see the absolute need of obeying his wish, however unpalatable, he turned to leave the room, saying as he went, "I'll come back in half an hour, Lucie, to learn your consent."

"You may save yourself that trouble, sir, replied firmly and vehemently, as he was pearing, wounded to the quick by the coars of his speech, "for, whatever may be the I shall never bear your request to Perci She spoke the words without a quiver, but Arthur disappeared, and she was left alo the room, the poor girl, overcome by her tion, broke down completely. In a flo tears, she flung herself upon her knees the sofa and buried her face in her hands. sobbing convulsively as though her heart break, she cried bitterly.

She keenly felt that, as Arthur had tol his felonious act compromised grievousl own social position, that her brother's dis ful deed had stained the fair escutcheon whole Lemaire family, and that the genera munity would so pronounce it. After muc tation, and with an agonized heart, she ca the resolve of informing Percival the first tunity of her brother's transgression in f his name, and, since the whole Lemaire c tion was sullied by the act, she would fre from his engagement to her. She felt, i that to give him up would take away th shine from all her future life, but she al that she could not, in honor, jeopardize val's good fame by holding him to the fulfi of a vow which would bring him into ki with a compromised household.

Having, with an indescribable intensity ing, concluded on this step, she next res in her thoughts, how she would act and exactly she would say in her shortly-expec terview with Percival. She also, with a tr heart, set about collecting together the love gifts he had made her, and his ma ers, intending, as a matter of course, to them. Oh, how her heart yearned as love after love-token was added to the parcel table in her room; each object called u to memory the bliss she had known when presented to her, and the happiness of t only served to measure the bitterness present.

Percival did not, however, need to lear Lucie the felonious act of her brother. bank clerk who had handed back to Lemaire the forged acceptance which offered for discount observed the look of upon the young man's countenance which turn occasioned. Long experience gave know that such tokens of inward pertu do not occur without some powerful reas he considered it his duty to intimate to hi what he had noticed, and suggested he bleness of a little inquiry into the circum of the case.

"If Mr. Lemaire," he said, "be so tioned as to make the discount he seeks ter of moment to him, I venture to ask, w not be well for the directors to reconside decision? Mr. Montaigne's name," he "is first-rate and unchallengeable secur that there is no question—and Mr. Lema know, is a gentleman who is well conn might it not, therefore, be both gracious, a matter of business, politic, to meet his nience, and cash this note of hand?"

It was found not long after, upon loo the bank bill-book, that another accept Arnold Percival Montaigne for £3000 hands of the bank, and which had been some three months before, would be d week, and it was at once surmised that ceptance last offered for discount was in o meet the outstanding bill by what was a renewal—an arrangement, it was suppo casioned by some temporary need. Pe history was more or less public in the and, indeed, he and his trustees had som what are called "long-date" deposits at i there.

"In my idea," said a director, "our right, and it is clear to me that Mr. Mo is the party most concerned in this d which has been sought by Mr. Lemair Munroe," he said to the manager, " aine to Mr. Montaigne saying that, though bak, in accordance with a decision pressed by the present critical state of the money had refused early in the day to cash his ce, yet, upon second consideration, it negotiate his note of hand if so doing onvenience him, and that he may come to this effect with Mr. Lemaire."

anager's note Percival found waiting for on the table of the sitting-room in his upon his return from Portarlington. be supposed, its whole tenor was a perdle to him. An acceptance of his, he had been presented for discount at the and had at first been refused, but upon thoughts the directors, to oblige him, escind their decision, "and that he ay so to Mr. Lemaire!"

at, in the name of wonder, can it all Percival asked himself, lost in perplex- have put my name to no note of hand, e never meddled with bill discounting in ; and what on earth can Mr. Lemaire do with such a supposed transaction? I l some mysterious things put before me etime," he added, "but this missive is t insoluble.

(To be continued.)

TIMES OF REFRESHING.

By Dr. A. J. Gordon.

HAN EDWARDS thus describes an experiich came to him while a minister at pton: "Once as I rode into the woods ealth, in 1737, having alighted from my a retired place, as my manner commonly , to walk for divine contemplation and had a view, that for me was extraordithe glory of the Son of God as mediator God and man, and His wonderful, great, , sweet grace and love, and meek and ndescension. This grace that appeared and sweet appeared also great above vens. The person of Christ appeared excellent, with an excellency great to swallow up all thought and concepich continued, as near as I can judge, hour; which kept me the greater part ne in a flood of tears and weeping aloud. ardency of soul to be, what I know not e how to express, emptied and annihilie in the dust and to be full of Christ o love him with a holy and pure love; in Him; to live upon Him; to serve w Him; and to be perfectly sanctified e pure with a divine and heavenly pu-"

g the papers which Pascal left behind, ath, there is one which he long carried person, and which contains the record traordinary divine visitation: "It is," Alexander, "one of the most seraphic ons of human language; in some places und rapture and dissolving love seem to ordinary expressions, and he can only wn such broken phrases as 'joy—joy—ars;'—'joie—joie—pleurs—pleurs.'" describes a day in which, like Edwards, eyed upon horseback absorbed in conons of God.

ll that day's journey he neither met, , nor was overtaken, by any. Thus go is way, his thoughts began to swell and er and higher, like the waters in Ezesion, till at last they became an over flood. Such was the intention of his ch the ravishing tastes of heavenly joys, the full assurance of his interest there he utterly lost the sight and sense of ld and all the concerns thereof, and for urs knew no more where he was than if een in a deep sleep on his bed. Arriving, exhaustion, at a certain spring, he sat d washed, earnestly desiring, if it were ure of God, that it might be his parting m this world."

mas Evans, the eminent Welsh preacher, a not less striking passage in his life:

"On a day ever to be remembered by me, as I was going from Dolgelley to Machynlleth, and climbing up toward Cadai Idris, I considered it to be incumbent upon me to pray, however hard I felt my heart, and however worldly the frame of my spirit was. Having begun in the name of Jesus, I soon felt, as it were, the fetters loosening, and, as I thought, mountains of frost and snow dissolving and melting within me. This engendered confidence in my soul in the promise of the Holy Ghost. I felt my whole mind relieved from some great bondage; tears flowed copiously, and I was constrained to cry out for the gracious visits of God, by restoring to my soul the joy of His salvation; and that He would visit the churches in Anglesea that were under my care. I embraced in my supplications all the churches of the saints, and nearly all the ministers in the principality by their names.

"This struggle lasted for three hours; it rose again and again, like one wave after another, or a high-flowing tide driven by a strong wind, until my nature became faint by weeping and crying. Thus I resigned myself to Christ, body and soul, gifts and labors, all my life, every day and every hour that remained for me; and all my cares I committed to Christ. The road was mountainous and lonesome, and I was wholly alone, and suffered no interruption in my wrestlings with God."

THE BLACK LIST.

THE carnival of vice in New York, some of the horrors of which Dr. Talmage graphically depicted in his "Exploration Sermons," published in this journal in the fall of 1878, still continues to degrade this great city. The Society for the Prevention of Crime, of which Dr. Howard Crosby is president, says, in its third annual report, that in the upper part of the city, and within five hundred yards of some of the finest residences, are several resorts, apparently drinking places, but in reality vile haunts. It states:

"The bar-room proper is elegantly fitted up, with an extravagant display of glassware and crystal chandeliers, while in the rear, separated by a partition, may be found seated a constantly changing company of as motley a class of persons as can possibly be conceived. Males and females of all ages, all smoking or drinking. The singing of low and vulgar songs, loud remarks and conversation, with frequent and boisterous demonstrations of applause, create an almost Babel-like confusion. Waiters passing to and fro, their efforts taxed in supplying the orders for drinks.

"Drunken and half-drunken men and women, cursing and using the foulest language; an unlimited license as to conduct and decency, all point out these places as dens of the vilest character. The females frequenting these haunts are abandoned women of from fifteen to thirty years of age, variously steeped in the degradation of their calling. While the males, who are they? Mostly young men, from seventeen years and upward; not by any means of the lowest class of society, but sons of our best-esteemed citizens, merchants' and bankers' clerks, book-keepers and tellers of banks, employés of insurance offices, city, county, and State office-holders.

"With a view of showing up the magnitude of this evil, an effort is now being made to unmask the personality of the male frequenters of these places, and the names and descriptions which have already been collected form quite an important share in the archives of the society."

The report says also that an effort is making to secure the names and addresses of the frequenters of gambling houses, intimating that the record may be useful for a merchant to consult in regard to an employé's character.

Mr. D. J. Whitney, the energetic chairman of that department of the society which has for its object the enforcing of existing laws, recently stated in an interview with a reporter of the New York Sun that detectives were employed by the society for this purpose. He said:

"Two or four go together, and the names and descriptions of persons they see are filed.

"One afternoon recently, a gentleman and a lady were seen coming out of a house. The gentleman was a highly respected man—a vestryman of a prominent Episcopal church in this city. We went to the keeper of the house and said, 'You must close up and get out of this neighborhood. If you cannot do it yourself, perhaps Mr. So-and-so can help you.' Mr. So-and-so was the Episcopal vestryman. The house was closed in forty-eight hours. That is the use we intend to make of the information we get.

"If we can suppress a place quietly by using our information, we do not intend to go further, but some time we may come out with the information, no matter whom it hurts, if the place is not closed. It isn't to be used unless we think it is necessary. Say that there is a defalcation by a merchant or a clerk. If the clerk spent his money in such places our record will show it, and if the merchant did so and so, our record wil show that. We have a case on hand now that will probably end in a defalcation. A cashier is gambling. He lost money last week in a gambling-house—more than his weekly salary amounted to. He can't go on that way long.

"We are not paying much attention to the frequenters of the concert gardens, so called, in the Bowery. No respectable clerks, salesmen, or merchants go into those places, except to satisfy their curiosity. What we are trying to suppress is the fountain-head.

That the operations of the society are dreaded by the people who grow wealthy on the profits of these dens of infamy is proved by the fact that in one case alone Dr. Crosby was offered $50,000 not to move against a certain place."

The Rev. Dr. S. Irenæus Prime, who is one of the directors of the society, said, "I think that the objects of the society are being promoted by the use of the information collected in the manner described by Mr. Whitney. I think that he is doing just the right thing. It is something that is striking a blow at an infamous business. It will have a good moral effect. Persons will not place themselves in a position to be watched if they know that they are to be watched, and if persons do not frequent places of infamy such places cannot exist. That is evident."

The prosecution of such a task, as registering the evil deeds of prominent members of society, necessarily demands no common degree of moral courage, and it was found at a meeting of the executive committee of the society that a majority of the members were not bold enough to endorse and support Mr. Whitney in his proceedings.

The Black Cross.—Louis XII. of France had many enemies; and when he succeeded to the throne he caused a list of these to be drawn up, and marked against each of their names a large black cross. When this became known the enemies of the king fled, because they thought it was a sign that he intended to punish them. The king, hearing of their alarm, recalled them, and gave them an assurance of his good-will, saying that he had placed a cross beside their names to remind him of the Cross that brings pardon to all; and he urged them, by his own example, and especially by the example of Him who prayed for His enemies, to go and do likewise. This king had learned the beautiful though difficult lesson of forgiving enemies, taught by Christ in the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5:44).

A Recognition of Heroism has been made by Queen Victoria, who has just presented $250 to Private George Dodd, of the British army, in recognition of his gallantry in saving a child from death under the wheels of a tram-car in Dublin. The car was going down a steep incline, and could not be stopped. Dodd sprang forward to snatch the child, and would have paid for his bravery with his life had not the pole struck him and knocked him, with the little one in his arms, clear of the rail.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

THE aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50

per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to MR. BENJAMIN AITKEN, 63 Bible House, New York. The paper may also be obtained weekly from all newsdealers in the United States and Canada.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of specimen copies to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

SUBSCRIBERS frequently write to us for single copies of the CHRISTIAN HERALD. We always endeavor to oblige them, but single and occasional copies can more easily be obtained from a newsdealer. Sometimes we receive complaints that the CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer. Such complaints are promptly attended to, when made to us ; but in all cases we desire that our friends will give the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

LAST week's edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, February 4th, at 4.15 P.M., at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Republican State Convention of Pennsylvania met at Harrisburg, February 4th, and by a vote of 133 to 113 instructed the delegates to support General Grant for President, and to vote as a unit on all questions. This result is not satisfactory to any section of the Republican party. The Grant section has the best reason to be satisfied, but even its members see that the narrow majority was secured not by enthusiasm for the ex-President, but by "the machine" operations of the Cameron family, and that if the Cameron influence had not been exerted the Convention would have supported Mr. Blaine. The Blaine and Sherman sections are dissatisfied, because the Pennsylvania delegation being secured for Grant, an unquestionable advantage has been gained by the third-term party ; and this, if followed by a similar result in New York, will go far toward making Grant the candidate selected when the National Convention meets.

The Harrisburg result will, however, have one beneficial result : it will place the Grant movement squarely before the country. Hitherto it has been represented that General Grant might not approve, or even be cognizant of the movement to place him in the Presidential chair. After the Harrisburg instructions he can no longer profess ignorance of the movement.

Democrats see in this success of the third-term movement an opportunity they think ought not to be allowed to slip. Though the choice of candidates rests with the leaders, the choice of the President rests with the people. The people are perhaps anxious to have Grant for President. If, however, they think eight years in the White House sufficient for one man, they may turn their attention to the candidate the Democratic convention has selected, and should that candidate be unobjectionable to dissatisfied Republicans, there may be a sufficient number of desertions to place him in office. The choice of a Democratic candidate will doubtless be made with this situation in view.

One Hundred Thousand Dollars have been given by the New York Herald to start a fund for the relief of the Irish famine, which is already creating terrible distress. This munificent donation only represents a part of what that journal has done for Ireland's extremity. It has obtained information by cable from Dublin, giving particulars of the condition of about two hundred and seventy towns and villages which are all separately named, and which contain about 250,000 persons in want of food. That is only the beginning of a famine which will be one of the greatest any country has ever known.

Mr. Parnell's selfish conduct and barefaced misrepresentations may have created some doubt as to a safe channel through which people should send their help to the famishing Irish : so the New York Herald has done a public service in offering to receive and acknowledge contributions down to a quarter of a dollar. The public may have perfect confidence that money contributed by this means will be promptly and scrupulously given over to a responsible and properly constituted committee, who will make it go as far as possible to give food to the starving and for no other purpose whatever. We may add that we will gladly receive contributions sent to the CHRISTIAN HERALD Office, however small, and after acknowledging them in these columns, will pay them over as they accumulate, to the New York Herald. God has been very good to America, and this appeal amounts to a practical test of our faith in Him. Those are searching words in 1 John 3 : 17, "Whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" Personally the Editor contributes twenty dollars.

Indignation too deep for Utterance must be excited in the breast of every Christian citizen by the perusal of a Government record, extracts from which are published by a contributor to the Independent. These extracts are in the form of a diary, and they tell in official language the story of the removal of the Poncas to the Indian Territory. We read there that on May 16th, 1877, the Poncas were informed that they must go, and were asked if they would go peaceably or by force. They reluctantly yielded, and on May 21st the march began. Seven hundred persons, more than half of them women and children, trudged over muddy roads, drenched by rain, their tents torn to shreds by tornadoes, walking from fifteen to twenty miles a day, until, on July 9th, they arrived at their destination. On their way, the diary records almost daily the death of a child or a woman from weakness and exhaustion. Arrived there they were set down in a wilderness, the Government having made no provision of any kind for their shelter, and one hundred and fifty-eight of their number died during the dreary winter which followed.

Language fails in the attempt to characterize as it deserves the inhuman barbarity of this removal. Whoever is responsible for it will have to answer for those cruel murders before the bar of God. But we ought to have their names, so that if they escape punishment in this world, at least their memory may be held up in the history of the nation for the loathing and scorn of their countrymen.

Mr. Parnell's Mission to America has so far been a conspicuous failure. The leading journals of New York and other cities stigmatize it as an aggravation of the ills of the Irish famine, and advise the friends of Ireland to hurry him out of the country as quickly and as quietly as possible. His violent and abusive language has offended the tastes of our best citizens, and his ill-judged accusation against other relief organizations checked, for a time, the outflow of American benevolence. He has stumped the country with one stock speech, in which the statements which were relevant were untrue.

He has quarrelled with the press because, having printed the speech several times, they considered the wild rhetoric too stale for reproduction. He has now quarrelled with his bankers, the eminent firm of Drexel, Morgan & Co., who had undertaken to forward gratuitously th scriptions he obtained for his suffering cou men. These gentlemen aver that Mr. P deceived them, and that before they cons to act as his agents they obtained from him tinct avowal that his object was purely itable, and that if he had kept faith with they would have spared neither expense trouble in aiding him ; but as he had mix political agitation with his charity they de to assist him any longer. This quarre gentleman has also been so unfortunate have his most emphatic assertions promptl authoritatively contradicted, even by R Catholic archbishops and bishops, who that while the organizations Mr. Parnel demns have dispensed relief to all who need without regard to politics or religion, Mr nell's fund has, on the contrary, only been for non-rent-paying tenants ; both of which ments Mr. Parnell has mendaciously denie

A Ship-Owner's Offer.—Captain Whi
the owner of the British bark Spanker, n
New York harbor, has liberally offered t vey a ship-load of provisions, free of cha any port in Ireland, for distribution amo starving people. No sooner was this ge offer published, than two stevedores, Mr. T Quigley and Mr. Patrick Keegan, with like ality, offered to load the vessel free of co only remains now for some liberal ci moved by the narratives of suffering pu daily, to furnish the provisions, and the S will soon be on her errand of mercy.

A Project has been Started in New to distinguish the spot on which George ington took the oath of office as first Pre of the United States. The site is situa Wall Street, and is now covered by the States Treasury. The proposal is to pl the corners of the building, at a cost of $ the four statues of Washington, Livin Hamilton, and Clinton, four of the great tionary heroes.

Jerry Macauley's Mission in Water
New York, is doing a wonderful work amo most depraved classes of the city. On S February 1st, a man rose among the audien in quaint language offered his testimony good accomplished in his soul. He said : " saves me to-night from being a drunk gambler, a thief, and from every sinful ha and my wife, not long ago, were good-fo ing drunkards. What we had on our backs we first came into this mission, put to wouldn't have fetched fifty cents in a ju Blessed be God, it isn't so now ! If you what my home was six years ago and saw night you'd say I've got out of hell into h
My old friends alongshore told me they' me to hold on until I'd got a dollar to
But blessed be God I haven't gone bac
What is there to go back to? Jesus kee Every promise in the Bible has been fulfi my case."

His wife followed him, saying, "Ther never a more degraded sinner than I was, shame be it said. My home was a drur hovel, and the principal thing there w rum-bottle. I kept coming to this missi there was so much Romanism rooted and g ed into me that it took a long time for m willing to let Jesus in. But I can now the glory of God, that my sins are all fo and the past is under the Blood. In place rum-bottle we have the Bible in our hom it isn't kept for an ornament ; and if Go us at any time, we are all packed up and to go."

Mr. Moody at St. Louis.—After Mr. concluded his union meeting in the nort of the city, the several churches in that went right on with separate services, each preaching every night in his own church North Presbyterian Church, W. C. Fa pastor, received last Sabbath thirty-five ac to its membership, thirty-three of them c fession of faith. Since then others have e ed a desire to unite with the church.

e Sunday-School Union in Minnesota is g a wonderful work. A Minnesota journal : "The American Bible Society, Tract So- . Sunday-School Union, and Young Men's stian Association are the great union relig- organizations of this country. To none of is Minnesota more indebted than to the ay-School Union. Thousands of dollars been expended, thousands of schools estab- l, many thousands of children protected ignorance and saved from vice by this old society, whose missionaries in Minne- have from the first been men of noble char- and great devotion to the work. In its -western departments alone, the American y School Union has established 408 new y-schools during the last year, with 1559 ers and 12,610 scholars. Three thousand rty-seven destitute persons have been sup- with Bibles or Testaments; 6145 families d, over 2000 addresses and sermons de- d and 116,125 miles journeyed over by their naries during the year."

Unexpected Meeting Occurred Last Week nton, Pa. The Scranton Republican nar- hat a gentleman named Mr. John Merchant to this country from England about ten ago and settled in that city. His sister ed him about nine years, and until last Sat- they did not know of each other's where- , yet they have both been living in Hyde during this time, and have attended the church. They spent last Sabbath to- at his residence, and were, as may be im- , as delighted at the discovery of each as they were sorry that the recognition t taken place earlier. This experience is to that of many anxious sinners who after eeking at length find peace. They are o say as Jacob did when he awoke at Luz, y the Lord is in this place, and I knew it Genesis 28 : 16).

Energetic Protest against Polygamy is d from Salt Lake City. It appears that the citizens named Jones, who is the d of only one wife, was considered by his ionists to be living below the principles reed, and one day recently a portly and d bishop called upon him to remonstrate. nes learned with indignation the object piscopal visit, and seizing a stout broom- tered the room where the conversation ceeding. Her looks and attitude were acing that the bishop took refuge in nd the woman pursued the disturber of estic peace down the street, making de- tions of hostility whenever she came up e so-called bishop. Polygamy is an out- the laws of God and man, and it is sat- to find that men impervious to argu- nd fearless of the punishment of the law and then placed in ridiculous positions. re many men whom nothing but ridicule e to shame.

aring the Cost.—Colonel Ingersoll, the s infidel lecturer, is fond of dwelling on ries paid to ministers of religion, and dis- in an irreverent manner on the large He asserts that the preachers in this cost the people $12,000,000 every year. g journal significantly calls his attention ct that such calculations are best esti- latively, and invites him to compare the upporting the ministry with other sta- Among other interesting facts, it states lawyers cost about $70,000,000, the crim- ,000,000, and whiskey $60,000,000.

arkable Will.—An Eccentric Clergy- recently died in Worcester, Mass., left im a most singular will. After provid- he payment of his debts, he directed balance of his estate should be applied ing the expenses of services in the Tab- Congregational Church. His books he ne of his parishioners, with whom he home some time before his death. All ons, manuscripts, and papers, letters, to be thoroughly burned, unread. He directed that after death he be placed in a box of unplaned boards, dressed in his poorest clothing, and immediately nailed up; that there be no other religious service than the reading by Deacon Bowker, or some other member of his church, of Psalms 23 and 90, and the singing of his favorite hymn "Lead, kindly light." He then provides: "That after the above exercises, I be taken in an express wagon, or any other cheap conveyance, to be interred in any lot or place or parcel of ground that any member of my church will, for the love of God, give me. I am not ashamed to ask this, for my Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ had to be under a similar obligation and to be favored with a like disposition after His death; that no headstone, floral wreath, or other sign be used to mark the place of my burial, as my Lord and God needs no such reminder of the place where my dust reposes."

How a Fortune was Achieved by an Accident is related in a California journal dated January 10th. A certain Mr. Snow had been out all day prospecting, and was returning to his home unsuccessful, when, on crossing a narrow trail, the horse he was riding slipped and fell, carrying its rider with it over a precipitous ledge. Mr. Snow lost all hope of life as he rolled down a fearful descent, but eventually his fall was stopped by a large rock projecting above the snow. The horse, too, had struck the rock with its feet, and Mr. Snow, on recovering his senses after the shock, noticed that something glittered where the iron shoes of the horse had alighted. Breaking off a few pieces, he discovered that it was quartz, three-quarters gold. Examining further he found a vein several feet thick, and realized that he was rich beyond his most sanguine expectations. While he searched he had found nothing, but an accident he feared would be a fatal one revealed to him the precious treasure. How often has an overwhelming misfortune, or a serious illness, revealed to a sin-burdened soul a treasure more precious than gold—Christ the Saviour of the lost!

A Gold Craze has Filled the Brain of a Harmless lunatic who lives near Flemington, N. J. Dressed in miserable rags, and living in a wretched hut in a swamp, the man imagines himself the possessor of enormous wealth. He goes about the neighborhood with a bag, into which he puts pebbles he finds, which he calls double eagles. He also collects advertising cards from tradesmen, which he thinks are bank-notes for large amounts. As the poor fellow never attempts to spend any of his fancied treasures, but only hoards them, his pursuit is as profitable to him as that of a miser hoarding gold. Many people pity him and laugh at him who are themselves deceived as to the value of their own acquisitions. Only those who possess the pearl of great price know how immeasurably all earthly possessions are outweighed in value by that one treasure offered to all without money and without price. Eternity will show the worthlessness of much that the world esteems most valuable.

Indian Missions.—The American Board has expended more than $1,200,000 on missions among the Indians, and gathered 50 churches, with 4000 members. The mission among the Dakotas returns eight churches and 600 members.

A WOMAN OF A SORROWFUL SPIRIT.

A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"Hannah answered and said, No, my lord, I am a woman of a sorrowful spirit."—1 SAMUEL 1 : 15.

I. Much that is Precious may be Connected with a Sorrowful Spirit—1. Hannah was a Godly Woman—2. A Lovable Woman—3. A Very Gentle Woman—4. A Thoughtful Woman—5. A Blessed Woman—II. Much that is Precious may Come out of a Sorrowful Spirit—1. Hannah had Learned to Pray—2. She had Learned Self-denial—3. Faith—4. She had Learned Much of God—III. Much that is Precious will yet be Given to those of a Sorrowful Spirit—1. Hannah had her Prayer Answered—2. Grace to Use the Answer—3. Power to Magnify the Lord—4. Preparation for Further Blessings—5. She Became a Brave Witness for God.

THE special cause of Hannah's sorrow arose from the institution of polygamy, which, although it was tolerated under the old law, is always exhibited to us in practical action as a most fruitful source of sorrow and sin. In no one recorded instance in Holy Scripture is it set forth as admirable; and in most cases the proofs of its evil effects lie open to the sun. Lamech leads the way, and he is a homicide descended of the murderous house of Cain, and the father of Tubal-Cain, or Vulcan, the fashioner of weapons of destruction: never was this institution the harbinger of peace, but the favorer of strife.

We ought to be grateful that under the Christian religion that abomination has been wiped away; for even with such husbands as Abraham, Jacob, David, and Solomon it did not work toward happiness or righteousness. The husband found the system a heavy burden, grievous to be borne, for he soon found out the truth of the wise man's advice to the Sultan, "First learn to live with two tigresses, and then expect to live happily with two wives."

The wife must in nearly every case have felt the wretchedness of sharing a love which ought to be all her own. What miseries Eastern women have suffered in the harem none can tell, or perhaps imagine. In the case before us, Elkanah had trouble enough through wearing the double chain, but still the heaviest burden fell upon his beloved Hannah, the better of his two wives. The worse the woman the better she could get on with the system of many wives, but the good woman, the true woman, was sure to smart under it. Though dearly loved by her husband, the jealousy of the rival wife embittered Hannah's life, and made her "a woman of a sorrowful spirit."

We thank God that no longer is the altar of God covered with tears, with weeping, and with crying out, of those wives of youth who find their husbands' hearts estranged and divided by other wives. Because of the hardness of their hearts the evil was tolerated for a while, but the many evils which sprang of it should suffice to put a ban upon it among all who seek the welfare of our race.

But enough sources of grief remain; more than enough; and there is not in any household, I suppose, however joyous, the utter absence of the cross. The worldling says, "There is a skeleton is every house." I know little about such dead things, but I know that a cross of some sort or other must be borne by every child of God.

Probably some Hannah is now before me, smarting under the chastening hand of God, some child of light walking in darkness, some daughter of Abraham bowed down by Satan, and it may not be amiss to remind her that she is not the first of her kind, but that in years gone by there stood at the door of God's house one like to her, who said of herself, "No, my lord, I am a woman of a sorrowful spirit." May the ever-blessed Comforter, whose work lies mainly with the sorrowful, fill our meditation with consolation at this time.

I. In speaking of this "woman of a sorrowful spirit" we shall make this first remark—that

MUCH THAT IS PRECIOUS MAY BE CONNECTED WITH A SORROWFUL SPIRIT.

In itself, a sorrowful spirit is not to be desired.

Give us the bright eye, the cheerful smile, the vivacious manner, the genial tone. If we do not desire mirth and merriment, yet give us at least that calm peace, that quiet composure, that restful happiness which makes home happy wherever it pervades the atmosphere. There are wives, mothers, and daughters who should exhibit more of these cheerful graces than they now do, and they are very blamable for being petulant, unkind, and irritable; but there are others, I doubt not, who labor to their utmost to be all that is delightful, and yet fail in the attempt, because, like Hannah, they are of a sorrowful spirit, and cannot shake off the grief which burdens their heart.

Now, it is idle to tell the night that it should be brilliant as the day, or bid the winter put on the flowers of summer; and equally vain is it to chide the broken heart. The bird of night cannot sing at heaven's gate, nor can the crushed worm leap like a hart upon the mountains. There are circumstances of constitution, education, and surroundings which render it difficult for some very excellent persons to be cheerful: they are predestined to be known by such a name as this—"A woman of a sorrowful spirit."

1. Note well the precious things which went in Hannah's case with a sorrowful spirit. The first was true godliness: she was a godly woman. As we read the chapter, we are thoroughly certified that her heart was right with God. We cannot raise any question about the sincerity of her prayer, or the prevalence of it. We do not doubt for a moment the truthfulness of her holy joy, the confidence of her faith, or the strength of her consecration. She was one that feared God above many, an eminently gracious woman, and yet "a woman of a sorrowful spirit."

Never draw the inference from sorrow that the subject of it is not beloved of God. You might more safely reason in the opposite way, though it would not be always safe to do so, for outward circumstances are poor tests of a man's spiritual state. Certainly Dives, in his scarlet and fine linen, was not beloved of God, while Lazarus, with the dogs licking his sores, was a favorite of heaven; and yet it is not every rich man that is cast away, or every beggar that will be borne aloft by angels. Outward condition can lead us to no determination one way or another. Hearts must be judged, conduct and actions must be weighed, and a verdict given otherwise than by the outward appearance.

Fools despise the afflicted, but wise men prize them. Many of the sweetest flowers in the garden of grace grow in the shade, and flourish in the drip. True, there are children of the tropical sun, whose beauty and fragrance could only be produced by having bathed themselves in the golden flood, and these, in certain respects, must always stand in the forefront, yet are there choice flowerets to whom the unshaded sun would be death. They prefer a sheltered bank, or a ravine in the forest, under the shadow of the thick boughs, where a softened, mellow light develops them to perfection.

These are not pearls with the mild radiance of peace, nor rubies with the ruddy hue of ardor, nor sapphires with the bright blue of joy, nor emeralds with the restfulness of confidence: but diamonds of the first water, incarnate drops of sorrow, clear and transparent, and soon to be set among the brightest gems in the Redeemer's diadem. Hannah, then, possessed godliness despite her sorrow.

2. In connection with this sorrowful spirit of hers Hannah was

A LOVABLE WOMAN.

Her husband greatly delighted in her. That she had no children was to him no depreciation of her value. He said, "Am I not better to thee than ten sons?" He evidently felt that he would do anything in his power to uplift the gloom from her spirit.

This fact is worth noting, for it does so happen that many sorrowful people are far from being lovable people. In too many instances their griefs have soured them. Their affliction has generated acid in their hearts, and with that acrid acid they bite into everything they touch; their temper has more of the oil of vitriol in it than of the oil of brotherly love.

It is a pity it should be so, and yet so it is that men and women of a sorrowful spirit are frequently to be met with who are unloving and unlovable. The more heartily, therefore, do I admire in true Christian people the grace which sweetens them so that the more they suffer themselves the more gentle and patient they become with other sufferers, and the more ready to bear whatever trouble may be involved in the necessities of compassion.

Beloved, if you are much tried and troubled, and if you are much depressed in spirit, entreat the Lord to prevent your becoming a kill-joy to others. Remember your Master's rule, "And thou, when thou fastest, anoint thy head, and wash thy face, that thou appear not unto men to fast." I say not that our Lord spoke the word with the exact meaning I am now giving to it, but it is a kindred sense. Be cheerful even when your heart is sad. There is no need that the world should be hung in black because I wear crape on my hat. It is not necessary that every heart should be heavy because I am burdened; of what use would that be to me or to any one else?

For my own part, for the sake of sick and sorrowful people, I am sorry when I hear the knell from the church tower intruding a death note into every mourner's ear, and all perhaps because some heir of glory has risen to the throne of God and of the Lamb. That bell with solemn toll, no doubt, has a voice to the careless, and so far so good, but as the stern voice of melancholy, it is an offence against Christianity, importing that all death is doleful, and causing the sick upon their beds to feel more mournful than needs be.

Publish good news. Ring the joy-bells as loudly as you will; but there is no particular need to be everlastingly pestering everybody with your griefs. No, let us try to be cheerful that we may be lovable, even if we still remain of a sorrowful spirit. Self and our own personal woes must not be our life-psalm, nor our daily discourse. Others must be thought of, and in their joys we must try to sympathize.

3. In Hannah's case, too, the woman of a sorrowful spirit was

A VERY GENTLE WOMAN.

Peninnah, with her harsh and haughty and arrogant speech, vexed her sore to make her fret, but we do not find that she answered her. At the annual festival, when Peninnah had provoked her most, she stole away to the sanctuary to weep alone, for she was very tender and submissive. When Eli said, "How long wilt thou be drunken? put away thy wine from thee," she did not answer him tartly, as she might well have done.

Her answer to the aged priest is a model of gentleness. She most effectually cleared herself, and plainly refuted the harsh imputation, but she made no retort, and murmured no charge of injustice. She did not tell him that he was ungenerous in having thought so harshly, nor was there anger in her grief. She excused his mistake. He was an old man. It was his duty to see that worship was fitly conducted, and if h light, and like the sycamore figs are ripened their bruising. When their own bleeding wou makes them tender of wounding others, a their own hurt makes them more ready to be what of hurt may come through the mistakes others, then have we a lovely proof that "swe are the uses of adversity."

4. There was more, however, than I ha shown you, for Hannah was for her sorrow drove her first within h self, and next into much communion wi her God. That she was a highly thought woman appears in everything she says. S does not pour out that which first comes hand. The product of her mind is evident that which only a cultivated soil could yield. will not just now speak of her song, further th to say that for loftiness of majesty and fuln of true poetry it is equal to anything from pen of that sweet psalmist of Israel, David hi self. The Virgin Mary evidently followed the wake of this great poetess, this mistress the lyric art.

A THOUGHTFUL WOMAN,

5. Remember also, that though she wa woman of a sorrowful spirit, she was a ble woman. I might fitly say of her, "Hail, thou art highly favored! The Lord is with t Blessed art thou among women." The dau ters of Belial could laugh and make merry, regard her as the dust beneath their feet, but had she with her sorrowful spirit found grac the sight of the Lord. There was Penin with her quiver full of children, exulting the barren mourner, yet was not Penin blessed, while Hannah, with all her griefs, dear unto the Lord. She seems to be some like him of another age, of whom we read Jabez was more honorable than his brethren cause his mother bare him with sorrow.

It is now clear that much that is precious go with a sorrowful spirit. Let none of yo spise the downcast, and never think harsh those who are sad. If we be sorrowful ourse let us not write bitter things against ourse but hope in God under all discouragements we shall yet praise Him who is the health o countenance and our God.

II. We come now to a second remark, w is that it is not only to be found with it, but may grow out of it.

MUCH THAT IS PRECIOUS MAY COME OUT SORROWFUL SPIRIT:

1. Observe, first, that through her sor spirit Hannah had learned to pray. I wil say but what she prayed before this great s struck her, but this I know, she prayed more intensity than before when she hea rival talk so exceeding proudly, and saw to be utterly despised. Oh! brothers an ters, if you have a secret grief, learn wh carry it, and delay not to take it there. from Hannah. Her appeal was to the She poured not out the secret of her sou mortal ear, but spread her grief before God own house, and in His own appointed m She was in bitterness of soul, and prayed Lord. Bitterness of soul should always sweetened.

2. In the next place, Hannah had learn denial. This is clear, since the very pra which she hoped to escape out of her grea was a self-denying one. She desired a so her reproach might be removed; but if h might be blessed with such a sight she cheerfully resign her darling to be the Lo long as he lived.

Mothers wish to keep their children them. It is natural that they should wis them often. But Hannah, when most ea a man-child, asking but for one, and that the special gift of God, yet does not se for herself, but for her God. She has it heart that, as soon as she has weaned hi will take him up to the house of God an him there, as a dedicated child whom s only see at certain festivals. Read h words: "O Lord of hosts, if thou wilt on the affliction of thine handmaid, and re-er me, and not forget thine handmaid, but ive unto thine handmaid a man-child, then give him unto the Lord all the days of his and there shall no razor come upon his ” Her heart longs not to see her boy at , his father's daily pride, and her own solace, but to see him serving as a Levite house of the Lord. She thus proved that d learned self-denial.

sonally, I bless God for joy, I think I could imes do with a little more of it; but I when I take stock of my whole life, that I ery seldom made any real growth in grace
: as the result of being digged about and d by the stern husbandry of pain. My greenest in showery weather: my fruit is st when it has been frosted by a winter's Woe's me that I should have to make nbling a confession of my own foolishness, ith compels me thus to stand among those ught to be ashamed.
pe that many of you are much more gra-han I am, and have made much better use r mercies, and yet I fear that many of my en must confess that they have made eadway in spiritual sailing amid the raging sea than in more halcyon times. A stiff brings certain of us far more help than
, and even a tempest is not without its ction. If we have self-denial wrought in vever costly the process, the result abun-repays us.
nother precious thing had come to this
, and that was,

SHE HAD LEARNED FAITH.

d become proficient in believing promises.
very beautiful to note how at one mo-he was in bitterness, but as soon as Eli d, “Go in peace: and the God of Israel hee thy petition that thou hast asked of ” the woman went her way and did eat, r countenance was no more sad.” She t yet obtained the blessing, but she was led of the promise, and embraced it, after ristly fashion which our Lord taught us le said, “Believe that ye have the peti-hich ye have asked, and ye shall have she wiped her tears, and smoothed the s from her brow, knowing that she was By faith she held a man-child in her nd presented it to the Lord.
ill more of preciousness this woman of a ul spirit found growing out of her sort with one invaluable item I shall close
: she had evidently learned much of God.
from common family joys, she had been near to God, and in that heavenly fellow-e had remained a humble waiter and . In seasons of sacred nearness to the e had made many heavenly discoveries of e and nature, as her song makes us pershe now knew that the heart's truest ot in children, nor even in mercies given er to prayer, for she began to sing, “My joiceth in the Lord”—not “in Samuel,” Jehovah her chief delight was found.

horn is exalted in the Lord”—not “in tle one whom I have so gladly brought he sanctuary.” No. She says in the rse, “I rejoice in thy salvation,” and it n so. God was her exceeding joy, and ation her delight.
she had also discovered the Lord's gloliness, for she sang, “There is none holy Lord.” The wholeness of His perfect r charmed and impressed her, and she Him as far above all others in His good-he had perceived His all sufficiency, she t He is all in all, for she sang, “There beside thee; neither is there any rock God.” She had found out God's method dence, for how sweetly she sings, “The the mighty men are broken, and they mbled are girded with strength.” She at this was always God's way—to over-ose who are strong in self, and to set up ho are weak. It is God's way to cut down and wither the high and green trees, and to cause the low and withered trees to flourish.

She had also been taught the way and method of His grace as well as of His providence, for never did a woman show more acquaintance with the wonders of divine grace than she did when she sang, “He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory.” This, too, is another of those ways of the Lord which are only understood by His people. None but they will ever sing of this singular sovereignty of grace: as for the worldlings, they utterly abhor the doctrine.

She had also seen the Lord's faithfulness to His people. Some Christians, even in these gospel days, do not believe in the doctrine of the final perseverance of the saints, but she did. She sang, “He will keep the feet of His saints;” and, beloved, so He will or none of them will ever stand.

> “If ever it could come to pass,
> That sheep of Christ could fall away,
> My fickle, feeble, soul, alas!
> Would fall a thousand times a day.'

But here is my comfort, and yours also, “He will keep the feet of His saints.”

She had foreseen also somewhat of His kingdom, and of the glory of it. Her prophetic eye, made brighter and clearer by her holy tears, enabled her to look into the future, and looking, her joyful heart made her sing, “He shall give strength unto His King, and exalt the horn of His Anointed.”

Have I not sufficiently shown you that many precious things come out of a sorrowful spirit?

III. And now, lastly,

MUCH THAT IS PRECIOUS WILL BE GIVEN to those who are truly the Lord's, even though they have a sorrowful spirit.

1. For, first, Hannah had her prayers answered. Ah! little could she have imagined, when Eli was rebuking her for drunkenness, that within a short time she should be there, and the same priest should look at her with deep respect and delight because the Lord had favored her. And you, my dear friend of a sorrowful spirit, would not weep so much to-night if you knew what is in store for you. You are sickening and pining away, and will soon go to your long home. You would not be so depressed if you remembered how bright around your head will shine the starry diadem, and how sweetly your tongue shall pour forth heavenly sonnets such as none can sing but those who, like you, have tasted of the bitter waters of grief. It is better on before! It is better on before! A short way ahead the road will end or mend!

2. Not only did there come to Hannah after her sorrow an answered prayer, but grace to use that answer. I do not think that Hannah would have been a fit mother for Samuel if she had not first of all been of a sorrowful spirit. It is not everybody that can be trusted to educate a young prophet. Many a fool of a woman has made a fool of her child. He was so much her “duck that he grew up to be a goose. It needs a wise woman to train up a wise son, and therefore I regard Samuel's eminent character and career as largely the fruit of his mother's sorrow, and as a reward for her griefs.

Hannah was a thoughtful mother, which was something, and her thought induced diligence. She had slender space in which to educate her boy, for he left her early to wear the little coat, and minister before the Lord; but in that space er work was effectually done, for the child Samuel worshipped the very day she took him up to the temple.

In many of our homes we have a well-drawn picture of a child at prayer, and such I doubt not was the very image of the youthful Samuel. I like to think of him with that little coat on—that linen ephod—coming forth in solemn style, as a child-servant of God, to help in the services of the temple.

3. Hannah had acquired another blessing, and that was the power to magnify the Lord. Those sweet songs of hers, especially that precious one which we have been reading—where did she get it from? I will tell you? Hannah's poesy was born of her sorrow; and if every one here that is of a sorrowful spirit can but learn to tune his harp as sweetly as she tuned hers, he may be right glad to have passed through such griefs as she endured.

4. Moreover, her sorrow prepared her to receive further blessings, for after the birth of Samuel she had three more sons and two daughters, God thus giving her five for the one that she had dedicated to Him. This was grand interest for her loan: five hundred per cent. Parting with Samuel was the necessary preface to the reception of other little ones. God cannot bless some of us till first of all he has tried us. Many of us are not fit to receive a great blessing till we have gone through the fire. Half the men that have been ruined by popularity have been so ruined because they did not undergo a preparatory course of opprobrium and shame. Half the men who perish by riches do so because they had not toiled to earn them, but made a lucky hit, and became wealthy in an hour.

Passing through the fire anneals the weapon which afterward is to be used in the conflict; and Hannah gained grace to be greatly favored by being greatly sorrowing. Her name stands amongst the highly-favored women because she was deeply sorrowing. She shines a bright, particular star among the faithful, and this had not been if she had not been first a woman of a sorrowful spirit. Take up your load, my beloved. Do not become murmurers as well as mourners. Carry your cross, for it is in very truth a golden one. Carry the inward as well as the outward burden, for now for a season there is a “needs be” that ye be in heaviness through manifold temptations, but afterward comes the comfortable fruit. Look for fair results, and meanwhile bear what the Lord appoints you without repining.

5. Last of all, it was by suffering in patience that she became so brave a witnees for the Lord, and could so sweetly sing, “There is none holy as the Lord, neither is there any rock like our God.” We cannot bear testimony unless we test the promise, and therefore happy is the man whom the Lord tests and qualifies to leave a testimony to the world that God is true. To that witness I would set my own personal seal. O that it might be mine to do so at the close of life in humble prose, as that sweet poetess Miss Havergal did in richest poesy ere she entered her eternal rest. Here are some of her last lines, and with them I close:

> “Master, I set my seal that thou art true;
> Of thy good promise not one thing hath failed!
> And I would send a ringing challenge forth,
> To all who know thy name, to tell it out,
> Thy faithfulness to every written word,
> Thy lovingkindness crowning all the days—
> To say and sing with me: ‘The Lord is good,
> His mercy is for ever, and his truth
> Is written on each page of all my life'!
> Yes, there is tribulation, but thy power
> Can blend it with rejoicing. There are thorns,
> But they have kept us in the narrow way,
> The King's highway of holiness and peace.
> And there is chastening, but the Father's love > Flows through it; and would any trusting heart
> Forego the chastening and forego the love?
> And every step leads on to ‘more and more,’
> From strength to strength thy pilgrims pass, and sing
> The praise of Him who leads them on and on,
> From glory unto glory, even here'”

[Portions of Scripture read before sermon—1 SAM. i. 1–3, 9–28: ii. 1–11, 18, 19.]

[The prayers of the readers of this Journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors in America and England, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and for its weekly circulation of more than 165,000 copies to be blessed by the Holy Spirit to the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Mr. Spurgeon and Dr. Talmage especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

PERILS AT SEBASTOPOL.

A Recollection by Major Malan.

"Why am I writing these recollections?" I ask myself: My answer comes from God's Word, "Whoso offereth ME praise glorifieth ME." I desire to offer praise and to glorify him. Is it not written in that portion of His Word where so many of His mercies are recorded, "Oh that men would therefore praise the Lord for His goodness, and declare the wonders that He doeth for the children of men"? These, therefore, are my reasons for writing these pages. For no other purpose than to praise God would I put pen to paper.

It was midnight, 17th June, 1855, before Sebastopol. The regiments for the assault were paraded noiselessly in their camps. The writer marched with his to its appointed place in the trenches. The signal was given for the attack, and with his regiment he advanced. When the assault was over, lying on a camp-bed, his body pierced with five bullet-holes, and not a bone broken, he spoke very plainly of God's great mercy that day to him.

It was an awful morning! A dreadful scene! One over which devils must have rejoiced while angels wept. I have often thought since if the daring devotion and courage there and then displayed were only exerted in the service of God, what wonders we should see! But yet it is easier to rush on to an assault, to almost certain death, than to confess Christ.

Some time ago, after lunching at a railway refreshment room, I wished to give a tract to one of the waiteresses, but felt a timidity at the time in doing it. For ten minutes I hesitated. At last, just as the train came in, I went up to her and said, "You would hardly believe that an officer who went through the assault on Sebastopol was afraid to offer you this tract. But I must now give it to you." I need hardly remark that she received it, and thanked me, with a smile.

God was not only merciful to me on the morning of the battle of Sebastopol, but to many hundreds more in our army. Apart from the know fact that not one shot in several hundred fired ever takes effect, the mercy which watches over every field of battle—His mercy — was specially shown to the British army that day. As it tends to His glory, and to the honor of a brave and good general, who did not receive from his country the credit he deserved, I take pleasure in recording the following fact.

I had regained the trenches, when I met Lord Raglan. I was leaning on the arm of a sergeant of my regiment. He noticed my wounds, spoke very kindly, and asked me how they were getting on at the front. I told him, in schoolboy language, "Thrashed." I did not know at the time who he was, but I was much struck by his kind face, his calm manner, and his empty sleeve.

He left the trenches, stood out in the open for a moment or two, and then spoke somewhat thus to one of his aides-de-camp, "It's no use; no troops could live under such a fire as this. I never saw anything like it in the Peninsula." Little did I then think that that noble disregard for his own reputation and thoughtfulness for the lives of his men, saved, under God's mercy, hundreds of our soldiers from a useless death on that morning. Now I see that this was so.

The French assault had failed before ours began, for the French did not wait for the signal. Ours was made, and failed. The attack was meant to be a surprise, and this not having succeeded, further assault was at that stage of the siege useless. Nevertheless, the French general ordered a second assault, and many more hundred lives were sacrificed at the altar of vainglory.

The English general, by God's mercy, would not order the assault to be repeated, and thus, as the trenches were crammed at the time with fresh troops, hundreds of the lives of our men were that day spared. I asked the sergeant who it was that spoke to me. He replied, "Lord Raglan, sir." I honor the memory of Lord Raglan as a good soldier, and I praise God who gave him grace that morning not to cover defeat under a heavier loss of life than was, alas! unavoidable.

To my mother's prayers I believe now that I owed my many merciful escapes that day. She left me for the presence of God when I was three years old; but I believe that, in answer to her prayers, His love guarded me then, as it has since drawn me to Himself. "I shall never forget your mother's prayers," wrote an old friend to me lately, "so humble, so spiritual, so fervent."

But I fancy I hear some unbelieving heart whisper as it reads this, "Were there no sons for whom a mother's prayers were offered whose bodies were left lifeless before that Redan?" Doubtless many, my friend; but if you are such a mother, I would say, wait until we enter the glory to see whether your prayers were not answered. No one can tell what may pass between a soul and its God in the solemn moment preceding an assault. Remember it is written, "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved" (Acts 2:21).

No one can indeed tell what passes between a soul and its God in the anticipation of possible death. How earnestly I prayed that night before lying down to rest! and so did a very dear friend and brother officer, who fell afterward at the second assault. I did not know how to pray; but I cried to God, and He heard me; for He does not despise the prayer of the humblest sinner who approaches Him in the name of His Son. I asked for the preservation of my life, and for courage in battle.

Wonderfully were my prayers answered. So thoroughly wes I preserved from fear, that I now remember every act in that awful tragedy as if it were yesterday. The enemy of man has in our days, by a masterpiece of cunning, got most men to disbelieve the truths concerning him set forth in God's Word. He has destroyed his own individuality. It is a pleasant theory, for time, to the careless man of the world, but it will prove to have been a terrible delusion in the fast approaching eternity. No one who has been obliged to lie down on a field of battle, and see what goes on, can doubt that there is a devil.

Soon after I left the trenches my legs were paralyzed for a few minutes by a bullet striking my right hip. As I lay on the ground I watched the scene. Why were those men killing each other? They had never had any quarrel. They had never wronged one another. They would have preferred to have met in peace. But they could not help themselves! What is the explanation of this scene of blood? Only one can be given. "An enemy hath done this." A mighty spirit of evil. An enemy of God and man. This enemy, Satan, is called by the Lord, "the prince of this world" (John 12:31; 16:11).

Why? Doubtless because the world at large serves him instead of God. But also I believe, because this earth was Satan's principality as an archangel before he fell, when he was cast out, and his material kingdom reduced to chaos by God. There is, I believe, ample support in God's Word for this meaning of that title. It certainly removes some of the objections made by scientific men to the supposed duration of this world, and explains the gigantic fossil remains of animals whose existence in this world, according to the Bible, has never been known.

Satan still possesses his angelic—his spiritual power, and fearfully he uses it in his endeavor to bring men into his own condemnation.

What I saw was not worth describing. It was a horrible spectacle of human folly, suffering, and death. Satan has blinded men to glorify war, and to sanction manslaughter under the plea of "balance of power" or any other "political necessity." Human life has enough sensation in it, and needs not sensational writing. Oh, for the time when nation shall not lift up sword against nation, and they shall learn war no more!

THE JEWS, GOD'S WITNESSES.

By Dr. Horatius Bonar.

The Present Desolation of Jerusalem—The of Restoration Future—The whole Nation jected the Messiah—The Jewish Nation a ness—1. To the Unity of God—2. Against atry—3. To the Supernatural—4. To Subs tion in the Divine Government—5. Of Et Judgment—6. To the Grace of God.

This, brethren, is not the day of Israel's ing. A cloud rests over Jerusalem, but not cloud of glory as in ancient days, for that long since departed. It is the cloud of ind tion and wrath from Him who was once light of Israel and the joy of the glorious Jerusalem lies waste and in ruins, and Gen whose very names the fathers knew not down into their deepest foundations, as prove how thoroughly the Divine threat has been fulfilled. It was once the city o blessing, it is now the city of the curse; and not only dug up, but trodden down by the tiles

UNTIL THE TIME BE FULFILLED.

A cloud of gloom rests over the once-gl temple, to which in past ages the twelve went up, and where, three times a year, th ty of the nation was declared—unity in unity in worship, and unity in fortune for and evil. It is now razed to the rock, ar Mohammedan has erected, over the place the great altar stood, a mosque, whose s dome proclaims the conqueror's presence, the massive walls shut out the nation. Jews in the city of their fathers may be s be only strangers. And the same dark rests over the land: all is desolation! home of the Ten Tribes is most wretched to tell us that Israel preceded Juda in her tion of the king, and that the tribes north, in refusing the Messiah, brought the same curse which had descended upon The land of the tribes lies waste, becaus were the foremost in rejecting the Lord of It was to these, you will remember, th words apply, "Then began He to upbr cities in which His mighty works had done," etc. The same cloud rests upon th ple no less than upon the land. Their cri the refusal of the Messiah.

This is not the day for Israel. It is the graft that is bearing fruit, and not the old for this shall not bear fruit until the M Himself shall come. Then, but not till shall all Israel be saved. This is the day tile blessing, and any theory which woul Ephraim or Juda into prominence deran order of Israel's grace and of Israel's bl In the absence of Messiah, Israel's land r unblest. It is His presence that must br glory.

TILL HE COME

Israel must be scattered. It is not the blessing to the tribe of Jacob. A remnan ing gathered, but that is all; the rest ar ed. Any theory which assumes this to day of blessing overlooks the truth that rael's fall which has been the riches world. "As ye were a curse among th then, O house of Juda," etc., "so if I sa ye shall be blest." The day of salvation to be until that is fulfilled spoken of prophet. "I will return unto," etc. Any that bases itself on the assumption that the day of Israel's blessing sets aside precation, "His blood be upon us," et all Israel stood at the cross, and too themselves this curse of the innocent blo twelve tribes were represented there, and in the cry of "Crucify Him! crucify And so, on all Israel the sentence came f rejection of the Holy One. It was n heard in Jerusalem, but in heaven ar Parthians and Medes, Greeks and Roma witness to which was to sever Israel from the

THE FULL REJECTION

The question put, "Is this Jesus wh said to be?" the instant answer was, no!' "What shall be done with Him then?" With one voice, the whole multitude, from Dan to Beersheba, affirmed, "Let Him be crucified." Both sides of the Jordan united in this, it was a great national gathering. It was all Israel that rejected the Messiah and crucified the Lord of Glory. The Apostle Paul recognizes this unity of the nation when he speaks of the promise, Unto which promise our twelve tribes," etc. And it is this unity which represents their oneness in unbelief. It is this universal rejection that demonstrates so fully that it is not the day of Israel's blessing. This time will come in God's own appointed hour. It will come when He comes in glory; but not till then. Never was fuller cup of blessing pressed upon them than when He said, "Come unto Me." And never has such a cup of bitterness been drunk for 1800 years as that which has been their portion because of their rejection.

THEIR CUP OF BLESSING

was the fullest; their cup of trembling has been quite as full. All Israel has been broken to pieces, the land of the twelve tribes has been laid waste, and their cities are a desolation. The fortunes of the land and the fortunes of the tribes went together. When the tribes were blessed, the land was blessed; and when all Israel shall be saved, then shall the wilderness and the solitary place be made glad once more, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. But now let us learn the lessons of which their past and future condition are pregnant.

1. They bear witness to the One God. From first to last their testimony is that Jehovah is one. "Hear, O Israel, the Lord thy God is one God." The Lord God of the Hebrews, the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob, is the one living and true God. The whole nation protests against polytheism, and abhors idolatry. This testimony the Jew has continued to bear. Their synagogues in the East and West are witnesses to the same truth.

They were witnesses against the idolatry of Rome. When a triumphal arch was erected in honor of the emperor who laid the Jewish nation waste, and on which were engraven the trophies of conquest—amongst these trophies the Candlestick taken from the Jewish temple, reminding all who looked at it of the one God who made heaven and earth.

The Romans meant it in contempt, perhaps, when they placed it there, but God meant something else. It has stood for centuries bearing witness for Jehovah, the God of the Jews, and protesting not only in former years against Jupiter, Mars, and the like, but also against the Madonnas and other images of superstitious devotees in later times. Their testimony now may be poor and valueless; still, there it is. Babylon and Nineveh heard their testimony; Egypt and Phœnicia heard it; all Asia and all Europe heard it; there went up again and again the solemn testimony, "Hear, O Israel! the Lord our God is one God."

2. They bear witness to the Book of God; they have kept their treasure faithfully. They can tell its origin and its history; and they bear their testimony to its truth. The patriarchs and the prophets they knew; it is a simple tale of history. They added nothing to it, and they took nothing away. As it came from God's own lips, they transmitted it to us; they guarded its books as the most precious legacy ever bequeathed to man. They give us no theory of inspiration. They simply declare that it is the Book of God, and that the words in it are His. At all times has the Jew proclaimed the inspiration of the Scriptures. Men may call it superstition; but the books which we call the Old Testament, they declare to be out and out divine. From this the Jew has never swerved. He believes these ancient Scriptures were written by holy men, who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. He takes no middle or hesitating course. Sacred is the dust of Palestine to the Jew; sacred is every fragment of Jerusalem's stone; invaluable every drop of Jordan's water; but there is one thing yet more precious to him—

THE SCRIPTURES OF THE LORD HIS GOD.

3. The Jews bear witness to the supernatural. They avow that there are things, and beings, and regions which eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard; that there is a world outside our senses, and outside that which we call nature; a world just as real as that which touches these forms of ours. The supernatural is woven into the creed of the Jew. I do not mean the superstitious, but the supernatural. His national history originates in the supernatural, for the "God of Glory appeared unto Abram." His whole story, in every stage of it, connects itself with the supernatural; the records of his Book are a testimony to the supernatural. It is to the supernatural that he points for his peculiar national existence to this day. It is to this that he appeals for his right to the land of Canaan. His offence is rank; it is a brother's murder, and the shadow of a curse darkens his vision. The cry of "Crucify Him! crucify Him!" resounds still. The Jew himself is supernatural in a sense. Other histories are wonderful; his is miraculous. We cannot account for the history of the Jew except on the grounds of the supernatural. The story of Israel's annals is purely contradictory, absolutely inexplicable, if you eject from it this element. Its worth and coherence gone, the greatest of histories becomes tame and hollow, a succession of audacious impostures. If the story was meant to be any thing, it was intended to be a testimony to the supernatural, to be a witness to this to the end of time.

4. They bear witness to substitution in the Divine Government. The history of the world has revealed the great fact of such an exchange. It is in Israel's sacred books that we find the truth revealed. The first promise of the "bruised heel" is there in the first book of the Bible. The two books of Exodus and Leviticus contain the mind of the Divine lawgiver with regard to it. "The just for the unjust" is the great doctrine taught; an expiation to cancel obligation and set the guilty free. Modern theology may deny the inspiration of these books, but it cannot deny that the doctrine of substitution is there; and He who wrote these books meant that it should be there.

5. They are God's true witnesses of eternal judgment. Wrath has come upon them to the uttermost. For eighteen centuries they have been suffering for their awful crime. God is dealing with them as the righteous Lord which loveth righteousness. He has been judging them, He is judging them still. As a nation Judah and Ephraim are under judgment. Wrath is on them to the utmost; they are under sentence of wrath; but in this condemnation there are two parts: the first began when they fell into the hands of Babylon, the second when, having rejected their Messiah, they were broken in pieces. They have thus been enduring a double judgment. Does not their history say, "Oh! do not this abominable thing which I hate"?

If we could but read the significance of the book, what does Jewish history mean? Looking at it simply as a history, the German Goethe was constrained to say, "After all, the stern God of the Hebrews is

THE GOD OF HISTORY."

He saw that all history was a dark entanglement in which the evil predominates over the good, and this could only be admitted in order to see that God is judge as well as father. If this can be said of ordinary history, how much more can it be said of what we call sacred history? If sin is merely a mishap or a trifle, then why have the Jews been doomed to such punishment? Is not this terrible retribution? If sin carries with it such prolonged punishment here, why may it not also carry prolonged punishment hereafter? Is there no testimony to the punishment of sin in such words as these, "All this curse shall come upon them," etc.? What can such words mean, especially as interpreted by Jewish history, but God's terrible hatred of sin? What can we say but that the righteous Lord loveth righteousness; that God is the God of judgment; that our God is a consuming fire?

6. The whole nation bear witness to the grace of God. The Jew is the monument of wrath, but he is yet to be the monument of grace. Where sin hath abounded, grace shall much more abound. God's love to Israel shall be seen to be such as many waters cannot quench. It is a love stronger than death, mightier than the grave; and who can tell what will be the glory when God shall receive His long alienated ones back again? If Jesus wept for the Jew in his impenitence, what will be the joy when he becomes an exhibition of pardoning love! And then the glory! the glory of Israel, and of Israel's land! That glory will be the fullest development of grace yet seen. What will it be to the angels in heaven? What will it be to Jesus? It may be seen sooner than we anticipate. The King may be close at hand. Still the old message sounds, "Behold, I come quickly!" The breaking up of kingdoms, the overthrow of dynasties, these are warnings that

THE GREAT DAY SHALL NOT BE DELAYED.

Men may say, "Peace, peace," but sudden destruction shall overtake them. The scoffer cries, "Where is the promise of His coming?" but He will come. What will that day be to the nations of this guilty earth? What will the day be to thee, Oh sinner? There is still grace for thee. Through the long-suffering of God there is still mercy for thee. There is forgiveness for thee. Wilt thou have it? Wilt thou take it now? Wilt thou not take it this very night? If not, then thou wilt one day know this, that if thou perishest, thou wilt perish not because God will not save thee, but because thou wilt not be saved. Amen.

THE BISHOP'S MOTHER.

THE present seems a fitting opportunity for relating the following touching incident which occurred on October 8th, 1879, at the distribution of prizes in the English School of Sciences and Arts at Keighley. The Bishop of Manchester gave the prizes.

Surrounded by the boys and their parents, the good Bishop suddenly was led to speak of his own mother, and told the story of how she, "not a clever, managing women," had been left a widow with seven children; how her great love and trust in God had helped her to live, sacrifice not only luxury, but comfort, to make a home, bare of all but the most meagre necessaries, bright and happy as that house Beautiful, whose chambers were called Peace, and from which could be seen the hills of heaven. Her husband had invested his means in the ironstone mines of the Forest of Dean, which proved a failure: and he died a broken-hearted man. He (the Bishop) was then fourteen years old.

Most of her children, through her efforts, have risen to positions where they could help to make the world wiser and better. Three sons went out to India—one fell in the Mutiny: another is head of a department of public works there. "She is now," said the Bishop, with broken voice, "in my house, paralyzed, speechless, and helpless; and when I looked at her sweet face this morning, I thanked God who had given her to me. I owe to her all that I am."

Goethe, it is said, always declared that to his mother he owed not only all his genius, but his strength. There is a period in the life of most boys when they feel themselves immeasurably wiser than their mothers; the knowledge they have acquired from books intoxicates them like wine. Probably they find the good woman at home who gave them life, and has sacrificed herself for them daily, is ignorant of their hobby—mathematics, or Latin, or base-ball—and they are too apt to show their contempt in rude disobedience, unless they have been trained in the observance of the eloquent fifth commandment, which is enforced in the New Testament in Eph. 6 : 2, 3.

When a man reaches the position of Goethe or the Bishop of Manchester, he is wise enough to appreciate a mother's unselfish love at its real value.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 95.)

A Surprise for Ernest.

JULIA knew it would be better for her to carry out her first intention, and pay her old mother a visit; but she could not bear to let the returned heir go on without her. She must see for herself how he was received at home. It was all pain to her; but the pain of being away from him in this hour of his return would be the keenest.

"Is my brother at home?" he inquired, as they came in sight of the Grange.

"No, he's away in London," she answered eagerly, "him and Miss Rose. There's only your mother at home. Oh, Master Charlie! I wish you'd come back master!"

"I'm come back a beggar," he muttered, more to himself than to her. She felt all the hardness and bitterness of his lot. The old-fashioned, many-gabled house, with its deep bay winodws, and its pleasant gardens stretching round it, stood just before them. Sloping meadows rose behind it, with flocks of sheep straying about them in the fading sunshine. Julia saw it with newly-opened eyes. The young master of it all had returned, and had no share in it. He was coming home a beggar!

There was no mother watching for him at the door; that was plain. But a servant stood looking out, who instantly vanished as he came in sight. Julia still pressed close behind him, quite up to the hall odor, where he paused, as if he would not cross his own threshold unbidden. Julia saw Jenny Britton coming forward quickly, and Charles instantly took off his old cap, and stood bareheaded before her. A sharp, keen pang shot through her, as Jenny came on, with a bright color on her young face, and with eager, outstretched hand, which she offered frankly to the stranger.

"You are Mrs. Clifford's long-lost son!" she exclaimed, with a fresh, girlish warmth in her manner. "You are to come to her at once. She fainted when Julia said it was you; and she's lying on the sofa. Come, come quickly."

He was hurried away out of Julia's sight, without once glancing back, or addressing a single word to her. She could follow him no farther; and turning slowly away, she retraced her path over the cliffs to Rockwood, weeping tears of mingled bitterness and joy as she went.

It was dusk the next evening when Ernest and Rose reached Dartford by the last train. Rose had proposed taking the village and the Grange by surprise, and not running the risk of disappointing them again. She was young and fond of surprises, still believing them to be generally pleasant events. They had to hire a conveyance from Dartford; and as there was a fair at Mitcham, twelve miles away, conveyances and horses were scarce.

After a short delay an old-fashioned gig was produced, drawn by a slow-stepping hack, reluctant to increase the distance between himself and his stall, and ignorant of the superior comfort of the Clifford stables, where he was to stay till morning. In this homely fashion did the master of Clifford and his daughter return home after their brilliant season in London.

It had been the most brilliant time in the life of each of them. Ernest had never stood so high in his own estimation, or in that of his acquaintances. He had developed unexpected popular gifts both in society and on the platform. On the latter he had been undoubtedly one of the best unprofessional orators; and his aid had been ardently sought in the getting up of public meetings.

Rose too had had an undisputed success in the few circles her father had consented for her to enter. She had spent a good deal of her time with Lady Fortescue, who had frequently expatiated to Ernest on the sweetness and charming simplicity of his pretty little daughter. To Rose the last three months had been a time of undreamed-of bliss. Yet her father had noticed of late that she was growing a little more shy of him; a trifle less frank and open in her merry chatter.

Her manner had been quieter and more dreamy, and he felt half afraid that her sojourn in town had not altogether agreed with her, in spite of the dainty freshness of her color and the soft clear lustre of her eyes. He had surprised the trace of tears upon her face that morning, when they were leaving London; and those tears of hers had weighed somewhat heavily on his spirits all day.

They were both rather quiet as their poor hack shambled along the moonlit lanes, so intensely quiet after the crowded streets of London. There was scarcely a creature to be seen along the roads, nor a sound to be heard, except the whirring of the night-jar in the coppices, and the hooting of owls calling to one another from the barnyards they passed.

Presently they turned the spur of the hill, which brought them into sight of Clifford, and Ernest checked his horse, which was only too willing to stand still. The little village was bathed in moonlight, with the dark cliffs behind clearly outlined against the cloudless sky, and the foam breaking against them sparkling in the white light.

"Oh, father!" cried Rose, "how delicious it is to be at home again! Oh, I did not know how much I love Clifford!"

"What, crying, Rose?" he said in a tone of distress.

"For joy," she sobbed, "only for joy. Don't let us ever go away again, you and me. Is there anything worth going away for?"

Ernest shifted the reins into his other hand to put his arm round his little girl and draw her pretty head down upon his breast. Rose had never known her mother, and he had always shown a motherly tenderness toward her. She lay there weeping for a minute or two, while he soothed her fondly, telling her she should never go away but when she pleased. Then Rose roused herself, and as they drove on she greeted every familiar object with a merry and tender notice.

"They'll be glad to have us back, daddy," she said, nestling close to his side.

"Thank God we are at home again!" he answered, with a deep sigh of enjoyment. After all, here was his own place, though he had made a name in a few cliques in the great throng of London, and found himself a greater man than he had anticipated. This was his real home, the spot where his life had struck its deepest roots. It was the nest whither all his affections and interests returned to roost by an instinct as true and unfailing as that which brought the swallows back to their homes under his eaves as surely as the spring came.

"Why, father!" exclaimed Rose, "what can grandmamma be doing at the Grange?"

They had passed through the coppice of young trees, and all the front of Clifford Grange stood out before them in the mellow moonlight. But there was no need of the moonlight to show up the house. It was aglow with lights from within. The tall, narrow casements of the drawing-room were glittering, and the bay-windows of the dining-room cast a yellow light upon the climbing plants growing about them. The prospect was like what the elder brother in the parable saw as he approached his father's house, where the returned prodigal was being entertained (Luke 15 : 25). Rose broke into a soft, rippling laugh. "She is giving a dinner party," she said; "and we shall take them by surprise."

There was a gate in the way, shutting off the lawn from the coppice, and Ernest called to one of the farm servants whom he saw crossing the yard a little below the Grange. The man was in no hurry to open the gate wide enough for his master to drive through. He realized too keenly how great a personage he should be in Clifford if he were the first to tell Master Ernest the news.

"Master," he said impressively, with his hand on the shaft, as if to check any further advance till all was told, "there's great tidings! Master Charlie's come back; ay, that he is, and mistress is feasting him, and making him as come as flowers in May. The bells have ringing all day. Hark! there they be again."

The merry peals of bells rang out into the moonlight, and Ernest leaned back and liste He could not speak, and no one else broke first silence. Blake, having blurted out news, was intently observant of his master's impressions so far as he should betray t Rose was taken utterly by surprise. She often, in after times, to recur to this mon during which she sat dumb, looking up int father's face, while the bells clanged and gled, and resounded from the echoing jarring in mad merriment.

"Blake," said her father at last, in a st and constrained voice, "drive Miss Rose the house; I have forgotten to call at the arage."

His head felt giddy, and his feet staggere he alighted from the conveyance. In the below him, in his friend's study window, a was burning under the eaves. It looked beacon shining across stormy and dark w He must get quickly down to his friend yon it were only to gain a few minutes of deliber He could not face his brother in so sud fashion.

"Father," cried Rose, rousing up fro dumb surprise, "won't you come in with ?"

"I cannot, my darling," he said, in a to unconscious sadness; "go on without Rose; I shall be in soon enough, but I mu down and see Britton. We ought to have for a minute there first, but I did not th it."

"Must I meet Uncle Charlie alone?" asked; but he did not answer. He was h the reins for Blake to take his place besid and he opened the gate for them himself. was something extraordinary and inexplic Rose in his conduct, but she had not muc for wondering.

In another minute or two she was at th door of the Grange, and Jenny Britton was with open arms to meet her. Behind he Clifford was coming with slow steps, an her a stranger, dressed in her father's c and closely resembling him at first sight.

"Uncle Charlie!" cried Rose, stretchi her hands and running to him eagerly. had been little romance in her life, Rose the habit of thinking; it was a quiet, tr monotonous life, and what little romanc was had been all bound up with the idea father's missing brother. She had ver learned that she must not ask too man tions about her uncle, but this secrecy an tery had enhanced the interest surroundin

It had not been explained to her that he was not the son of that withered, bent ol whom she dimly remembered as her grand and she had no idea that he had succee an estate which, by natural descent, shou gone to his half-brother. Rose had tho Charles only as being a poor, impetuous spirited boy, driven from home by his tyranny. Now that he was come home, these long years of absence—years of pe hardship she was sure they had been—s ready to give him the warmest welcome affectionate nature.

She ran to meet him, seeing no one el scarcely seeing him. Her fair young f flushed, and her eyes sparkling with tear clasped his hand between both her ow lifted up her face to his, too much agit speak the words of welcome trembling lips. Charles Clifford stooped down hes ly, almost reluctantly, and kissed her air of reverence, as if it would be more fit him to bend his knee to her and kiss her

"Can this be Rose?" he asked; Heartsease I used to call her. Ah! I'v forgotten you calling after me as I went valley when I was running away! little lass of three. 'Come back, Uncle come back! come back!' I can hear the you still. And I've come back at last, little Heartsease."

"Thank God!" murmured Rose.

"God bless you!" exclaimed Charlie, the tears starting to his eyes, which had not felt the [illegible] of them since he was a boy.

In the mean while Ernest was making his way, as in a miserable and bewildering dream, in the direction of his friend's beckoning lamp. It was the mechanical result of habit, which always took him there in any unexpected turn of affairs. The Vicarage was as familiar to him as the Grange, and William Britton was more his comrade and friend, his equal in all respects, than any other man on earth.

If Ruth had been dwelling as near to him he would have turned his bewildered steps to her, and probably he would have revealed and confessed all that was in his heart to her. But it was too late to go over the cliffs to Rockwood, and his mind was not yet sufficiently recovered from the shock it had received to think of anything but how he might gain a little time. He was turning his back upon a meeting inexpressibly distasteful and trying to him, and instinct guided him to the only friend near at hand who could in the least understand him.

The Vicarage was apparently deserted; there was no Babel of voices in any of the rooms, and no one looked through any door as he entered and straightway ascended the staircase to the attic in the roof, which Mr. Britton had chosen for his study. In the centre was a small writing table, on which a lamp was standing. Mr. Britton was deeply intent upon his book. His high, narrow forehead rested upon a thin, white hand, while the other was laid flat upon the old volume on his desk. It was evident that he was too absorbed to hear either the bells or the entrance of his friend.

Ernest closed the door behind him, but he did not look up. His lips moved slightly, as if forming the words beneath his eye, or whispering some brief, half unconscious prayer. It was a deep sigh from Ernest that at last aroused him, and he lifted up his head, fixing his preoccupied eyes upon him at first with a dreamy abstraction, but waking with a sudden start into keen [illegible] and watchfulness.

"Ernest!" he exclaimed, "what is the matter with you?"

(To be continued.)

GIVING AND PRAYING.

S. S. Lesson for February 22d.—Matt. 6 : 11–23. Golden Text, ver. 6. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

Our blessed Lord teaches us transparency of motive in all we do and say. In almsgiving, in praying, in fasting to seek His glory alone. "The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light." Is our eye to God or to ourselves? Are we living with our expectations in eternity or in time? The Lord warns us against doing alms, praying, or fasting to "have glory of men," "to be seen of men" "to appear unto men." He says the hypocrites do this, and "Verily I say unto you they have their reward;" they have what they seek for; but it is all in the present and nothing hereafter. While the motive is earthly and the manner is earthly, the reward is earthly too, and no record of such deeds is made in heaven. The breath of heaven is not in them; they are dead works from which we must be purged to serve the living God. (Heb. 12.

Oh how dear it is to the natural heart to desire a little credit for what one does! and every tittle of credit which we seek and gain is so much taken from the glory of God, so much attributed to ourselves, so much reward on earth, so much [illegible] heaven. Therefore says our Lord, "when thou doest alms, let not the left hand know what thy right hand doeth, that thine alms may be in secret." And again "Thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret."

It was thus that our Lord prefaced the prayer which He has left us as the true model of all prayer, saying, "after this manner therefore pray ye—i.e., God's reconciled children. "Our Father." "Our" for the whole family of God's children must be remembered, and "Father," for we are taught to come with confidence. God calls Himself by many names which express his power and greatness, holiness and majesty, but our beloved Lord chose out of all these the name of Father by which we might draw nigh unto God. Now have we a right to approach in this name if we are not really treating God as our loving Father, if we are failing in our confidence that He orders all things well for us? We call Him "Our Father which art in heaven," and thus at the outset of our prayer we assert our heavenly relationship.

The first petitions which the Lord Jesus taught us are for God and not for ourselves. We do not begin "Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us, etc., but "Hallowed be thy name." It is contrary to the manners and customs of the kingdom of heaven to put self first; God alone must be first. Now how can we consistently pray this prayer while we are sensitive about our own name? Any one hearing us so pray for the first time, would naturally think what an absorbing love and honor must these people have to the name of God! Then how can we thus pray, if we do not believe in the power of the name of our God against temptation, against evil of all kinds, and especially against that evil which dwells in our own hearts? How can we pray thus while we do anything in our own name, commissioned as we are that whatsoever we do in word or in deed we should do all in the name of the Lord Jesus (Col. 3 : 17).

The second petition is again for God, "Thy kingdom come," it is the true absorption in the interests of another. God is love, and no prayer becomes those whose life is drawn from Him, in which a self-devoted love does not have pre-eminence. Thy kingdom, that is in this world, and also in the hearts of men. This is the prayer of the bride who waits for her Lord's return, of the servant long in the missionary field or in the work of evangelization, of the follower of Christ jealous over his own heart for God. My kingdom, the world's kingdom, etc., cease, but Thy kingdom come. Is it not untrue to plead thus when we lift no finger to advance the reign of Christ upon earth. Surely "He that searcheth the hearts" (Rom. 8 : 27) knoweth whether these words are only a vain repetition.

And how many of us are really honest in saying Thy will be done? The very breath of our Lord's life, the meaning of His every word, the outcome of His every deed was thus, "Lo, I come to do thy will, O my God!" It is as though in this prayer He would let His mantle fall on us that we might come into the divine heritage of His renounced will, and live a human life upon the grave of self.

Having prayed thus for God unselfishly, to pray for ourselves is no selfish thing, but an act of faith in Him; and the Lord teaches us not to look forward. "Give us this day our daily bread." Take no thought for the morrow, etc. If we look indeed to God for our daily supply of all we need, and if we believe He has undertaken the care of it, and that His supplies are inexhaustible, how can we be anxious. Anxiety must be the result of unbelief, of doubt that He has really undertaken what we have committed unto Him. And it is Him whom we call Father that we are thus doubting, one who has a right to be trusted by His very relationship, as well as by the unwavering faithfulness of his providing love.

And this petition includes all our other real needs. "Be careful for nothing, but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving make your requests known unto God, and the peace of God which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus" (Phil. 4 : 6, 7). Because God is a Father, there is no tiny detail of His children's needs too small to bring before Him. Things which we should be ashamed to trouble others about, we can mention to Him in the privileged freedom of trust and love. God's "everything" knows no exception, and they who scruple to enter into details with God know not "the spirit of adoption whereby we cry Abba Father" (Rom. 8 : 15).

"And forgive us our debts" (Luke 11 : 4, "our sins") "as we forgive our debtors." It has stumbled many that the Lord should teach forgiven sinners to ask again forgiveness; and for this cause a certain class of Christians do not make use of the Lord's Prayer. Yet it is only they who are God's children, the "little children" whose sins are forgiven for His name's sake (1 John 2 : 12) who can rightly use this prayer and say "Our Father." Thus it is clear that such need to ask forgiveness. In the intense light of God's holiness, how much there may be impure and sinful in us which our dull consciences have not yet perceived, and therefore how needful for us to pray for His forgiveness, even though we may live in the continual consciousness that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin. Again our prayer is intercessory, and we plead every petition on behalf of others as well as ourselves—we are doing priestly work and bearing the congregation of the Lord as Aaron did upon our hearts, and this cannot and does not nullify the continuous consciousness of God's pardon for the past which is the sunshine of our own hearts.

But we pray, "as we forgive our debtors." Let our hands be clean in the peerless prayer. Unless our whole souls are free from all shadow of bitterness, of retaliation, etc., how can we pray thus? we are asking God not to do unto us as we wish to do unto others; but as we absolutely do unto them. We ask that His measure to us may be the same as we measure to others. Are we deceiving ourselves, are we imagining that our love to all men is without a flaw that we dare thus pray? Only as "I live, yet not I but Christ liveth in me," can I use such a petition without danger to my soul.

The next and last petition is "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." "Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation," said the Lord Jesus, "the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak." He knew what temptation was, and therefore taught us to pray instantly for deliverance from the evil. James teaches us (chap. 1 : 2), to count it all joy when we fall into divers' temptations. The Lord does not mean that we are to desire that all trial of our faith should be removed—all His teaching was to the contrary; but that we should count upon deliverance from the evil so as never to succumb.

"For thine is the kingdom." We begin this prayer in petitions for our God, we close it with attributes of praise to His name. God first and God last. Can we doubt that the Lord Himself used this prayer on earth and in the "Our Father" He unites Himself with those whom He is not ashamed to call brethren. In saying "thine is the kingdom" we are acknowledging His dominion over all circumstances and all people, over our own selves and over others. There is wondrous repose in the consciousness that God reigns, that in spite of all the fearful declension of churches and peoples, God is over all. Thine is the kingdom, we acknowledge no usurper, "the prince of this world cometh and hath nothing in me," can we say it as our Master did? Then "Thine is the power." Have we obtained deliverance over temptation, is our will laid down? Have we been enabled to win souls for Jesus, and are we elated at our success? Then must we say if we are honest, ours is the power. But if in very deed we know that His own hand hath done it, and that we can of our own selves do nothing, then can we say from the depth of our hearts, "Thine, O Lord, is the power, and thine too is the glory, and our hearts thrill to utter it when we add 'for ever and for ever; no glory to me but all to thee. Amen.'"

FOREIGN TOPICS.

British Political Circles have been Agitated during the past week by two important events. One was the election of a member of Parliament for Liverpool; the other, the opening of Parliament by Queen Victoria in person.

At Liverpool a local politician, a supporter of Lord Beaconsfield, has been triumphantly returned. This result does not alter the position of parties, as his predecessor was also a Conservative, but it is a significant sign of the times. Liverpool is a Conservative town, but it was thought that Lord Beaconsfield's power was waning, and that a Liberal candidate might wrest a success. The candidate was Lord Ramsay, of the aristocratic house of Dalhousie. He was supported by the powerful influence of the Earl of Derby, and he purchased the Irish vote with a pledge which the leaders of his own party acknowledge they could not have given. Yet with all these advantages he has been defeated by a comparatively unknown local magnate. It appears to indicate that the much-talked-of reaction is still an event of the future.

The British Parliament was Opened by the Queen on February 5th for the despatch of business. Lords Beaconsfield and Salisbury, the Ministerial leaders, were prevented by sickness from attending the ceremony. Mr. Hoppin, the American Chargé d'Affaires, was present, and was remarkable among the gorgeously apparelled throng by the Republican simplicity of his attire. Queen Victoria, in her drive from the palace to the Houses of Parliament, was respectfully though not enthusiastically received. She refused to wear her crown or the royal robes, and requested the Lord Chancellor to read her speech. No intelligence of importance was communicated in what he read, and the ceremony occupied but a short time. It was stated in her Majesty's speech that the foreign relations of the country were friendly, and that the policy in India and Africa would remain unchanged. A reference was made to the Irish famine, and a statement that measures had been taken to afford relief to the sufferers. In the debate which followed it was evident that the Irish policy of obstruction would be continued.

The Russian Intrigues in Afghanistan, which many British journalists and politicians have laughed to scorn as bugbears conjured up for political purposes, are now proved to have had a foundation in fact. General Roberts, the British commander in Cabul, reports that he had a conversation with Yakoob Khan, the ex-Ameer of Afghanistan, in October, 1879, in which the latter stated that the British mission under Sir Neville Chamberlain was turned back by the advice of the Russian envoy at Cabul, M. Stolietoff; and when Shere Ali quitted Afghanistan, in December, 1878, he issued a firman to the authorities at Herat, declaring that M. Stolietoff had written him as follows:

"The emperor's desire is that you should not admit the English into your country, and, like last year, you are to treat them with deceit until the cold season passes away. Then the Almighty's will will be made manifest to you—that is to say, the Russian Government will come to your assistance. Either by diplomatic action we will entirely cut off all English communication and interference with Afghanistan, or events will end in a mighty and important war."

Shere Ali and his followers relied on these Russian promises, and, like others who have placed confidence in princes, especially Russian princes, was deserted when the time came for their fulfilment. (Psa. 118–9.)

Heart-rending Narratives of Suffering continue to arrive from Ireland. A letter from Clifden, in the extreme west of Galway county, written on the 23d of January, has been published at Dublin, which gives a terrible picture of the position to which things have already come all through that region: "Last evening Clifden presented an appalling picture. Crowds of ragged famished men and women thronged around the doors of the meal-shops clamoring for food. Many had waited up all through the night in the bitter frost besieging the houses of the relief committee. Several men seized members of the committee, crying: 'We are starving; we must have food!' Knots of men and women remained in the street until midnight, though the air was intensely cold." A correspondent of a contemporary writes: "According to the most careful calculation I can make after personal visitation, there are sixty heads of families who rise every morning without knowing where they are to get breakfast for their six or eight children; who simply exist from day to day upon poorhouse relief or upon the charity of neighbors only less wretched than themselves. They share with one another like a shipwrecked crew.

"Every week will add with frightful rapidity to the hungry army. By the beginning of March—I deliberately pledge myself to the assertion—five sixths of the entire population of this parish will be absolutely without the means of existence if they are abandoned to their fate. There is not a feather bed left unpawned outside the town. In fifty cabins I did not meet one comfortable pair of blankets. The father of a family of eight, after a weary walk all day looking for work, at night called on me to tell his story, and said he was afraid to go home to his children, whom he had left hungry in the morning and not a morsel of food in the house.

King Mtesa, an African Potentate, has Abolished the Slave traffic throughout his dominions. Mr. Mackay, of the Nyanza Mission, furnishes the following interesting narrative on the subject: "Some time ago an Arab arrived from Unyanyembe with guns and cloth, for which he wanted only slaves. Prices thus: one red cloth, one slave; one musket, two slaves; 100 percussion caps, one female slave. I entered the lists at once, and told the king, in presence of the court, how these Arabs, who declare themselves subjects of Seyed Burgash, are transgressing the orders of their king. I told what cruelties are inflicted on the poor creatures on the way to the coast, and of the risk of capture. The king therefore declared he would sell them no slaves, and I witnessed afterward the sale of their cloth, guns, etc., for ivory only. Some days after, I gave some lessons on human physiology. That told better than any thing. When all were wondering at the structure of their own bodies, I pointed out the absurdity of Arabs wishing to buy such perfect organisms, which all the wisdom of all the white men could not put together, for a rag of cloth which a man could make in a day. The decree has now gone forth in consequence, that no one in the kingdom is to sell a slave under pain of death."

Recovery and Return of the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.—The latest letter received from Mr. Spurgeon contains cheering intelligence. He writes: "Dear friends,—Accept again my heartiest salutations. I hope soon to issue sermons preached at home on the previous Sabbaths, for I purpose, if the Lord will, to leave this shelter on February 2d, or thereabouts. Six weeks of continuous fine weather have, by God's blessing, delivered me from my pains, and enabled me to regain a large measure of strength; and the daily tidings from home have also helped to quiet my mind and revive my spirit. Oh, that I may be the better for this affliction! As after heavy showers the fountains and brooks run with new force and fulness, so may it be with these sermons now that with me 'the rain is over and gone.' If you, dear readers, are the more refreshed I shall count pain and weakness to be a small cost for so blessed a result.—Yours most heartily, C. H. SPURGEON."

Death of a Christian Nobleman.—Great regret is felt for the death of the young Earl of Roden, at Mentone, whose genial amiability made him so generally popular, both in the Court of Queen Victoria and amongst his personal relations and friends. He was the grandson of the third Earl of Roden, who died in 1870, in a good old age, leaving behind him the record of a long and active life, consecrated to the glory of God and the good of his fellow-men. He was a very influential and generally popular nobleman, and, notwithstanding his stanch Prc tantism, his consistency and charity were ge ally fully appreciated, even by his Roman C olic neighbors, but especially by his tenantry whom he was always kind, and by whom he much beloved. He was a good landlord, sincerely desirous of doing good wherever he opportunity. He was President of the Bible Society, and foremost in the promotie Christian Missions both at home and abr but especially to the Romanists. At his p resque residence at Tullamore Park, in Irel he had himself a chapel, where he was habit accustomed to deliver earnest and impre addresses on the Sunday evening, full of sc evangelical Gospel truth.

The Sultan of Turkey Justifying Hims
The Sultan has sent a letter to Sir H. Layar pressing satisfaction at the resumption of cial relations, but maintaining that the pro ings of Dr. Koeller justified the seizure o papers, and that Ahmed Tewfik deserved punishment awarded to him, his liberation l only due to the clemency of the Sultan. A gram from Constantinople states that Sir H yard intends to reply to the recent note o Porte on the subject of the missionary inci disputing the principles it lays down, an swering its argument. It is reported from stantinople that Hafiz Pasha, the Sultan's ister of police, has received from his M the Grand Cordon of the Order of the Mec
This is the minister whose dismissal is s have formed one of Sir H. Layard's demar the case of Dr. Koeller and Ahmed Tewfik. conduct shows that Turkey does wrong or ciple, and therefore is likely to repeat the o when an opportunity occurs.

The Pope's Banker has Absconded; he aged all the Pope's financial business in I and has left behind debts amounting to than 700,000 lire (about $150,000). Severa ecclesiastical officials, who had intrust their fortune to the specious swindler, ar denly plunged into the greatest distress.
the last cardinals created by Pius IX. is s have suffered so severely by the defaulter t has not a centime left.

Poison in the Mass.—At Villema France, a priest, while celebrating mass, p chalice to his lips, but the flavor of the wi so abominable that he was forced to re
He continued the service, but was soon t and obliged to leave the altar ere it w cluded. A subsequent examination show presence of a poisonous substance in th and an inquiry has been set on foot.
the contents of the chalice, it is pretend miraculously changed, when the priest h certain words over it, into the literal b Christ. Can the blood of Christ be pois Can any harm come to a man from tak blood of Christ? It seems to us that w this preposterous assumption of the s miracle of the mass is brought to any test, it is at once proved to be a barefa posture.

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon Preached to F persons recently in his own apartments tone—probably the smallest audience he dressed. The text was James 5 : 2, " heard of the patience of Job, and have end of the Lord; that the Lord is ver and of tender mercy." After a general i tion on Christian patience, the preacher on two heads—1. It is not an unheard- to be patient; and 2. It is not an unreaso tue to be patient. At the end of his disco Spurgeon said: "Even we who are l afternoon have 'heard of the patience
All the ages have this man for their Let us all remember that affliction will us if it be impatiently borne; if we ki goad it will hurt us, but it will not act a stimulus. If we rebel against God's tions, we may turn His medicines int and increase our griefs by refusing t them. Be patient, be patient, be pa the dark cloud shall drop a sparkling s

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

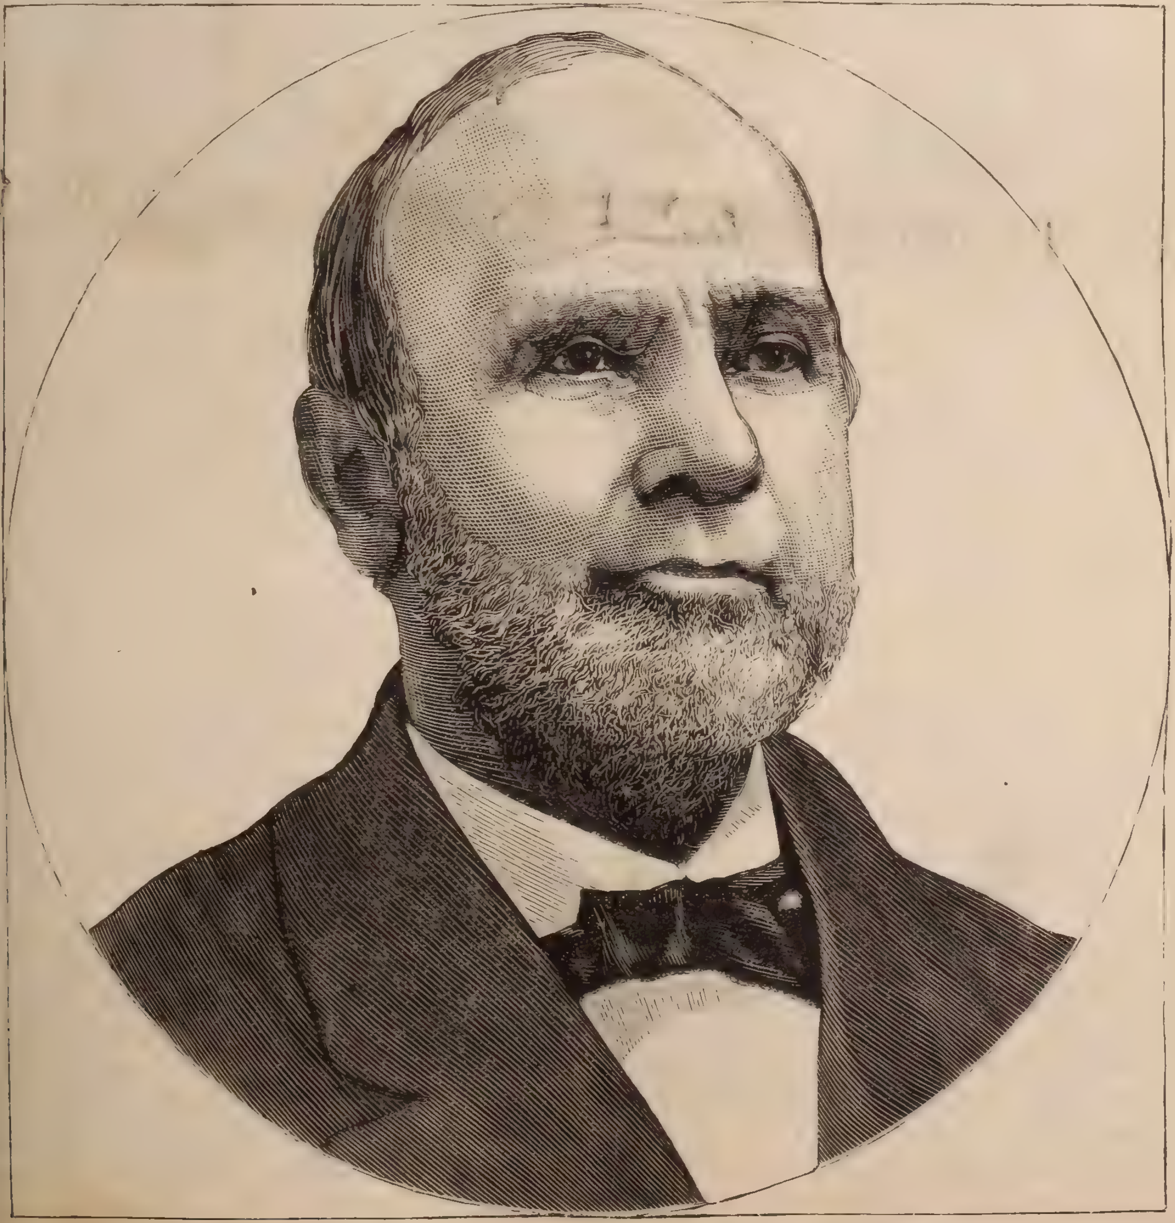
ublished at 63 Bible House, New York City, and 2 Ivy Lane, London. Edited in London by the Rev. M. Baxter, in New York by Mr. B. Aitken.

This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. ALMAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also occasionally a Sermon by the Rev. W. MORLEY PUNSHON, LL.D., the celebrated Methodist Minister, Rev. W. M. AY AITKEN, or some other Eminent Preacher; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

Single Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1880. 14th Year. No. 8—New Series.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

RTRAIT OF THE LATE MR. JOHN E. VASSAR, and Sketch of his Life.
HE LAST NIGHT. An Evening Sermon by Dr. Talmage.
ND PERCIVAL MONTAIGNE. A Thrilling Ser Story by the Author of "Felicia Cuffe."
Je, I'm Saved—A Spanish Servant Girl.
THE TRUE BRIDE WAITING FOR CHRIST'S SECOND ADVENT, by Lord Radstock.
CURRENT EVENTS: Washington Notes—The Key to the Indian Trouble—Mr. Moody's Work at St. Louis—The Dying Words of Bishop Haven—A Drunken Mother's Negligence, etc.
TEN SIGNS OF THE APPROACHING END, by Rev. M. Baxter—Healing by Faith.
FOR THE CANDID AND THOUGHTFUL. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
A WEIGHT OF WEALTH. (Continued.)
Our Father's Care. S. S. Lesson by Mrs. M. Baxter.
FOREIGN TOPICS: A Conservative Victory in England—Dr. Koelle's Embarrassment—A Bequest to Atheism—A Remarkable Brick—A Son's Return to his Home, etc.



The Late JOHN E. VASSAR, the Earnest Christian Worker.

JOHN E. VASSAR,

The Earnest Christian Worker.

An Aggressive Christianity—Birth and Ancestry—His Childhood—Marriage—Conversion—Domestic Affliction—Employed by the Tract Society—Work at Cleveland—Total Abstinence Mission—A Crazy Man—An Appeal to a Lover—Made Prisoner of War—Work in Camp—Seven Years' Labor—The Prophetic Conference—Death.

WE cannot be too frequently reminded that the mission of the Church of Christ in the world is an eminently aggressive mission. The soldier of Christ needs the shield and the armor; but the shield and the armor are not his full equipment. He must have besides them the sword of the Spirit; he must go forth to fight and to conquer for his Master. A general who protects his position with trenches and barricades is doubtless a prudent general, but his king is not satisfied with his performances if he rests content with defensive operations. He must attack and carry the positions of his foes if he is to fulfil the object of his campaign. So must the Christian soldier be ever eager and earnest in his onslaughts on the strongholds of Satan in the world, if he would hear at the last the words, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

Such a soldier was the good man whose career we briefly sketch in our pages to-day. Instant in season and out of season, he was always seeking to win souls for Christ, to rescue from Satan's clutches precious souls which the great enemy was leading captive at his will. Never weary in this good work, he seemed even to have overcome the ordinary weaknesses and infirmities of the body, and to have attained a condition of life in which the intensity of his zeal supported and invigorated his frame instead of debilitating it.

His fellow-workers were amazed at his untiring energy and the immense fund of spiritual force on which he appeared to draw. We know well from whence those supplies of strength came, but we can admire and reverence the man who drew and utilized them, and see in his life a fresh proof of the promise that "they who wait on the Lord shall renew their strength." For more than a quarter of a century John Vassar proved the truth of that promise, working on day by day, in full and implicit confidence that the Great Master for whom he labored would sustain His servant and give him fresh power as he required it. The record of such a life is full of interest, but its lessons are not interesting only; they should stir the soul of every reader and prompt him to devote all his energies to the same great and glorious mission, compared with which all other pursuits seem mean and unworthy.

John E. Vassar was born in the year 1813. He was descended from which emigrated to England about the beginning of the eighteenth century. His ancestors were Nonconformists, and they shared in all the opprobrium which fell to the lot of English Nonconformists of that day. At that period to be a Nonconformist in England was to be a member of a despised society; to be the butt for ridicule and contumely; to be hated and despised wherever he went, and not unfrequently to lose civil rights. Toleration was all dissenters claimed; it certainly was all they secured, and very often they did not secure that.

AN ANCIENT FRENCH FAMILY,

It is not surprising that to men so circumstanced the new world, with its freedom from the domination of an established church closely allied to the state, offered attractions stronger than the ties of patriotism. The best and noblest of English Christians emigrated, and the old Vassar family was not even held by patriotism, for if ties of country bound them anywhere it was to France. Thomas and James Vassar, two brothers, joined the noble band of emigrants, and in October, 1796, they sailed in the good ship Criterion into the bay of New York. They settled at Poughkeepsie, then a village of some four hundred souls. At first they engaged in farming operations, but at a later period Thomas established a brick-yard, at which he industriously labored. He was an earnest Christian, and he selected a wife like minded with himself. They were blessed with six children, of whom John was the fourth.

Not much is known of his earlier years, save that while he did not take kindly to learning and book lore, he was ever ready for active and laborious work. A short, sturdy lad, quick, energetic, and impulsive, he rejoiced in the labor of the yard, and at twelve years of age was glad to shake himself free from the tedium of education and betake himself to manual labor, of which even at that early period he could perform as much as any man on the place. In after years he regretted the educational opportunities he flung away, but it was a characteristic of the boy that then as in after life his restless energy prompted him to engage in active work.

THE BRICK-YARD

was the scene of his labors until his twentieth year, when an accident befell him which set its mark on him for life. Walking over a rude log bridge which spanned a creek near his home, the rough board gave way beneath him, and he fell, breaking his leg so badly that he ever afterward walked with a perceptible limp. He was laid aside for many weeks, and during that period his mother's prayers were incessant that the affliction might be the means of leading her boy to God. But the appointed time had not yet come, and he rose from his bed still a stranger to the Lord he afterward served so faithfully. At the age of twenty-five, he married and obtained employment in a malt-house and brewery at Poughkeepsie. His wife, though the child of Christian parents, was, like himself, still in the bonds of sin.

CONVERSION.

Three years more passed, and then the time of awakening came. In the village Baptist church a revival commenced, and early morning meetings as well as evening services were being held. He was urged to attend these, but in the most decided way refused. Finally his cousin, Matthew Vassar, Jr., fairly hired him to go "just once." He went, and readily promised to do the same again without reward. Before the second service was over, conviction deep and terrible took possession of his soul.

A cherished and valued friend who was present at the meetings writes his reminiscence of a scene still fresh in his memory. He says: "I well remember the night when John Vassar was in such distress of mind, though I was only a child in the Christian life then. The meeting was in the little prayer-room of the La Fayette street house, and, as many were interested, it was filled. I sat next to him in the first seat as you entered from the door. I never saw a soul in such agony as he. The service closed and most of the congregation had retired. As a few were lingering, he begged them not to go, but to stop longer and pray for him. He said he could not go out of the room till forgiveness had been spoken and peace had come. A half dozen of us remained and prayed that mercy might be extended and his burden lifted off. Then he broke out into petitions for himself, and such begging for salvation I never heard from the lips of any other penitent. He was more calm before we separated, but not by any means at rest. The next night, however, he was rejoicing in a Saviour's pardoning love."

One of the first revelations that came to him after his conversion was that of his own ignorance. He was an utter stranger to God's word, and though the light of Heaven was within him, all the rich treasures of wisdom and knowledge contained in the Bible were an unopened mine to the young Christian. With the intensity of purpose and determination which were part of his nature, he set himself to learn, and even in his work his mind was constantly dwelling on the same theme. With a piece of chalk he wrote passages of Scripture on the brewery walls, which before night he had stored in his retentive memory.

His growth in knowledge and in grace was rapid, but God knows what is the perfecting process His people individually need, and Joh sar was called to pass through the fire which he came forth seven times purified.
comparatively brief period his two childr father, and his beloved wife were remov death, and under the successive stroke suffering and bereaved man, whose affe like the rest of his character, were stron fervent, bowed his head and wept. F moment he was crushed, but in a short ti light and the consolation of Heaven ente soul, and he could bless and praise God e his loneliness.

From this time John Vassar began to himself more and more to

CHRISTIAN WORK.

In the Sunday-school, in the prayer-m at revival services, he found work to do, did it with his might. The earnestne childlike simplicity of his prayers are eve remembered with thankfulness by many who were through his instrumentality Jesus. At length he resolved to devote his time to the service of his God, and, throw his prospects at the brewery, he enliste colporteur, under the auspices of the An Tract Society, at a salary of $160 a year, a mediately set to his work with a full hear

His field of operations for a year or m the northern or north-eastern portions linois; more particularly the counties of Kendall, DeKalb, and Boone. Stopping cago long enough to meet some old frien get a supply of the Society's publicati distribution, he struck out for the new ments a hundred miles beyond. It was a of severe trial and hardship to him in s spects. He was an exile from his home, ger in a rude country; he often passed his in his wagon or on the ground under it.
man he met, he sought opportunity to in as to his spiritual state, and if he wa Christian he warned him, in the name of and often with tears, of the deceit and d sin, and entreated him to forsake it, and God, assuring him of the blessedness of s as he, out of his own experience could He went after men, and kept after them long perseverance, holding them in hi and making mention of them unceasingl God in his prayers, and appearing to the tervals, till at last he won them to repen

Returning from this field of operatio short visit to his beloved mother in Vassar was requested to visit

CLEVELAND,

Ohio, and though he modestly protested backwoods were the proper sphere fo bors, he accepted the call. Here a gr was done, which Mr. Vassar records and thankfulness.

One incident which occurred at C should be recorded as an instance of that may result from a personal appeal the right moment and in the right spi attended a revival service in one of the c and according to his custom spoke to th seemed to him in need of an earne Among them was a young printer who induced by a companion to attend th for the first time. That young man re gratitude to God that ever he met Mr.
Describing the circumstance, he says:

"As I arose to pass out, after the was approached by a person, then a who asked with mingled earnestness a ness if I loved the Lord Jesus Christ.
my hand at the same time and held
I can never forget the intense sincerit first interview. I felt in a moment th never before met a man who possesse transcendent consciousness of divine That stranger was John E. Vassar, a that hour convictions began to stir which in time the Holy Spirit used to to Christ." That young man subsequ tered the ministry, and is now Rev. G
Stone, D.D., of Tarrytown, N. Y.

Following his work at Cleveland can n behalf of total abstinence in Dutchess near his own home. There, in spite of ion, in spite of ill treatment and threats his life, he labored diligently and fearoing valiant work for the cause. But he er to be once more directly engaged in k to which he had given his heart, the winning souls to Christ. The Dutchess Association invited him to undertake work, and he willingly consented. Amid ches connected with the Association he for more than seven years, aiding by nd exhortation in extra meetings, and y in visiting from house to house.

was that he first took on himself the 'Shepherd's dog," a title which there-ng to him, and by which he was almost nown as "Uncle John." It originated act that he always and everywhere rebe considered a preacher, declaring that is office simply to go around and seek bring under the minister's notice, anx-troubled souls.

A CRAZY MAN.

tance of Mr. Vassar's eagerness to seize portunity to speak for Christ is related J. L. Benedict, of White Plains, N. Y., t to Beekman while Mr. Vassar was ot being sure of his way, he says: "I a man who was nearing me and walking and inquired for the place I sought. The thus addressed pointed out the place, e next breath said, 'Are you a Chris- oung friend?' I answered that I hoped few more words passed, and then he remarking that he was 'in a hurry to me sheep.' After greeting my fellow-nd being introduced to the family in made his home, I remarked that I had a crazy man up the road in search of ep. The whole group laughed outright, riend said, 'Why, that was John Vasounty missionary; and the sheep that arch of are the Lord's.'"

r incident of that time shows how the tranger may kindle the sense of duty r's breast. Mr. S. was driving along oad with a loaded vehicle when he met , who stopped and said, "What may r name, sir?" The one addressed rey name is S." "Ah, you are a dea-church here, are you not?" was the
"I am, sir," was the answer. "Well, said the stranger, "my name is Vas-John Vassar; now, is your wife a
" "I am sorry to say that she is Have you any objection to my calling rsing with your family?" "Not the he least." "God bless you, Brother S.
ning."

ohn passed along, and the deacon nd turned into a field with his load.
ot gone more than thirty rods when came to him, "How is this? Here ger more concerned for the salvation sehold than I am. This is not right.
t do." Mr. S. jumped off his load, the horses from the sled, tied them, l for the house. He arrived just in ar the prayer. That load was not in for six weeks. Mrs. S. was cond forty-two others united with the h.

AN APPEAL TO A LOVER.

hkill Mr. Vassar once made a call d at first inopportune. A young man tered the house, who was soon to be an excellent Christian daughter in The prospective husband claimed no e Saviour. Either accidentally or we know not which, Uncle John was the room where the parties were.
in the situation at a glance, but, not disconcerted, pressed on one of his s the claims of God, and finding him half persuaded to accept of Christ, he nterview by proposing that the lady self then and there kneel and prese of her friend to God. For a moment maidenly delicacy led her to hesitate; then seeing his evident concern, they all bowed together, and she pleaded for the salvation of the man with whom she was to walk the pathway of life. He was soon a partaker of her faith and trust, and stood beside her a fellow-laborer in the Church of Christ.

UNCLE JOHN A PRISONER OF WAR.

In 1861, the period of the nation's trouble, Mr. Vassar felt it his duty to pursue his Master's work in the army, then in active service. He obtained a commission from the Tract Society, and was soon at the front. He marched with the troops, and, though nearly fifty years of age, kept up with the best. Before reaching Gettysburg he was missed, and several weeks passed before he rejoined his friends. Uncle John had been captured by the Southern cavalry.

When brought into the presence of General Stuart and questioned as a suspected spy, he instantly dissipated the suspicions of the officers by his frank and fearless words for the Master. "I am working as a colporteur of the American Tract Society, to try and save the souls of the dear boys that fall around me daily. General, do you love Jesus?" The general fenced the question with, "I know that good old Society, and have no fear of its emissaries." "But, my dear general, do you love Jesus?" The puzzled officer was relieved by the suggestion of those who had arrested Uncle John, and who were already restive under his close questionings. "General," said they, "take the man's promise that he will not tell of our whereabouts for twenty-four hours, and let us see him out of our lines, or we will have a prayer-meeting from here to Richmond." And so it was decided, and the prisoner of war was released.

An officer who saw much of Mr. Vassar at that time says of him: "In a merely physical point of view, his achievement was prodigious. He began his day at roll-call, and was in a state of intense activity from sixteen to eighteen hours. He ate little and slept little, yet never flagged, and never gave out. Week after week, and seven days in the week, the same even high rate of energy was sustained. I suppose there were very few of the eight thousand officers and men of our division with whom in the time he was with us he did not talk, and with the majority of them more than once or twice.

AN IRRELIGIOUS COLONEL SUBDUED.

"It was almost magical the power he had over men. One of our chaplains, taking him to dine with him one day, found no member of his mess present beside himself but the colonel. Now this colonel was irreligious, immoral, and low-bred, and the chaplain feared to have Mr. Vassar say any thing to him, and I think had advised him to that effect. For a little while the earnest man held his peace; then pausing from his eating, said, 'My dear colonel, this is the first time I ever saw you, and perhaps we shall never meet again. I am sure you will not think it amiss if I ask you whether you have an interest in the great salvation?'

"The chaplain's heart leaped up into his mouth. He expected an explosion; but to his surprise the colonel answered the question as simply as it was asked, and with entire civility, and even thanked him for expressing such interest in his welfare. Dinner over, the colonel said, 'Sir, would you like to talk to the men?' Of course Uncle John said Yes, and the colonel absolutely spent half the afternoon in walking with him through the regiment, and introducing him to knots of soldiers here and there, with, 'Here's a gentleman who has something to say to you, and you had better listen to him, for I think he is a good man.' The chaplain followed them around in amazement, and could scarcely credit his senses. The colonel was not converted, but for the time he was subdued.

"During the winter of 1863-64 there was a great revival, and especially in the Third Corps. Meetings were held nightly and thousands were converted. Often, not knowing that Uncle John was present, I would be surprised to hear his voice from the rear of the chapel in exhortation. Perhaps that would be the sixth meeting that he had attended that evening."

AFTER THE CLOSE OF THE WAR

the Tract Society sent Mr. Vassar to work in Virginia, and afterward to the Carolinas, Tennessee, and Kentucky. Everywhere his work was the same and was abundantly blessed by God. From there he went out West, and in the cabins of Colorado miners he proclaimed the same message of the Gospel. At San Francisco, and even in Salt Lake City, he told the same glad news, and sought with unabated energy to win souls. The following winter he worked in Florida, and the succeeding summer in Kansas.

No place was too distant for him; no toil, however unpromising, did he feel afraid to undertake, trusting only in the strength which had never failed him—the strength of his Master. Seven years more labor did this gallant soldier of the Cross perform, in which he was blessed with a success far beyond that of any other seven years of his work. The record of those years is full of interesting incidents of opposition overcome and of conversions taking place among those whose hostility to the gospel was open and avowed. Our space forbids us to recount any of the details of that seven years' work. We must refer our readers to the interesting biography of Uncle John written by his nephew, from which the materials of this notice are drawn.

HIS LAST JOURNEY

was to New York in October, 1878. He had ardently desired to attend the Prophetic Conference at Dr. Tyng's church, but his friends believing that his enfeebled frame would not bear the journey and the excitement, protested against his visit. But Uncle John had long been an enthusiastic believer in the doctrines of the second coming and personal reign of his Lord, and it was felt that the disappointment he would suffer if he did not attend the Conference would do him more harm than the journey, and the old man had his way. His soul was gladdened by the meetings, and on his return he expressed the pleasure with which he had listened to the eloquent speakers who had enunciated the doctrines which for so many years he had held dear.

But it was clear that the brave man's work was done. He gradually and peacefully sank, his mind keeping clear to the last. Resigned and cheerfully acquiescent to the Divine will, he lay waiting the summons. It came at last, and on December 9th, 1878, with the word "Hallelujah" on his lips, he went to meet his Lord.

There is no need for eulogium on Mr. Vassar's work or his character. The simple record tells its own tale. Numbers of which there is no record on the earth, some of whom are still laboring for Christ here, and others who preceded him to glory, have acknowledged, with devout thankfulness, that his pressing, earnest, personal appeals first attracted them to the Saviour, and that through his instrumentality their names are written in the book of life. Mr. Vassar sought no glory for himself, he only desired that his Master should be glorified, and he gave his life to that one object. He has entered into his rest and "his works do follow him."

The life of John Vassar, to which we have alluded, is a volume of 260 pages, every one of which is full of interest. It is a graphic portraiture of the man and his work. In the foregoing notice we have culled a flower here and there, but numbers of beautiful and touching incidents with which the book teems we have necessarily left unnoticed. We cordially recommend it to our readers. It is obtainable from all booksellers in the United Kingdom as well as in this country; and a copy will be forwarded, on receipt of one dollar, by Mr. Walter B. Vassar, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. We are pleased to learn that one of the Boards of Colportage in Edinburgh, Scotland, contemplate purchasing 10,000 copies for circulation there.

THE LAST NIGHT.

An Evening Sermon by Dr. Talmage, Specially Reported for the "Christian Herald."

"The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully: and he thought within himself, saying, What shall I do, because I have no room where to bestow my fruits? And he said, This will I do: I will pull down my barns, and build greater; and there will I bestow all my fruits and my goods. And I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry. But God said unto him, Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee: then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided?"—LUKE 12: 16-20.

A Successful Man—God Called him a fool—Prosperity like Salt Water—The Rich Man's Exit from the World—I. Its Contrast with his Life—The Roughest of all Constables—Dr. Johnson on Death—II. It was a Sudden Exit—A Scotch Minister's Death at Breakfast—Night Death's Favorite Time—III. He was Unprepared for it—Yet a Smart Man—He had Time to Make Provision—The Good Man Unhurt by Death—He Goes to a Wedding—The Rich Man a Fool for ever—Where will you Spend Eternity?

THIS Scripture narrative introduces us into a fine farm-house. The occupant has been wonderfully successful. He has not made his money by business dodges. He has never "cornered" anybody in stocks. He never lent money on a mortgage with the understanding that it might lie quiet for several years, and then, as soon as the mortgage was recorded, went down to begin foreclosure. He never got up a bogus company, sold the shares, and then backed out in time to save himself, leaving the widows and orphans in the lurch, wondering why there were no dividends.

As far as I can tell, he was an honest, industrious, enterprising man. The crops were coming in. The mow and the granary were full, and the men and oxen tugged away at their loads. But the matter was a great perplexity. After you have gone to the trouble to raise a crop you want some place to put it. Enlargement is the word. I see him calculating, by the light of a torch, how much extension of room is needed. So many loads of corn; so many of wheat. It must be so many feet front, and so many feet deep. He says, "When I get the new building done I shall have every thing. Nothing then for me to do but to enjoy myself."

In anticipation of the barn enlarged, he folds his arms and says, "If anybody in all the world is prosperous and happy, I am that man." But his ear is stunned with the words, "Thou fool!" "Where did the voice come from? Who dares say that to me, the first man in all this country?" It was the voice of God! "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee!"

What was the malady that took him away—whether apoplexy or some mysterious disease that the doctors could not account for—I know not. But that night he expired. He never built the extension. Before the remaining sheaves had been gathered he was himself reaped. They hauled in no loads of grain on the next day; but a long procession (for successful men always have big funerals) followed him out to burial. If the world expressed its sentiments in regard to him, it put over his grave, "Here lies interred a successful man, of great enterprise and influence; and he departs mourned by the whole neighborhood. Peace to his ashes!"

God wrote over his grave, and on his barn-door,

AN EPITAPH OF FOUR LETTERS—

"FOOL." That the Divine epitaph was correct, I infer from the fact that this man had lived so many years and made no preparation for the future; and because he was postponing every thing until he got larger barns. Additional barn-room could not make him happy.

Show me the man made happy by worldly accumulation. Who are the men who have the most anxiety, and work the hardest? The millionaires. Men work harder after they get five hundred thousand dollars than before. They work less at a hundred thousand dollars; still less at fifty thousand; still less at forty; still less at thirty; still less at five thousand dollars; and least of all when they have a salary to live on. The men who have the greatest freedom from care are those who live on their day's wages. Prosperity is like salt water—the more you drink of it the thirstier you are. "Soul, take thine ease."

Ah! did a man ever give ease to his soul by such a process? The soul is a spirit. Can material things be expected to feed it? Can the soul eat wheat, or corn, or hardware? What if a man going to San Francisco should make preparation for his comfort from here to Hoboken, and no farther? Would you not call him a fool? But this man, about starting on an everlasting journey, makes no preparation except for this life. The distance from here to the grave is smaller, when compared with eternity, than the distance from here to Hoboken is small, compared with the thousands of miles between here and San Francisco. This man had only thought of the three or four yards of human life, and regarded not the millions of furlongs stretching out into the infinite.

I wish to make two or three remarks about this man's exit from the world.

I. It was in strong contrast with his life. His surroundings were as bright as could be. We know more about his barns than his house, but I judge of the style of his house from that of his barn. Men do not take better care of their horses and cattle than of themselves. The house was full of comforts and luxuries. When the table was spread, there was every thing on it to administer to his appetite. The wines were of the best—so long confined that they opened with violent hiss and explosion. The country, not overrun with hunters, sent its best game to the table. The fishermen brought him the best product of the stream, for he could give any price.

If he had a family (and I suppose he had; for most thrifty men have a reason at home why they succeed), they lacked no luxury of wardrobe. When visitors came to that house, the master, no doubt, would take them out and say, "There are twenty acres of grain, ten acres of corn, fifteen acres of grove. See those sheep down in that valley. See those cattle on that hill. All mine! Come and look at those fig-trees. There are some figs ripe. Help yourself. Plenty of them. See how those grape-vines thrive—and these pomegranates!" Abundance of every thing. Plenty to eat; plenty to wear; and plenty to congratulate. Yet, amid all that, he dies!

HOW IMPUDENT DEATH IS!

It would not seem so bold if it went into that fisherman's hut and took a life. But here it comes stumbling along, not stopping to look at the full barns, or to examine the olives, or to count the herds. It does not even knock. It goes in, as though it owned the whole place, and says, "Come; you must go with me!" Death is the roughest of all constables, and makes an arrest without an explanation. The man says, "Wait until I get that new barn done." "No!" "Wait until I settle with my men." "No!" "Wait until I can sell out, and get my estate in better trim." "No!" "Wait until I make my will." "No!" "Wait until I can get prepared." "No!" Death says, "I wait for nothing. I shall touch you twice, and then you will be mine; once on the heart and then on the lungs. There! the pulsation is quiet. There! the breath is gone." "What shall we do with him?" ask the neighbors. "I don't care what you do with him," says Death; "I have done my work; now you can do yours."

Dr. Johnson, having ridden around the park of his friend, said to him, "Ah, my friend, these are the things that make it so hard to die."

What then? Is elegance of surrounding no defence? Cannot a man hide in his full barns or in his rich wardrobe? No! "They that trust in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches—none of them any means redeem his brother, nor give a ransom for him, that he should live and not see corruption." Prince Albert b his last in Windsor Castle; and Charles I falls back senseless at his table at Gadshil Albert Barnes expires in a Philadelphia and Willie Lincoln falls asleep in the House; and the successful man of this t his soul required of him in the night tim

II. The man of the text made sudd There was no long lane leading up to this

The only warning which he got was on night. It was not a gradual wasting awa

A SHOCK

—and all over. How startled were hands on his place to hear of it. The ne knew not what to make of it. But th surprised one of all was the man himself. moval from this world is always sudden. heard of rare cases where persons said, " day of such a month will be my last;" was so. But the man of the text was n amazed than most people.

Even the most confirmed invalids expe well. They expect some new effect o cines, or a new style of doctor, or a ch climate, will help them. It is while men culating on long days that that decisi comes—while they are expecting an enla of business accommodations, or are ge their crops, or are trying to draft a n —suddenly. And why not? Hold that exquisite ware, and let it drop on the pa

How long does it take to shiver it? not that the delicate bowl of life was br the fountain. Our life is of such delicat anism, so finely poised, so hair-strung, t least collision is fatal. The wonder is th such exquisite machinery, the pivots oftener slip, and the spring break, and works instantly crash. The vast majori race go out of this life without a physic They flash away. You cannot calculate t ity of the time between when the arro the bow and when it strikes the target.

A minister of Scotland, when at b asked for something more to eat, and started to get it, but he cried out, "Hold my Master calleth me. I have breakfas you, and shall sup with my Lord Jesus t And as quick as that he was gone. Th train rushes along toward Norwalk brid draw is off. Down the train plunges. a miner, not aware of the foul air of t strikes a match. Instantly two hundred in eternity.

IT WAS NIGHT

when the man of the text went. So it when most of our race depart. A vast of the race die between eleven and thre at night. There seems something in th phere at that time to loosen the grasp and soul. Nearly all of my friends have g in the night. The most of those who di way accident die in the night, because impediment on the track is not seen. is that the flame gets headway before it ered. Then the burglar and the assass sisted by the darkness. The first-born perished in the night. Sennacherib's h the night. Like the man of the text, th the race are called away in the night.

I know not what had been the charac last day this man of the text had lived— it was sunshine or rainy, interesting But I know about the night. It was night. It was a thrilling night. tremendous night. As the voice of comes rushing through the darkness, his pen. He forgets his big barn an sheltered crops. "This night thy sou required of thee."

III. The most remarkable thing abou was that he was unprepared for it. It lack of brain that kept him in unpre A man who could make money as could was not lacking in sharpness. what to plant, and how to culture wh

He was not one of the dead-and-alive o make no progress. His barns were ough before, but they are too small now, ops all the time growing.

as what Americans call "smart," and e English would call "clever." Now, who knows enough to do business knows to save his soul. All of the idiots will l at last.

HE WAS NOT AN IDIOT.

s! how many men are wise for time and for eternity. They know enough when a thing to get the worth of it; but ter away an immortal soul for nothing. ave every thing insured but their souls. e careful to have all their titles good ex- t for heaven.

are prompt in their engagements with nd brokers, but fail in their obligations They pull down their barns and build to hold the increasing crops, but have er for their souls so good as a barn. If hould come at them with a sly game, and eat them out of a hundred dollars, they y, "No you don't! I see what you are at!" But they allow Satan to swindle t of all the riches of heaven.

er was it lack of time that ushered the he text into the last hour unarmed. I he was very busy. Early up and late to erseeing the workmen. From the way ent on about that place, I know he fter his own business, and had plenty to might he not rather have had fifty of wheat less than be caught in the last such a miserable predicament? Yes, ime enough, as every man has, to pre- self for the future. Men talk as though, to get prepared for eternity, they must month or a year to go and sit down and pray.

my hearers, a prayer to God is just as le while on your way to Fulton Ferry, w morning, as in your house on your . A thought about God in Wall Street is elevating as in church on Sunday. s not a cloud that touches only the top igh mountain; it touches earth all over. man who has time to eat, or sleep, or s time to be saved. Yet this rich man prepared. He fell: not as a man who stumbles on a road, but as men fall- some Alpine cliff have been watched easantry as they go down—a thousand rling in the air—dashed on the rocks. nan, from the tip-top of worldly pros- ipped and fell.

en centuries have passed since that he. The body of that rich farmer has ughly gone to dust that no one sus- ere it is. But his soul still lives—lives vely than yours or mine. And he re- , as though it were only an hour ago, endous impression of that moment, desperate unpreparedness, there came nto his ears, "This night thy soul shall ed of thee."

een this and five or six o'clock to-mor- ing, the same voice should accost our uld it find us likewise disconcerted? say for many of you. You are not so sed for this world as you are for the at dress you have on will wear out— of fashion—but the robe of Christ's ness will never wear out, for the latest eaven wear the same pattern as the I do not mean to say that you are sin- Christ has made it all right. He has ansfer of your sins and iniquities, so ought to think of leaving this world u think of going to a wedding. It is a the marriage of the King's Son. h does death much as the tip of his little finger. in letting you down into your last ace shall be scratched in the hand with nall be more damaged than you by he grandest place on earth to sleep, the softest pillow and coverlets, are in the Christian's grave. Jesus took His death-robe and folded it up.

HURT A GOOD MAN?

As He came out of the grave He would have cast off his shroud and thrown it into the corner of the tomb, if it were never to be used again. But He knew that you and I would want to sleep there after a while; and so He took His death-garments and folded them up, so that the covering might be ready for us. It shall not be eagles'-down that we rest on, but something softer and warmer than that. It is what David calls the "feathers of the Almighty."

If there is any one on earth that is to be envied, it is the man who dies well. Among the eight persons who stood around my father's death-bed, not one was as well off as he. For eighty-four years he had served God as few serve Him. What had he to fear? I do not think he had been so glad sixty-two years before—on his marriage-day—as he was that night, as he was about to go to join her with whom he had companioned for fifty-five years. God said to him, "This night thy soul shall be required of thee," and his answer was, "I feel well—very well.

ALL IS WELL.

Peace! Peace!"

But not that way do all men make their departure. Men ought to have their worldly affairs settled so that the executors and administrators will not be confounded; and so that what they have honestly earned be not scattered among those who have no right to it. If the sudden announcement should be made to you to-night, what would be the state of your families? Have you done all that you can do to fit them for heaven?

Could you feel, "Whatever I, as father or mother, could do, I have done. They will remember how I prayed for them and talked with them; and when they look at my picture they will say, 'That was a Christian parent. I want to go in the same way, and gain the same heaven!'" The keys of this organ are twelve feet from the organ pipes; but every time those keys are touched the pipes respond. So these parents are now exercising influences which will respond far on in the eternity of their children. If the play any anthem now, it will be an anthem then. If they play a dirge now, it will be a dirge forever.

But worst of all, I want to know what is to become of you personally. This may be your last sermon. The concluding song of to-night may be your last song. This may be your last night; and in such case, "this night thy soul shall be required of thee." What then? Into what scenes would you be introduced? Would you go where your children, and kindred, and friends have gone, or where the man of the text went? They who die without Christ are so thoroughly ruined that they never get over it. The man of the text is to-night just where he was eighteen hundred years ago. Thousands of Gospel calls have been uttered since then. He has not heard one of them. He has been gathering in his crops ever since. But it is of everlasting wretchedness. God called him a fool in his last hour; and he who dies a fool is a fool forever.

A HARVEST

So I ask you, Where will you spend eternity? Oh, prepare for it. Leave it not until the last hour. Leave it not until you become ill; you may never be ill. Leave it not until you get more time; you may never get more time. Leave it not until you get old; you may never get old. Leave it not until the Holy Spirit strives more powerfully; it may never strive again. Leave it not until to-morrow. This night—this night—thy soul may be required of thee. And suppose, in that moment, you should say, "Wait until I can kneel down and say my prayers." Death would respond, "No time now to say your prayers." "Wait until I get my friends together, and bid them good-by." Death would say, "You cannot stop to bid them good-by." "But I cannot go into eternity with all these sins about me. Give me time to repent." Death would say, "Too late to repent! This night thy soul is required. Yea, this hour! Yea, this minute! Yea, this second!"

Blessed be God, mercy is free. Bought by the blood of Jesus, you have only to believe in Him and be saved. The price is paid. What more is needed by the infinite justice of God than the life-blood of His own Son? Look, I beseech you, look unto Him, and be ye saved. Death, judgment, eternity, are all real; but, praise God, it is real, too, that Jesus died for you: and "whosoever believeth in Him shall not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3 : 18).

DR. TALMAGE was absent from the Tabernacle last Sunday; we therefore publish this week an evening sermon specially reported for the CHRISTIAN HERALD.

A SCEPTIC'S DEATHBED.

A True Narrative.

MR. A. lived in London. He was a man of considerable abilities, successful in business, and possessed considerable property; his manners were gentlemanly, and being lively and gay, as well as good tempered, his company was much sought after. With these advantages (to which may be added, very excellent health and an agreeable person) it is not surprising that he was what the world usually calls a happy man, but we must add that he was, in the fullest sense of the word, an infidel and a blasphemer. His greatest pleasure was to laugh at religion, and to burlesque the Bible.

In company he eagerly seized every opportunity of declaring his sentiments, and of laughing at and deriding any person who professed religion. The blasphemies he uttered upon these occasions frequently were such as to strike with horror not only the persons who were the subjects of his jokes, but also the rest of the company; and to such lengths did he proceed that the more moderate of his friends (although not religious characters) when inviting him to their parties, would sometimes require him to promise that he would for the time refrain from profane discourse, which promise, when given, he would strictly observe.

Thus he went on for several years, enjoying a state of strong health, and every circumstance which could contribute to his worldly gratification. At length he was attacked by a severe illness. In a few days the progress of the disease was rapid; he was alarmed, and eagerly inquired whether he was supposed to be in danger. His friends, observing his alarm, and fearing a knowledge of the real state of the case would hasten his end, concealed his danger from him, endeavoring to assure him that his illness would soon abate. At length he was considered as decidedly past hope of recovery, and it became necessary to acquaint him with his danger. His friends did this in the mildest manner; but the truth could be no longer concealed—he now saw his awful state.

Instantly he broke out into the most dreadful exclamations, crying out that his soul was lost, and for some hours continued to repeat similar expressions, at the same time groaning deeply, and expressed the most earnest desire that his life might be spared for a year, for a month, or even for a week, that he might declare he was convinced of the falsehood of his former opinions. In this state he continued for some time.

At length he cried out, "I am sinking into hell! Oh! the burning—the burning—the torments of hell!" This and similar exclamations he continued to utter while life lasted (for about thirty hours longer), shrieking and groaning so dreadfully that his friends all fled his bedside, and even the nurse could scarcely be induced to continue in the room. At length he expired on the third day after his danger was communicated to him, the whole interval having been a continued scene of horror and despair which the pen fails to describe and the imagination is unable fully to conceive.

ARNOLD PERCIVAL MONTAIGNE;

Or the Heir of a Deferred Inheritance.

A Thrilling Story by Henry Martin, Author of "Felicia Cuffe."

(Continued from page 103.)

Percival Goes to the Bank to try to Unravel a Mystery—He Finds that Arthur Lemaire had Forged his Name—He Consults with Alick Gogharty about it—Alick Promises to Arrange the Matter.

Percival having read the note which the bank manager had sent him, advising him that an acceptance had been presented for discount, studied the dark problem for some time, and finding a probable explanation altogether undiscoverable, he came to the conclusion that the best step to take would be to go to the bank instanter, and demand the purport of the manager's note. Finding, upon looking at his watch, that an hour would elapse before bank closing time, he hurried to a cab-stand, and, hiring a vehicle, told the man to drive him in the direction of Dame Street as fast as possible. Upon asking in the cash-office to see the manager of the bank, he was speedily ushered into that, to many persons, most august presence. We so describe it, for perhaps few men have more to do, humanly speaking, in the decisions of mundane fate than bank managers. When the scales of destiny waver in the balance, that is, in a money point of view (and how much has money to do in the life of mortals !), whether the descending scale shall be to immediate bankruptcy, or to a further lease of commercial existence, or even to a retrieve of fortune, depends often very much upon the awful frown or propitious nod of a bank manager.

"I have called about that note you have been kind enough to send me early in the day," said Percival; "but, to tell you the truth, sir, I don't understand a word of it, and I have taken the liberty of coming to ask you for an explanation."

The manager's idea was that Percival was nettled by the return of his acceptance in the forenoon of the day, and had come to administer a rebuke. He therefore began to apologize for the act, and to explain that the conduct of the bank toward his name was not an exceptional case, but one dictated by a general rule, laid down for the present on account of the critical financial hour. But Percival, as soon as courtesy permitted, interrupted him, and surprised him beyond measure by declaring that no acceptance of his was existent in the world.

"I think you surely must speak, sir, from a lapse of memory," said the manager. "Pardon me, sir, for saying so. I would not without good grounds. Why, I had an acceptance of yours in my hand no later than this morning, and another, to my knowledge, is this moment in the safe of the bank."

Percival was astounded at this assertion—one, too, so distinctly and firmly made. A dreadful suspicion rushed in upon his mind, but a suspicion which he would not for the world wish to come to the knowledge of the bank manager; it would lead to issues which he durst not contemplate; he therefore, though with difficulty, smothered his emotion, and in as calm a voice as he could command asked as a favor to be allowed to see the note of hand which the manager had stated was in possession of the bank.

"Oh, of course," replied the manager. "Its term will not expire for another week, but I can easily lay my hand upon it, and give you sight of it. Pardon me for a moment or two, and I will myself fetch it." The manager soon returned to his private room, where Percival was sitting, with the forgery in his hand. Aye, there it was—the draft at four months of Arthur Lemaire (not of the father, as Percival had for a moment, in spite of himself, dreaded)—the draft of Arthur Lemaire for 3000*l*., accepted in due form by Arnold Percival Montaigne. The manager scrutinized the face of Percival, as he glanced over the front and back of the wretched document.

"It's all right, is it not?" said the bank official, and the question was one which Percival found it immensely difficult to answer. The word "Yes" would bind him to pay it if Arthur Lemaire, as was likely, could not meet it, and he could not tell how many forgeries besides might be in other banking firms for similar sums; and, on the other hand, the word "No" would make the brother of Lucie a felon, and would likely end in breaking her heart. He paused long, to the manager's evident surprise, before he could hit upon any reply at all to the awkward query, so directly and point blank put to him. And then he could only find a halting answer. "I do not clearly remember having seen this document before," he said; "but, as I see it has yet seven days to run, I shall have ample time to brush up my memory;" and to save his truthfulness he added, "if needs be, and before the week is out, Mr. Munroe, I shall call again upon you."

The manager thought it exceedingly strange that a bill for so large an amount could have been signed without recollection. He did not know, however, anything of Percival's habits, whether they were regular or otherwise. When under the influence of wine, at a gaming-table, or anything of that kind, young men, he was aware, did upon occasions what they were not fully conscious of, and for all that he could tell, an occurrence of this sort would explain Percival's obliviousness. "Very well, Mr. Montaigne," he said; "at your convenience I shall be happy to see you."

When Percival got into the street, trembling with excitement, his first thought was to hasten to Alick, whose rooms were not far off, and who he knew was up from the country and in the city. Alick, when Percival entered his room, rose to meet him. At first he was going to exercise a little badinage—was, indeed, preparing to joke him about Jemmy Mehaffy's wedding as the precursor of his own—but Percival's grave look and bloodless cheek gave him to perceive that something calamitous had happened.

"Bless me! what's the matter, Percival?" he asked, in alarm. "I hope, old fellow, nothing so serious as your look would indicate." He replied, "Alick, Arthur Lemaire has forged my name to a bill. It is in the hands of the Bank of ——; I have just seen it, and handled it, so there is no doubt about it. And, oh, what am I to do, Alick? I have come to ask you, for I am so agitated I cannot think. If I let his guilty act be known it will be his ruin, and will blight beyond recovery the happy and innocent lives of those I love." And at the thought of this the young man, in mental anguish, bowed his head and sank, faint, into a chair.

Arthur Lemaire had been no favorite with Alick, and especially since the indication of his character furnished him by Arthur's words and conduct at the period of Percival's imprisonment. From prudential reasons, however, and to keep matters pleasant for Percival in connection with the Lemaire family circle, he had never talked about this matter with his friend. He deemed Arthur Lemaire a man of a selfish, unreliable, and shallow soul—one, in fact, who had no claim on another's forbearance and sympathy.

"It will, no doubt, be fearfully distressing to his connections, Percival," he said; "but, in my opinion, you should just let the matter take its course. It would not be fair to yourself, my dear friend," he added, as he saw tokens of disapproval of his advice on Percival's face, "nor would it be just to society at large, you know, to shield a forger from his due, and, above all, one who, it is plain, means to take a base advantage of your peculiar position as regards the Lemaires. Depend upon it, he calculates upon your presumed weakness, Percival, in thus making free with your signature. Leave him, then, to his fate, Percival, and show him his mistake. The law is just. Take my advice, and let it, therefore, deal with him. You may rest assured he will be called to bear nothing but his desert."

"But then, Alick," replied Percival, in great anxiety, "look at the consequences which an exposure as that would bring about.
father is innocent—and his poor mother a own loved one, Lucie—and Arthur Lem conviction would bring sorrow and shame the whole household. No, Alick, I shall be a party to such domestic ruin as that entail. I cannot bear even to think of it.
no, Alick, I must, I see, meet the bill, w comes due, as though it were genuin thus ward off the dreadful blow."

"What is the amount of the bill?" in Alick.

"Three thousand pounds," answered Pe

"A pretty smart sum," remarked
"and, for aught you know, it is not th one in the market. There may be a dozen for anything you can tell, for I kno Arthur Lemaire of late has been rather his purchases of land. Are you prepared up in succession all his forgeries, Perciva ever numerous they be?—for it seems to if you act as you say, it is something kind that you must contemplate."

Such an eventuality, however, Perciv not considered. Three thousand pound sum he could easily meet, and he would ing to sacrifice as much for Lucie's sak the peradventure of ten times that amou a thing not to be thought of, and it made olution stagger. "I would fain hope,"
"that the acceptance I have seen is the o in which Arthur has committed himself.
then at the instant he recalled to mind posing fact that another note of hand fo sum, purporting to be his, had been pr by Arthur at the bank that very m
"Alick! Alick!" he exclaimed bitterly.
overwhelmed with dismay and sinking t the floods are beating high and furious head, and I could wish, if it were God's die."

After an interval of oppressive silence
"I cannot bear the dreadful suspense I
It is intolerable; and yet I feel that I end it by going to Arthur Lemaire mys interview would be too painful, and, ir is almost certain he would avoid me.
will you add to my heavy load of oblig you by seeking an interview with him him, Alick, wherever he is, and tell dreadful discovery I have made, and be once to confess the whole of his crime.
find he has only fraudulently pledged n for the amount that has been mentione even double that sum, and that from funds he is in jeopardy, tell him that, reprobate his criminal act, I will mee ceptances as though they were really and that I will do this to save the hono utation of the name he bears, and, abov the sake of Lucie. Will you, dear fr this," Percival repeated, "and add uns to your good services toward me?"

"I will," promptly responded Alick.
a little thought he added, "I must ma ever, one condition, Percival."
that?" he was asked. "This," sai "that Arthur Lemaire be required to promise to leave the country, and making a new beginning to his life in c colonies. Believe me, Percival, you ca safety to yourself permit him to remair think I know pretty well what he is.
ten to one that, let off scot free now, scare is for some time over, he will, w new temptation urges, lend himself t acts to the present, especially as he from what you now propose to do, the he may assure himself of from your the Lemaire family. Yes, Percival, I r insist upon your getting him to the ar

"It will be hard, very hard, upon mother," said Percival sorrowfully, an only son. And yet perhaps, after a right, Alick," he added, after some "Not to speak of myself, duty to soci to dictate some such course. And per it will be better on the whole, too, f nse for I cannot think he could ever feel at ease and comfortable near those who he was aware had knowledge of his disgraceful and nin weakness. Yes; you may impose the condition you have named, and I know, Alick, I trust you to do it graciously. I'll walk with you toward Mr. Lemaire's house as far as my in, Alick, and will await you there to learn the result of your interview; and may He who can bring good out of even the worst evil open up to some fitting escape from this wretched ine."

(To be continued.)

THE TRUE BRIDE WAITING FOR CHRIST'S SECOND ADVENT.

By Lord Radstock.

Two Contrasted Pictures—A False Bride and a True—Types of Two Classes of Christians—All the Ten Virgins Went Forth—The Influence of the Second Advent Faith on Daily Life.

Christians really held Second Advent truth in the full power of the Holy Ghost, I believe their testimony would go forth with mighty energy throughout the land. If those of us who have obtained pardon for our sins through the precious blood of Christ, possessed that deep spiritual realization of His speedy Coming which we should do, there would be a mighty awakening of the Church of God. We shall do well to give more diligent and prayerful heed to the sure word of Prophecy which is as a light shining in a dark place.

There is one thought to which I desire to call attention. We have in the Book of Revelation TWO CONTRASTED PICTURES—a False Bride and a True Bride (Rev. 17 and 12). This is the Woman arrayed in purple and scarlet, decked with gold and precious stones and pearls—a counterfeit Bride, professing to belong to Jesus but in reality sold to the world, having the outward appearance of religiousness, but with the heart set upon earthly riches and enjoyment and worldly grandeur. The other is a woman clothed with the Sun, and with the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars—the true Bride of Christ, heavenly in her appearance and character, and with affections set on things above, and not on things of the earth.

Now, without entering into the strictly prophetic meaning of these emblems, may we not in a general sense regard them as apt representatives, on the one hand, of mere worldly, carnally-minded professors of Christianity who have the form of godliness but deny the power thereof, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; and, on the other hand, of those true Christians whose hopes are heavenly, and who can say like Paul, "Our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body" (Philipp. 3 : 20)?

Now let each one of us settle in our own mind, in the sight of God, which of these TWO CLASSES OF CHRISTIANS we belong to; and whether we can truly say of ourselves "Our conversation is in heaven." Remember that this is an intensely practical matter. If we truly believe in the resurrection and ascension of Christ, and in His intercession for us at the right hand as our personal Saviour, and if our affections are fixed upon Him, the desire of our hearts will naturally be visibly to behold Him whom our soul loveth; especially as He has told us that He is coming back again to receive us unto Himself; that where He is, there we may be also (John 14 : 3).

In such case we shall feel that we are strangers and pilgrims on this earth, having here no continuing city, but seeking for one which is to come. I have often refused to give out to be sung by a general audience that hymn, "I'm but a stranger here; heaven is my home." I have felt it was a mockery for those words to be sung by persons who were wholly absorbed in the affairs of this life, and had little or no heart or disposition for the work of the Lord.

Is there not a lesson taught us in the prophetic parable of the Ten Virgins in Matthew 25 : 1–10? They are represented as at first ALL going forth to meet the Bridegroom in expectation of His Advent. All of them are therefore in some sense believers in His Second Coming, yet they afterward slumber and sleep; and in the end only half of them are found ready to enter into the marriage when the Bridegroom comes. There is then the solemn fact that even the foolish virgins, who will be shut out, once professed to wait for the Bridegroom. Let me ask you, Have you turned to God from idols (including, among the rest, covetousness which is idolatry) to serve the living and true God; and are you, in the power of the Holy Ghost, waiting for His Son from heaven? (1 Thess. 1 : 10). If so, your heart will not be seeking for or fixed upon an earthly resting-place; but you will have the spirit of the Bride who is not satisfied with anything but the Bridegroom; and you will be like the Thessalonians who received the Gospel, "not in word only, but also in power and the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance" (1 Thess. 1).

See to it that you are not in heart one with the False Bride, a mixture of worldliness and imaginary religiousness, but aim to be one of those who are marked with the very stamp, the very character, the very spirit of adorned for her husband, indifferent about what the world thinks; not adorned for the world or heeding its opinion, but a bride adorned for her husband. One reason why the world so little heeds our testimony about the speedy Coming of Christ is, that we hold it so feebly and not sufficiently in the power of the Holy Ghost. We require to humble ourselves in earnest prayer before God on this account, and to ask Him for grace to be more faithful. Those who are really waiting in constant readiness for the Advent of Jesus should be able to say, as in the sight of God, "Every hour of my life is consecrated to the service of my Master, whether in this or that way; and I live as a servant of the Lord, continually waiting for His coming." Of such we may truly affirm, "Blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when He cometh, shall find so doing" (Matt. 24 : 46).

THE ELECT BRIDE

In James 1 : 22, we read, "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves." Now just in proportion as we apprehend the reality of the speedy return of our Lord and Master, and feel that it is no matter of mere opinion, but of actual fact; in the same proportion will our life and conversation be such as becometh the Gospel of Christ, and will give plain evidence to the unbelieving world of

THE PRACTICAL POWER

of this doctrine. In Acts 1 testimony was borne by angels that Christ will personally return to this earth. "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven."

Afterward on the Day of Pentecost in Acts 2 : 25–31, Peter, speaking of David's prophecy of the resurrection of Christ, that "God would not leave His soul in Hades, nor suffer His Holy One to see corruption," explained that David, being a prophet, predicted this resurrection of Christ because God hath sworn that of the seed of David according to the flesh Christ should be raised up to sit upon the throne of David: and then he further explained in verses 32 to 35 that Christ being thus raised from the dead is now exalted to the right hand of God in heaven, until His foes are made His footstool. But it is not until this future conquest and subjection of His foes that Christ will return from the right hand of God in heaven to sit upon the throne of David in Palestine, and to reign personally during the millennium of a thousand years, as the Son of David and King of Israel over all the twelve tribes of the Jewish nation converted and restored to their ancient land, as well as over the whole earth (Romans 1 : 3; 2 Tim. 2 : 8).

"OH, JIM, I'M SAVED, I KNOW I AM!"

ONE of the esteemed deaconesses of Mildmay Conference Hall, London, relates the following incident:

A few years ago a blacksmith was earning three pounds ($15) a week, but, alas! spending it in sin and intemperance. His wife, conscious of her attractive appearance, was wholly given to the world. Music-halls and theatres were her constant resort. Having a good voice she was herself a singer at one of the lower class of variety theatres. Her love of dress and jewelry was unbounded; and, yet worse, swearing had become with her a habit of speech. The wretched couple, as may be supposed, led a miserable life; in the husband's fits of intoxication he cruelly beat and kicked his wife, and she returned angry words.

At this time a brother of the wife was brought to his last illness by his excesses. A missionary visited him, but the terrible agony of his closing days, and his fearful shrinking from death made an impression on the sister's mind never to be removed. She became deeply conscious of her sins, and resolved, among other good resolutions, to leave off swearing; but the force of habit again and again overcame her. She became ill, but refused the advice of a neighbor to apply to the Medical Mission, although her husband was incapacitated from work by a bad foot, which was subsequently amputated.

She dreaded "the preaching," but at length gave way, and went. She afterward joined the mothers' meeting and Bible class, admiring all she saw, yet apparently with her heart untouched. At one of the prayer-meetings, however, the awfulness of appearing before God unforgiven thoroughly aroused her. She could not go to bed that night, fearing to wake up in hell.

One of the deaconesses, hearing of her state, visited her and put the Gospel before her, speaking to her husband at the same time, and urging him to pray, to which he replied that he was "too bad to do so." At this time he opposed his wife's attendance at the meeting, but admitted that there was a marked improvement in her conduct and temper.

"Annie, you're better tempered than you used to be."

"Oh, Jim!" she said, with tears, "I am trying to be good, but it's very hard, and it's time for you to do the same, for we've been a wicked pair."

One or two of the workers tried to lead the burdened woman to the cross, and when at last the full glory of it shone into her soul, she danced for joy, exclaiming, "Oh, Jim, Jim, I'm saved, I'm saved; I'm forgiven, I know I am!" And from that time her peace was as a river, under a sense of the greatness of the pardon which could blot out sin of so deep a dye. Still her husband laughed at her as mad, and threatened to prevent her going to the Bible classes, to which she replied, "Jim, if I were dressing to go to a theatre or concert-room you wouldn't debar me from going; you had better follow me now."

Strange to say the half-drunken man did follow his wife, and was thoroughly sobered by what he heard. Sin was found by him to be "exceeding sinful;" and at length he too rejoiced in the free pardoning love of God in Christ.

Since then they have both lived most consistent, earnest lives. He has had to pass years of suffering, which can only end with the dissolution of the body. During the ten months spent in St. Bartholomew's Hospital he testified for Christ, and was blessed to more than one of his fellow-patients, and the delicate man who hobbles about with one leg on crutches is respected by all. In that poor home love and contentment dwell, the children are daily instructed in the Scriptures; and as we look at the bright testimony of the parents in daily life we can only exclaim, in admiration of the mighty power of grace, "What hath God wrought?" "Brands plucked from the burning to show forth His praise."

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

THE aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50

per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to MR. BENJAMIN AITKEN, 63 Bible House, New York. The paper may also be obtained weekly from all newsdealers in the United States and Canada.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of specimen copies to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

SUBSCRIBERS frequently write to us for single copies of the CHRISTIAN HERALD. We always endeavor to oblige them, but single and occasional copies can more easily be obtained from a newsdealer. Sometimes we receive complaints that the CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer. Such complaints are promptly attended to, when made to us; but in all cases we desire that our friends will give the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

LAST week's edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, February 11th, at 4.40 P.M., at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Interoceanic Canal has been the Principal subject before Congress during the past week. The Senate has adopted a resolution calling on the President for copies of recent correspondence on the subject. It is generally believed that President Hayes holds decided opinions in favor of enforcing the Monroe doctrine with regard to the canal, and that he will at the fitting time give unequivocal expression to them.

A proclamation was issued by the President on February 12th, warning persons contemplating settling on the Indian Territory that such an act was illegal, and that prompt measures would be taken to remove them from the Territory should they enter it, and that " if necessary the aid and assistance of the military will be invoked to carry the laws on the subject into execution." The proclamation has given rise to considerable discussion, but the general impression prevailing is that the President is in earnest, and his warning is no empty form.

Some amusement has been produced at Washington by a personal matter. It seems that a Senator objected to the appointment of a Rev. Mr. Simmons to the office of census supervisor, and gave as his reason that in his letter of application Mr. Simmons had spelled "excellency" with one "l." It has been discovered that the Senator who considered correct spelling so important in a recent communication spelled "marshal" with two ll's, and "controversy" "controversy."

The Real Secret of the Indian Trouble appears to be that the law of the United States does not recognize the Indian as a person. He has no acknowledged claim for legal protection, and he cannot own land. If a wrong is done to his person or his property he cannot sue for compensation, and though he may cultivate land he has no title to it, and may be removed from it when it suits the white man to enter into the fruits of his labor. What wonder under these circumstances that the red man is dissatisfied, discontented, sees no hope in his life, and gives trouble! It appears that Judge Dundy, of the United States District Court of Nebraska, has decided that the Indian is a person in the eyes of the law, but his decision has been contested and overruled by the Government. Now that public opinion has forced the Indian Bureau to put its house in order, it would be a good time to agitate the question why the Indian should be excluded from the rights enjoyed by other citizens. So long as right and justice are absent in our relations to the Indian, so long will he be a thorn in the side of the government, and so long shall we as a nation be responsible for crimes committed in our name by unscrupulous officials.

The Irish Famine Relief Fund instituted by the New York Herald has so thoroughly commanded the confidence of the American people, that in ten days more than one hundred thousand dollars have been added to it and the money is still coming in. The Duchess of Marlborough has applied to the proprietor of the Herald for the privilege of distributing the money, but he has deemed it inexpedient to accede to her request. He proposes to disburse the large sum through a committee representing all classes, and has even been so magnanimous as to invite Mr. Parnell to be one of its members, in order that those starving families who are supporters of that gentleman may have a member on the committee who will see that their claims are not overlooked. The proprietor professes his desire that the only requisite necessary to give an applicant a claim on the American fund is need, and that none shall be denied relief on political or religious grounds.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions have received during the first four months of the present financial year, terminating January 1st, donations amounting to $92,656.39, and legacies, $23,613.68, making a total of $116,270.07, which is an advance of nearly $20,000 on the average receipts for the corresponding period during the past three years. It is satisfactory to learn that the Board has shared in the period of national prosperity, and it is hoped that the encouraging prospects for the remainder of the year will be realized.

Mr. Moody's Work at St. Louis has at length reached the masses of the people. Mr. Moody entreated the prayers of Christians for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and in answer to those prayers God has granted the blessing. The St. Louis correspondent of a contemporary writes: "The most notable of all the meetings has been the Monday morning prayer-meeting of ministers. The first one was a meeting which will not be forgotten by those who were in attendance. Mr. Moody himself came with the feeling that he was not enjoying the fulness of the blessing as he needed it for the work in hand. And nearly all the ministers were longing for more of the Holy Spirit, and with confession and strong outcrying to God for a personal blessing the time was spent. Tears, even to audible sobs, were the external evidence of the sincere exercises of soul within. Many have said that they were never in such a meeting before. The result has been that most of the ministers have been greatly blessed in their home work since, and the tidings have come from the meetings that the several churches are holding by themselves, that God is bringing numbers to Himself in places where Mr. Moody has not been at all. Mr. Moody's own meetings are also very successful, and many inquiries and conversions result."

Suicide on a Wife's Grave.—A man was found lying dead on his wife's grave in Queens County, L. I., on February 9th, from a wound in his head made by a pistol bullet. His revolver lay between his knees, and on his person there was this note: "Life without my beloved wife, who died on the 19th of last month, is now dark and of no value to me. It is useless for a man to live when he is tired of all the pleasure the world has, and when he is also tired of life. Would it be worth while to starve for such a future? I am going willingly to my grave, for I know it will unite us in the c grave. I say farewell to the whole world Many men have felt after bereavement that t remainder of life would in consequence be v dreary for them, and yet they have not co mitted suicide. But this man gives the key his despair when he says he has tired of " the pleasures the world has." Then when, s feited with pleasure, the day of trouble car there was no support or consolation left. H he possessed the living faith of a Christian, would, though sorrowing over his loss, not h been as those "who have no hope," but wo have waited in patience for that blessed when "those who sleep in Jesus will God br with Him" (1 Thess. 4 : 13).

A Noble Rescue was Effected near New Y on February 3d. A steam-tug was towin boat laden with sulphuric acid, when a viol hurricane swept across the river. The tug, f ing that both vessels would be lost if they mained connected, threw the rope which attac the boat and made for the creek between Bla well's Island and the Westchester shore. boat, with three men and a woman on board, thus left helpless and was cast on the rocks the island. The waves broke over the every minute, and it was clear that unless as ance was rendered the four lives would be At this juncture a steward and a few of the ployés in the Hospital seeing their danger se a yawl the storm had blown on shore, and tho unaccustomed to the work rowed at the ris their lives to the poor creatures on the ro All lives were saved, but in a few minute would have been too late, for the party were just safe when they saw the wrecked boat b in pieces and go down. Gratitude beyond pression must have been felt by the res party to those who had perilled their live save them; but how often do men forget the who came from Heaven and gave His lif save them from a far worse doom than that watery grave!

Boys Draw Inferences and are Shrewd servers, as was demonstrated in a Northern some time ago. A gentleman who had ent a restaurant to get a cup of tea, noticed bright boys poorly clad, and apparently frozen, looking with longing eyes at the do nuts exposed for sale. The coldness of evening, and the evident hunger of the prompted him to treat them to a supply of delicacy. Having accepted the gift, one of boys stepped up and thanked him for his ness, putting at the same time the sugg question, "Say, mister, do you keep a chur It was plain that the boy thought that kin betokened some connection with a church.

Bishop MacNamara is now in Boston pr ing and lecturing. His meetings are cro and much good is being done among the R Catholic people. In his first meeting in B he gave a sketch of his life. He said he w child of devout Roman Catholics, who des him for the priesthood. He was educated "hedge schools," so that nothing repugna Catholicism should ever be taught him. ing Ireland, he came to Boston, studied t while, then entered the seminary in St. In the seminary he read the Bible, whic kept as a reference-book, and out of that g first idea of defects in Catholicism. He w dained priest in Brooklyn, where he founde built a church. Visiting once the chapel Sailors' Home, in Cherry Street, he w much impressed by the pious exhortati the chaplain that he threw himself upon hi among the ignorant sailors and was conv He had already been censured by his eccle cal superiors for his liberal views, and n gan his career as an Independent Catholic Irish Famine Relief Fund.—Contrib received up to Monday, Feb. 16th:

B. Aitken...
Bernard Rolfe, New York......................
D. Clinton Taylor, Oakland, Cal.............
J. G. T., Pittsburgh, Penn.....................
Forwarded to New York Herald..............

The Dying Words of Bishop Haven on January 3d to the Rev. Samuel Upham, who went to see him, were, "Preach a complete Gospel: a whole Christ, a whole heaven, a whole hell, the whole Bible from end to end." His physician on leaving said, "Good-night, bishop," and he answered, "Good-night: next time it will be Good-morning.'" Then he closed his eyes, and some thought the spirit had fled, but he opened them again, and looking at the Rev. Mr. Mallalieu, said, "I have been looking for the cold river, but there is no river there; only a broad plain leading up to the throne." Soon afterward his spirit crossed the "broad plain."

A Drunken Mother's Negligence has reulted in a horrible state of things. Emma Brest, the mother of several children, resides at Philadelphia, Pa. One of them, a little girl nine years old, was blind, and by reason of her affliction would have been the especial care of her mother had that mother been like other women. But Mrs. Brest is a drunkard, and all her children have been shamefully neglected. The little blind child was of course unable to help herself, and in consequence was the principal sufferer from her mother's propensities. After dragging on a pitiable existence for nine years, the little thing died from neglect. Some neighbors entering the house found the body of the child covered with vermin and partially devoured by rats in an upper room. The mother has been arrested and held for trial. This horrible narrative shows how indulgence in vice transforms even the natural affection of a mother, and degrades her to a lower level than that of the brutes.

Wounded by a Lead Pencil.—One of the trangest accidents on record occurred lately at Hartford, Conn. Some five weeks ago a man was noticed to stumble and fall. He immeditely became insensible, and on being taken home a surgeon discovered a slight wound in his body, close by the heart, and thought the man had been either stabbed or shot. A few days later the surgeons, who have watched the ase with much interest, probed the wound, and, o their astonishment, a whole lead pencil, which had been sharpened but once, was extracted. It had been in his vest pocket and had been driven into his body by the fall. The man is very weak, but it is thought he will recover.

A Biblical Precept was Pleaded as an Excuse or intoxication in the Essex Market Police Court, New York, on February 6th. A prisoner had been brought before the judge on a charge of being drunk, was released on the plea that the man had obeyed the injunction in Proverbs 31 : 7: 'Let him drink and forget his poverty, and remember his misery no more." The judge seems o have overlooked the real meaning of the pasage, and also to have forgotten an important element in the case, namely, that while this man was drinking away his earnings his three children were almost starving in his deserted home. If he prisoner had been anxious to obey the other precepts of the Bible he would not have been araigned at the Police Court.

A Parental Monster has been Unearthed at Philadelphia. On January 31st a girl, fourteen ears of age, was seen to jump into the Delaware River, and was rescued by a passing boatman. The story she told her rescuer and repeated to he police deserves notice, as showing what deravity and degradation may exist unknown in he midst of a religious community. It seems he girl's father has lived for several years with his two daughters in a dilapidated little shanty. Dirt inches thick carpeted the floor. The only entilation was from a door and a window, three of whose panes were stuffed with old rags. They ad no visitors or friends, for the father allowed o intercourse whatever with the neighbors. They never went to school or to church. The man's only means of livelihood was catching tray dogs, which he would kill and boil and ender the fat. He compelled his children to ve on the meat of the dogs he caught. From heir infancy he had taught them to use the fat or butter, and they do not know the taste of eal butter. He made considerable money from selling the dogs' bones and skins, but never spent a cent, except for rags to cover his chilren's backs or to protect them from the cold when all three lay down at night in the one miserable bed made of rough boards. At meal-time their dog-meat was fished out of an old iron boiler and they sat on boxes to eat it. The girls often contemplated suicide. It is satisfactory to learn that the monster of a father has been committed to jail.

The Cipher Dispatch.—Dr. A. J. Gordon relates in The Watchword the history of a cipher dispatch. A number of gentlemen were engaged recently in raising funds for the endowment of a college professorship. It was suggested that an appeal be made to a wealthy friend of the college who had already given liberally to the institution. A request was accordingly sent, and the answer was telegraphed back immediately, "Put me down a cipher." To some persons that would have seemed a disappointing answer, but the gentleman who received the dispatch rightly understood it. He referred to the record of the last subscription from his correspondent and added a cipher to that amount. Then the cipher became valuable; it raised the sum from one thousand dollars to ten thousand. So the Christian feels himself to be nothing, a mere cipher, but Christ at the head of the church being all and in all, His merits extend their value to every member who has been added to Him by faith.

A Railroad Conductor Underwent a Trying ordeal some time ago. He was an industrious man, and had worked his way up to the position he held by nine years, good conduct as brakeman. He received notice that the company had agreed to run a circus train into the city in which he lived, and it was timed to arrive there about midday on Sunday. The notice stated that he had been appointed to take charge of the train. The conductor was a Christian and a Sunday-school teacher. He had to consider, besides his own scruples of conscience, the effect his presence on the train would have on those who looked to him for an example. He sought earnestly Divine guidance, for it was hard to throw away his nine years' labor by refusing to run the train and so losing his situation. At length his duty became clear.

He went to the office and walked up to the manager, and said in a respectful tone: "I have been detailed to run the circus train Sunday morning, and I cannot do it on the Sabbath." To his profound astonishment the manager looked him full in the face and said: "You! been detailed to run Sunday trains! I am surprised! You go right home, and don't you worry about Sunday trains." He has never been detailed for Sunday work since, and is still in the company's employ. But the men who offered to do work for extra pay upon the Sabbath have long since been discharged.

A Vigorous Effort is Planned for this Year's campaign by the officers of the M. E. Church Extension Society. The income of the Society for 1879 amounted to $151,000, being an increase of $41,000 over that of 1878. A much larger increase is expected this year, which will be devoted to the erection of churches in needy districts.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works.—We have much pleasure in announcing that another large consignment of volumes by this eminent author and preacher has just been received. They are now on sale at the office of the Christian Herald, No. 63 Bible House, New York, and are offered at prices so low as to bring them within the reach of every one. Twelve Sermons on various subjects, price 35 cents. John Ploughman's Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents; in cloth, 60 cents. The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, a volume of fifty sermons, $2.50. The Treasury of David, a homiletical exposition of the book of Psalms, five vols., as far as Psa. 118; $3 per vol. Spurgeon Birthday Book. This popular gift-book contains a suitable passage selected from Mr. Spurgeon's writings for every day in the year, with a blank space opposite for autographs. The signatures of Mr. and Mrs. Spurgeon appear at their respective birthdays. The book is elegantly bound, and the price is 75 cents. Remittances should accompany orders.

FOR THE CANDID AND THOUGHTFUL.

A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"And when Jesus saw" ["Saw him," so it should be] "that he answered discreetly, he said unto him, Thou art not far from the kingdom of God."—Mark 12 : 34.

The Scribe Half-hearted in his Temptation—He may have been Spokesman for a Party—I. Christ's Commendation—1. The Scribe Possessed Candor—2. Spiritual Knowledge—3. A Correct Estimate of Inward and External Religion—Childish Quibbles of this Era—4. He Recognized the Supremacy of God over Man's Whole Nature—5. Did not Despise Outward Religion—II. The Question Suggested—Did the Scribe ever Enter the Kingdom—Several Doors by which he may have Entered—His Condition Similar to that of Paul—Christ's Character must have Attracted him—A Sincere Searching of the Scriptures would Reveal Christ to him—He was Moved by the Holy Spirit—He may not have Entered—Through Fear of Others—A Terrible Doom.

This man began with Christ as a foe, and he ended as a friend. It does not quite appear from Mark, but it is plainly stated by Matthew, that the scribe asked a question of the Saviour "tempting Him." He was, therefore, an enenemy. Put the mildest sense you like on the word "tempt" and it will retain the idea of an unfriendly testing; yet nothing could be more hearty in the end than the verdict with which he commended our Lord's answer, "Well, Master, thou hast said the truth." Our Lord Jesus Christ has an almighty power over men's minds; He possesses irresistible charms by which He turns adversaries into advocates.

He has a secret key which fits the wards of human hearts, and He can open that which seems to be the most securely closed against Him. "Never man spake like this man," for in His voice, even in his humiliation, there were traces of the eternal fiat which of old spake the primeval midnight into noon.

It strikes me that this scribe was half-hearted in the work of tempting our Lord, even at the first. I should imagine him to have been a very superior man among his fellows, a man of greater light and discernment than the rest, and of greater ability in statement and discussion. Possibly for this cause his brother scribes selected him, and put him forward to ask the testing questions. Now, it will sometimes happen that a man is thrust forward by others to do what he would never have thought of doing of his own accord, and quite unwillingly he acts as the mouthpiece of a set of people whom he half despises.

Our Lord Jesus Christ is a ready reader of human hearts, and He very soon discovers whether what a man does is being done of himself or whether He is acted upon by a power behind. He discerns the difference between the malicious adversary and the less guilty victim of circumstances.

These words of mine may be reaching persons who have opposed a religious movement, or fought against a gracious truth, not because they themselves would have done so if they had been left alone, but others have egged them on and made use of them, and thus they have been drawn or driven into a false position. The people whom they have been accustomed to lead have led them: it is too often the fate of leaders. The circle of which they have been the centre and the head has imprisoned its own apparent master, and made him captive, so that he fights against that which in his heart he half suspects to be right. If, even now, he could be set free from his surroundings he would side with the right.

Friend, my blessed Master can read your heart, and understand the pressure under which you are acting. I pray that as he reads your inmost soul he may see what of good there remaineth among the evil, and deliver you out of the false and dangerous position into which you have drifted. Jesus can set you right, my friend—can take you away from the entanglements of your surroundings, sever you from those who are making a tool of you, but who are at the same time sinking you down to their own level: can bring you to be his own friend, and lift you up to His own standard, so that you too shall be the champion of everything that is good and true, and shall go forward with Him as your Master, bearing His cross, and looking to wear His crown.

Although the scribe in the narrative before us appeared first under the aspect of an antagonist, and tried to tempt our Lord, yet before long the great Teacher had put him into such a mental condition that He said of him, "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God." At this time I shall first notice the commendation which is here expressed; and then, in the second place, I shall dwell for a little while upon the question which is here suggested—suggested, I think, by no idle curiosity, but very naturally suggested: Did this man, who was so near to the kingdom, actually enter it, or did he not?

I. May the Holy Spirit instruct and impress us while, first, we consider expressed: "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God." I am not going to use this text after the usual fashion. It has been made the heading of a catalogue of characters who are supposed to be not far from the kingdom of God. It is a very proper thing to address hopeful persons, and to give descriptions of conditions about which there is much that is cheering, and yet much to create anxiety; but the text itself does not deal with many cases, but with one whom Jesus judged to be not far from the kingdom of God, of whom it gives us such information that we see why he was thus spoken of.

THE COMMENDATION

It speaks of one particular individual: "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God;" and it tells us that Jesus said this because He saw that he answered discreetly. We may infer without fear of mistake that any man who would answer as this man answered is not far from the kingdom of God. Let us read his answer: "Master thou hast said the truth; for there is one God, and there is none other but He; and to love Him with all the heart, and with all the understanding, and with all the soul, and with all the strength, and to love his neighbor as himself, is more than all whole burnt-offerings and sacrifices."

1. With care let us investigate this reply and see how far it might be our own language. The first point in which our Saviour saw that the scribe was not far from the kingdom of God was this, that He possessed candor, and possessed so much of it that he rose superior to party considerations. He was a scribe, and naturally he took the side of the scribes and pharisees, but still he was not so much a scribe and pharisee that he would follow them against the truth. He kept himself open to conviction, and as soon as the Saviour had given a fitting answer to the question, he did not, as other pharisees would have done, sneer at Him, and continue still to pick fresh holes in His coat, but, like a candid man, he said, "Well, Master, thou hast answered rightly;" and thus he did, as it were, separate himself from the unjust and bigoted party for whom he had been the temporary spokesman. He did not avow himself to be a disciple of Christ, yet he gave the great Teacher His due, and said of Him what he felt bound to say, namely, that He had answered rightly.

Now, my brethren, there is always some hope of a man who is candid, and there is more hope still of one who, being placed by circumstances among the bigoted and prejudiced, nevertheless breaks away from bondage, keeps a conscience, preserves his eye from total blindness, is willing to see light if light is to be had, and is anxious to know the truth if the truth can be brought before him. It gives me great delight to meet with such persons, even though they confess that they are of a sceptical turn of mind, when it is clear that they are ready to yield to evidence, and are not mere cavillers.

Time is wasted upon men who have made up their minds, or who have no minds to make up, but enquirers are worth trouble, and those who will admit right and truth when they see it are among the most hopeful of hearers. We do not wish people to open their mouths and shut their eyes and swallow everything that we may like to give them, yet the mouth ought to be open, or at least willing to be opened, as well as the eye, or our service at the gospel feast will be a weary task. When hearers are willing to receive the truth as well as to examine what they hear, they are in a good state. They will not only "prove all things," which a great many will do, but they are ready also to "hold fast that which is good," which some will not do: among such persons was the scribe.

2. A second point is, perhaps, even more clear. This man also possessed

SPIRITUAL KNOWLEDGE.

It is a great error to suppose that ignorance can do anybody any good. There is a religion which prefers to have ignorant people to deal with, but we have learned the truth of what Solomon said: "That the soul be without knowledge, it is not good." To be ignorant of the law of God is to be far off from the kingdom; and to be ignorant of the Gospel is also to be in a measure far off from the kingdom: but this man knew the law, and knew it well. He had a spiritual appreciation of its range, meaning, and spirituality. Notice how he puts it: he puts it well. He says, "To love God with all the heart, and with all the understanding, and with all the soul, and with all the strength—this is the first commandment."

Here we see, first, that he mentions sincere love, in the words, "to love Him with all the heart." God is to be loved, not in name, not with lip language, not with mere pretence, but with the heart. God requireth by His law the hearty obedience of His creatures. Next the scribe puts it, "With all thy understanding;" that is, God deserves and demands the intelligent love of His creatures. He does not ask blind love of them: He desires them to know something of Him, and of His works, and of His claims upon them, so as to love Him because He deserves their affection. The understanding must justify and impel the affections.

Then, he puts it, "with all thy soul;" that is, with the emotional nature. Love God with feeling—not coolly, but with the whole force of your feeling. Love Him with your soul, for soul love is the soul of love. And then he adds, "and with all thy strength;" that is to say, intensity is to be thrown into our love to God. We are to serve Him with our might, and throw all our whole energy into His worship. Thus he gives us, under four heads, a description of the kind of love which the law of God requires of us—sincere—"with all thy heart;" intelligent—"with all thy understanding;" emotional—"with all thy soul;" intense and energetic—"with all thy strength." This the scribe knew, and it was most valuable knowledge.

3. A third point is more remarkable still, because it is to be feared that hundreds of professed Christians are nothing like so near to the kingdom of heaven as this man was. This scribe knew the superiority of over that which is external, for he declares, "To love Him with all thy heart is more than whole burnt offerings and sacrifices."

AN INWARD RELIGION

Thousands at this hour are publicly teaching us that the principal point of religion is that you shall be duly and properly baptized and confirmed, and shall reverently and properly receive the sacrament. They lay stress upon your receiving before you have your breakfast, and upon the breaker of the sacred bread having been duly touched on the head by a bishop, and I do not know what else of mere outward circumstance. Books have been written about how the service is to be performed, and how it is not to be performed, and a great noise has been made about a piece of bread which was brought before a court of law. I believe a very great dignitary has been so weak as to certify that this baked dough has been "reverently consumed;" and yet this is not a heathen country, nor are we worshippers of fetiches!

Great importance is attached to the style of garment, which should be worn by priests on Holy Monday, or Good Friday. Colors vary according to the almanack and the age of the moon. I must confess I need all my gravity when I think of copes, and girdles, and surplices, and gowns being matters of serious discussion. Surely these poor dupes of superstition are far, very far, from the kingdom of God, which is not meat and drink, nor clothing, nor posture, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. Their whole line of thought is alien to the mind of God, who is a spirit, and must be worshipped in spirit and in truth.

Now, a man who has come so far as to shake off the superstition of confidence in external worship is not far from the kingdom of God. He who knows that if saved it will be by a spiritual change, and not by going to a place of worship, not by repeating prayers, not by joining a church, not by being baptized, not by taking the sacrament, knows more than many; and he who also knows that loving God with all his heart is an absolutely needful evidence of his being a child of God, and longs to feel that love, is not far from the kingdom.

4. Another point is manifest in this man's confession: he saw very plainly the supremacy of God over the whole of our manhood. It was clea to him that there was but one God, and tha man was made on purpose to be one and undi vided in His service. He perceived that ma should love, honor, and serve that one God wit all his heart, with all his understanding, with al his soul, and with all his strength. Do you know that, dear friend? Come now, if you are not saved man, I will ask you—Do you recognize thi to be true, that it is your bounden duty to serv your God with all your heart and understanding and soul, and strength?

DO.YOU ADMIT THIS?

If you do, and if you are an honest man, yo are not far from the kingdom of God, becaus honest men earnestly endeavor to pay thei debts, and when they find that they cannot, the are distressed. If you are in distress of min because you cannot meet your obligations t God, then you are not far from the kingdom. rejoice in your discovery of shortcoming, failur and inability, for these lie near that hearty pen tence which is the sister of saving faith, and th sure herald of joy and peace.

5. Once more only. Although this hopef scribe recognized the value of spiritual religio and the need of heart-work, and of the heart b ing wholly given to God, yet he did not desp outward religion so far as it was commanded God.

He says that to love God is better th whole burnt offerings and sacrifices; which w an admission that these things were good their places. He was no rejecter of ceremoni which are commanded, because of the supers tion of will-worshippers who invent ceremonie We are not to give up the baptism of believe because of the unscriptural rite of infant sprin ling, nor to forsake the Lord's Supper becau of the popish mass. Ordinances of God a good in their places, and what is to be dread is the perversion of them by thrusting them in the place of better and more important matte Thus the scribe showed a well-balanced mind round, and proved himsef not far from the kin dom of God.

My dear friend, are you prepared to lay ho of truth wherever you find it? Are you p pared to break away from party ties and fam prejudices? Are you prepared to believe th the inward and spiritual part of religion is i nitely superior to the external part of it, be right or be it wrong? Do you also admit t divine supremacy of God, and His right to y in all respects? And are you willing to ta ordinances, such as He has ordained, in th place, and not out of it? Then, if all th things be in you, your character resembles t f this scribe of whom Jesus said, "Thou art ot far from the kingdom of God."

I am right glad to meet with you, for you are ot far from submitting to the divine authority, ince you are already found admitting its right o you. I trust you are not far from entering nto the realm of spiritual religion, for you aleady value it. You are not far from the priviege of being wholly renewed in heart, since ou see the need of it. How glad I am that you hould be now listening to the Gospel! Hapier still shall I be if God shall help me to say he right word to you at this good hour. The ord send it!

ID THE SCRIBE EVER ENTER THE KINGDOM?

II. Our second point is the question sugested—this man came so near to the kingdom: id he ever enter it? We do not know. If anyody were to assert that He did not I should be eady to question his statement. If anybody ere to declare that he did, I should at once deand his authority for the assertion. We reeive no information from the Scriptures, and it s always better where the Word of God is silent o be silent ourselves. We should also observe nother very good rule: if you have to judge of man's state, and know but little of it, always udge it favorably. Judges usually give a prisner the benefit of the doubt; and when a man s not a prisoner, when he has come so far toard grace as this scribe, let us at any rate hope hat he did enter into the kingdom.

I see no reason why he should not have done so; nd that is my first answer to the question. He hould have done so. Having come so far there ere many doors by which, God's Spirit being ith him, he might have entered into the kingom; I mean doors of thought, by which the Holy Spirit would readily have led his candid ind into the faith of Christ. I will show you ne.

There was in after years another scribe, a rabi—you will recollect his name—who said, "I onsent unto the law, that it is good; but I see nother law in my members, warring against the aw of my mind, and bringing me into captivity o the law of sin which is in my members. O retched man that I am! Who shall deliver e from the body of this death? I thank God, hrough Jesus Christ our Lord." You see the rocess of thought. It is a very simple one.

This scribe sees the law of God to be a spirital law, demanding the obedience of his heart, is understanding, his soul, and his strength. f he had thought awhile he would, as a candid an, have said, "I have not kept this law. What is more, I cannot keep it. If I try to eep it I find a something within me against hich I struggle, but which, nevertheless, brings e into captivity to another law—a law of selfhness, a law of sin." Then, as a man anxious o be right, he would have said, "How can I be elivered? Oh that I might be set free to keep e law of God! I cannot abide in this bondge. I ought to keep this law, I shall never be appy till I do love God with all my heart, for He ought to be so loved, and I perceive that here can be no heaven to a heart which does ot love God intensely, for this is one of the esentials of peace and rest. How can I get at it?"

In such a condition as that, if he had heard he sweet invitation of our Lord, "Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I ill give you rest," would he not have leaped at he sound? Do you not see the simple doorway or such a man as that to become a Christian? He had come so far that surely he should come little farther. Let us trust that he did. At any ate, if any of you have come so far, may God's pirit lead you to take those other steps, and to nter into the kingdom, submitting to the sweet overeignty of the Prince Immanuel, whose ceptre is of silver, and whose servitude is an onor and a delight to all His subjects.

That is one door; now follow with me another rack. Suppose this man had really loved God ith all his heart, and understanding, and soul, nd strength—I will not say perfectly, for that ould be supposing an impossibility, but supposing that he had truly and sincerely loved God, he could not have been an hour in the company of the Lord Jesus without feeling the deepest union of heart to Him. Would he not have exclaimed, "This man, too, loves God with all his heart?" He must have perceived it, for the zeal which Christ had for the Father was immeasurable; it flashed in every gleam of His eye, it tinctured every word that fell from His lips.

Jesus lived for God, and glorified the Father with all His heart and soul, and any person who truly loved God would soon have perceived that fact. "Ah!" he would have exclaimed, "here is one who loves God better than I do; here is one who honors God more than I do; here is one who is more consecrated, more devoted, more godlike than I am." By that door he would have been led to admiration of Jesus, to communion with Him, and ultimately to belief in Him as the Messiah. Let us hope that the scribe was so led, for the way is plain enough.

Here is another door. You notice that he said that to love God was more than all burnt offerings and sacrifices. Now, suppose that with that in his mind he had sat down, and said, "This loving God is the main thing; why, then, is the law encumbered with burnt offerings and sacrifices? If they really are inferior to the moral precepts, and especially to the spiritual precepts, why are they there at all?" Then methinks he would have seen that they must be there for a spiritual purpose.

And suppose he had begun to try and read the meaning of the paschal lamb, or of the daily lamb, or of the sin-offering, why, methinks, if he turned to that blessed fifty-third chapter of Isaiah, and began to read it in order to understand the sacrifices of the old law, it would have happened to him as it did to the eunuch when Philip opened to him the Scriptures—he would have seen Jesus in them all. He must have seen Him.

There is another road by which the scribe might have been led to the Saviour. Think again. Suppose that he had continued to glow and burn with love to God. As that love grew the understanding would also become enlightened with it, and the soul would rise toward God. You know why that would be. It must be because the Holy Spirit was in the man, for no man loveth God or striveth to love God, with all his heart, and understanding, and soul, and strength, without there being in secret and unknown to him a divine power at the back impelling him in that direction. Now, do you think that the Holy Spirit would thus work in the man and not reveal Christ to him for his salvation? I cannot believe it.

Still, as I have said, there is the dark supposition that perhaps the scribe never did enter the kingdom. He may have been so near to the kingdom, and yet he may have lacked the one thing needful. If it were so, it was a grievous fact; and all we can now do is to profit by it. What could have been the reason why he did not enter the kingdom? I cannot tell, we know so little of him; but if we might infer from the little we do know, I should suppose that if he did not enter it was from the unworthy motive of being swayed by his fellow-men.

We judged that when he came to Christ to put the question, he came not of his own mind and motion. We began by thinking that he seemed half-hearted in his opposition, and that so he the more readily turned from a questioner into a candid admirer. It is, however, just possible that, being the spokesman for others, he had grown fond of taking the lead; and if he did not really enter the kingdom, it may have been because he would have lost his place in the front rank of scribe and Pharisee, and this was too great a price to pay for truth and righteousness.

I have known a man deeply impressed with religious things, and feeling his way aright; but a little company of half a dozen whom he met in the evening, of whom he was the leading spirit, have sufficed to hold him in bondage. They invite him to come again; they miss his genial society, his jest, his song, his merry talk. He cannot face it out, and tell them that he has a call elsewhere, a call to nobler things. He has not the resolute will to lead them in another direction, and dreads even to make the attempt. He wants to be the leading man; and so he gives up what his conscience suggests to him rather than not be the leader of men whom in his heart he must know to be unworthy of such a homage. In his own mind he thinks them fools; but, still, he is afraid that they should think him so, and therefore he becomes a greater and more guilty fool than they.

OH, THAT FEAR OF MEN,

that fear of men! You may meet with here and there a man of the better sort who begins to feel, "Yes, there is the light there: light worth having." He breaks away from his party and its surroundings, and for a while is eager for the truth, which he has half discovered; but he fears the cold shoulder which society would give him, dreads the jeer of "Sir John," and the sneer of "My Lord."

The half-opened eye is closed with saddest determination from fear of other children of darkness, who would mock at its better sight. This is a sight which might make an angel weep. Jesus is sold, but not for so much as clinked in the hand of Judas; He is bartered for a fool's smile, and for the company of the vain and frivolous. Ah me, that ever the sun should behold so dread a sight!

Multitudes who know the truth, and are not far from the kingdom of God, nevertheless never enter it, because of the fear of man, the love of approbation, the horror of being laughed at and jested at. With such vile fetters immortal souls are bound for execution, and held back from everlasting blessedness.

Oh! if I speak to one who hesitates, let me remind him that, however it may look to-night to be a daring step to be decided for Christ, it will look very differently soon when the great trumpet shall sound, and ring o'er earth and sea, and the dead shall rise, and the judgment-seat shall be set, and the great white throne shall be unveiled. Then it will be seen to be a far more desperate daring to deny the Lord even to save life itself.

I was thinking that, if the Lord were to pay men in their own coin, what an awful thing it would be if those who are now not far from the kingdom were told by the Lord, "You shall stay there forever. You, who heard the Gospel, and did not accept it, must stop where you are." Halt, sir! not a step more! Close to the gates of heaven—you stop there! To hear its music forever, and to gnash your teeth forever, because you cannot join in it! To hear the songs of the righteous, while you wail forever! To know the brightness of bliss, but to be yourself in the black darkness forever! To be within an inch of heaven and yet in hell! The living water flowing at your feet, and yet your tongue forever parched! The bread of life nigh at hand, and yet you cannot eat!

Oh, think of it! Eternally not far from the kingdom! If you would not wish to be so, oh, be not out of Christ another minute! May God's Spirit enable you to leap right away from your undecided condition into living faith and loving obedience to Christ.

> "So near to the Kingdom! yet what dost thou lack?
> So near to the Kingdom! what keepeth thee back?
> Renounce every idol, tho' dear it may be,
> And come to the Saviour now pleading with thee."

[The prayers of the readers of this Journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors in America and England, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and for its weekly circulation of more than 165,000 copies to be blessed by the Holy Spirit to the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Mr. Spurgeon and Dr. Talmage especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

A HIGH CHURCH YOUNG LADY CONVERTED BY A METHODIST MINISTER.

ON an eminence, near the banks of a flowing stream in England, stood the proud ancestral hall of Alice's father. Not far distant, in the wooded demesne, was the old Abbey Church.

There had been a change of ministers. An evangelical pastor had been succeeded by a young Oxford divine, who set himself to restore what he called the customs of antiquity in the ancient edifice.

The plain window was accordingly replaced by one with painted devices of saints. The altar was raised a few steps, and enveloped in a crimson cloth, on which was embroidered a large golden cross. A pair of long candles lit up the chancel. Ever and anon costly flowers adorned the table. Gorgeous vestments, richly embroidered robes, and such like millinery, attracted the fair part of the audience. A dozen little boys, in long white garments, graced the chancel, and, in whining tones, aided the minister to chant the services. Imposing ceremonials, bowings and mutterings, imparted an apparent devotion and mystery to the exercises. In fact, High Churchism, or Ritualism, became the order of the day.

Alice was an only child and heiress. Lovely and accomplished, she lived for this world, and this world offered her no ordinary attractions. Idolized by her parents, and beloved by an accepted suitor, she knew not the meaning of a wish ungratified.

She entered zealously into the innovations of the new incumbent, deluding herself with the idea that she was thereby devoting her talents to God's service. She procured red-leaved church-services covered with crosses and books of devotion illuminated with curious devices: on festival days she helped to decorate the temple with rare red camelias and other costly flowers; and thus her mind was drawn off the real object of worship, and she became wrapt up in religious formalism.

But an unexpected visitor arrived at the mansion. A pale messenger came to Alice. A hectic flush suffused her beautiful face, rendering it, if possible, more lovely still. The eagle eye of affection soon perceived that the seeds of consumption had been laid. The skilled physician pronounced the heartrending verdict that her days were numbered, and that the career of love and self-indulgence would soon close.

Alice sank by degrees, and, as she lay on her couch, surrounded with all the luxuries that wealth could procure, began to think how sad it was to leave her loving friends and all her brilliant prospects, and to go—where? where?

She could not find an answer satisfactory to her soul.

So she sent for the High Church clergyman. He came. The family were assembled. He produced a missal. They all knelt round the bed. He intoned the service for the sick. Having received her confession and pronounced absolution, he, with peculiar genuflections, administered the Sacrament, and placing his hands on her, blessed her, and pronounced her a good child of the Church. He departed perfectly satisfied with his own performances, and assuring the parents that all was right.

Was Alice satisfied? She had submitted to all. She had endeavored to join in the service, but in her inmost soul she felt a blank.

"Father," said she, "I am going to die. Where am I going?" The father gave no reply.

"Mother, darling, can you tell me what I am to do to get to heaven?" No reply save tears.

"I'm lost! lost!" she exclaimed. "Am I not, father? Is there any one who can tell me what I must do to be saved?"

At length the father spoke:

"My child, you have always been a dutiful daughter, and have never grieved your parents. You have regularly attended the Abbey Church, and helped in its services, and the minister has performed the rites of the Church, and expressed himself satisfied with your state."

"Alas! father, I feel that is not enough. It is no rest to my soul. It is hollow—it is not real. Oh, I am going to die, and I know not where I am going! Oh, the blackness of the darkness! Can no one teach me what I can do to be saved?"

Alice was attended by a little maid, who was in the habit of frequenting a meeting held in a barn in the village, where prayer and praise were offered up in simplicity, and where they sang the old hymns—

"There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins;
And sinners plunged beneath that flood, Lose all their guilty stains;"

and—

"I lay my sins on Jesus,
The spotless Lamb of God;
He bears them all, and frees us
From the accursed load"

She longed to tell her mistress that she might "wash and be clean," but felt diffident. At last she took courage, and just as the Israelitish captive said unto Naaman's wife, "Would God my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria, for he would recover him of his leprosy," she told her mistress, "There is a preacher in the village who proclaims salvation through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and urges us to accept the forgiveness freely offered in the Gospel."

"Oh that I could see him!" exclaimed the dying girl.

Alice besought her father to invite the Methodist preacher to the house; and, though he thought it extraordinary, her wish was law.

Again the family were assembled, and the man of God entered the room. The dying girl, raising herself, appealed to him: "Can you tell me what I must do to obtain rest for my soul, and die at peace with God?"

The preacher then set before her the way of salvation through Christ, and entered fully into a description of His work on behalf of sinners.

The awakened sinner listened with breathless attention. She received the Word of God, which revealed Christ to her soul. The glad tidings of salvation fell as balm upon her wounded spirit. Her face was lit up with heaven's sunlight. Looking upward, she exclaimed, "Oh, what love! what grace!

'Jesus, Thy blood and righteousness My beauty are, my glorious dress;'" and in a few days she departed, to be with Christ.

HEALING BY FAITH.

A REMARKABLE case of faith followed by healing is narrated by the Rev. Edward Ebbs, a Congregational minister of high standing in Canada. It appears that a gentleman namd Hart removed from Canada to the State of Illinois; there he was a deacon of the church, and was much respected in his neighborhood, having for some time been a member of the State Legislature. He has a daughter aged seventeen, who was the pride and joy of the family. About two years ago she became afflicted with a disease which baffled the skill of the best physicians in the State and of others who were summoned from Canada in consultation.

She suffered from complete prostration and physical derangement. At times, for six or eight days together, she could not take any kind of food. Her sense of hearing was so acute, that it was necessary to keep the whole house painfully hushed. In like manner her sight at times had to be guarded by the utter exclusion of light. Her sense of touch was sometimes so sensitive all over the body, that it was exceedingly difficult to render her necessary attentions. Her physical sufferings were greatly aggravated by occasional spells of cramping, when she lost muscular self-control, but retained full consciousness. Her arms and limbs would then be drawn backward, and with sudden relaxation, unless prevented by force, her body would be projected off the bed. This continued for above a year, and the doctors finally gave up hope.

For a week or ten days the parents had been intensely exercised in heart, and agreed that they would beseech the Lord that if not consistent with His will to heal her, He would release her from life. In this extremity the father had gone to Ottawa to have yet another conference with one of the advising physicians. The mother left in charge of the sufferer took up the Bible and proposed to read a few verses. She turned to Matt. 9: 20–22, and the parallel passage in Mark. After reading she said, "Tilla, do you believe that Christ is able now to heal you as He did this woman?" She responded promptly in the affirmative. The mother responded, "Do you believe He is willing to do so?" The daughter replied "No." After a short silence she qualified this, which led the mother to add, "I believe He is willing! Pray that He may give you faith to ask this blessing." (Tilla was a professing Christian.) The mother kneeled and prayed; while uttering her petitions, Tilla interrupted her, saying, "Stop, mother; I am healed!" She at once sat up in the bed, and asked for her clothes that she might dress herself. But an urgent need of food at once asserted itself, which was at once supplied. And what is very remarkable, this first meal was comfortably digested, and the functions of the body at once seemed restored to their normal condition. The young lady is now perfectly recovered, and has resumed her studies at college.

TEN SIGNS OF THE APPROACHING END.*

By Rev. M. Baxter.

Whisperings of the Coming Storm—A Wondrous Map of the Future—A General Agreement as t Dates—A Popular Fallacy—The Apocalypse Given Sixty Years after the Ascension—The Office of the Holy Spirit is to Show us Thing to Come—Only Worldlings ought to be Take Unawares—The Great Landmark—The Te Signs—1. The World-wide Preaching of th Gospel.

THE existing aspect of the world is undeniabl unnatural and anomalous. The stream of event is rushing impetuously into new and unexpecte channels, like a foaming torrent that has over topped its banks. Indications symptomatic o some impending catastrophe are discoverable o every side, like the whispered mutterings of a approaching thunderstorm or the hoarse subterranean rumblings that portend a volcanic eruption.

We are living in times when the Christian an the Infidel, the Statesman and the Divine, see to agree in the expectation that some great crisi is at hand. The public mind, both at home an abroad, is held in the calm of a feverish suspens Amid these thick clouds, all eyes are fixed wit an eager gaze upon the dark and coming futur But who shall unravel its mysteries? Who ca decipher its solemn roll of fate? Who ca pierce with steady eye into the depths of futur history, and read there, as in a mirror, the judg ment or mercy in store for after generations?

It is here that the wisdom of the world stan rebuked, and its oracles are all mute and silen The research of its historians here proves futi and ineffectual; the policy of its statesmen baffled and confounded. The future continu veiled from every worldly eye in deepest my tery; and every effort of human pride, witho the aid of Revelation, to decipher the solem handwriting, proves utterly abortive.

Divine prophecy is the only light that can r move this impenetrable darkness. There G Himself reveals to His own servants the gre outlines of His providential government of t world, and enables them, by patient search, trace through the past and the future the gra deur and the majesty of His high counsels love. In the books of Daniel and Revelati ere is revealed to the diligent search and pa- nt study of the humble and devout Christian wondrous pictorial map of the future history d destiny of the nations of the earth.

---

* Extracted from "Coming Wars," by Rev. Baxter, in two pamphlets—five cents each by ma First pamphlet contains "Ten Signs of the End, a Description of Approaching Events," with two ma and four large diagrams. Second pamphlet contai valuable quotations from Forty Expositors on the events, at 63 Bible House, New York.

It is a notable fact that some point of time thin the general epoch from 1866 to 1890 has en computed to be the termination of the d consequent end of this dispensation, by ore than one hundred and fifty Expositors of ophetic Chronology. Hence this period has en expected to be the probable epoch of the lowing events: the dissolution of the Turk- empire, the great wars and revolutions of the ter-day final crisis, the formation of the ten- ngdomed confederacy, the re-establishment of e Jewish nation in Palestine, the translation watchful Christians to heaven, the full revival the Napoleon dynasty over Europe, the sub- quent Great Tribulation and Persecution roughout Christendom, and the personal de- ent of Christ at the battle of Armageddon establish His millennial reign over the rth.

PROPHETIC DATES

Some of the principal dates, which have been derstood to terminate somewhere about this och, are the 6000 years from the creation of an—and the 2520 years from Nebuchadnezzar's th—and the 1260 years from the commence- ent of the temporal power of Popery and Mo- mmedanism, between the years 606 and 622 e era of the Hegira, from which the Moham- edans reckon their calendar)—and the 360 ars from Luther's Reformation in 1517–30.[*]

But many persons, instead of aspiring to stand on the observatory of prophecy, and with the escope of revelation to gaze on the scenes of turity, entertain the popular fallacy that it is possible to discover the time when the Day of dgment and Second Coming of Christ and Mil- nium will commence; and to this end they metimes quote the passage in Mark 13 : 32, Of that day and that hour knoweth no man, , not the angels that are in heaven, neither e Son, but the Father." It is manifest, how- er, that persons are guilty of the sin of unwar- ntably adding to the words of God (Rev. : 18) who explain this text to prohibit the owledge of the month, or year, or general sea- n of Christ's Advent, inasmuch as the passage ly specifies "the day and hour" to be un- own.

The slightest consideration also shows that ese words, being spoken in the present tense, ferred entirely to the time when they were ut- red, and could not fairly be understood to re- te to the advanced period in which we are now ing. It was not said, "No man shall know," t simply, "No man knoweth;" and, more- er, it was added, "Not even the Son." rely no one dare assert that the Son Man does not now know the day and hour of is own Second Advent, since He has ascended to the right hand of the Father in heaven; d, therefore, it is evident that the application these words was entirely limited to the time en the Son of Man was on the earth in an un- orified state, and cannot extend to the present riod, seeing that it cannot now be the case that t even the Son knows the day or hour.

Furthermore, the Book of Revelation was ven in Patmos to St. John sixty years after rist's ascension, and was bestowed by the Fa- er for the express purpose of foreshowing "the ings which must shortly come to pass," and the things which shall be hereafter" (Rev. : 1–10). Consequently we now have very much ore information as to future events than was ven at the time when it was said, "No man oweth the day or the hour."

Indeed, prior to the day of Pentecost, it was distinctly declared to the disciples, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in His power"—it was, however, added, "But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you" (Acts 1 : 8), and this power to know the times and seasons began to be bestowed at Pentecost by the Holy Spirit, whose office it is to "show us things to come" (Acts 2; John 16 : 13), and by whose teaching the Church is to increase in the knowledge of the prophecies toward the time of the end, when the words shall be unsealed and unclosed (Dan. 12 : 4, 9).

Various portions of Scripture distinctly intimate that although hypocrites and worldlings will be overtaken unaware by the Day of the Lord, yet that as the approach of summer is ascertainable from the budding of the fig-tree, so, when certain predicted events come to pass, watchful Christians will be enabled by discerning such signs of the times to lift up their heads, knowing that the Lord's second coming is nigh, even at the doors.

The Apocalypse furnishes a marvellously exact map or picture-history of all the leading events of the Gentile dispensation between the first and second advent of Christ. Standard year-day expositors universally admit that at least six seals, six trumpets, and six vials have been entirely or very nearly fulfilled in their year-day accomplishment, and thus we are living on the eve of the year-day seventh seal, seventh trumpet, and seventh vial, which are closely connected with the beginning of the Millennium (Amos 3 : 7; Matt. 24 : 32–43; John 15 : 15; 2 Pet. 1 : 19; 1 Thess. 5 : 4).

THE GREAT LANDMARK,

however, to be watched for is the formation of all the countries of Cæsar's Roman Empire into a ten-kingdomed confederacy, and then the rise of an eleventh little sovereign, a Napoleon, who will make a seven years' covenant with the Jews, according to the last verse of the ninth chapter of Daniel, about seven years before the consummation and Millennium.

The best modern expositors now admit that there is a year-day historical fulfilment of the seals, trumpets, vials, and some other prophecies of Revelation within about 1900 years, with special reference of the 1260 years of the persecuting reign of the Papal and Mohammedan Antichrists; but that there will also be at the final crisis a more exact literal-day fulfilment of all the prophecies of Revelation within about 1900 days, in special connection with the 1260 days of the persecuting reign of the personal Infidel Antichrist.

The signs of the times are very admonitory of the approaching End of this dispensation, and convergently meet and commingle in the present epoch in a manner in which they never met or commingled previously. They may be summed up under ten leading divisions.

I. THE WORLD-WIDE PREACHING OF THE GOSPEL IS A SIGN

foretold in Matthew 24 : 14: "This Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the End come."

Since the great era of the French Revolution in 1793–1815, nearly all the numerous Home and Foreign Missionary and Bible and Tract Societies of Protestant Christendom have been established, and the Scriptures have been translated into upward of 200 languages, whereas prior to 1792 they were not printed in more than fifty languages. More progress has been made in diffusing the Gospel during the last seventy years than within the previous 1700 years.

The marvellous revival of evangelical religion in Great Britain and America, under the labors of Whitefield, Wesley, and the Methodists, during the half century preceding the epoch of 1792, greatly prepared the way for these missionary movements. The heralds of the Cross of Christ have now carried the message of salvation from Greenland's icy mountains to India's coral strand, and have penetrated into the interior of China and the heart of Africa, and landed on the shores of Japan.

The Gospel is, however, yet to have by far its widest proclamation in this age during the future interval of a year and a half between the ascension of the 144,000 watchful Christians to the heavens and the subsequent final 3½ years of Antichrist's great persecution; for a body of preachers, denoted by the angel in Rev. 14 : 6, will then be sent forth to preach "the everlasting Gospel, to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people," with the special announcement superadded that the closing "hour of God's judgment is then come." Thus will be fully and finally accomplished the prediction of the faithful and true witness in Matthew 24 : 14.

Its proclamation is not to convert the world previous to the end; on the contrary, when the Son of Man comes, people in general will be found to be as wicked as they were in the days of Noah and of Lot; and the armies of the nations will be assembled to fight against the King of kings at Armageddon (Luke 17 : 27, 28; 18 : 8; Rev. 16 : 14; 19 : 19). Although, by the preached Gospel, "God visits the Gentiles to take out a people for His name," yet the majority of mankind will reject the testimony, and "wax worse and worse in the perilous times of the last days," until "the tabernacle of David is built again," and the Jews are fully restored to Palestine at and after the Lord's second advent, and then "the residue of men and all the Gentiles" who survived the battle of Armageddon "will seek after the Lord," and become for the most part really Christianized during the subsequent Millennium (Acts 15 : 14–17; 2 Tim. 3; Isa. 66; Zech. 14).

(To be continued.)

A SPANISH SERVANT-GIRL.

At Oviedo, in Spain, one morning a servant-girl was going along the street, when an acquaintance called to her, "Come here, girl; are you with Mrs. S. now?" "Yes; I have been there for a week."—"It would be better for you to be in the worst house you could find." "Why?" asked the girl, who was eighteen years old, and intelligent enough. "Why? Because she is a Protestant." "What does that matter to me? If I do my duty and she does hers I will be satisfied." And she went to market.

Three or four days afterward her mistress said to her, "Would you like to hear something out of this book?" "Why not?" and the lady read to her out of the New Testament. "Do you like it?" "Yes; what you read is good, but—" and after some hesitation she told her what she had heard said against her in the street for being a Protestant. "Well, we are Christians, or, as that woman told you, Protestants; but how do you like the book?" "Well, I like it, and would like to hear more out of it."—"Then you can come with me to-night to the Protestant church, and you will hear the pastor." "Is the pastor a Protestant too?"—"Yes, he is the minister of the Protestants." "Very well, I will go." The pastor noticed that evening a new face in his audience, but did not speak with the girl, though he prayed for her. "Did you like what the pastor said?" "Yes; can we go often?"

The next evening the girl, accompanied by a child of her mistress, entered the room of the pastor. She wished to speak to him. "What do you want, my child?" "Oh, sir, I want to know, Did Jesus die for servant-girls?"—"Why do you want to know that?" "I felt last evening that I am very bad, and if Jesus did not die for servant-girls, I am lost."—"Are you a sinner?" "Yes."—"Can you read?" "Yes."—"Read that text." And she read, "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." "If you wish to be saved, poor or rich, mistress or maid, if you confess yourself to be a sinner Jesus died for you." The joyful news filled her heart. "What can I pay?" she asked. "God's grace is free, but you can tell others the favor God has shown to you." She became a messenger of salvation to her family and her village.

---

[*] The old chronology, by which Christ's Nativity as supposed to be about 4000 years from the cre- ion of Adam, has been shown by many modern ronologers to be defective, as it omitted at least one ndred and twenty years in the time of the Judges. e real date of Christ's Nativity seems to be be- een 4115 and4120-25, so that thus the 6000 years ould end not later than 1890.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 111.)

The Conflict Renewed.

"I HAVE had a blow," Ernest said in an unsteady tone. He felt as if he had received a blow literally, and was staggering under its force. Mr. Britton sprang up and pushed him into his own chair.

"Is it Rose?" he asked in a choked voice; "has anything happened to Rose?"

"No, no," said Ernest, recovering himself a little; "Rose is all right, thank you! But, William, my brother, has come back after all these years."

"And is that a blow to you?" cried his friend.

"It is a great blow to me," answered Ernest; "a terrible misfortune."

A fresh outburst of the bells suddenly filled the attic with their deafening clangor. Ernest laid his arms upon the desk and dropped his face upon them. For a minute or two Mr. Britton gazed at him with an almost blank stare of astonishment, and then he moved away from him to the little casement in the roof, and looked across the valley to the glittering windows of the house on the opposite cliff.

All day long there had been in his heart a deep, subtle, all-pervading sense of almost heavenly happiness and love. He was witnessing a living parable of the love of God toward His returning prodigals. The house yonder had thrown its door wide open to receive its long-lost son, and all the mirth and gladness that had surrounded him had seemed but the counterpart and similitude of the rejoicing in the presence of God over a repentant sinner.

Such a day of realizing the unseen and eternal realities had seldom fallen to his lot, and he had been rapt away into a trance of spiritual ecstasy, from which Ernest's entrance had roughly and painfully recalled him to earth and its contradictions.

"Ernest!" he exclaimed, in a tone of bitter anguish, as if the cry had been wrung from the very depths of his heart, "Ernest, can you be a Christian?"

It was the poignant grief of his friend's voice, rather than his words, that smote on Ernest's ear. He lifted up his head, and showed a face disturbed by contending emotions. The tranquil, prosperous, satisfied expression had already faded away from his handsome features. He looked anxious and bewildered; but he was no longer stunned by his blow. His brain was bestirring itself; but at this moment it exerted itself only on the words that William Britton had just uttered. He looked across at him with an air of anger and indignation.

"How can you ask me if I am a Christian?" he said; "you, who know what my life has been! Who has seen me plan and toil for the good of all about me, if you have not? Am I not a good son, a good father, a good landlord, a good friend, William?

"You know, if any man knows, whether I have shirked any call of duty. Do not you know what my faith is? I hold the same creed that you do; I am a priest in orders, as you are. Surely if any friends ever took sweet counsel together, and walked to the house of God in company, it is you and I who have done so. Why do you ask me if I can be a Christian?"

His voice faltered as he repeated the question, with a secret and irresistible doubt. What had his religious life been if it had not really been subject to the laws of Christ? He was well known as a religious man; he owed much of his influence to his reputation for piety. There were few men of his acquaintance who so fairly deserved the name of Christian. Yet his heart shrank and fell as he tried to look at himself, and at the long, prosperous course his life had run till now.

"Ernest," said his friend, in a voice almost as low and quiet as the voice of his conscience, "if a younger brother of Christ's had been lost to Him for many years—lost in sin and misery and estrangement—would he have felt it as a terrible misfortune when he came home again?"

"No, no; impossible!" he answered.

"'I know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience,'" quoted William Britton, "who should know them better than I? But there must be something wrong with you, Ernest. To be a true Christian is to think as Christ thought, to feel as He felt, to live as He lived.

"It is to have the same mind that was in Him; to be, all of us, as Christ in the world; each one in his own sphere of duty. To forget ourselves is to remember Christ; to forsake all is to follow Him. It is a height far above me, but I am reaching forward to it; and the summit is all glory and peace and joy. But oh, Ernest, it is far above me yet."

"It is immeasurably above me," groaned Ernest as his head sank again upon his hands. "I thought I was one of His loyal disciples, but I feel now as if I had never heard His voice calling me."

"Is it a dark hour?" asked his friend's quiet voice.

"It is utter darkness," he answered. "Have I been false, or is religion all a lie? I have no hold on Christ at this moment. Is it possible that He has never reached out His hand to me? Have I been building my house on sand, while I believed I was on a rock?"

"Have you seen your brother yet?" asked William Britton.

"No," he answered, looking up again; "the news struck me down as if I had had a blow. I could not face him just then, and I sent Rose on to meet him first. No one on earth knows the trouble and difficulty lying before me; and I cannot tell you to-night, William."

"But you will go home and welcome your brother?" he said.

"I must," he replied, "and the sooner the better. I ran down here to gain a moment's breathing time. Have you seen him?"

"Yes," said Mr. Britton; "we had a short thanksgiving service this morning, and all the village came to the church. He seemed deeply moved, even to tears; I could hear his voice joining in the prayers. We cannot judge yet; but there is hope that he is weary of his long career of wilfulness, and is come home a changed man. I have been thinking of him all day, coming back penniless, and foot-sore, and travel-stained, to find no father to bid him welcome. That must be a bitter blank to him."

"He could not expect to find his father alive," said Ernest, somewhat sternly; "but I must go and see him for myself, I suppose. I hope he is a changed man; for he will do little good to himself or any one else if he is not changed. He was a shallow, obstinate, selfish lad when he went away; and if he remains the same as a man, I cannot rejoice at his coming back again."

So saying, Ernest retraced his path homeward slowly. The time had not come yet for confronting the dim questions of right and wrong, which were beginning to awaken into life in his brain. At present he must concentrate himself on the duty immediately before him, which he could not delay any longer—that of seeing his unwelcome brother, and giving him a reception as nearly approaching a welcome as could be.

The hall-door stood open, as it always did during the summer months, and he entered his home unnoticed. The drawing-room door was open too, and he could see the group within, whilst remaining unseen himself. Rose had thrown off her hat and mantle, which were tossed carelessly aside on a chair, and was sitting beside her uncle, with her blue eyes fastened upon him as he spoke. Mrs. Clifford was gazing at him with an unusual tenderness in her expression; and Jenny Britton was listening to the traveller's stories with rapt attention.

These women were petting him and spoiling him already. Ernest could not help owning that he was a good-looking, animated, and attractive scapegrace. There was not a trace of the returning prodigal about him. He was wearing one of Ernest's own suits, and wore it with an air of proprietorship, altogether different from tl awkward and embarrassed aspect of a ma dressed in borrowed clothing.

His face was lit up with smiles; and he w talking with a happy fluency of his wanderi life. Rose's rosy lips were parted, as if sl could scarcely breathe, until the exciting narr tive of his adventures was ended. Ernest fe that if he could have seen his brother ragged, ar travel-stained, and troubled, as William Britt had depicted him, he might more easily have r ceived him to his heart.

But here was the same Charles as of old, n another; self-satisfied and shallow-hearte quite content with the present moment, havi no penitence for the past, and no earnest resol tion of amendment in the future.

"There is my father!" cried Rose, starting as he passed over the threshold, and hasteni to drag him forward to his brother; "Unc Charlie is come home again after all these year poor Uncle Charlie!"

She pronounced the last words shyly, a looked from one to the other with an innoce delight shining through her eyes. She alm expected to see them fall upon one anothe neck, and embrace each other, like the pictu she had seen of the lost son welcomed ho again. Mrs. Clifford looked on with a mom tary thrill of terror agitating her calm self-co placency. Here were these two sons of h meeting: Ernest, the usurper, and Charles, t rightful heir. How would they meet one other? How would they adjust their conte ing claims?

Would Ernest give his brother welcome, would he order him out of the house—the ho he had forfeited? Would Charles fire up, as had been wont to do, and meet Ernest wit tempest of accusation and reproach? The t ror deepened upon her as her two sons look steadily into one another's faces in silence, fore Ernest stretched out his hand to Charles

"Well, Ernest?" said Charles haughtily.

"Welcome home, Charles," he said, sligh emphasizing the word home. That was th greeting after nearly fifteen years' separati but Mrs. Clifford heaved a deep sigh of rel whilst Rose's look of innocent delight chan into one of intense astonishment. The li party broke up very soon after, for Charles co not resume his jaunty, light-hearted talk in nest's gloomy presence. Rose lingered beh the others for a minute or two with her fat whose grave face had awakened already so vague misgivings.

She laid her hands upon his shoulders, looked at him with all her soul in her clear e It seemed as if she had some question to which she could not put into words, and wh no words of his could answer. He gazed b into the depths of her appealing eyes unfli ingly, until the thin, blue-veined lids closed them, and Rose hid her face on his breast, cl ing to him with a deprecating tenderness in clasp.

"Father!" she murmured, "are not you g to have him home again?"

"Not yet, my darling," he answered emnly; "pray God I may be some day!"

Then Rose kissed him again and again, silently went her way, and left him alone.

He was quite alone at last; all the house quiet with the quietness of night following c upon the cheerful sounds of day. The draw room, a pretty, pleasant room, filled with s knick-knacks as a young girl like Rose love gather about her, kept the traces of its recent cupants. The windows were still open to ad the scented evening air, though a fire was b ing on the hearth; and Ernest drew his seat to it, as if he felt cold, and sat down with chin resting on his hands, and his eyes sta into the glowing embers.

He had no absolutely new subject for consi ation. He could recall hour after hour of c deliberation in the earlier years of his pos sion, when he had gone through all the a ments for and against himself, never comin definite verdict or decision. He had fre- ently bewildered and perplexed himself with question of what he must do if Charles ever ne home.

f Charles came home! But he was come w; and the subject of deliberation had anged into a point on which action was neces- sy. He could no longer pursue the even tenor his way, without settling to his own satisfac- n, whether it was the right way or not. "There is a way which seemeth right unto a n; but the end thereof are the ways of ath" (Prov. 14 : 12). Ernest was suddenly ced to look at the end; and the misgivings at had been lulled to slumber in his soul were aking into vigorous life.

Was he now to act upon old Charles fford's will, as it had been written under the iluence of strong and bitter resentment against truant son; or upon old Charles Clifford's l, as he knew it to be, when the old man's n eyes made the mistake which consigned the ong document to the flames?

The change in the father's mind, from resent- nt to forgiveness, had not made his son one it fitter to succeed to the estate. There was t the shadow of a question that Ernest was better man; the one most qualified to carry the name of the family into which he had en adopted, and to work out the greatest ben- to all concerned; even to Charles himself, if continued to be the reckless spendthrift he always been.

This was no longer a subtle problem to be cked through the mazes of his brain, and left last in some dark lurking-place. It had leaped denly into a question of duty, to be clearly ined, and rigorously followed out. The son, o had despised and forfeited his birthright, s beneath the roof of his long line of forefa- ers. He was of the same blood as the first fford who had built these strong walls genera- ns ago, which now sheltered the last scion of ir race.

A long line of Cliffords seemed to be trooping st him in the ghostly stillness of the night. s it for a stranger they had worked, and led, and saved? Did they reject their latest ir, because he had failed as a spoiled boy to fil the duties of his early manhood? There uld be but one answer to that.

But it was not merely the dead Cliffords and arles he had to consider. There was his mo- er, who had no settlement made upon her by r husband's first will, which had left her ut- ly dependent upon Charles. And there was se: he must think of her. She was the very ughter of the place; the flower and crown of He could no more think of Clifford apart m Rose, than he could imagine Rose living ywhere but at Clifford.

All the fairness of the sky, and the sweetness the air, and the luxuriance of the flowers emed to centre in her. She had grown out of em all, like some rare blossom, that had had favorable influences playing about it. Could exist in any other place? The faint, soft se-bloom of her cheeks, and the richer crimson her lips, and the clear shining of her eyes, uld they not fade and pale in any other air? Rose's heart would break if she must leave ifford; and was it just that Charles's delayed urn, after fifteen years of wilful absence, ould push out those whose heart-strings had und round and round the place in happy emories, and innocent associations?

(To be continued.)

OUR FATHER'S CARE.

S. Lesson for Feb. 29, Matt. 6 : 24–34. Golden Text, 1 Peter 5 : 7. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

OUR golden text teaches us that it is our priv- ge to live on earth without anxiety, "Casting your care (i.e., anxiety) on Him, for He reth for you." Now do we believe that God res for us individually, that He occupies Him- lf with our health, our business matters, our ans, our relations to others, our reputation, etc.—yes, even our comfort, and certainly our happiness? Do we believe also that He cares for our souls; for every temptation, every danger, His ready help is there? Then how can we consistently be anxious and careful about any one thing; how can we doubt that He who cannot fail in anything He undertakes, will bring our cause safely through?

Unbelief in God's fatherhood lies at the root of all anxiety. A child who counts upon the daily provision made by loving parents does not seek by any means possible to come by a piece of bread and bring it to the dinner table lest there should not be enough. Many Christians believe that all good things come from God, but they believe it in a general, indistinct kind of way, without being able to count upon His interference in all the trying details of a day, which tell with endless wear upon the spirit which has not learned to cast all care upon Him who careth for us. Some, even of God's children, live in one unvarying ferment of anxiety, always foreboding that which may happen in the future, creating subjects of trial which may, and probably will, never come to pass.

A feeling of being unwell leads such persons to conjecture at once what they shall do if such and such an illness seizes them—what shall they do with the children, how arrange about such and such engagements which they have made, how do such and such duties which lie before them. And often this dreaded illness does not come at all; and had there been one steady look up to God, and a quiet firm casting of the whole affair into His hands, all the anxiety would have been spared, and there would have been a song of praise to God for His deliverance, instead of the dissatisfied, restless looking out for a new subject of anxiety.

Others are anxious about business. If such and such an account is not paid by such and such a date, how can I meet my payments? And the worrying calculation as to the chances whether the money will or will not come in to date wears the spirit of the business man. Why does he not calmly, confidently lay the matter before the Lord, knowing that His "arm is not shortened," and thus count upon His help, with a subject will, that if things are not ordered as he would wish, they will still be better ordered, that the Lord of the whole earth must do right.

Our blessed Lord says, "No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one and love the other; or else he will hold to the one and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and Mammon. Therefore I say unto you, take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat," etc. Anxiety is the service of Mammon; in God's sight it is idolatry and robbery of the honor due to Him. He says, "Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? Behold the fowls of the air; for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns, yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye (His own children) not much better than they?" These birds of heaven have no other thing to live for than to seek their food and rear their young. But we, the children of the living God, possessing life eternal as His own, are we to live as the fowls do, and do nothing better? and are we to remain God's children, and yet exercise less faith in Him than the very fowls of heaven?

He instances again the lilies of the field: "They toil not, neither do they spin: and yet I say unto you that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." Can we not, then, trust God to provide food and clothing without feeling that the whole burden lies upon us? Some may say, Then we can be idle and still trust God? God's Word contains the whole truth, but all does not lie in a single passage. Paul writes to the Thessalonians (2 Thess. 3 : 10), "This we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither should he eat." Our loving God never meant that trust in Him should be an excuse for idleness, but only a cure for anxiety.

After adducing the fowls of the air and the lilies of the field as objects of our Father's care, our beloved Lord shows us how unworthy care is of a child of the living God. "Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed? (for after all these things do the Gentiles seek) for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things." Should the heart of one who has God for his Father be filled with the same anxiety, fear, and dread as that of one who has no personal acquaintance with the Almighty God, and who only dreads Him as a mysterious power which he cannot approach? Does it not give the lie to the spirit of adoption? Is it not enough to make unconverted people believe that God's care for His people is only a pious imagination which belongs to our religion, but which has nothing tangible or practical about it?

We pity the poor little London Arabs who have either no parents, or, often, worse than none; shall we act as though we were to be commiserated like them, and as though we were groaning under the neglect of our heavenly Father? "The young lions do lack and suffer hunger: but they that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing" (Psa. 34 : 10). David says again, after the experience of a long life, "I have been young and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread" (Psa. 37 : 25). The same God who rained bread from heaven upon His people of old, who fed Elijah by the brook-side and in the widow's house, and the same Lord Jesus who fed the multitudes in the desert is the living God for us as well as for them. He only asks to be trusted; and trust without trial is nothing but a sentiment.

"But seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." God and His affairs must have the pre-eminence with His children. We are called to be witnesses that God is God (Isa. 43 : 12). If we allow every passing trifle, every temporal need, to occupy our first morning thoughts, to be the burden upon us during the day, to lie down with us at night, and thoughts of God and of His work in the world to be the exception which we turn to when we have leisure, it is only too evident that these earthly things come first and the kingdom of God last.

It is our high privilege in all these things to seek the kingdom of God and His righteousness when our hearts are in the right place, and when we see them only in their relation to Him. So doing we may count surely on His promise, "all these things shall be added unto you." God cannot fail us. He may try our faith, but He cannot be other than faithful. It is no risk to trust Him, and most surely Paul's question may be ours—"He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?" It would be strange inconsistency in God to save our souls at the inconceivable price of the offering of His own Son, and yet exercise so little compassion toward us that He would manifest no care for the food and clothing which we require.

"Take therefore no thought for the morrow (i.e., no anxious thought), for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." God simplifies our life; He gives us one day at a time; if we add our own burdens to those He gives us by taking thought for the morrow, then it is we and not He who bring perplexity and anxiety into our life. He knows the measure we can bear. Some say, "But I must make plans for the future in hiring servants, buying in provisions, renting the house, etc.; how can I do these things if I take no thought for the morrow?" Then pray over each thing as it arrives, leaving the settling of every question to the perfect and unbiassed wisdom of God. And if the answer to a prayer about the morrow is not clearly answered at once, rest assured that the very waiting for the answer is a provision of love which forms part of our Father's care, and that it will be made clear if we wait for it patiently.

FOREIGN TOPICS.

An Uneasy Apprehension is Prevalent in England relative to affairs in Afghanistan. It is nearly certain that the English Government suggests to Persia that she should occupy Herat, and is promising to protect her should she do so. Persia is under promise to the European Powers to make no movement toward Herat, but as her agreement had reference principally to English interests, it is believed that if England desires it, or even is willing to acquiesce, the occupation will take place. The project is dreaded because it may entail additional responsibilities on England, and is also a direct affront to Russia.

The English Conservatives have won Another electoral victory. This time it is in the Metropolitan constituency of Southwark. Three candidates were proposed for the vacant seat—two Liberals and one Conservative. Lord Beaconsfield's supporter received a larger number of votes than those given to both his antagonists added together. At the less important Parliamentary election of Barnstaple, the Liberal candidate was returned, but the result at Southwark is regarded by the Liberals as a very discouraging blow.

M. Cremieux, a Distinguished French Statesman, died February 10th. He was eighty-four years of age, and had borne a creditable part in the political history of his country since 1840. He was a Jew, and the President of the International Jewish Society. His beloved wife had died only eight days previously, and M. Cremieux is thought to have suffered a shock which at his age was fatal.

Dr. Koelle, the Object of the Recent Persecution in Constantinople, described in this journal of February 5th, is in a state of peculiar perplexity. He knows that he goes hourly in danger of his life from Moslem fanaticism, but he believes that the power of the Mohammedan delusion over the masses of the Turks is gradually weakening, and that a wide door for the propagation of the Gospel of Truth among them may soon open, and he longs for it in prayerful hope. Dr. Koelle is not supported by any missionary society, but is living on a small pension of his own, and, moreover, is himself supporting the wife and family of the Turkish schoolmaster, Ahmed Tewfik, who assisted him in the work of translation, and who has been harshly banished to the island of Chios.

The Baroness Burdett-Coutts, whose Generous gifts to philanthropic objects of all kinds are well known, proposes, according to a cable despatch, to devote the large sum of $2,500,000 to the purchase of land in Ireland, which she will let out in small portions, at moderate rents, to industrious tenants.

Killed in a Theatre.—A Remarkable Death occurred January 20th in a theatre at Birmingham, England. The building is lighted by the electric light, and the brass connections used in its production for the stage are hung over the orchestra when the lights are not in use. Mr. Bruno, the euphonium player, when leaving the orchestra, caught hold of the two connections and received the full shock of a powerful battery. He was rendered insensible, and died in about twenty minutes. A frightful death to die, and a terrible place in which to die.

Europe is Threatened with a Military Epidemic. Russia has been busily engaged completing the great scheme of army organization which she devised in 1874. The Russian principles of Panslavism embodied in the Treaty of San Stefano of 1877, and so offensive to Austria, have broken up the alliance of the three Emperors of Austria, Russia, and Germany. The eastern frontier of Germany is found to be not exactly "scientific." On the other hand, France is arming more than ever. There are rumors of an understanding between France and Russia. Under these circumstances Prince Bismarck has resolved to increase the German army. This increase will add 26,000 men in time of peace, and in the event of war 150,000 men. What will be the effect of this scheme upon England? One thing is clear, if the spirited foreign policy of the last three years is to be continued, she will have vastly to increase her army. Recent demonstrations have only revealed the fact that English military power is any thing but formidable.

With the increasing prevalence of Nihilism in Russia, Socialism in Germany, and Communism in France, it seems highly improbable that the people of those countries will long bear the intolerable pressure of military conscription and taxation to maintain their enormous armaments. A great revolutionary explosion cannot be far distant, and the predestined tremendous war between France and Germany, by which France is to become extended to the Rhine, seems looming in the near horizon.

A Bequest to Atheism has Recently been made by a Scotchman. The London Record says: "Mr. William Thompson, of Montrose, has bequeathed £3000 (about $15,000) to Mr. Bradlaugh, the notorious infidel, to be applied at his absolute discretion to the propagation of anti-theological and advanced political views. The money has just been paid over, and Mr. Bradlaugh has exercised his 'discretion.' The National Secular Society, of which Mr. Bradlaugh is President, receives about £1500, and amongst the other beneficiaries figures the fund for securing Mr. Bradlaugh's election as member of Parliament for Northampton, which is awarded £100." It is horrible to contemplate the condition of a man who went out of the world leaving such a bequest in his last will and testament.

A Son Mourned as Dead Returned to his home recently at Brighton, England. Nearly two years ago the English Government ship Eurydice foundered in the Channel, and nearly all on board her perished. As she was a training ship her "hands" consisted chiefly of boys, and many a home had to mourn the loss of a promising son. Amongst others who were plunged in grief was a family named Marchant, living at Brighton. Their son had left home some time before to join the Eurydice, and amongst the list of the drowned was that of poor young Marchant. His friends mourned his loss, and never thought to set eyes upon him again. To their intense surprise, however, the young gentleman a few weeks ago walked into the house hale and hearty. It appeared he had not joined the Eurydice, but another ship—the Shah—and that since he left home he had travelled 65,000 miles, and had visited the four continents.

English Girls Unsafe in European Cities.—The Paris correspondent of the London Daily Chronicle, who has long resided in continental cities, says that no English girl (away from her friends) is safe, morally, in any town of France or Italy. Not that the morality of these nations is lower than that of their Teutonic neighbors, but that the healthy intimacy between the sexes which pervades English social life is apt to become a snare under the very different circumstances of residence abroad. He would, therefore, strongly advise parents to hesitate before allowing their daughters to accept any situation which would involve risks so momentous. If a daughter is bent upon travelling to obtain a livelihood, she would, he believes, find the United States or the Colonies far safer and more promising than the continent of Europe.

Mons. Gambetta, the most Powerful Political leader in France, is a bachelor, but he was once on the verge of a matrimonial alliance. The story of the breaking-off of the engagement is an interesting one, and reflects great credit on the statesman's character. M. Gambetta had proposed to a beautiful young lady with a large fortune, and had been accepted; but the lady stipulated that an aunt of Gambetta's, then living with him, should not reside under the matrimonial roof. Now Gambetta was deeply attached to his aged relative. In the days of his poverty and obscurity she had been faithful to him, had toiled for his comfort, and thought no labor too menial to perform if it ministered to his happiness, and he could not bear to discard her in the days of his prosperity. His attachment to the young lady, and the advantages her wealth would confer upon him, had to weighed in the balance against the claims tried friendship and his sense of right.

In the end Gambetta bade adieu to the lady her fortune, rather than do what he conside a mean and ungenerous thing. How often Ch tians fail in similar trying circumstances! command is, "Be not unequally yoked togethe yet many good men and women, when cont plating marriage, do not regard personal p as the one indispensable requisite in the c panion they choose for life. They are satis if they have worldly advantage, or beauty, or l and go to a home where the Saviour to wh they owe their soul's salvation will not be a come guest. They are frequently led by s alliances into sin, and, like Solomon, fors their God at the solicitation of their partne life.

A Remarkable Brick from the Wall of B lon bears the inscription of one of its mig kings, and in the centre of the inscription footprint of one of the dogs which wand about the crowded streets. It was the cus to impress the royal mark upon the bricks for public works, and, while this particular b was lying in its plastic state to dry, a vag dog had accidentally trodden upon it. During lapse of ages the king's inscription has bec entirely illegible, while the footprint of the is perfectly distinct. The name of the mi ruler of Babylon is as completely unknow that of the half-starved dog which wand through the streets of the proud capital in se of food. Ay, so far as the mark of eith concerned, the footprint of the dog has decid the advantage over the inscription of the k Even so all earthly records are blotted ou the busy finger of time, and only those th abide forever which are done for God, which are noted in His book.

A Request which no Man can grant was sented to a missionary by a poor Hindoo He was drawn by what he had seen of the bea of the Christian character in the lives of who had let their light shine before men, t sire to become a Christian himself. He foll the missionary about wherever he went, and tinued pressing the same request, "Make Christian; make me a Christian." The sionary, glad to see the young man's an told him of One who had the power to d him the act he so desired, and advised hi offer constant prayer to Him. The result that the young man was soon seen returni the mission house, rejoicing in the consciou of a new heart and a right spirit. He who has the power to change the stony heart heart of flesh had granted the prayer always finds prompt acceptance at the Thro Grace.

The Curious Custom of Breaking a Gla Jewish weddings originated, according Jewish journal, at the house of Rab Ashal, while celebrating—as it was the custom wit parents of the bridegroom in those days to the nuptials of his son, observed that the pany were too hilarious, and that, in ord check the fulness of their joy, he broke in presence a cup made of glass. This check overflow of their spirits. The custom afte became as general as the Egyptian one whi troduced a mummy at banquets, or the R which brought forward a skull on occasi triumph.

Queen Victoria and the Sunday-school tenary.—Her Majesty, through the Archb of Canterbury, has intimated to the Com of the Church of England Sunday-school tute her desire to become patron of the ment promoted by the committee for comm rating the establishment of Sunday-school.

A Fortune Arriving Too Late.—One best known rag-pickers of Paris was lately dead in her bed in a noisome house at martre, Paris. Her body was half devou rats when it was discovered. The brother dead woman had been seeking her to annou her her inheritance of a fortune of $400,00

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

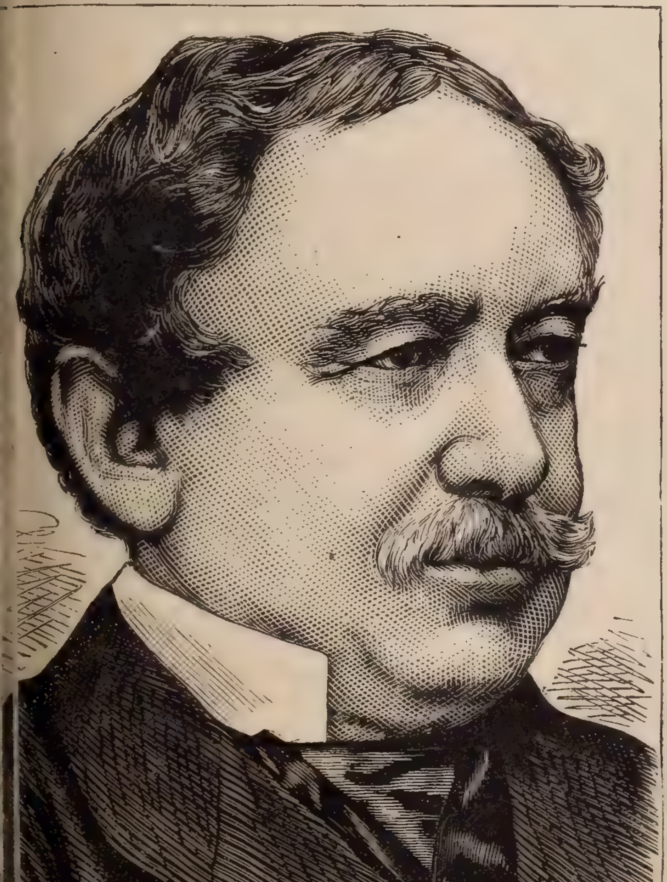
uished at 63 Bible House, New York City, and 2 Ivy Lane, London. Edited in London by the Rev. M. Baxter, in New York by Mr. B. Aitken.
is Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. AGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also occasionally a Sermon by the Rev. W. MORLEY PUNSHON, LL.D., the celebrated Methodist Minister, Rev. W. M. AITKEN, or some other Eminent Preacher; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

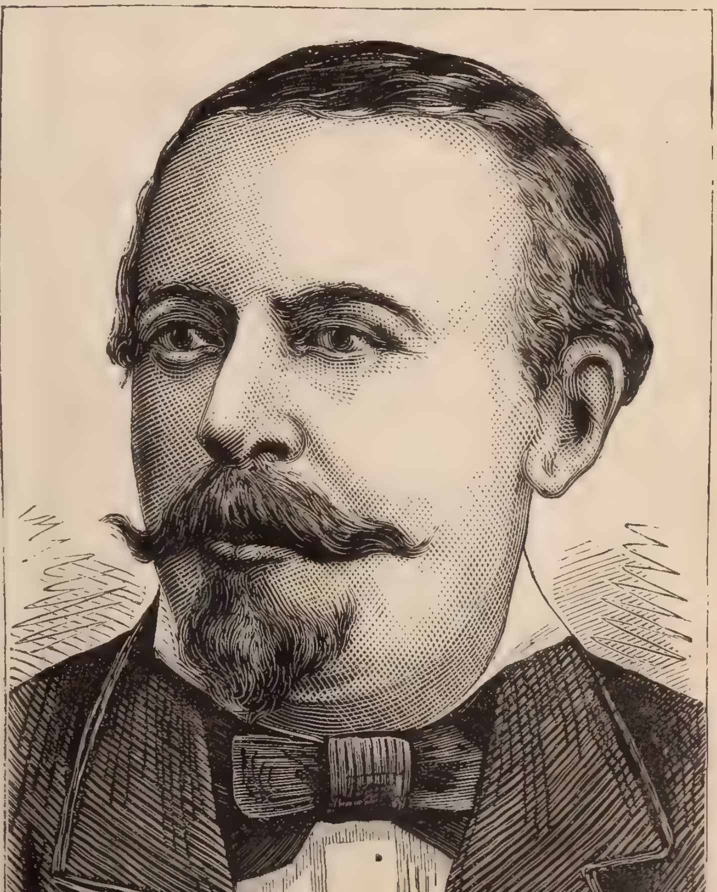
ngle Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1880. 14th Year. No. 9—New Series.

cul

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

RAITS OF DR. W. H. RUSSELL AND MR. CHIBALD FORBES, the English War Correndents, with Sketches of their Lives.
COLLEGE STUDENT. A New Sermon by Dr. mage.
ROLD PERCIVAL MONTAIGNE. A Thrilling ial Story by the Author of "Felicia Cuffe."
tter from the Commander-in-Chief: a Recollecn by Major Malan—An Aged Blind and Deaf man's Conversion—A Crimean Officer's Avowal.
TEN SIGNS OF THE APPROACHING END, by Rev. M. Baxter. (Continued.)
CURRENT EVENTS: Congress—The Death of Mr. Lenox—The Shepherd Sentenced—A Hopeless Drunkard's Work—The Albany City Hall Burned—From Jail to Altar—A Valuable Claim Sold—A Desperate Fight with a Bear—A Night of Peril—A Young Lady's Kindness Rewarded—The Salvation Army—A Law Against Swearing, etc.
THE FIRST MARTYR. A Sermon by Rev. W. Morley Punshon, LL.D.
BELOVED AND YET AFFLICTED. A Sermon Delivered at Mentone by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
A WEIGHT OF WEALTH. (Continued.)
Count Moltke on War—The Maid and the Visitor.
The Saviour's Golden Rule. Sunday-School Lesson by Mrs. M. Baxter.
FOREIGN TOPICS: Another Attempt to Assassinate the Czar—The English Parliament—An Accident to the Princess Louise—Death of Dr. Keith—A Bequest to the Salvation Army—A Bible with Pins in It, etc.





WM. HOWARD RUSSELL, LL.D., ARCHIBALD FORBES, the Eminent Newspaper Correspondents.

WILLIAM HOWARD RUSSELL, LL.D.,

The Pioneer of War Correspondents.

War Correspondents—Birth and Family of Dr. Russell—His Early Successes—Joins "The Times"—His Travels as Special Correspondent—The Potato-famine Districts in Ireland in 1846—The Crimean War in 1854—The Indian Mutiny in 1856—The United States in 1861—The Franco-German War in 1870—The Prince of Wales's Tour in India in 1876—The Transvaal in 1879.

THE excitement in military and Parliamentary circles in England about "Bull Run" Russell's strictures on the slackness of discipline among the British troops in the Transvaal, presents a good opportunity to give the portraits of the two famous war corresponedents, Dr. W. H. Russell and Mr. Archibald Forbes.

In commending war correspondents, we must not be supposed to approve of war. But as long as there are wars, the war correspondent will be a necessity of the case, and perhaps its least unpleasant feature. The correspondent is the only representative of the public in a campaign. The commanders are almost obliged to give their whole or their first attention to the fighting, and if the commissariat fail, or the wounded be neglected, or tyranny be exercised, or the peaceful population be outraged by riotous soldiery, or even the poor beasts of burden be cruelly overworked, there is no one to lift up a voice against the wrong except the special correspondent, who is there for the express purpose of looking on and then telling the whole truth.

If he lack sense or be untruthful, he may do untold mischief, as was instanced during the late campaign in Afghanistan, when the Government of India was actually driven to the unwise expedient of excluding correspondents from the force altogether. But if the correspondent have capacity, he will be a safeguard against much harm.

The duties of a war correspondent require a rare combination of moral, intellectual, and physical excellences, together with varied knowledge of civil and military life. The most important qualification, if he be fit for his work at all, is self-possession and tact to go in and out where he is a perpetual nuisance, and yet to avoid giving offence. The two gentlemen, sketches of whose lives are now to follow, have, during careers of thirty years, shown the highest capacities for their profession, Dr. Russell peculiarly excelling in dignity of mind, and Mr. Forbes in energy at execution.

DR. RUSSELL is descended from an old English family long settled in the city of Limerick, and was born at Lilyvale, County Dublin, the residence of his maternal grandfather, Captain Kelly, on March 28th, 1821.

While at school under the tuition of the Rev. E. Geoghegan, in Hume Street, Dublin, he showed early signs of a taste for literature, which he developed rather than the military studies for which that school was famous. In this he was possibly encouraged by the remarkable success achieved in the department of letters by his near relative the Archdeacon of Clogher, who was not greatly young Russell's senior in age.

In 1838 he entered Trinity College, Dublin, and while studying for a fellowship he commenced a series of character sketches of native Irish incidents, which he gathered at fairs and wakes, etc. By these he gave a new lease of life to an expiring Dublin journal, and even to this day some of the "Irish bulls" he gave to the world continually reappear, sometimes newly dressed as fair specimens of real Irish life and humor. Such ability for descriptive writing was soon harnessed to the then rapidly advancing chariot of the London Times.

In 1842 he accepted his first engagement on the staff of that paper, in which position he supplied some lively, humorous, yet faithful descriptions of election scenes in Ireland.

1843 saw him installed in London on the Parliamentary staff of the Times, and after a year's experience he was selected to superintend the large staff of reporters who were engaged in recording the proceedings of the numerous Railway Committees during the railway mania, which was then at its height.

The Repeal and similar demonstrations occurring shortly after, the leading journal determined to inaugurate a new era in journalism—Special Correspondents. Mr. Russell was the first to occupy this new post. So well did he acquit himself, and so much were the public pleased with, as well as surprised by, the novel newspaper enterprise, that Mr. Russell was sent, in 1846, to Ireland to depict the horrors of the potato famine in that country. His vigorous word-pictures aroused the sympathy of all classes, and soon help worthy of a Christian country was pouring in at all the ports of the unhappy country in need.

Notwithstanding his rising popularity on the press, he entered the Middle Temple for the study of the law in 1846, and in the same year married Mary, second daughter of Mr. Peter Burrowes, of Warren Lodge, County Dublin. In 1850 he was called to the Bar, and although he was employed on several election petitions before Parliamentary Committees, he never enjoyed a large share of legal practice. . The attention he gave to press writing militated against his success when he was retained as a barrister.

His military associations at school enkindled a love for matters connected with the army, and enabled him, almost unconsciously, to acquire a familiarity with its details. Old schoolmates of his, and after pupils from the same school, abounded in every department of the service. He therefore gladly accepted the pioneer position as WAR CORRESPONDENT, which the prescient editor of the Times sought to establish. He went to Denmark, and sent to that journal graphic descriptions of the war of 1849–50. After further foreign experience on special occasions, he was selected as Special Correspondent to the Times on the outbreak of the war between England and Russia in 1854. Although the government favored the novel enterprise, he was not allowed to leave England with the "Guards," who were among the first troops to depart. But the Times was not to be balked; he was therefore sent, viâ Marseilles, to Malta. From thence he sailed with the advance guard of the British expedition, which first landed at Gallipoli, on Turkish territory, under Sir George Brown.

From thence he proceeded to the Crimea, the scene of the war, where he witnessed the battles of the Alma, Balaclava, and Inkerman, and the capture of Sebastopol, as well as many minor engagements. His position was no sinecure. He had to share with the army the privations caused by the fearful storm of November 14th, 1854, and also the perils of the winter siege, which reduced the British army to a condition truly described by Lord John Russell as "miserable, pitiable, and heartrending." This state of things was mainly known in England through the columns of the Times. Many were the invectives which were poured by the military commanders upon the hapless head of Mr. Russell, and his novel vocation was designated "organized eavesdropping." But the country was aroused, and steps were taken which saved the remnant of the army. Food, medical stores, and comforts, with Miss Nightingale and her "angels" to administer them, were poured forth when the distress was known.

He was scarcely a year at home again when he was sent to India to depict the Indian Mutiny. But during the interval between these two wars he gave to the country a graphic description of the coronation of the present Czar of Russia in 1855.

So desperate and difficult was the position in India, that Lord Clyde could not permit him to accompany the army unless he enrolled himself for the occasion as a combatant. This he willingly did. He is said to have been in the first rank of the surprising party which drove out the Sepoys from their strong positions in front of Lucknow, and opened a way for the relief o sick and dying garrison. He and ten o held a pass at Rohilcund for an hour against whelming odds of rebels, until relieved b arrival of the British troops. At Oudh als greatly distinguished himself, and was deco with the Lucknow clasp. Upon his return India, in 1858, he started the Army and Gazette, of which he has been editor ever si

His next mission as war correspondent w the seat of the war between the North and S in the UNITED STATES, in 1861, where his experience was valuab his journal. This enterprise was sudden minated after the retreat of the Northern f at the first battle of Bull Run. It was al that he had taken a conspicuous part i retreat, but there are perhaps two sides story. Whatever the fact, the consequenc that Russell returned to England.

A measure of quiet was then enjoyed by in which his reputation was as much enh as by his descriptions of battle scenes. H sented to the world most graphic represent of the marriage of the Prince of Wales, at sor, in 1863, and of the laying of the At Cable in 1866. In the latter year he was p at the decisive battle of Sadowa, which Prussia the victory over Austria. About time the literary distinction of LL.D. wa ferred upon him. He was attached to th of the Crown Prince of Prussia in the F
German War in 1870, though he would hav ferred being with the French army. In dreadful war other journals, and notabl Daily News, had the courage to send "Spe to represent them. The letters of Dr. R did not very much increase the importa the Times.

He had accompanied the Prince and Pr of Wales on their Eastern tour in 1869. B crowning honor of his life was his select historiographer of the Prince of Wales' TOUR IN INDIA in 1875–76, upon which he wrote a v which, with its rich embellishments, wil live as a valuable historical record.

Dr. Russell has, during his varied expe been loaded with foreign medals and honor sibly merited by the energetic recipient.
the general public will, we think, accor the honor due to him for the improved modation afforded to British troops durin transport between England and India. change is mainly owing to his vivid descr of the miserable ship life of the troops o voyage to the East, which led to the G ment building a fleet of huge floating b of which the Serapis, which took the Pr Wales to India, is a specimen.

Dr. Russell's sympathy for the oppress ever manifested, but never more than whe oppressors and oppressed were subjects British Crown. He always showed a regard for the truest honor of his nativ and in the exposure of wrongs which see him to tarnish its escutcheon, his trench has been vigorously employed.

In May last, Dr. Russell, left England w Garnet Wolseley for South Africa as the Correspondent of the Daily Telegraph. been induced to leave his old journal and himself to its enterprising rival. In his from Cape Colony and the Transvaal scribed the administration of the depe and the progress of the campaign agai Zulus with the originality of thought wh tinguishes him.

He wrote rather severely about the acts of the British soldiery, although the probably not worse than the outrages have been committed in all wars, excep of Cromwell's God-fearing army. Sir Wolseley foolishly gave the lie to Dr. Ru an official dispatch, and the correspond just written a letter showing the fact which he based his statements. This let come like a bombshell upon the civil pop con nued, putting on a severe and solemn air, led you, I must say, to be guilty of a most rdonable offence toward a fiancé; and as ord that is to be, I decree on the spot that hall atone for it with a kiss."

I was about to press the fine, but again she ped him, and then there burst out from her tter cry, "What I have said, Percival, is ain and dreadful fact; and do not smile so dulously, but let me make known to you he roof of Arthur's guilt."

I errupting her, Percival said. "Lucie, darin you need not tell me any thing. I know d more than you can say, and I am greatly ised and exceedingly angry that Arthur d have troubled you with his private affairs nost unpleasant secrets. It is both wicked nd oolish of him; for what have you to do, rling, with his evil-doings and self-sought oules?"

(To be continued.)

E SIGNS OF THE APPROACHING END.*

By Rev. M. Baxter.

(Continued from page 125.)

e Atrophy of the Turkish Empire—B. W ton's Opinion—Tillinghast's Prediction in —Ancient Powers of Turkey—Its Succes- Depletions—Syria to be Entirely Separate.

he drying up of the Euphrates or pproaching separation from it of Syria.

TURKISH EMPIRE,

re is scarcely any sign of the times that s more clearly to the nearness of the final han the decay of the Turkish power. Sev- ndred expositors, who have written dur- e last three hundred years, agree that rying up of the river Euphrates," under th vial, in its historical fulfilment, must the overthrow of the Ottoman empire, as in Revelation 16 : 12–15, "And the sixth ured out his vial upon the great river Eu-; and the water thereof was dried up, e way of the kings of the East might be ed. And I saw three unclean spirits . . . h unto the kings of the earth and of the world, to gather them to the war of that ay of God Almighty. Behold, I come as a her prophecy in Daniel 8 : 9, 22–23, shows ortly before the final crisis, the Turkish is to become broken up into the original orn kingdoms of Greece, Egypt, Syria, at now constitutes nearly all the rest of . These four horn kingdoms, into which der the Great's Macedonian empire was ded, are predicted in Daniel 8 : 22, 23 to be ly re-existent in the latter times, at the isis. It is a remarkable sign of the times th Greece and Egypt have been practi- ssevered from Turkey since 1822, and it mains for Syria to be divided off from it, n the four kingdoms will re-exist. These four of the ten kingdoms of the predicted Empire Confederacy, and therefore there ound for the apprehension that they will permanently absorbed into Russian ter-ems, however, to be intimated that Russia esently assist to break up the Turkish Em- nd, possibly, even if it were to seize Con- ople, it must be driven back by other Euro- wers, because the central part of Turkey, of the future ten kingdoms, must remain from Russia.

V. Newton, the eminent commentator, predicted in his book "Prospects of the ngdoms," published in 1849, that Turkey come completely separated from Greece, Egypt, and Syria, for the reasons above mentioned. He wrote:

"We learn from Daniel 8 : 8, 22, 23, that four of the future ten kingdoms of the Roman empire will be the kingdoms of Alexander the Great's successors, which formerly passed into the power of Rome—that is to say, Greece, Egypt, Syria, and the rest of the dominions of Turkey.

"The eighth chapter of Daniel throughout its whole course declares that its theme and burthen is respecting 'the time of the end, when the transgressors shall have come to the full' (verses 17–23); and it regards the four kingdoms of Alexander's successors as re-existent at that closing crisis. 'The latter time of their kingdom' corresponds with the time 'when the transgressors shall have come to the full.' These four kingdoms, therefore, must be revived.

"A few years ago, perhaps, this would have been thought impossible. The maintenance of the integrity of the Turkish empire was made the object of such anxious effort on the part of the ruling kingdoms of the West, that nothing seemed more unlikely than its partition. Yet it has been in part dismembered; and Egypt and Greece have already separate governments of their own. It is also a fact that a similar has been in contemplation. Such a separation would be an almost necessary concomitant of the return of the Jews to Palestine; and, as soon as that is accomplished, the four kingdoms will re-exist."

SEPARATION OF SYRIA

In the author's prophetic book, entitled "Forty Coming Wonders," published in 1866, the following remarks were made under the head of the "Seventh Wonder:"

"Two hundred years ago, when the Turkish empire was at the summit of its power, and then included in its dominions Algeria, Tunis, Tripoli, Barca, Egypt, Syria, Greece, Moldavia, and Wallachia, Tillinghast predicted that the sixth vial in Rev. 16 : 12 must eventually effect its ruin, although there was no prospect of it at that time. He wrote in 1655:

"'By the river Euphrates, we are to understand the Ottoman or Turkish empire. It is called the great river, because of the great multitude of people and nations therein. The people who at this present time are of all others accounted the greatest are the Turks, who therefore, and no other, are here to be understood; especially as the river Euphrates, in the ninth chapter, under the sounding of the sixth trumpet, by general consent of expositors, has reference to the Turkish power.

"By the Kings of the East we are to understand the Jews, who, upon the pouring forth of this vial, shall return to their own land, and be converted to Christ; the pouring out of this vial preparing a way for both. They are called Kings of the East from the honor and dignity which God will put upon His people (Micah 4 : 8; Isa. 61 : 9; Zech. 8 : 23). God, in His wonderful providence, will so order, that at the appointed time of the Jews' return, the power and the multitude of the Grand Seignior, who is now the greatest monarch in the world, and holds their land in possession, shall be much wasted and consumed.'

"Wonderful as then seemed the prospective overthrow of so mighty an empire as the Ottoman power, yet since 1823–8 it has manifestly been coming to pass. The commentator Galloway, in 1802, expressed his surprise as to how the sixth vial would bring about so marvellous a result. He said, 'Perhaps the means will remain concealed until the events themselves shall remove the veil.' The mystery, however, began to be dispelled in 1821, when Greece seceded from Turkey, and fully established its independence after the battle of Navarino, in 1827, at which the Turkish fleet was destroyed. The Ottoman government was further weakened in 1826 by the slaughter of 30,000 Janizaries, the flower of its forces; and in 1829 by Algeria being wrested from it by the French, and by Egypt successfully casting off its authority. Moldavia and Wallachia were also separated from it in 1857.

"The population of the remaining parts of Turkey has has been fearfully reduced at the same period by unparalleled pestilences, conflagrations, military conscriptions, and misgovernment; so that Lamartine said, in 1834: 'The Ottoman empire is no empire at all: it is a misshapen agglomeration of different races without cohesion between them; with mingled interests, without a language, without laws, without religion, and without unity or stability of power. You see that the breath of life that animated it, religious fanaticism, is extinct. You see that its fatal and blinded administration has devoured the race of conquerors, and that Turkey is perishing for want of Turks.'

"Although the process of the drying-up of the Turkish empire has reached a very advanced stage, yet it evidently is not yet fully accomplished; for the Turkish government still exists, notwithstanding the fact that more than half of its former territory has been torn from it, and that unparalleled depopulation has taken place among the rest of its subjects. Its complete desiccation or drying-up will apparently consist in the displacement of the present reigning dynasty and Mohammedan government by a totally different one—probably a more Europeanized one chosen by the voice of the people—and this is quite as likely to be the result of national bankruptcy and popular revolution as of foreign invasion.

"The entire separation of Syria from Turkey is also indicated to happen at the same time, leaving the northern parts of Turkey adjacent to Constantinople, which correspond with the ancient Thrace-with-Bithynia, to form the fourth distinct kingdom in addition to the three kingdoms of Syria, Egypt, and Greece.

"The present Turkish government is the most despotic imaginable. The Sultan has practically almost absolute dominion over the lives and property of his subjects, and his pachas, viziers, and cadis administering the government are generally corrupt, rapacious, and tyrannical. There are in European Turkey ten million people, of whom scarcely more than three millions are Mohammedans; and in Asiatic Turkey there are about three million nominal Christians of the Greek Church, in addition to twelve million Mohammedans. Thus, out of the total population of twenty-five millions, only fifteen millions belong to the dominant Moslem race and religion, which tyrannize over that country.

"Hence, as the Turkish woe under the year-day sixth trumpet consisted in the conquest of Turkey by the Moslem Euphratean horsemen, in 1453, whose descendants are now despotically ruling it, so the abolition and ending of that Turkish woe, by the figurative drying-up of the Euphrates under the year-day sixth vial, will consist in the overthrow of their supreme power, and in the establishment of a new government over Turkey, which shall be more in agreement with the desires and principles of its millions of nominal Christians, as well as Mohammedans.

"Many politicians have expected that Russia would annex Turkey to its dominions, but prophecy entirely contradicts such a supposition; because nearly all the present Ottoman empire lies within the original Roman empire, and therefore must be included within the future ten Roman empire kingdoms, which are to be united in a confederacy (Dan. 7 : 24 : 2 : 42).

"Universal suffrage, the democratic despotic principle of government, will in due time be established throughout the Ottoman territories. A brief season of increasing prosperity and revival of commerce and projection of schemes of improvement may accompany these changes, especially in consequence of the return of the Jews to Palestine; and short-sighted men of the world may anticipate the rise of a new era of freedom and happiness in the East; but the great tribulation will soon follow, and make manifest the unsubstantial foundation of such hopes."

(To be continued.)

---

* racted from "Coming Wars," by Rev. M. in two pamphlets—five cents each by mail. mphlet contains "Ten Signs of the End, and ion of Approaching Events," with two maps large diagrams. Second pamphlet contains quotations from Forty Expositors on these Address, 63 Bible House, New York.

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

THE aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50 per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to MR. BENJAMIN AITKEN, 63 Bible House, New York. The paper may also be obtained weekly from all newsdealers in the United States and Canada.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of specimen copies to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

SUBSCRIBERS frequently write to us for single copies of the CHRISTIAN HERALD. We always endeavor to oblige them, but single and occasional copies can more easily be obtained from a newsdealer. Sometimes we receive complaints that the CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer. Such complaints are promptly attended to, when made to us; but in all cases we desire that our friends will give the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

LAST week's edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, February 18th, at 3.00 P.M., at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Greenback Platform was Presented to Congress on February 14th by Mr. de la Matyr, of Indiana. It contains many proposals, the principal of which is the abolition of specie as a basis for the currency, and an unlimited extension of the issue of soft money. Mr. de la Matyr professes to see in his project a scheme which would "regenerate" not only this country, but "the toiling millions of the old world." He denounces the money basis as the curse of the country, uncertain and reliable, and desires a standard which no banker or broker can depreciate. There is no doubt that among certain classes these ideas find supporters, but among business men and those statesmen who have observed the effects of a paper currency having no basis of coin, in other countries, the greenback nostrum to "regenerate" the world will be contemptuously rejected.

The policy of attaching political riders to appropriation bills again came up for discussion but without reaching any tangible result.

Relief for Ireland.—A Bill has Passed the House authorizing the use of one of the vessels of the navy or the charter of a merchant ship to transport food, etc., to the starving Irish. It is probable that a merchant vessel will be chartered, as several have already been offered for about one half the sum which it would cost to remove the armament from a ship of war and prepare her to act as a transport.

The Death of Mr. James Lenox, at New York, on February 17th, removes from society in the city one of its most philanthropic and generous members. He was the founder of the Lenox Library, one of the most valuable institutions of the kind in America. He also led the movement which resulted in the establishment of the Presbyterian Hospital, and the Presbyterian Home for Aged Women. To these and similar institutions Mr. Lenox gave during the last twelve years of his life the large sum of three million dollars.

Mr. Lenox was born in August, 1800, was educated in the New York public schools, and graduated at Princeton in 1821. The foundation of his fortune was in a piece of land bequeathed to him by his father, Mr. Robert Lenox. This land Mr. Robert Lenox purchased in 1817 for $10,700 from an estate thrown on the market by the death of an old friend. The price was considered far beyond the value of the land; but Mr. Robert Lenox offered that sum as a delicate mode of assisting the family of his friend. The city of New York has grown since that day, and the land Mr. Lenox bought for $10,700 is built over with fine residences, and is probably worth to-day more than $10,000,000. As Mr. James Lenox sold portions of the ground he expended large sums in the public interest, and gave away other valuable portions for sites of various institutions, to the endowment of which he contributed munificently. Mr. Lenox was unmarried, and lived a very retired life; he was a member of the Presbyterian Church under the pastoral care of Dr. Paxton.

Sentence on Mr. Cowley, the Manager of the Shepherd's Fold in New York, who had been convicted of cruelly starving and neglecting the children committed to his care, was pronounced February 20th. In passing sentence, the Recorder said, "You have had a fair and impartial trial. You were defended with great ability, and every opportunity was given to you to explain the charges against you or to refute them. The jury were anxious to do justice between you and the people, and after hearing the evidence on both sides they came to the conclusion that you were guilty, and in my judgment they could not have arrived at any other conclusion. The sentence of this Court is that you be confined in the Penitentiary for one year and fined two hundred and fifty dollars, and at the expiration of your sentence you are to stand committed until the fine is paid."

Application was made after the sentence to three judges for a stay of proceedings, but in each case, after examining the papers, the application was peremptorily refused. This punishment, exemplary in its severity, may be useful as a warning to any persons who may contemplate using the disguise of charity to cover selfish schemes.

A Law against Profane Swearing.—The Senate of Maryland has passed a bill, which had previously passed the House, to punish by fine and imprisonment in jail, at the discretion of the Court, any person who shall by loud and unseemly noises create disturbance in any neighborhood or in any city or town, or who shall profanely curse and swear, or use obscene language on or near any street or highway within the hearing of any person passing. Should the governor sign the bill and the law be enforced, a decided improvement in the language of the citizens will be effected. Apart from the sin of the habit of swearing, it is injurious and shocking to those who have to listen to it. Children and young people in the public streets and on cars are now, in our great cities, forced to hear the name of the Most High blasphemously used in horrible oaths appalling to the ear. It is both satisfactory and creditable that the citizens of Maryland are endeavoring to make the practice penal. The Mosaic law dealt more rigorously still with this class of sinners (Lev. 24 : 10–16).

The Work of "a Hopeless Drunkard" named Soutar, at Newark, N. J., is of a most hopeful character. Police Justice Mills, of that city, says he knew him from 1867 to 1875 as an irreclaimable inebriate, whom he was in the habit of sentencing frequently to terms of imprisonment varying from ten to thirty days. He was released from one of these seasons of enforced retirement in 1875, when the praying women of Newark invited him to a Gospel temperance meeting, and promised to pray for him. Mr. Soutar said it was of no use; but at that time he did not know the power of prayer. Later when he found a surprising change coming over him, and his thirst for liquor abating, he had a different estimate of prayer. By the grace of God he was reformed and converted, and then the first t he thought of was, how he could help ot afflicted as he had been. He has now es lished a home for inebriates, relying for ai Christian liberality, and he has asked the ju to commit men to his home instead of to pr when they have been convicted of drunken in the hope that its influences will be more ducive to their reformation than those of jail. The home is well arranged and mana and among its reforming agencies Mr. Sc has established a small library of useful b with a reading-room, on the table of whic places the CHRISTIAN HERALD, the En Alliance, and the Newark daily papers.
home will accommodate twenty boarders,
Mr. Soutar is sanguine that under the ble of God great good will result from his effort is certainly one in which all Christians heartily sympathize.

The New York "Daily Witness."—We with sincere regret that the effort of Mr. Do to establish a daily journal conducted on ious principles, "witnessing for evangelica ligion, temperance, and every good cause, against all forms of evil"—an effort in whi has persisted for over eight years—has s proved a failure. It is announced that th culation it has attained is not sufficient to the cost of production, and that unless a increase of purchasers takes place immediat issue will be suspended. The proprietor as the prayers of Christians everywhere that th ness shall not be silenced in the city, but th may be encouraged by an increase of supp continue its issue, and that God may be gl by its mission. We cordially commen Dougall's request to our readers.

A Subscriber from Waste Paper.—A La a Western State writes to us: "I had be our store one day and bought a few parcel after I got home, on undoing them, I foun
one parcel was wrapped in THE CHRI HERALD—the first one I ever saw. And to subscribe for it. I think it the best p ever saw."

Mr. Aitken, the Editor of this Paper, start yesterday on a rapid tour to some p Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Tex turning by way of Tennessee and Kentuck ters relating to personal, not to editorial, may be addressed to him at the followin offices: Jacksonville (not later than Marc Cedar Keys, New Orleans, Galveston, Me
Louisville (Ky.), and Cincinnati.

The Prophetic News and Israel's Wat
(monthly) for January and February, 1880, had, price six cents each, at 63 Bible Hous York.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works.—W much pleasure in announcing that another la signment of volumes by this eminent aut preacher has just been received. They are sale at the office of the CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York, and are offered at low as to bring them within the reach of eve Twelve Sermons on various subjects, with pho of Mr. Spurgeon, price 35 cents. John Plou Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents; in cloth,
The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, a volum sermons, $2.50. The Treasury of David, a cal exposition of the book of Psalms, five vol as Psa. 118, $3 per vol. Spurgeon's Birthd
This popular gift-book contains a suitable selected from Mr. Spurgeon's writings for e in the year, with a blank space opposite graphs. The signatures of Mr. and Mrs. S appear at their respective birthdays. The elegantly bound, and the price is 75 cents.
tances should accompany orders.

Irish Famine Relief Fund.—Contri received up to Monday, Feb. 23d:

Miss Hannah Cresse, Rio Grande, N. J..
J. W. Kilbourn, Trenton, O............
L. J. B., Anderson, S. C. ....

Forwarded to N. Y. Herald..........

A Friend, New York..................
" Sandy Spring, Md...........
William T. Griffith, Lebanon, O........

The Albany City Hall was destroyed by Fire February 10th. The fire at first appeared to be rifling, but the construction of the building with its network of flues caused the flames to break out twice after the firemen believed they had been extinguished. Strenuous efforts were made, to save the records and county documents, which reach back to and antedate the old Dutch Knickerbockers. These attempts were in measure successful, and the men emerged rom the dense, blinding smoke that filled the alls and corridors, each with his arms piled full with old books and musty packages of papers, which were the more valuable for their antiquity and the yellow stains of age. Load after load was carried out until the heat forbade furher entrance. Great efforts were made to save he portraits of the Governors of New York tate, about twenty in number, which were on he walls of the Common Council Chamber; nd all of them were taken out, but most of hem were more or less seriously damaged. This ollection of pictures is said to be the only omplete set in the posssession of any State. t embraces the oil portraits of every Governor rom the time of George Clinton, 1777, down o Gen. John A. Dix, the portraits of Governors iden and Robinson not yet being added to the st.

From Jail to the Altar.—A Prisoner who is ndergoing a sentence of two years' imprisonment at Richmond, Va., was granted a few ours' freedom on February 10th for the purpose of getting married. The crime for which he being punished is that of murder. He had ruck a young man who he believed had insulted the young lady he has now married, and when e was struck in return had shot his antagonist ead. He appealed to the higher courts, but e sentence was confirmed, and after the final ppeal had failed it became necessary to remove m to the penitentiary. Application was made the prison authorities to allow the marriage take place before his removal, which was anted. The prisoner in charge of a jailer was ken to the residence of a relative of the bride d the ceremony performed, after which the nvict bridegroom was taken back to jail, leaving s bride in a state of tearful distress. The shockg event, involving sad consequences for all ree of the parties implicated, is a lesson which ould not be forgotten. The readiness to rent an injury which all displayed, and the horble crime which was the issue of the quarrel, ould remind us that "a prudent man deferth his anger, and it is his glory to pass over a ansgression" (Prov. 19:11).

A Valuable Claim was Sold for a Small Sum tely in an attempt of the vender to defraud. merchant of Virginia City won by a gambling ansaction an undeveloped gravel claim near evada City, said to be worth about two huned dollars. He was anxious to make a profit the claim, and without ever seeing it he rote to some capitalist acquaintances that he ad a claim worth a fabulous sum, which he ould sell for $2000, being pressed for money. he bank was next visited, $500 worth of gold ust and nuggets bought, and buried by the wner's directions about the claim, according the process known as "salting." When the tending purchasers arrived they prospected e ground a little, and were satisfied. They id the $2000 the same day, and got possession the ground. Work was at once begun, and ey took out $8000 in three weeks. The salter" was so taken aback that he was hamed to speak of the loss, and is now aware at they who try to overreach others fall into snare. (Psa. 7:15.)

A Desperate Fight with a Bear is Described a Philadelphia journal. It took place in a ve near Bushkill. The cave is in the midst of a rest, and an old man named Sheldon has made his home. A few days ago Sheldon went out search of firewood, and was absent from his ve about an hour. When he returned he was mazed to see a large black bear crouching in e corner of his underground abode. Before he could get out of the cave, however, the bear sprang toward him, dealing him a hard blow on the shoulder. Sheldon drew his knife and struck the creature in the neck, but the wound only infuriated him. He at length succeeded in getting out of the cave, where the struggle was renewed, the bear getting him in his embrace and nearly hugging the breath out of him; but the old man was fighting for life, and drove the knife into the monster's heart, killing him instantly. As the bear fell dead, Sheldon fainted, and was found unconscious, several hours later, by a party who were passing through the forest.

This struggle reminds us of the desperate combat the Christian sometimes has to wage with the enemy of souls who often seizes the opportunity of loneliness to come unawares on those he would make his prey. Then is the time for the soul to call upon the Saviour, who conquered the same antagonist in the wilderness.

A Night of Peril on the Ice was Experienced by a man named Penn, of Gananoque, last week. He was one of a party who were crossing the St. Lawrence on a sleigh by moonlight. Suddenly the ice broke up and the sleigh went under. In this critical position three of the men battled through the water to the larger cakes of ice floating about, and each secured one for himself. The wind blew so fiercely that they were obliged to crouch on their hands and knees, and in that position float with the ice, hoping it might drift near the shore, then more than a mile away. After drifting for some time one of the men decided to make an effort to swim ashore, and plunged into the icy river. But he must have been drowned almost immediately, for his companions saw no more of him. Soon a second also plunged into the water; he was crazed by the cold, and thought he was taking the hand of his wife, whom he seemed to see before him. Penn was thus left alone, his limbs numbed with cold, and his clothes encrusted with ice more than an inch thick. All that night he drifted, and he was giving up hope, when just as the morning broke, he was seen from the shore and rescued by a boat sent for his relief. He has been a total abstainer for many years, and believes that but for that fact he must have succumbed to his sufferings of that terrible night.

A Young Lady's Kindness met with its Reward recently, after many years had elapsed. A young man was studying at Yale College, whose father was very rich and supported his son in grand style at the university. Suddenly the old gentleman failed and had to withdraw his son from college. The youth went to work and learned a trade as a machinist. While he was at his work his old associates refused to have any thing to do with him. The young ladies, with whom he had been a great favorite, failed to recognize him when they met him. One day while going from his work he met a wealthy young lady who had been his friend. He had his tin dinner-bucket over his arm, and supposed she would cut him as all the rest had done. She smiled pleasantly, addressed him as "Tom," and insisted that he should call and see her as he had always done. She said: "There is no change in you, as far as I am concerned." The years rolled on. The young workboy became wealthy, and owner of a factory in which 1500 men and women are employed. The young girl grew to womanhood and married. Her husband borrowed a large sum of money from the rich man, and died before he had paid it, leaving his family with but little property. The capitalist sent her, with his condolence, a receipted note for her husband's indebtedness; and now the son of the millionaire is going to marry the daughter of the one woman who was faithful and true to the young workboy whom others despised.

Three Members of the "Salvation Army" have arrived in Philadelphia and begun a series of meetings, which thus far have been largely attended. Conversions are already reported, and further assistance in the work is expected soon from England.

BELOVED, AND YET AFFLICTED.

Notes of a Sermon Preached before an Audience of Invalid Ladies at Mentone by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"Lord, behold, he whom thou lovest is sick."—JOHN 11:3.

A Favored Trio—I. The Fact—He whom Thou Lovest is Sick—Not an Astonishing Circumstance—He was only a Man—Under a Peculiar Discipline—Sickness a Source of Benefit to the Afflicted—Of Good to Others—II. The Fact Reported—A Constant Correspondence—Jesus Sure to Support the Afflicted—He may Give Healing—III. The Result—A Prayer which may be Crossing Ours—Longing for the Evening to Undress—IV. A Question—"Does Jesus Love You?"

THAT disciple whom Jesus loved is not at all backward to record that Jesus loved Lazarus too; there are no jealousies among those who are chosen by the Well-beloved. Jesus loved Mary and Martha, and Lazarus; it is a happy thing where a whole family live in the love of Jesus.

They were a favored trio, and yet, as the serpent came into Paradise, so did sorrow enter their quiet household at Bethany. Lazarus was sick. They all felt that if Jesus were there disease would flee at His presence; what then should they do but let Him know of their trial? Lazarus was near to death's door, and so his tender sisters at once reported the fact to Jesus, saying, "Lord, behold, he whom thou lovest is sick."

Many a time since then has that same message been sent to our Lord, for in full many a case he has chosen his people in the furnace of affliction. Of the Master it is said, "Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses," and it is therefore no extraordinary thing for the members to be in this matter conformed to their Head.

I. Notice, first,

A FACT

mentioned in the text: "Lord, behold, he whom thou lovest is sick." The sisters were somewhat astonished that it should be so, for the word "behold" implies a measure of surprise. "We love him, and would make him well directly; thou lovest him, and yet he remains sick. Thou canst heal him with a word, why then is thy loved one sick?" Have not you, dear sick friend, often wondered how your painful or lingering disease could be consistent with your being chosen, and called, and made one with Christ? I dare say this has greatly perplexed you, and yet in very truth it is by no means strange, but a thing to be expected.

We need not be astonished that the man whom the Lord loves is sick, for he is only a man. The love of Jesus does not separate us from the common necessities and infirmities of human life. Men of God are still men. The covenant of grace is not a charter of exemption from consumption, or rheumatism, or asthma. The bodily ills, which come upon us because of our flesh, will attend us to the tomb, for Paul saith, "We that are in this body do groan."

Those whom the Lord loves are the more likely to be sick, since they are under a peculiar discipline. It is written, "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth." Affliction of some sort is one of the marks of the true-born child of God, and it frequently happens that the trial takes the form of illness. Shall we therefore wonder that we have to take our turn in the sick chamber? If Job and David and Hezekiah must each one smart, who are we that we should be amazed because we are in ill-health?

Nor is it remarkable that we are sick if we reflect upon the great benefit which often flows from it to ourselves. I do not know what peculiar improvement may have been wrought in Lazarus, but many a disciple of Jesus would have been of small use if he had not been afflicted. Strong men are apt to be harsh, imperious, and unsympathetic, and therefore they need to be put into the furnace and melted down. I have known Christian women who would never have been so gentle, tender, wise, experienced, and holy if they had not been mellowed by physical pain.

There are fruits in God's garden as well as in man's which never ripen till they are bruised. Young women who are apt to be volatile, conceited, or talkative are often trained to be full of sweetness and light by sickness after sickness, by which they are taght to sit at Jesus' feet. Many have been able to say with the Psalmist, "It is good for me to have been afflicted, that I might learn thy statutes." For this reason even such as are highly favored and blessed among women may feel a sword piercing through their hearts.

Oftentimes this sickness of the Lord's loved ones is for the good of others. Lazarus was permitted to be sick, and to die, that by his death and resurrection the apostles might be benefited. His sickness was "for the glory of God." Throughout these nineteen hundred years which have succeeded Lazarus's sickness all believers have been getting good out of it, and this afternoon we are all the better because he languished and died.

The Church and the world may derive immense advantage through the sorrows of good men; the careless may be awakened, the doubting may be convinced, the ungodly may be converted, the mourner may be comforted through our testimony in sickness; and if so, would we wish to avoid pain and weakness? Are we not quite willing that our friends should say of us also, "Lord, behold, he whom thou lovest is sick?" .

II. Our text, however, not only records a fact, but mentions of that fact: the sisters sent and told Jesus. Let us keep up a constant correspondence with our Lord about every thing.

A REPORT

"Sing a hymn to Jesus, when thy heart is faint; Tell it all to Jesus, comfort or complaint."

Jesus knows all about us, but it is a great relief to pour out our hearts before him. When John the Baptist's broken-hearted disciples saw their leader beheaded, "they took up the body and went and told Jesus." They could not have done better. In all trouble send a message to Jesus, and do not keep your misery to yourself. In his case there is no need of reserve; there is no fear of his treating you with cold pride, or heartless indifference, or cruel treachery. He is a confidant who never can betray us, a friend who never will refuse us.

There is this fair hope about telling Jesus, that He is sure to support us under it. If you go to Jesus, and ask, "Most gracious Lord, why am I sick? I thought I was useful while in health, and now I can do nothing; why is this?" He may be pleased to show you why, or, if not, He will make you willing to bear His will with patience without knowing why. He can bring His truth to your mind to cheer you, or strengthen your heart by His presence, or send you unexpected comforts, and give you to glory in your afflictions. "Ye people, pour out your heart before Him: God is a refuge for us." Not in vain did Mary and Martha send to tell Jesus, and not in vain do any seek His face.

Remember, too, that Jesus may give healing. It would not be wise to live by a supposed faith, and cast off the physician and his medicines, any more than to discharge the butcher and the tailor, and expect to be fed and clothed by faith; but this would be far better than forgetting the Lord altogether, and trusting to man only. Healing for both body and soul must be sought from God. We make use of medicines, but these can do nothing apart from the Lord, "who healeth all our diseases." We may tell Jesus about our aches and pains, and gradual declinings, and hacking coughs.

Some persons are afraid to go to God about their health: they pray for the pardon of sin, but dare not ask the Lord to remove a headache; and yet, surely if the hairs outside our head are all numbered by God, it is not much more of a condescension for Him to relieve throbs and pressures inside the head. Our big things must be very little to the great God, and our little things cannot be much less. It is a proof of the greatness of the mind of God that while ruling the heavens and the earth He is not so absorbed by these great concerns as to be forgetful of the least pain or want of any one of His poor children.

We may go to Him about our failing breath, for He first gave us lungs and life. We may tell Him about the eye which grows dim, and the ear which loses hearing, for He made them both. We may mention the swollen knee and the gathering finger, the stiff neck and the sprained foot, for He made all these our members, redeemed them all, and will raise them all from the grave. Go at once, and say, "Lord, behold, he whom thou lovest is sick."

III. Thirdly, let us notice in the case of Lazarus which we should not have expected. No doubt when Mary and Martha sent to tell Jesus they looked to see Lazarus recover as soon as the messenger reached the Master; but they were not gratified. For two days the Lord remained in the same place, and not till He knew that Lazarus was dead did He speak of going to Judea. This teaches us that Jesus may be informed of our trouble, and yet may act as if He were indifferent to it.

A RESULT

We must not expect in every case that prayer for recovery will be answered, for if so nobody would die who had chick or child, friend or acquaintance, to pray for him. In our prayers for the lives of beloved children of God we must not forget that there is one prayer which may be crossing ours, for Jesus prays, "Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory." We pray that they may remain with us, but when we recognize that Jesus wants them above, what can we do but admit His larger claim and say, "Not as I will, but as thou wilt?"

In our own case we may pray the Lord to raise us up, and yet though He loves us He may permit us to grow worse and worse, and at last to die. Hezekiah had fifteen years added to his life, but we may not gain the reprieve of a single day. Never set such store by the life of any one dear to you, or even by your own life, as to be rebellious against the Lord. If you hold the life of any dear one with too tight a hand, you are making a rod for your own back; and if you love your own earthly life too well, you are making a thorny pillow for your dying bed. Children are often idols, and in such cases their too ardent lovers are idolaters. We might as well make a god of clay and worship it, as the Hindoos are said to do, as worship our fellow-creatures, for what are they but clay? Shall dust be so dear to us that we quarrel with our God about it? If our Lord leaves us to suffer, let us not repine. He must do that for us which is kindest and best, for he loves us better than we love ourselves.

Did I hear you say, "Yes, Jesus allowed Lazarus to die, but He raised him up again?" I answer, He is the resurrection and the life to us also. Be comforted concerning the departed, "Thy brother shall rise again," and all of us whose hope is in Jesus shall partake in our Lord's resurrection. Not only shall our souls live, but our bodies, too, shall be raised incorruptible. The grave will serve as a refining pot, and this vile body shall come forth vile no longer.

Some Christians are greatly cheered by the thought of living till the Lord comes, and so escaping death. I confess that I think this no great gain, for so far from having any preference over them that are asleep, those who are alive and remain at His coming will miss one point of fellowship in not dying and rising like their Lord. Beloved, all things are yours, and death is expressly mentioned in the list; therefore do not dread it, but rather "long for evening to undress, that you may rest with God."

IV. I will close with

A QUESTION—

"Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus"—does Jesus, in a special sense, love you Alas, many sick ones have no evidence of any special love of Jesus toward them, for they have never sought His face, nor trusted in Him. Jesus might say to them, "I never knew you," fo they have turned their backs upon His bloo and His cross. Answer, dear friend, to you own heart, this question, "Do you love Jesus?" If so, you love Him because He first loved you Are you trusting Him? If so, that faith of your is the proof that He has loved you from befor the foundation of the world, for faith is the toke by which He plights His troth to His beloved.

If Jesus loves you, and you are sick, let all th world see how you glorify God in your sickness Let friends and nurses see how the beloved o the Lord are cheered and comforted by Him Let your holy resignation astonish them, an set them admiring your Beloved, who is so gracious to you that He makes you happy in pain and joyful at the gates of the grave. If you religion is worth any thing, it ought to suppor you now, and it will compel unbelievers to se that he whom the Lord loveth is in better cas when he is sick than the ungodly when full o health and vigor.

If you do not know that Jesus loves you, yo lack the brightest star that can cheer the nigh of sickness. I hope you will not die as you no are, and pass into another world without enjoying the love of Jesus: that would be a terribl calamity indeed. Seek His face at once, and i may be that your present sickness is a part o the way of love by which Jesus would bring yo to himself. Lord, heal all these sick ones i soul and in body. Amen.

[The prayers of the readers of this Journal ar requested for the blessing of God upon its Editor in America and England, and those whose sermon articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; an for its weekly circulation of more than 175,00 copies to be blessed by the Holy Spirit to the conversion of many sinners and the quickening God's people. Mr. Spurgeon and Dr. Talmag especially request prayer every Sunday mornin on behalf of their labors.]

A LETTER FROM THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF AND A PRACTICAL REFUTATION

A Recollection by Major Malan.

Committing our Way to the Lord—Unfounde Statement in the Horse Guards Letter—Leav Refused—The Inspection—The General's Su prise.

THE exhortation to delight ourselves in th Lord, promising that He shall give us the desir of our heart, is followed by this assurance Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also Him: and He shall bring it to pass; and H shall bring forth thy righteousness as the ligh and thy judgment as the noonday. By His marvelous grace He led me to believe in Him. Fait is the gift of God, who giveth to all men liberally. If you need it and wish it, Ask, and shall receive.

He then led me to commit my way to Hin to trust in Him, and He did bring it to pas But the man who serves God in this wicke world must suffer in some way. Misunderstanding or persecution he must have. Therefore it promised for the comfort of all the servants o the Lord, that He will bring forth their righ eousness—that they acted faithfully towar Him—as the light, and their judgment—that b His grace they acted for the best toward men—as the noonday. What a tower of strength th blessed promise has been in all their trials to th followers of the Lord Jesus!

To some of His children the Lord fulfils th word even in the days of their earthly pilgrimage. He allows them to suffer for Him, and H afterwards brings forth their righteousness the light.

The paragraph of the Horse Guards letter which I referred in a previous chapter* was t this effect: "The Commander-in-Chief has always found that discipline deteriorates in cor where religious parties exist, and he has remarked that the wing of the —th regiment was no exception to that rule when under the command of Major Malan." I do not believe that the Commander-in-Chief dictated or directed this sentence. I have not one word to say against him. Public letters are written by staff officers who sometimes judge too hastily.

---

* Christian Herald, page 43.

The Christian officers and soldiers of our army are entitled to justice from their superior officers. There are none more faithful or loyal in he army. As long as they do their duty, their eligious liberty should be respected. Unless hey can be proved to have created breaches of discipline, they should not be deprived of that iberty upon every frivolous and vexatious complaint.

It is not lawful to forbid officers and soldiers who hold the same views of the Christian faith to meet together to study God's Word. Not only does this do no harm, but it does a great deal of good.

There were no "religious parties" among the oldiers under my command. There are official documents to prove that discipline did not deteiorate.

"He shall bring forth thy righteousness as he light, and thy judgment as the noonday." This was my comfort when I had finished reading he Horse Guards letter. It would have troubled me greatly but that the Lord stood by me and trengthened me. He knew the truth. He would sooner or later justify me: whether now r in the day when every secret thing shall be evealed, I left to His will. I never expected hat He would do it before I left my regiment. By return post from headquarters, after the resgnation of my commission had been received, here arrived two letters. One was from a priate soldier, which I will proceed to quote.

"Dear Sir: I hope you will not think it mpudent of me for writing you this letter. I was thinking of it since I left your command, ut my position of life prevented me from doing . I always had a desire of returning you my most hearty thanks for the book (a Douay Tesament) you presented me with after we went om Singapore to Hong Kong, as also all my mrades join with me in thanking you for your kind present to them. Dear Sir, there is a rumor ere that you are about to leave the regiment, which we would be very sorry for."

He then expresses, in as strong language as man can, how pleased he and his co-religionts, many of whom he mentions, would be to erve again under my command, giving as is reason, "We were never better off than what we were when we were under your mmand, as you always gave us all kinds of dulgences concerning our keeping up of our ligious principles, which we shall never forget or you if it laid in our power to do you any assistance." This from an Irish Roman Catholic soldier, to me, his old commanding officer. I felt it as God's answer to the Horse Guards letter. he Lord led him to write it. When I had nished it, the tears flowed freely from my eyes. looked up and said, "Thou shalt answer for e, O Lord my God."

Beloved Christian reader, what a God is ours! ere was His proof that there was no religious arty, save one of love, among the soldiers under y command. Here was His proof that disciine had not deteriorated in the wing I had comanded. On the contrary, by His grace I had ound my soldiers to myself by the strongest tie uman nature knows—the heaven-given band of ove. Love, because for Christ's sake I had ved them.

My application for leave to England had been fused on the ground that my services could ot be spared. It was a momentary disappointent, but I knew that all was well. A few weeks terward the general commanding the forces the Cape of Good Hope came to inspect the oops in garrison. I need hardly remark that now committed my cause to the Lord in earnest prayer. My dear friend the commandant nd I met for special prayer, that the Lord would give us good success and prosper our work.

The day of the inspection I was enjoying a psalm, as usual, before breakfast, in the garden of our mess-house, when in the portion for that day I came upon this verse, "I have stuck unto thy testimonies; O Lord, put me not to shame" (Ps. 119:31). I closed the book with a shout of joy. It was my Lord's assurance that He would not now fail me. Lieutenant-General Hay, an officer who by his indefatigable exertions in the rifle instruction of our army had done so much to improve its military power, was the inspecting general. He had commanded a regiment nineteen years as lieutenant-colonel, and was very strict in duty.

He inspected the men by companies under arms. The wing was then put through the usual exercises of an inspection by myself and other officers. The general told the men before they marched off parade that he was extremely pleased with all he had seen. "As to cleanliness on parade, steadiness in the ranks, and when moving under arms, there is nothing to be desired." Following this there was the inspection of the books, kits, and barracks. The companies were upwards of a hundred strong.

After looking at the books of the first company, the general asked the captain how much it was in debt. The debt was under three pounds. "How many depositors have you in the regimental savings-bank?" was the general's next question. "Fifty-nine, sir," was the reply. "What?" said the general. The officer repeated what he had before said. "Well," said the general, "I never saw any thing like this before in my life."

(To be continued.)

AN AGED BLIND AND DEAF WOMAN CONVERTED:

Or, Gospel Teaching under Great Difficulties.

One of those excellent ladies who devote themselves to the spiritual good of humanity, and who has founded a Soldiers' Home in a garrison town in England, received recently a letter requesting her to call upon a woman said to be in deep spiritual distress. She went, and found the person alluded to was an elderly woman, nearly seventy, totally blind and totally deaf, speaking so indistinctly that it was difficult to make out any thing she said; but she seemed deeply depressed, groaning from time to time her utterance, "miserable," "miserable," making evident her deep distress of mind. The obstacle in the way of communicating with her seemed insurmountable. She could see nothing, she could hear nothing, and she could explain nothing.

The lady, deeply affected by her case, took the trouble to ascertain how she had been brought up and how long she had been thus disabled.

It appeared she had attended a Sunday-school for some years, and that her disability arose from the accident of a heavy school form falling upon her foot, so that her instruction had been little.

After prayerful thought upon her case, the suggestion occurred of making with the finger the form of letters upon the palm of her hand. The trial began with the letter O. After a time she seemed to perceive what was being done, and evidently tried to utter the letter. The next trial was with the letter G. This was tried first as a capital letter, but the poor woman could not be made to understand it. The next trial was a small g, which, after a time, she seemed to comprehend. Then followed the difficult task of the leter D, which, with perseverance, was accomplished, and a pause made by inscribing rather rapidly G-o-d several times in succession. The poor woman at last seemed to comprehend, and attempted to utter the word "God."

The task went on, the letters l-o-v-e-s were tried in the same way, and, after great efforts, the word "loves" seemed to be comprehended. Then followed the letters m-e, and by tapping upon her breast she seemed to understand. The whole sentence was then formed rapidly over her palm, and again and again, until she seemed to repeat the words and grasp the sentence "God loves me." This was one whole day's work.

The next day she was visited again. Her face expressed more calmness, with evident pleasure at receiving her visitor, and encouraging efforts on her part to say "God loves me." The slow course of instruction was again pursued, and other texts, such as "Jesus Christ died for sinners," "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin." Passages containing the pith of the Gospel were from day to day taught to her, until after some weeks the miserable expression of countenance entirely vanished, and she looked cheerful and happy, repeating the texts which had been taught her, showing by her manner of dwelling upon them that the joy of salvation was realized by her, and the peace of God rested upon her soul. It was evident the Spirit, who had wrought on her soul the deep conviction of sin, had given her living faith in the Saviour.

She is still living, a monument of the tender mercy of God, and a striking instance of the blessing which results from persevering Christian effort.

A CRIMEAN OFFICER'S AVOWAL.

By the Rev. Marmaduke Osborne.

I was travelling a little while ago on the London and Northwestern Railway. The train stopped at Oxford Station. A gentleman got into the compartment in which I was, and the train started, and away we went together. We very soon got into conversation. He was in great trouble. He had been to Oxford to identify his brother, who had been drowned while bathing. He told me all about himself and his brother They were both military men, and they had both served in the Crimean War and in the Indian Mutiny, and were at home on furlough. They had been at their father's house, and his brother left to visit an Oxford friend. The two friends went to bathe, and they were both drowned whilst bathing; and this gentleman went on telling me all the particulars, and I let him talk, for I saw it relieved him. And when he had done I thought it was my turn, and I said, "How important we should always be prepared for death and eternity, because we never know when the summons may come!" He turned round upon me, and said, "Oh! you are a clergyman. I suppose you believe in a future state." "Yes, I do."—"Well, I don't know whether I do or not. Sometimes I do, sometimes I do not; but I will tell you one curious thing. I have been telling you I am a military man and have fought in the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny, and I was in one of those transport ships that came to grief and was at that time in very great danger of going to the bottom. I have been in the field of battle when the bullets have been whizzing past my ears, and the shells bursting on every hand, and my comrades have been falling on my right hand and on my left, and it is an uncommonly curious thing, but at such times I always begin to pray. I am not a praying man. I do not profess to pray; but always when I have been in danger of that sort, very soon I instinctively begin to pray."

Ah! that is what most people do. That is what many people would do very soon now if they were told, for example, that the Master would be here within a few hours. But it is needless to say that it is most perilous to postpone prayer until the hour of manifest danger, for "Now is the accepted time, and now is the day of salvation" (2 Cor. 6:2); "To-day, if ye will hear His voice, harden not your heart" (Hebrews 3:15; Isaiah 55:6).

A Light to Light the whole City has been arranged for by the city government of Cleveland, Ohio. It is to be of 10,000 candle power, and to be placed in the dome of the County Court House. The contractors agree that if the light is unsatisfactory they will not require payment. Should the experiment be as successful as it promises, the citizens of Cleveland will have in their midst a practical illustration of Matt. 5:14-16.

THE FIRST MARTYR.

A Sermon by Rev. Dr. Punshon, LL.D.

"And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit. And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this, he fell asleep."—Acts 7 : 59, 60.

Lives not to be Measured by Years—The Church's Danger and God's Remedy—The Earliest Martyr—We may Learn from this History, I. The Secret of Stephen's Meekness and Courage—Men not Born so—The Treasury not Exhausted—Anecdote of an Officer—II. The Christian Inherits Persecution—Persecution Natural to Man—Its Spirit not Dead—III. God's Grace is most Present when most Needed—As thy Day thy Strength.

The period of our Redeemer's incarnate life was thirty-three years; the period of our Redeemer's public ministry was three years only. In that brief space of time all His marvellous works, all His elaborate discourses, and all the great scenes of His passion and agony, were crowded. In that brief space of time He endured all that was necessary in the matter of personal suffering, and accomplished all that was necessary in the preparation of His disciples for their work of progress and of prayer.

Length of life is not to be estimated by the winters over which it is spread. Some lives are short at seventy, because the record of them is a blank and insignificant vacancy. Other lives are protracted at thirty-five, because a history has been pressed within the span. Men live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths; in feelings, not in figures on the dial.

After the ascension of our Saviour, and the Baptism of Pentecost, with its first result of blessing in the sudden and simultaneous conversion of 3000 souls, the apostles preached boldly, undeterred by the fetters of the council, until all Jerusalem was filled with the doctrine, and the faithful among the adherents to the ancient faith wondered whereunto this thing would grow. Hitherto they had fulfilled with indomitable courage and tenderness the wish that lurked in the command of Christ to begin at Jerusalem; but there were broader purposes in the Redeemer's heart than the moral conquest of Jerusalem could satisfy. The Gospel was a Gospel of the world: the covenant of which His death was the seal had stipulated for the conversion of the world.

It was necessary, therefore, that the truth should not be locked up in the favored city to the exclusion of the parts adjacent, or "all the nations" and the uttermost ends of the earth, equally in the covenant, would have remained destitute of the tidings of blessing; but there seemed some danger lest in the growing prosperity and success of the Church at Jerusalem the outside world should be forgotten, lest Peter and his companions should re-enact His own experience on the Mount of Transfiguration, and as they gazed upon the converts ripening into a brave and generous piety should say, "Lord, let us build us tabernacles here." God seems to have provided against this danger by removing for a season the restraint in which He had held the opposition of the carnal mind.

Persecution was stirred up against the faithful. The clamorous tongue silenced the confessor's testimony. Some were imprisoned, others were banished; but the imprisoned ones rejoiced in their bondage, and the banished ones became missionaries everywhere preaching the Word.

The Church, moreover, had not yet all its orders of honor. It had its consistent believers, and its brave confessors, and its willing evangelists, and its noble-hearted apostles, but upon its bead-roll of martyrdom no name was yet inscribed. This reproach was very speedily to be wiped away. There, in the person of that deacon of the Church, wise in administration and excellent in council, a brave disputant, a faithful witness, and withal full of the Holy Ghost,
THE EARLIEST MARTYR STANDS
—the first of that noble army who have in all ages resisted unto blood, and whom righteous heaven and regenerate earth alike conspire to honor. "And they stoned Stephen."

It does not seem to have been the result of any adjudication even of prejudiced authority. He was arraigned, but he was interrupted in the midst of his defence, and stoned to death in an ebullition of popular fury. It was a tragic scene. Outside the city must the martyrdom be accomplished; for such is the treachery of the human heart that these superstitious assassins shrank with horror from the thought of defiling their streets with blood, and after the murder was over, they would have deemed it a sin of fearful enormity to sit down to the banquet with unwashed hands. Outside the city, therefore, must the murder be accomplished. There in the midst of the infuriated mob,
HOUNDED TO HIS DOOM,
you see him stand with the angel-face upon which the new beauty was already blushing, heavenlier now than when he stood before the council, because nearer to the glory which tinted it; and as the stones are thrown, and the hard rain falls pitilessly about him, he sinks upon his knees—how else could the first martyr die?—and inheriting the spirit as well as the sufferings of the Master whom he loved, his last breath is a prayer for his murderers—"Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this, he fell asleep."

It was finished—finished. There, on the ground, is a battered casket from which the jewel has escaped—the prison-house of clay from which the man undying has gone up to be with God; and round it there, when the last passionate slayer has departed, and the last curious spectator has gazed upon the corpse and gone, there come a multitude of angels chanting the requiem through adoring gladness, "so He giveth His beloved sleep." "And when he had said this, he fell asleep."

Now that is a scene I want you to contemplate. I do not mean that you should do this by any labored attempt at devotion; I would rather you should come with your hearts open and learn the lessons that lie upon the surface of the narrative, and that commend themselves most easily to the judgment and to the heart.

I. Now, the first question surely that arises in the heart of every one of you will be, of all this meekness and of all this bravery? How came Stephen to be thus self-possessed before the frowning sanhedrim—thus fearless amidst that excited multitude in his home-thrusts of truth—thus brave in the crisis of trial, and forgiving in the moment of death?
WHAT IS THE SECRET

As we mentally put ourselves in his position, and try to realize each successive danger, we feel that something more than physical bravery, more than the endowment of mental hardihood, is necessary to sustain us here. It must be some supernatural bestowment to account for all this superhuman tenderness and all this superhuman courage.

Then comes the further question, This supernatural endowment, is it an exclusive blessing—the heritage only of the few faithful—or is it the common heritage of all mankind? May it be yours and mine? These are questions that become interesting to us, as we dwell upon the developments of holy character that are presented in the life of Stephen. Brethren, the answer to the question is to be found in the character of the man. The secret of all this meekness and of all this bravery is to be found in the character of the man. You do not leap into this boldness of character in a moment, as Minerva is fabled to have leaped fully armed from the brain of Jupiter.

There was no mystic charm by which the graces clustered round him. He had no patented and sealed prescription of holy growth that is not allowed to any one beside. He had faith, and it was the gift of God to him just as it is the gift of God to us. He had the indwelling of the Holy Ghost, and the Holy Spirit waits, and is available for us as well as for him by the bloodshed of his surety and of ours; and the only difference—I want you to grasp this thought—between ourselves and him is that with a holier boldness, and lived habitually in a closer fellowship with God. There was no natural advantage that he had over us.
HE GRASPED THE PROMISE

He was born in sin as we are. He started from the same level of disadvantage as we do. He had no natural superiority over us by which to command more favorable conditions to overcome his enemy and ours. Just as we do, by repentance and faith, by childlike trust and clinging, by the continual exercise of graces and continual trust in the Master and Captain of our salvation, he rose to be the hero that he was.

And the treasury is not exhausted; and the Benefactor is just as willing to bestow as ever, and His ear listens to the sound of the faintest supplication, and His hand is stretched out that it may bestow the abundant blessing to-day. Dear friends, it is not physical courage that is the secret of this moral bravery. There are men in this world of ours who can climb, without flinching, the serried slope that is swept by the bristling cannon, who would be the first to plant the scaling-ladder against the parapet and climb the wall of a besieged city, and who can go right up to the cannon's mouth in search of the bubble reputation, who yet are the veriest cowards when a moral duty is difficult, or when they have to maintain an unpopular principle, or when they have to avow a faith against the laugh of the scorner.

Some of you will remember a story that occurs in
THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON'S DESPATCHES
—how he once sent two officers upon a service of considerable hazard, and as they were galloping to the spot of rendezvous, the one, looking at the other, saw his lip quivering, his cheek blanched, and the moisture of fear upon his brow. Reining in his horse, the other exclaimed, "Why, you are afraid!" "I am," was the officer's reply; "and if you were half as much afraid as I am you would relinquish the duty altogether. Without wasting another word upon his ignoble companion, the officer galloped back and complained bitterly that he had been sent on a service of such hazard in the company of a coward. What was the commander's reply? "Off, sir, to your duty, or the coward will have done the business before you get there."

And the great duke was right. There was physical timidity—perhaps the result of a sensitive and nervous organization—but there was an imperial regard to duty which bore him above his fears to triumph.

And that has been illustrated many a time in the history of the Church. Sensitive and shrinking natures, that have quivered like an aspen at the very probability of danger, have been embraved into the heroism of sacrifice when the time of trial came. Ay, and often the Church's martyrology records instances of suffering endured for Christ by delicate and high-born womanhood, and how she who in her ancestral home was screened from harm, so tha the very winds of heaven could not visit her to roughly, has stood, when the trial came, statel as the cedar in the storm. Ay, and often eve childhood has anticipated its manliness, and ou of the mouths of babes and sucklings God ha perfected praise (Psalm 8). It is that is the stuff out of which martyrs are mad They are what they are from no muscular sinew or well-knit network of nerves, but from the i dwelling and demonstration of the Spirit of God Now you will be all of you tried, if you have n been tried already. There are times in ever man's life when the clouds pour down the wate that they have long been gathering, and whe the skies send forth their mightiest thunderin of sound. Do you want to bear yourselv bravely in that day? Do you want to come o more than conquerors then? Do you want s to comport yourself that the temptation th bows your spirit to the dust, and almost ren your heart in twain, shall not be able to sha your principles a hair—do you want that? Then let the life that you now live in the flesh be a life of faith in the Son of God.
CHRISTIAN FAITH IN ACTION

It is the daily drill that makes the battle-hero. It is the breasting of the stream full oft that makes the swimmer strong. It is the orderly self-command in the vexations of the household, and in the wasp-like annoyances of every-day life, that prepares the soul for the confession made amidst a tempest of slander, and for the heroism when all the powers of battle are laughing at the carnage and the havoc and the slaughter.

II. The second point I want to bring out is that the lot of the Christian is generally a lot of persecution—

AN INHERITANCE OF PERSECUTION.

So far as we know, there was nothing at all in the character of Stephen to account for this envenomed hostility shown him. He was reputed learned and honorable, and as the Church's almoner, his office at any rate was benevolent and kind; and he was consistent, and so his life was a keen power of rebuke to others. He was fearless and faithful, and so he made enemies. He was unanswerable, and that was a crime too great to be forgiven; and so "they stoned Stephen."

And if you look into Church history you will find that the lot of the true Church has always been a lot of suffering. Take the old prophets, those kings of the former time, uncrowned: although they wielded an empire far more worthy of being wielded than the empire which depends on sceptres and palaces, yet they were the subjects of derision and of insult; all of them were derided, some of them were slain. Nearly all the primitive apostles weaved the martyr's amaranth into their crowns of thorns.

Pagan Rome vindicated, in ten general persecutions, her right to the attribute of cruelty, as well as by her merciless edicts and infamous slaughters; and in her autos-da-fé and protracted and cruel Inquisition, Papal Rome has not been a whit behind her. But Rome has not had any monopoly of persecution; it is a disgrace in which she, alas! has had many fellows. Numerous have been the instances in those of a contrary creed in which persecution has been born of power, and in which, in the delirium of newly acquired influence, men have trampled at once upon the restraints of society and upon the precepts of creed.

Nay, apart from ecclesiastical systems, the seeds of

THE PERSECUTING SPIRIT

are in your heart and mine. We have no need to be bitter against others. There are many ways in which persecution shows itself. The natural heart, the carnal heart, is in enmity—not indifference, mark you, but positive enmity—against God; and if a man will be a Christian—not a thing called "a Christian," for that is a very different affair to being a Christian after Christ's type and model—depend upon it, the world hates him, and it hates his beauty still.

There are many ways, you know, in which the spirit of persecution can be manifested. The husband may interpose to forbid his wife's devotion, or a father may be inexorable in the denial of his child's privilege, or the reward may be withdrawn, or the preferment withheld, or the suspicion insinuated, or another wing may be given to the slander. Oh! there are a thousand ways in which the latent hate can be shown: a shrug of the shoulder can show it; a glance of the eye can show it; the deprecating hypocrisy that can lurk in the wave of a hand can show it. All these, in certain forms, have been abettors to this spirit; or the barbed adjective, the envious whisper, the dissembling smile, have burnt into a fire hotter than Smithfield ever gathered round about it. Brethren, do you know any thing of this?

If your course is against the world, it is the course of the thunder-cloud in whose heart there is the living fire. If you go with the world's followers, or with them so nearly and so constantly that they mistake you for one of themselves, they won't persecute you. Is it, therefore, I wonder, that the age of persecution has so largely ceased? Is it therefore because the witnesses have sometimes faltered and sometimes borne false witness? Is it therefore that men have ceased to persecute us? Oh, then we are the sort of prophets that men like—the prophets who prophesy smooth things, who daub over men's consciences with untempered mortar—who make the heart comfortable.

Oh, for the spirit of Micaiah, the son of Imlah, from whom the rebellious Ahab could extort nothing but. "As the Lord liveth, what the Lord saith unto me, that will I speak." Brethren, we must be faithful as God's witnesses; we must be tender too. If we tell them the Redeemer's testimony, we must deliver it with the Redeemer's tears. We must look straight-eyed and kindly upon the vilest, as a man ought to look upon a man, for we are both royal, although the one is wearing and the other has worn his crown; but we must be still faithful as God's witnesses. We are part of His. Earnest in our protest against error, more earnest in our protest against wrong-doing, all Christ's witnesses are bound to be thus faithful for the truth; and if we are, persecution cannot harm us, but unfaithfulness can and will.

III. The next thought I want to impress upon you is, that God's grace is always most intimately present when it is most sorely needed. I hope there are some hearts prepared to learn this lesson. In the former life of Stephen, before he was called upon to fill the office of witness and evangelist, no doubt he had grace according to his day, but with special and onerous duty there came replenishment and supply. Look how it came upon him like a baptism in the gloom of the fierce council, when all they that were looking upon him steadfastly saw his face as it had been the face of an angel! Listen! how it enabled him to testify to the divinity of Jesus, for he was the proto-martyr—nobody can rob him of that—for the divinity of Jesus!

Hark! how it enabled him to testify to the Messiahship of Jesus. Hark! how it trod out of his heart the last fiery emblems of malice and revenge, and made him forgiving and heavenly-minded, as his Master was; and then with a rare vision opening above, he broke from his baffled murderers, and laid his bleeding brow upon his Lord's bosom.

The grace came just at the time he needed it. Yes, and the promise still is,

"AS THY DAY IS."

You draw upon your resources once and think them exhausted, and that you have no right to go to the particular promise, as if there is no virtue in it now. Remember "as thy day is, thy strength shall be." That text fits into days when the winter is dreary and the spirit of the hurricane waits to be let loose; days when the sky is leaden; days when the spirits are depressed; days when the sky is bright and the air clear, and there is an elasticity in nature, and when the frost braces one up; days when, like the workmen of old, we must work with the sword in one hand and the trowel in the other; all sorts of days. "As thy day is"—they are all covered, they are all included—"as thy day is, so shall thy strength be."

And have you not felt it and heard of it in the experience of those combatants who now rest from the conflict as we hope to do? Don't you remember them telling you how the time of their deadliest peril was often the time of their most blessed delivery? how when the dread waters threatened to swallow them up they were just the pathway for the chariot of the delivering Redeemer; and when He was seen walking upon the sea there appeared a great calm? Have you not sat by the bedside of dying saints and wondered, as they spoke to you of heaven, of unearthly beauty, and songs so sweet that no minstrelsy on earth could vie with them, as if, while the outer scenes were being lulled, an invisible hand had opened the beauties of the other world and given a keener eye for the prospect of beauty, and a keener ear for the melody of sound?

Cold science calls these things the phantasms of the intellect, the dreams of an imagination disordered and for the time insane. But why should not God open heaven to His Stephens still? and what better fitted to cheer them in their trouble, and to brace them in the great fight that they have to wage against the enemy of their souls?

Many a time when the dying Christian has lain upon his death-bed happy in the love of Christ, apparently unconscious of human sight and sound, the spirit has gone under some celestial escort to the summit of some spiritual Pisgah, and there has beheld the King in His beauty and the land that was afar off. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints."

THE MAID AND THE VISITOR.

Miss V. M. S. writes: "In the summer I was invited to C—— Park, where I had never previously been. Before going, I earnestly prayed that Jesus would go with me and bless my testimony to some one there. But, alas! the week was just ended: I felt as if my prayer had not been heard at all, and that there had neither been work out of doors nor in-doors for me to do; nothing but a steady downpour of rain; and the servants, of whom there were many, seemed far too grand and too engrossed with company to attend to any thing I had to say. But it was not so. My last day there was Sunday. I had lent the young maid who waited upon me a little book, and at night I asked her if she had read it. She replied she had, and that she liked it. 'Oh, miss,' she said at length, 'I said to the butler downstairs in the servants' hall directly you came, "I am certain that that young lady loves Jesus, and that she has Him for her friend," and, oh,' she exclaimed, bursting into tears, 'how I wish that Jesus was my friend too!'

"What could I then do but first inwardly thank Him who had thus prepared my way, notwithstanding my unbelieving fears; and then in an earnest conversation and prayer point the poor girl to Him who was waiting to be her friend too, even the 'friend that sticketh closer than a brother!' She thanked me again and again with tears as the first lady who had ever prayed with her, or spoken to her about her soul; and I left early the next morning, rejoicing to think that a visit which seemed so unpromising had not been altogether in vain. Still, I was humbled when I thought that that young servant had no doubt been wondering all the week why I did not speak to her—she was evidently waiting for a word.

Count Moltke, the Famous Military Strategist and Commander-in-Chief of the German army, lately sent the following reply to a Saxon workman, who had written suggesting a decrease of military burdens:

"Who does not participate in the heartfelt wish to see lightened the heavy military burdens which Germany is obliged to bear, being, as she is, situated between powerful neighbors? The Princes and the Government share in the same wish, but this happy state of things cannot be hoped for until all nations acknowledge that every war, however successful, is a general calamity. Even our Emperor is not able to bring about this desirable conviction, which can, in fact, only be produced by a better religious and moral education of the populations, and this is the work of centuries. Neither you nor I will live to see it.—Yours truly, H. V. Moltke."

Count Moltke evidently is not aware that the prophecies of Daniel and Revelation intimate that possibly before the close of the present century the personal Second Advent of the Prince of Peace, amid terrific wars and revolutions, will cause the nations to "beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning hooks," so that "they shall learn war no more," and then the peaceful period of one thousand years will run its course (Isaiah 2:4; Rev. 20).

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 111.)

Julia's Ambition.

ERNEST saw now, as he sat meditating after his meeting with Charles, and looking back with mournfully keen eyes, that he had suffered himself to drift into a dangerous channel, rather than distinctly chosen to enter upon it. It had been easier, and had seemed wiser, to keep his own counsel, and suffer affairs to take their course, than to publish the mistake that had been made. That far-off time could not be recalled ; and suddenly he discovered the heavy chain he had forged for himself (Num. 32 : 23).

He was in the very prime of life ; held in high esteem throughout the country ; the best Clifford of Clifford that had ever lived within those old walls. There was not a fleck upon his reputation, nor an apparent flaw in his character. He had almost doubled the value of the estate, and had greatly increased the prosperity of his little village. His influence was great both in religious and political circles ; and he exercised it with a scrupulous conscience. He was useful, and rejoiced in his usefulness.

Was he to throw it all to the winds, and beggar himself, his mother, and Rose, because a good-for-nothing scapegrace had seen fit to return from some far-off country, where he had wasted his life and substance in riotous living? If he did, Charles would soon squander the estate away, and go off on his wanderings again. What good would come of that to any one?

At this turn in his reflections, a subtle memory of familiar words stirred softly in his brain : "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also. The light of the body is the eye ; if, therefore, thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If, therefore, the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness! "No man can serve two masters : for either he will hate the one, and love the other : or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and Mammon" (Matt. 6 : 21–24). And thus with a clearer light dawning in his mind he betook himself to rest.

Charles Clifford was awake betimes the next morning. He had been thirty-six hours at home, and he was already growing weary of the decorum and propriety that reigned over it. Yesterday had appeared intolerably long to him, for his mother would barely let him out of her sight. She had insisted upon going with him when he made his inspection of the stables and farm-buildings ; and he had had her on his arm when he went down into the village.

Most of the men and women had greeted him warmly enough, but there had been no great enthusiasm of welcome, as there would have been for an heir coming into his estates. He had been received as a younger brother, whose going and coming made little difference to the tenants. It had not been so in his younger days.

It was with a sore heart that he walked about his father's fields alone this morning. He felt the value of what he had forfeited more keenly than he had ever done. There was not a drop of Clifford blood in Ernest's veins, he said to himself as he tramped doggedly along ; yet here he was lord and master of every foot of Clifford land. It was all very well for his mother to make a fuss over his return, and melt into tears, and break into laughter, and play a regular comedy about it. But Ernest gave him a scant welcome, and turned him the cold shoulder. He was regarded as an interloper in his own home.

Charles knew before he came that his father's will was all regular and unassailable ; and that there was no loop-hole through which he might hope to creep into his lost birthright. He had made sure of that years ago. But he had never felt how hard it was as he did now. He had a hungry craving for enjoyments that were quite beyond his reach.

If this comfortable little estate were his by law, as it was by natural inheritance, what a figure he would cut in the county! Ay! in London itself, as long as his funds lasted. But what could a fellow do, without a penny in his pocket? It seemed more difficult to believe, now he was here once more, that his father could have kept his grudge against him to the last.

He wandered on aimlessly along the cliffs. The thick clumps of gorse were glowing, with their rich golden tints, in the early sunshine. Here and there he stood on the edge of a narrow ravine, dipping down into the sea, with the water tumbling to and fro with the tides in the chasm below. In every cleft grew some green outgrowth of the spring, concealing the gray and jagged points of the precipice under the ceaseless flutter of their leaves.

The shadows from the sky slept upon the sea, moving slowly across it with the soft passing away of the clouds. It was supremely quiet. As far as his eye could reach the water was rippling gently, without a sail upon it to break the monotony. There was no sound except the singing of the birds and the ceaseless moan of the sea.

"By George!" he exclaimed, "it's enough to send a fellow to sleep for evermore! I must get some life into this place, or march off again, and make myself scarce. And what's the good of staying here, aggravating myself? I'll see what Ernest is willing to do for me, and then I'll be off."

By this time he was high enough on the cliffs to look down upon Rockwood, nestling in its own little glen. The place was almost as familiar to him as Clifford Grange, for he had been a great favorite with Squire Symons in his boyhood. He saw a woman leaving the house by the side entrance, and begin to climb the steep path which led to where he was. It could be no one else but Ruth Symons, who had been the object of his first boyish love.

Charles loitered about to meet her, with a smile at his own folly ; yet with his pulses throbbing a little faster, as this lightfooted figure drew nearer. Jenny Britton had told him the day before that Ruth was the handsomest woman in the neighborhood. Excepting Rose, Jenny had added. Now he had seen Rose he acknowledged that Ruth might be very handsome, without being quite as lovely.

Had Ruth still that soft, colorless, creamy complexion, with those dark liquid eyes he remembered so well? It was certain she could not lose her shapely, well-poised head, and her stately presence, though she was no longer a young woman. She must be two years older than himself, and he was over thirty. Over thirty years of age! It was enough to make any fellow feel serious to be that age, and know he had not a penny of his own.

The woman was sufficiently near to him now for him to see that she was not Ruth, but Julia Rush. Yet Julia was no unpleasing object to look upon. Her face was a rich brown, well shaped and handsome, and her bold black eyes were bright enough to invite a second glance. She had caught sight of him, and recognized his figure as it stood out clear against the sky on the brow of the cliff, and she was redoubling her speed to overtake him.

There was some spirit in a woman who could tear along like that, he thought. It occurred to him that Julia had been the first to welcome him when he was tramping, footsore and heavy-hearted, down the road to Clifford. He must wait and speak to her, and give her one of the gold pieces with which his mother had filled his purse yesterday ; for Charles was lavish with his money when he had any, and he fancied he should like to see the glitter in Julia's eyes when the coin was transferred from his hand to hers.

"Good-morning, Julia," he said as she approached him closely, panting and breathless, with her red lips parted and her cheeks flushed. "I never saw you again the other night ; but I did not forget you. I wanted to give you a keepsake for being the first to welcome me home. Here, take this, and buy yourself a gown, or something or other."

Julia had not found her voice yet, but she turned away indignantly from the proffered gold. It seemed to her heartless in him to offer it to her, who had met him, ragged and almost barefoot, tramping homeward like a beggar.

"Put it up, Master Charlie!" she cried as soon as she could speak ; "put it up. I haven't kept you in my mind all these years to need any thing like that for a keepsake. If you'd brought me any bit of a trifle from foreign parts, I'd have kept it till the last day of my life—ay, and had it buried with me in my coffin! Night and day you've never been out o' my mind, and do ye think I'll take money from you now?"

"By George!" he ejaculated, gazing curiously at the agitated woman.

"Nobody wanted ye back save me!" she went on eagerly ; "they're a set o' traitors, every woman's son of 'em! Master Ernest is the landlord for them. They've never given you a good word nor a good wish. 'A good riddance!' says they. 'He's the rightful heir, is Master Charlie!' says I, 'And God Almighty will bring him back some day, and put him in his own place again!' And He has, bless His name!"

"I'm afraid He's had very little to do with my coming back," said Charles, "and He has not set me in my own place again."

"No ; but I can put you in the way to get back your own," she answered.

"How can you do that?" he asked incredulously.

"Listen to me," she said, in a low, eager voice, pressing near to him, lest she should be overheard even on the cliffs. "The day after th' old master died, toward evening-time, I was out here along these very cliffs, looking after the geese that had strayed away from the fallow-field, and who should I see but Master Ernest comin' along i' the dusk.

"It was bleak and dull, and the wind was risin', and I wondered to see him goin' off to Rockwood so soon after he was gone, only I knew he was courtin' Miss Ruth, and maybe he was eager to tell her all the news. But instead of goin' straight on he kep' walkin' up and down, up and down, one way one minute, and the next way the next minute, all in the dusk and the cold, and I hid behind the furze, hardly knowin' why.

"I'd been full of you all day, thinkin' as how you'd come home again to be master, and there'd be good old times all over again, and I was overjoyed like. Well, I watched Master Ernest pull a paper out o' his breast pocket and begin to tear it up into little tiny scraps, and strew them about as he wandered up and down.

"When that was done, and he was off to Rockwood, I stole out, and searched up and down, walkin' where he walked, and pickin' up every scrap I could see. Some had blown away with the wind, and some had fallen over the cliff ; but I lay down and crawled to the edge and stretched over as far as I durst and snatched up two or three off the brambles below me. It was almost dark, and when I came first thing in the morning there wasn't one to be seen."

"And what have you done with them?" he asked as eagerly as she had spoken.

"I've kep' them safe, every one," she replied. "I never durst tell nobody ; for they're all traitors, and took Master Ernest's side as soon as they heard he was to be master. But I can't make nothin' out of the bits ; I'm no scholar. They're all here in a little silk bag I made on purpose, and they've never been out o' my bosom these ten years. If we could find some shelter, we could look at them at once."

"Yes, yes!" he said fiercely. "I always suspected some foul play."

Julia's black eyes were riveted upon his face, and he could not fail to see that she had both a profound sympathy for him and an equally profound belief in the importance of her communication. They sought a sheltered nook under the brow of the cliff, and he sat down beside her, while she emptied her little silk bag into her lap. It was a moment of intense happiness to Julia, one she had been dreaming of and looking forward to all these years, and the reality was more blissful than the anticipation.

The possession of this little silk bag had been like a secret distinction to her, which had made her hold herself aloof from all her village suitors. She had given herself airs in the sight of all her world, and had often been laughed and jeered at for her assumption of superiority. The little seed of ambition sown many years ago had sprung into a great tree, and she was sitting under the shadow of it with great delight.

The rightful heir of Clifford was here, close beside her, bending over the treasured scraps of paper, and arranging them with more practised fingers than her own. She could scarcely breathe for very happiness. Was she going to replace him in his lost inheritance? Would this cherished secret of hers make him again the master of Clifford? If it did, how would he reward her?

A blissful vision flashed across her excited brain of being his wife. Why not? Other women as lowly born as herself had married gentlemen of far higher degree than Charles Clifford, who had never seemed as far removed from the rank of her own class as Ernest did. Julia would never have dreamed of marrying a learned scholarly man; but Charles had always chosen the company of people below him, and accommodated himself to their ways.

He was sitting now at her side in close contact, as any fisherman or farm servant in Clifford might have done, who was accustomed to rest under the first hedgerow, or ridge of rock. She had long been striving to make herself a lady, and she indulged the happy belief that she was very superior to the women of her own station. She was almost Charles's equal. Why should she not become his wife and mistress of Clifford, if she played her cards well?

As Julia dreamed these dreams Charles diligently fitted in the morsels of yellow and stained paper upon her lap. Most of them were quite blank, with not a single character upon them. Those that contained some writing did not fall in consecutive places. Still there was sufficient to prove to him that the handwriting was his father's, and there was a date of which the last and least important figure was missing—"Feb. 10, 184-." He found also the word "y," and the half word "wi—." Charles stared at these fragments with a blank and puzzled expression, not with the triumphant air Julia was hoping for. She ventured to lay her own hand upon his to arouse his attention.

"What is it?" she asked; "what do you make out? Is it th' old master's will?"

"I can't make it out," answered Charles, "but there's some foul play in it, I'll swear. I never believed my father would cut me off, his only son. No, no. You're a jewel, Julia, I shall never forget what you've done for me. How can I repay you? Tell me, for I'm ready to do any thing you ask—in reason."

He dropped his voice over the last words, and Julia did not catch them. She shrank from the idea of having gold offered to her again by him; no lady could take money for any service she might render. Her color came and went, as he looked at her for a reply.

"Not now," she said; "wait till you're master of Clifford again, and then I'll tell you.

(To be continued.)

THE SAVIOUR'S GOLDEN RULE.

S. S. Lesson for March 7, Matt. 7 : 1–14. Golden Text, ver. 12. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

OUR beloved Lord and teacher, having first taught the rudiments of the laws of His kingdom in the Sermon on the Mount, and then contrasted the law of God under another dispensation with His own teaching, continues in chapter 6 to establish God's just claim to our honor and our confidence; while in chapter 7 He proceeds to treat of the relations which we, as children of God, bear to one another. First of all He attacks the strongest of all propensities, the spirit of judgment. "Judge not that ye be not judged." Oh, how this strikes at the root of much of the conversation among God's children, who recount and debate upon the faults of others! How it strikes at the root of many sins of thought, when unkind and harsh reflections upon the ill-doing of others is indulged in, and no spirit of loving compassion prompts to yearning and longing for their deliverance, and to lying low before God in prayer for them until the evil is removed. "Thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest," says Paul (Rom. 2 : 1). How much afraid should we be to cast the first stone at another if we bore in mind the law of condemnation, "For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged, and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."

Continuing His teaching, He says, "And why considerest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye," etc. "Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam that is in thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye." Here is a law of the inner life. The eye is a delicate member, and none but they who see clearly have any power to detect defects in the eye of another. Exactly in the same way the conscience is a delicate member, and only such whose consciences are pure and unsullied have power to discern the state of others' consciences. We must see clearly, must have no object which impedes our own vision, no hindrance to our own sight, if we would be God's instruments to separate between men and their sins.

Next follows a passage which has been strangely misunderstood. "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and then turn again and rend you." Some believers say that they cannot think it right to announce the Gospel to everybody, lest perchance it should be to those who are not the elect of God, and who are consequently dogs and swine. We have no right to treat any one as a dog or a swine who has not proved himself to be such, and according to God's Word it is not the unconverted but the backsliders who are thus designated. When the Apostle Peter applies the proverb, "The dog is turned to his own vomit again, and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire," he is speaking of such as "have escaped the corruptions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ," and who are again entangled therein and overcome (2 Pet. 2 : 20–22). To such let us be careful how we speak of the deep things of God, or of any deep experience which we may have; they will only trample them under their feet until there is a confession and humbling before God.

Our Lord now teaches us from the example of our God how ready we should be to respond to the appeal of others. "Ask and ye shall receive, seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you: for every one that asketh, receiveth; and he that seeketh, findeth; and to him that knocketh, it shall be opened." Let us observe well that all is in the present tense; every one that asketh, receiveth, not that hath asked, not will receive. The moment of asking is the moment in which God undertakes the matter for us, although it may not turn out according to our preconceptions. The Lord Jesus shows us that no appeal to God can be in vain; the very nature of our God makes Him responsible for everything which is really committed to Him by His own children. But we must appeal to God, and not only express wishes. If asking does not succeed, then seek; if seeking does not avail, then knock. Prayer is no experiment; God is always conscious of His children's cry, although the answer may seem sometimes to tarry.

Perseverance in prayer is rare. Our dear Master says (Luke 18 : 1) that "men ought always to pray and not to faint." And the words of James 5 : 7, 8, are most needful for us when our intercession for others or for God's cause seems to be fruitless. "Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and the latter rain. Be ye also patient." Never let us forget that while we have one object in view—that for which we are interceding—our loving Father always has two; He bears also upon His heart the education of His children, and sometimes His tarrying is needful for this end.

But to encourage us He adds, "What man is there of you, whom, if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone? Or if he ask a fish, will he give him a serpent? If ye then being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things unto them that ask Him?" God is the Father of fathers, and He would be unworthy of the name of Father if He deceived a trustful and expectant child. But are our prayers really expectant prayers—so expectant that when we are asking according to the will of God, no apparent delay staggers us, and a denial does not so much as occur to us, this is prayer which knows the three degrees asking, seeking, knocking, and which results in receiving, finding, opening.

Our Lord annexes to this strong assurance of God's goodness the word "Therefore." "Therefore," He emphasizes, "all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets." Because God's heart is so great, and His hand so large toward us, we are bound in honor to have a large hand and a ready, and a loving, generous heart to others. As Christ put Himself by His incarnation into our place, so by love are we to put ourselves into the place of others, and to deal with them as we would be ourselves dealt with, for this is the doctrine of God, "the law and the prophets."

Our Lord in the end of His discourse makes a strong appeal with regard to the very groundwork of His salvation. He has been teaching something of the narrow way, but there is an entrance gate to be passed first before one step upon this way can be taken, and so He says, "Enter ye in at the straight gate: for wide is the gate and broad is the way which leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat." The broad way is the popular way; to follow the multitude is ever to do evil (Ex. 23 : 2).

Many of the feeble, almost useless, God-dishonoring conversions which we meet with arise from the fact that many who seek and find and accept Christ as a Saviour, who know the power of His blood to save from condemnation, remain in the straight gate and standing in the doorway. Instead of making progress on the narrow way, they hinder others from entering in by their inconsistency. God has adapted the gate to the way, the grace which separates us from our sins to the responsibility of a life and walk which is holy and divine. "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder" (Matt. 19 : 6). The word of God never contemplates such a thing as the bestowal of peace and pardon, which has been purchased by the blood of Christ, only for the enjoyment of its possessor. Christ gave Himself for us that He might redeem us from all iniquity and purify unto Himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works (Tit. 2 : 14).

The Lord's command is, Enter in, stand no more without. Really entered, there is no other foothold than the narrow way. The gate is Christ. "I am the door" (John 10 : 9), and every step is Christ; for He says, "I am the way" (John 14 : 6). Let none be daunted because "few there be that go in thereat." Every saved soul has gone in there, and although a narrow, it is a tried path, and safe. Oh, should there be some unconverted soul reading these lines, whose life until now has been all lost upon the broad way, turn now and face the matter! The Lord Jesus offers full pardon and full power to him who will enter in and cut the connection with his old life and thoughts and desires, leaving forever the broad way for the narrow.

FOREIGN TOPICS.

The Fifth and the Boldest Attempt to Assassinate the Czar of Russia was made February 17th. The Czar was sitting in his private apartments conversing with his daughter, who is married to the second son of the Queen of England, and who was on a visit to St. Petersburg. One of the imperial servants had announced that dinner was served, but the Czar continued talking with his daughter for a few minutes. Then he rose, and was about proceeding to the dining-room when the sound of a loud explosion was heard; and it was discovered that the room where the repast was laid had been blown up by dynamite, and ten soldiers, who were on guard in the room, had been killed. Had the Czar attended to the first announcement of dinner, he and his family must have been all destroyed. The scene is thus described by an eye-witness: "The lights were extinguished and the gaspipe burst. The princess, the officers, and the valets went blindly through the dark, and then poured promiscuously through the door of the royal apartments. The sovereign was found groping his way out of the fatal quarter. All who saw the sight—the picture of Alexander II. leading his daughter away from the mine of dynamite—say it was one that could never be forgotten."

The life of the Czar has for some time been one of daily torture. When he went abroad he was surrounded by a cloud of mounted officers, who concealed the carriage and protected the inmate with their bodies. In the palace he was accessible only to diplomatists, dignitaries, and officers of the household. At chapel detectives occupied seats that were formerly reserved for distinguished visitors. Detectives infested the kitchen. Every dish was tasted by persons of rank, specially selected for the purpose. The emperor did not even venture to open his letters, documents steeped in poison having repeatedly been sent to him.

It is conjectured that the plot was devised by some persons desirous of hastening the advent to the throne of the Czar's eldest son, who is supposed to be more liberal in his policy than his father. General sympathy is expressed for the Czar throughout Europe.

In the English Parliament some Excitement has been produced by a technical breach of privilege committed by Mr. Plimsoll, the well-known friend of the sailors. Mr. Plimsoll is anxious to promote legislation which will oblige ship-owners to carry grain in bags instead of in bulk. Two members of the House of Commons had opposed Mr. Plimsoll's motion, and he issued a placard denouncing them in very plain terms. He was called to account for this proceeding, and had to apologize. In his apology Mr. Plimsoll took care to insist that the passage of his bill was necessary in justice to sailors, and it is thought that his unparliamentary placard will not retard his bill. It is well known that many ships have been lost through the grain cargo shifting in the rolling of the ship, and thus preventing her righting.

An Afghan Debate.—In the House of Lords a brilliant assemblage, including five members of the royal family, assembled February 20th to hear the Duke of Argyll's attack on the Afghan policy of the government.

Lord Beaconsfield said the British Government considered that the time had arrived when they should settle forever who should possess the great gates of India. The policy of the Government, distinctly and repeatedly declared, had not swerved for a moment. Complete command of the great gates of the Indian empire had been obtained with absolute success.

Many things had occurred which the Government had not contemplated, but nothing had occurred which for a moment could induce them to modify or change their policy. He said they could not leave Afghanistan while it was in a state of anarchy.

The Groundless Nature of the Charges against General Roberts of wholesale executions in Cabul is shown by the following telegram he has sent to the English authorities in London: "No one was executed unless convicted of attack on the Residency. No soldiers shot for fighting against us." A convoy of treasure and ammunition reached Cabul safely on February 1st. The defences of Bala Hissar and the Shirpoor Cantonment are stated to be progressing very satisfactorily. There have been severe snowstorms at Cabul.

Persecution in Russia.—The Russian "Golos," in a leading article, calls attention to a case which, if, as there is every reason to believe, it is true, is calculated to excite great indignation. It seems that in the prison of Suzealya are at the present moment an Archbishop and two Bishops, of the Starolbryatsi or Old Believers. Their only crime is that of having held to their faith and performed their office accordingly; yet for this they have languished in confinement respectively twenty-six, twenty-two, and seventeen years. They have petitioned that the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Czar's accession would be a fitting occasion for granting them their release.

An Accident to the Princess Louise, Daughter of Queen Victoria, and wife of the Governor-General of Canada, occurred February 15th. She was driving in a sleigh with her husband and attendants to hold a reception, when the horses suddenly became unruly, and by the time they reached the lodge, at the main entrance, they were travelling at a rapid pace. An attempt was made to run the animals in, but without success, and in turning the corner the sleigh swung round with great force, striking a lump of ice and causing it to capsize. The terrified animals increased their pace and dragged the sleigh on its side for about 400 yards, until, nearing New Edinburgh bridge, the Hon. Mr. Bagot who was in a sleigh in front, with great presence of mind jumped for one of the horses' heads and succeeded in catching the reins. Then with a sudden jerk he partially checked the team, thus enabling the groom to seize the other animal.

The sleigh was then righted and the occupants assisted out and driven to Rideau Hall, when it was found that the Princess had received a contusion on the right side of the head and a cut on the lobe of the right ear. The other members of the party escaped with slight bruises.

The Rev. Dr. Alexander Keith, the Venerable author of "The Evidence of Prophecy" and other valuable works, who on his first visit to Palestine was accompanied by Drs. Black, M'Cheyne, and Bonar, died recently in England in his eighty-eighth year. He resided during the last years of his life in one of the resorts for invalids in the Midland Counties. He was able, with the aid of a lens, to read, and was conversant with all the current events in national and social life. He watched with interest European events, and especially is this the case with anything connected with the tribes of Israel and their restoration to their own land. His chief joy on the Sabbath was to hear one of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons. A little girl read to him, and he declared that "he had the best preacher and heard the best sermon in the town." Dr. Keith, in his last book, "History and Destiny of the World and the Church," shows that the Napoleon dynasty will be revived and regain dominion over Europe. He was not at all staggered in this belief by the temporary victory of Germany at Sedan in 1870.

An Eight-year-old Child Decorated.—Miss Esther Bowden, a little maid of eight years, living in Devonshire, England, has just received the medal of the Royal Humane Society, with a handsome testimonial explanatory of the circumstances under which she earned it. On November 30th she was returning home from Sunday-school with a younger sister and their governess. The governess suddenly turned giddy and fell into the pond, six feet deep, which they were passing. The brave little girl had the cleverness instantly to dispatch the smaller sister to the keeper's lodge for help, while she herself bent over the pool trying to lay hold of her drowning governess. This she did, but in the effort she overbalanced herself, fell into the pond, and sank. Never losing her presence of mind, she retained her grip of the governess, and when she rose t the surface she still held her by the right han while with the left she caught hold of some sho bushes. In this position they remained for abo five minutes, the child calling for help. At la a passing workman heard the cries, and helpe the governess and child out of the water. Th former was much exhausted and partially inse sible, but her brave little rescuer appeared qui uninjured.

The Salvation Army in England has Receiv substantial pecuniary aid from Miss Harvey, a elderly lady living at Leamington, England, wh died on February 1st. She gave personally to Ca tain Maycock, of the Salvation Army, who ha obtained some notoriety through being fined an imprisoned for obstructing the streets, 300*l*., an 1200*l*. more for the local cause. She has likewi left him the house in which she resided, and b queathed 1000*l*. to General Booth, of the Salv tion Army, for the cause generally, making total of $12,500, besides the house, which is wor $2500 more. She had given the Wesleya about $20,000. The Salvation Army is doing great work among the poorest and most degra ed classes, who are unable to contribute materi ly toward the necessary expenses. This libe bequest will encourage Mr. Booth in his labo Memory Refreshed by the Telegraph.—A Ge tleman who resided in Berlin went to Paris du ing the late International Exhibition. On l arrival he wrote home the address of the boa ing-house where he had decided on staying. few days afterwards, while taking a walk in t city, he lost his way, and to make matters wor could not recollect the name of the street wh his lodging was situated. In this dilemma thought of the letter he had written home, a the bright idea struck him of telegraphing to family at Berlin for the missing name. The ply came in half an hour, and he easily found way back. When the Christian strays from t ways of the Lord, and among the business of world and the vicissitudes of life "forgets name of his God and stretches out his hand t strange God" (Psa 44 : 20), he does not le his way back from the persons and things wh surround him. Happy is he if, when he disc ers his helplessness, he thinks of his home heaven and applies there for directions as to proper course.

A Bible with 168 Pins in it.—An Old L who had been from her youth a diligent Bi reader found in her old age that her eyes grown too dim to find her favorite passa So that she might not lose sight of them, stuck pins into them, one by one, and after death they counted one hundred and sixty-ei When people went to see her, she would c her Bible, and, feeling over the page after pin, would say, "Read there," or "Read her and she knew pretty well what verse was st by that pin, and what one by this pin. She c indeed say of her precious Bible, "I love commandments above gold; yea, above fine g they are sweeter to me than honey and honeycomb" (Psa. 19 : 10).

The Brutalizing Effects of Beer Drinkin Englishmen, on which Mr. Gough comme in his recent oration, is exemplified in a M chester newspaper report. It states that a sat down to tea with his wife, and after the went out to a public house, where he occu the honored and dignified post of chairman "free-and-easy." From this place at closing he returned, and finding his wife asleep, the of the pot-house deliberately poured paraffin her and the bedclothes, and setting then fire, burnt her to death. Yet this man sober was a kind and affectionate husband.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Orphans and lected children in England have attain world-wide celebrity, and the good work there is attested by philanthropists of that other lands. We hear with regret that a se outbreak of scarlet-fever in the girls' hom occurred. There were at the latest acc 153 children and adults suffering from the demic.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Single Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, MARCH 4, 1880. 14th Year. No. 10—New Series.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

ICTURE OF QUEEN VICTORIA, AND THE ROYAL PROCESSION at the Opening of the British Parliament on February 5th.

HE FAST YOUNG MAN. A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage—Touching Story of Uledi.

RNOLD PERCIVAL MONTAIGNE. (Continued.)

SIX ONE THINGS. A New Sermon by Rev. D. L. Moody—A Remarkable Case of God's Providence.

CURRENT EVENTS: The Utica Convention—The Indian School—The Secretary of the Navy on the Bible—The Christian Convention at St. Louis, etc.

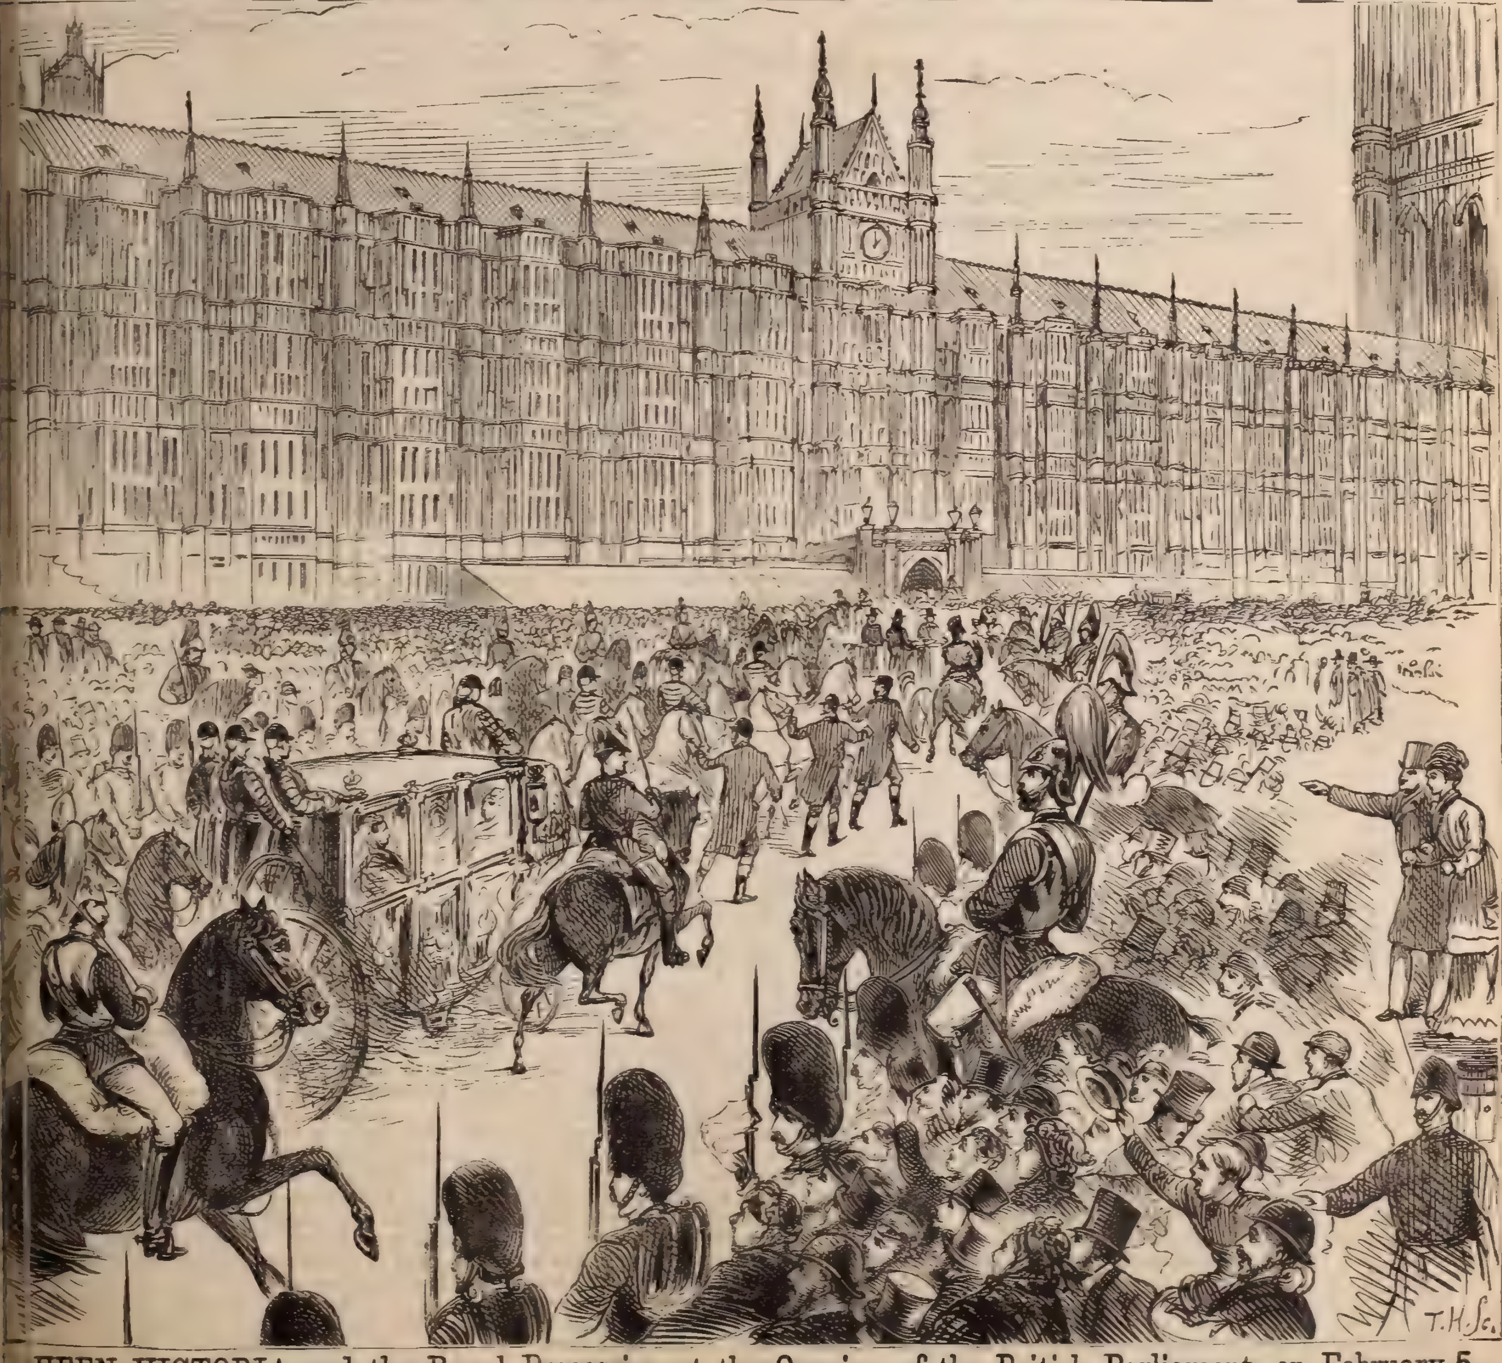
TEN SIGNS OF THE APPROACHING END, by Rev. M. Baxter. (Continued.)—Ethel's Trial.

EXPECTED PROOF OF PROFESSED LOVE. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH. (Continued.)

The False and the True. S. S. Lesson by Mrs. M. Baxter.

FOREIGN TOPICS: The English Parliament—German Military Preparations—A Dreadful Threat of the Nihilists—The Tay Bridge Accident Inquiry, etc.



UEEN VICTORIA and the Royal Procession at the Opening of the British Parliament, on February 5.

THE OPENING OF THE ENGLISH PARLIAMENT BY QUEEN VICTORIA.

The Queen and the People—From Buckingham Palace to Westminster—Arrival of Visitors—Anecdotes of Queen Elizabeth—The Yeomen—Ordeal of Battle—The Present Parliament—An American Gentleman's Difficulties—The U. S. Representative—A Grand Spectacle—The Queen's Appearance—Reading the Speech.

WE give to-day on our front page a picture of Queen Victoria going in state to open her Parliament, on Thursday, February 5th.

The announcement, made a few days previously, that the Queen would again open Parliament in person, instead of by commission, was received throughout England with feelings of undoubted satisfaction by all classes. In the first place, the English people have very few opportunities of displaying their loyalty to their monarch by assembling to greet her in a royal progress; and in the second, there is a deep-rooted love for a pageant of any description, which the matter-of-fact ideas so prevalent in the present day have utterly failed to eradicate.

One question that exercised the minds of all concerned was the consideration of which for a few days previous had been of a character to damp the ardor of all but the most enthusiastic. Thursday morning, therefore, was looked for with much anxiety, particularly as the evening before, London was visited by one of the thickest and worst fogs that an extraordinarily foggy winter has produced. Though the morning broke in fog, it was not of that black and choking kind of a few hours earlier, but still sufficient to make any prolonged stay in the open air undesirable and uncomfortable.

THE WEATHER,

It did not, however, apparently have any great effect upon those who were determined to see the sight of the day—provided atmospheric conditions would admit of such a result—as from an early hour the whole of the route to be taken by the procession was fairly occupied by those resolved to be in time to witness the preparations for the coming event.

Perhaps of the whole of the ceremonies that from time to time take place in the metropolis there is none that gives such a small display to the visitor as the state procession through the Park from the character of the route preventing the profuse manifestation of bunting and colored baize that would inevitably result from a progress through the streets. The principal signs only appear at almost the finish—namely, from the top of Parliament Street to the entrance of the House of Peers.

BUCKINGHAM PALACE TO WESTMINSTER,

Nearly all the houses in the former thoroughfare were decorated in some way or another, and the majority of them had rows of seats arranged outside, the scarlet cloth on which lent brilliancy to the scene. At the foot of Westminster Bridge and at Great George Street, as well as at all entrances around Palace Yard, strong barriers were erected, which enabled the police to easily keep the difficult place of convergement from various quarters quite clear. Inside the railings of and St. Margaret's Church small stands were erected, in which the friends of Dean Stanley and Canon Farrar found accommodation, the view extending completely to the Peer's entrance to the House of Lords, where a canopy of red and white striped awning had been put up. The only signs of any thing unusual at the Government offices was the draping of some of the Home Office balconies with scarlet cloth. Between the Abbey and the Church were the Westminster scholars, whose hurrahs were specially audible.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY

Railway trains brought numbers of visitors from all parts far and near, and great was the gratification expressed when, between eleven and twelve o'clock, the sun, after a great struggle, broke through the clouds, giving promise of the advent of "Queen's weather."

That there should be a display of scarlet and gold liveries, black, bay, and cream-colored horses, guards of Grenadiers, an escort of gayly-caparisoned and helmeted Lifeguards, postilions, and Yeomen of the Guard, and policemen, gayer than usual in their full-dress uniforms, without a ray of sunlight to bring out the beauties of the scene, was felt to be almost a public calamity.

As half past twelve approached the throngs of people, both in the streets and park, gradually increased, the pleasant change in the weather having evidently no inconsiderable effect upon the spirits of all concerned. With the advent of the sun jocularity, which, up to that time, whenever it had appeared was of the most forced character, once more resumed its sway in the London crowd, bringing forth frequent ebullitions of that description of wit, often degenerating into horse-play, which characterizes the genuine Londoner.

The number of police under orders were 3422 of all ranks, including over 100 mounted men, and nearly 200 plain-clothes members of the Criminal Investigation Department, judiciously distributed throughout the line of route amongst the crowd.

EMBARKATION AT OSBORNE.

The Queen left her palace at Osborne, in the Isle of Wight, at ten o'clock on Wednesday morning, and was to have reached London at half past one, but the dense fog considerably delayed her arrival.

Her illustrious predecessor, Queen Elizabeth, however, was once detained on a similar occasion by far more serious troubles. She was on a visit at Cranbrook a few days before the opening of "the House," when the fullers, who for conscience's sake had fled from Flanders and settled near that town, wished to show the Queen some specimens of their skill as woollen workers and fullers. Elizabeth passed through their settlement and stayed for the night at a mansion now owned by Viscount Cranbrook.

The next morning, on her return to London by way of Staplehurst, the road was found to be in such a wretched condition, in consequence of the heavy rains, that the royal carriage stuck fast. The sturdy fullers, however, lifted it out of the deep ruts, and, to enable the Queen to reach town in time, they laid down a number of thick blankets on the road, so that the equipage might pass over the deep holes and furrows without further inconvenience.

To illustrate the great difference between the days of "good Queen Bess" and the Victorian era, it may be mentioned that Queen Elizabeth lived much at her palace at Greenwich, and when she proceeded by road to Westminster to open Parliament, wherever she turned along the line of route every one fell down upon his knees. So pleased was she, on one occasion, with the great devotion and loyalty of the villagers of Bermondsey that she made them a grant of a piece of land, and endowed a fine school, which has since been rebuilt in Tooley Street, near London Bridge.

She was guarded the whole of the way by fifty gentlemen pensioners with gilt battle-axes, the originals of the Yeomen of the Guard, who attended Queen Victoria's carriage commanded by Lord Skelmersdale.

The route taken by Her Majesty on Feb. 5, from Buckingham Palace through St. James's Park, was at one time the main avenue of a dense forest, which was well stocked with game; and after Henry VIII. (in 1546) had formally opened the business of the House, he invited the Peers to mount their steeds and start for a hunt from the front entrance of Westminster Hall.

In 1646, just a century later, Dr. Sydenham, a celebrated physician, was sitting at his window in Pall Mall, then the royal route to the House, watching for the procession, and smoking a pipe, with a silver tankard before him, when a rough fellow made a snatch at the tankard and made off with it; nor was he captured until he reached the bushes in Bond Street! now one of the busiest and most crowded streets of London.

THE ORDEAL OF BATTLE.

In ancient times it was customary when the King came to open Parliament, for the gr officers of State who were charged with dereliction of duty to be tried by battle on open space bounded on the west by Westmins Abbey and on the south by the Houses of P liament. In the time of Edward III., John Visconti and Thomas de la Marche fough battle there before the King, who in the ind ment is styled "the most honorable prince in Christendom." De la Marche won the bat and was thereby held to have proved the charg cowardice which he made against his unfor nate opponent. The vanquished De Visc was given by the victor to the Prince of W as a captive slave.

It may be of interest to our readers to rem them that the

FIRST OFFICIAL ACT OF THE QUEEN,

after her coronation in 1838, was to open Parliament in person, a new one assembling the occasion, as on the death of the monarch then existing Parliament is always dissol
This is only the fifth time Her Majesty opened the business of the session in pe since the death of the Prince Consort in 1
The last occasion was in 1877, immediately a her proclamation as Empress of India.

In some respects the present session is

A CONSTITUTIONAL PHENOMENON.

The current Parliament has already sat the complete sessions which usage has regarde the full length of a Parliament under the Sep nial Act, and it has now entered its seventh sion, against that usage. But the Parlian itself is not yet the oldest even of Queen V ria's reign. It is just a month short of six since it first met. The Parliament of 1859 ed five weeks more than six years, and sat s times, but did not make seven full sessi
The present Parliament met on the 5t
March, 1874, and if it now sits till the usual in August it will have been longer in dur than any Parliament since the first Parliame George I., whch passed the Septennial Act.

At a quarter to two o'clock Her Majesty
Buckingham Palace, and as the great clo Westminster was striking the hour of two Royal cortége reached the House.

AN AMERICAN GENTLEMAN—

Mr. G. W. Smalley, the London correspon of the New York Tribune, thus describes hi ventures in attending the ceremony:

"As I passed on, I was repeatedly aske show my ticket, and on approaching the sanctuary a close examination of it took pla was so early that no similar pass, apparently come under the notice of the gray-haired c bearer who stood at the last doorway. 'W this?' he asked. I replied with humility t was an order of admission to the House of L proceeding from the office of the Lord Chamberlain, and signed by the Deputy Chamberlain. Satisfied on this point, the haired one next scanned me sternly from he foot. 'You are not in full dress,' said h answered that I believed my costume sponded to the requirements of the Lord C berlain. 'No,' rejoined he, with incre severity; 'you are in evening dress. Full means court dress.' I began to think.
not only in peril of being shut out from the mony I had come to see, but perchance of sent to the Tower for high treason. So I with as much polite decision of manner could muster:

"'I AM AN AMERICAN.

This dress is the dress I wear at the lev the President of the United States. It i the dress which the Minister of the U States wears at the Court of St. James.' settled the question, and I mounted the and passed into the space known for th being as the foreign gentlemen's gallery, w further ceremony."

IT WAS A GRAND SPECTACLE.

The House of Lords is a very interesting even when it is empty, but it is of course s its best on an occasion like that of Februa
The subdued gaslight gave warmth to a br

wrten, or he himself had foolishly said, it still renined a fact that Arnold Percival Montaigne we not a Roman Catholic; yet he could not dintangle his medley of ideas at the moment, an the Superior, from Mr. Gogharty's look an manner cognizant of the fact, gave him no tir to recover himself.

(To be continued.)

SIX ONE THINGS.

A ermon by Rev. D. L. Moody, preached at St. Louis, February 22d.

One thing thou lackest.—II. One thing I krw.—III. One thing is needful.—IV. One is yo Master.—V. One thing I do.—VI. Not one th g hath failed.

E have for our subject this afternoon six on things that it is very essential that every chl of God should have.

The first is in the eighteenth chapter of the go el according to Luke, and the twenty-second ve :

"ONE THING THOU LACKEST."

is young nobleman that came to Christ to in ire what he should do that he might inherit et al life, was a lovely character. It is written th the Saviour Himself loved him. But he lacd one thing; he lacked salvation; he lacked ernal life.

is very often said in our meetings by those co ng to present their friends and relatives for pr ers: "He is such a noble husband; he is su a noble father; he is such a noble young m. He only lacks one thing." Well, if he lacs that it seems to me he lacks everything.

l that a dead man lacks is one thing, and that is e. He would be alive and walking around if were not for that one thing. All that a dr kard lacks from being a temperate man is ju to give up his cups, but then it is a fearful th g to be lacking that one thing, and it mars hi whole life. All that a beggar lacks is one th g, and if he had wealth he would be a rich m, he would not be a beggar.

man may be a wealthy man, he may be an hc rable citizen, he may be a cultured man, he m be an educated man, he may be a good father m a good husband, a kind, gentle, loving son m all that, and yet if he lacks eternal life it wc d be better that he had never been born th to die without salvation.

w let the question come home to-day, do we ack that one thing—do we lack it?

Now, the next one thing that I want to ca your attention to, is that one thing that the bli l man knew, in the ninth chapter of John: hereas I was blind, now I see." He says hat was it? It was that "I was once blind an now I see." He knew what he had got: he kr his eyes were opened. There is assurance fo ou.

"ONE THING I KNOW."

is man had an experience. He had someth g to tell. "He answered and said, 'a man th is called Jesus made clay, and anointed mine ey and said unto me, go to the pool of Silo, and wash; and I went and washed, and I re ved sight.'" He just told the simple story. u need not tell any more, just your experien. That is all the blind man did and he had a od testimony.

Then said they unto Him, Where is He? H id, I know not."

e didn't tell what he didn't know. He just to what he did. Said he, "I don't know w e He is."

w, I am afraid if he had been like some of us e would have said; "Now there is going to trouble, and I will keep still and have nothin to say. I have got my sight and that is en gh. I will go off home and mind my own bu ness."

e what he says: "They say unto the blind m again, what sayest thou of Him?" He m ht have said, "I haven't seen Him. I don't kr w. All I know is that He just put clay on m eyes and sent me to the pool of Siloam to w, and I got my sight. I don't know; I haven't made up my mind yet." He might have evaded the question. He might have dodged it. But he had too much courage, for this man had got a blessing and he wasn't going to conceal the truth. He just spoke out what his opinion was, "He is a prophet."

But they said unto him, "Give God the praise; we know that this man is a sinner."

They are going now to get him to testify against Christ.

"He answered and said, Whether He be a sinner or no, I know not; one thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see."

And all the philosophers of that day couldn't beat him out of that. All the arguments they could bring forward couldn't make him believe he hadn't got his eyes open.

And when men try to tell us that we haven't been converted, that we haven't a different experience from what we had before we found Christ, we cannot help but laugh them right in the face. Don't we know? Didn't that man know that he had been feeling his way around Jerusalem, that he was blind, and was trying to feel his way for twenty odd years, and now he had his eyes open and walked right straight through the streets of Jerusalem without any one's aid, any one's help?

And so you can call that assurance. That man was sure that he had got his sight. And so we can be sure that we have got the eyes of our soul open, if we will. It is the privilege of each child of God to know that he has been born into the kingdom of light.

III. Well, the next one thing that is needful, is communion. The first thing is to be born of God; the next thing is to know it, and the third thing is to just be brought in communion with Him. Let me read:

Jesus answered and said to Martha, "Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things; but

ONE THING IS NEEDFUL;

and Mary hath chosen the good part which shall not be taken from her." Mary has chosen that better part. There was that one thing needful for Mary. It was to sit at the feet of Jesus and to listen to Him. Martha was busy doing something for Christ; but Mary was sitting at His feet, learning and receiving something from Him. Now, there is not a thing that I can do to please the Master so much as to sit down and let Him talk with me.

There is nothing that will glorify Him as much as to be in communion with Him at least one hour a day; and I don't believe any man or woman can be a healthy, growing Christian that does not have secret communion with the Lord and Master. That is God's college. You may go to all the colleges in America; you may go to all the theological seminaries and still not learn this lesson; and I believe that is one reason why so many men stop in God's work—they don't go through God's college; that is, they do not sit at Christ's feet and learn of Him, who is meek and lowly of heart. Now, one drop of God's power is worth more than all power there is in the world. It is not intellectual power; it is not the power of art or of culture that the churches need so much to-day as it is the power of the Holy Ghost. That is what we want. We want the Holy Ghost power coming down upon the Church. We can't get that communion if we don't commune with Jesus Christ; if we don't sit at his feet and learn of Him as Mary did and let Him talk to our souls. We can't get that power in the colleges and schools. We can only get that in God's college.

IV. ONE IS YOUR MASTER.

That is the next thing. Now, we have been brought through fellowship and through communion to sit at Christ's feet, and if this idea that He is our Master has taken full possession of us, then we shall live to please Him and not to please the public.

One is your Master. Is it the Lord or yourself? Is it God or is it pleasure? Is it God or is it business? Is it the God of heaven or the god of wealth? Now, what is it? We have only one master. Now, a great many peole bow down to the god of fashion; that is their god; they worship fashion; fashion is their master. Others bow down to public opinion. "What will they say at the club-houses? What will they say in society? What will they say in the circles of business if I come out and identify myself with the son of God and with the believers? What will they say?" Never mind what they say. If you are to be a child of God you are to trample public opinion under your feet. Take care of your character; your reputation will take care of itself. Live for another world, not for this. You can't live for both worlds at the same time; and if you want to be an out-and-out Christian and fit to be used by God, keep your eye single; let it be for the glory of God, not for your own glory.

V. Well, the next one thing is, "now and i would like to give you right here two C's—consecration and concentration. I think that we Americans need to be preached to on this very point—or these two points—consecration and concentration. There are so many professed Christians who are attempting to do so much; they literally do nothing. If they only concentrate their lives upon some one point and direct all their energies and strength right to that point—just centralize their lives upon some one thing to do, and thoroughly do it, do it well—their lives will tell, and when they are dead and gone they will be missed.

ONE THING I DO,"

If I am a Sunday-school teacher, let me take a class and hold it. If I happen to be called out of town on business, let me write letters to those children; let me follow them up; and if they leave this city and go to another city, let me follow them with letters, feeling that I must answer to God for that class; that I took that class to train them for God and eternity; that I am to do it thoroughly and well. Then God will bless such labor, if you just keep it up and do it heartily for him. "This one thing I do."

The afflictions, the troubles and the perils that we encounter in this wilderness of life ought to lift us higher and nearer to Christ and not drive us away from Him. If we keep our eyes single on this one thing; if we keep our eyes on Christ, looking to Him, working for Him, we shall not be disappointed or discouraged.

VI. Then the last one thing is over there in the last chapter of the Book of Joshua: "Not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the Lord thy God spake concerning you."

NOT ONE THING HATH FAILED.

This old man was going to his rest now, in the meadows of Hermon. His locks had turned gray. For one hundred and ten years he had tried the God of the Hebrews, and had found Him true.

Where has God ever broken one promise He has made? Man has broken his word. God has never broken His word. These promises are true, my friends, and whenever you come to the promises you may know that they are going to be fulfilled. "Heaven and earth may pass away; but God's word shall not pass away; not one jot nor one tittle of His word shall fail.

"God's promises are not dated, and because I don't get my prayers answered just the day that I want them and just the way I want them, it is no sign that God is not going to answer my prayers. He will do it in His own time, and all true prayer is answered because we finish by saying, "Not my will but Thine be done."

So we must not doubt God's word. God's word is true, and all the promises He has made are yea and amen, and He will fulfil every word. And what we want is just to trust Him. Some one has said there is not a sorrow without a comfort; there is not a desert without a fountain; there is not a night without a morning; and there is not a ripple of sorrow that shall cross our path, but there is comfort in Christ if we will go to Him for it. He has promised to bind up broken hearts, and He has promised to comfort those who mourn, and let us take Him at His word and believe what He has promised.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

THE aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50

per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to MR. BENJAMIN AITKEN, 63 Bible House, New York. The paper may also be obtained weekly from all newsdealers in the United States and Canada.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of specimen copies to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

SUBSCRIBERS frequently write to us for single copies of the CHRISTIAN HERALD. We always endeavor to oblige them, but single and occasional copies can more easily be obtained from a newsdealer. Sometimes we receive complaints that the CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer. Such complaints are promptly attended to, when made to us; but in all cases we desire that our friends will give the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

LAST week's edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, February 25th, at 8.30 P.M., at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Republican Convention of New York, held at Utica on February 25th, instructed the delegates to vote for General Grant. This result is a triumph for Senator Conkling, whose brilliant speech and skilful management had a powerful influence in the convention, as Don Cameron's had at Harrisburg. The majority for Grant was only 37 in a vote of 397; it is therefore obvious that the third term is not a thoroughly enthusiastic movement in New York State. For all practical purposes, the small majority will be as useful at Chicago as a larger one, but its moral influence on other States will be much reduced by its proportions.

The Vermont Convention, which met on the same day, urged the nomination of Senator Edmunds, but did not instruct delegates.

The Democratic National Convention will be held at Cincinnati on June 22d. This selection is not considered to indicate a victory for any candidate, although prominent Democrats believe it to be an augury of defeat to Mr. Tilden, whose conduct of the campaign in the State election in New York was severely commented upon by members of the National Democratic Committee.

Encouraging Progress is being Made at the School for Indians at Carlisle, Penn. A visit of inspection was paid to it last week by the Secretary of the Interior, several members of the House Committee on Indian Affairs, and two members of the Board of Indian Commissioners. The result was considered very satisfactory, and much surprise was manifested at the proficiency of the children in arithmetic reading, etc. To appreciate the full significance of this examination, it should be remembered that it was conducted in a language of which they knew nothing a few months ago, and that the Indian in his native state finds the mystery of figures the most incomprehensible of the enigmas of civilization.

The boys are learning to assist the blacksmith, the carpenter, and the shoemaker who are connected with the establishment. They are reported to be tractable and willing, and promise to become efficient mechanics. The girls are being taught coarse needlework, cooking, and general housework, and manifest a disposition to become expert in a short time.

The opposition of the Indians to the education of their children is reported to be dying out, and letters have been received by the Secretary of the Interior from several of the Indian agencies, representing that the Indians are now willing to send as many children to school as the Government will make provision for.

A bill is pending before the Indian Committee of the House, making provision for a number of Indian schools similar to that at Carlisle; and it was in this connection that the visit of inspection was undertaken. It is probable that in this experiment lies, under the blessing of God, the solution of the vexed Indian problem.

The Real Cause of the Prominent Position held by the United States in the great family of nations was pointed out by the Hon. Richard W. Thompson, Secretary of the Navy, at a meeting in Association Hall, New York, on February 22d. He said: "What has made this country great? Other nations have been struggling for centuries, while this country has been only one hundred years in existence, and it yet stands in the first place. The answer is plain. Our fathers brought with them across the briny deep the Holy Word of God. Herein is the mystery, if there be any mystery, about our grandeur. It is the Bible that has made us great. We are a Sabbath-keeping people. Men say we have no power to interfere with the natural right of individuals—that a man may spend Sunday as he pleases. But society has a right to make laws for its own protection. I take it there is no principle better fixed in the American mind than the determination to insist upon the conformity by foreigners to our Sunday legislation. A government without the Sabbath cannot stand long enough to totter and fall of itself."

Those Veterans of the famous War of 1812. who are living in the vicinity of New York were seen on Sunday, February 22d, sitting in the pew once occupied by George Washington in St. Paul's church. It was Washington's birthday, and the white-headed comrades of the Father of his Country chose this way of showing their respect for his memory. Dr. Mulchahey, the pastor of St. Paul's, in the course of his sermon, welcomed the brave defenders of their country who fought in that war so many years ago, and trusted that they were engaged in fighting the good fight which would only end when they were called hence.

The Christian Convention at St. Louis, over which Mr. Moody presided, held its sessions on February 24th, 25th, and 26th. There was a large attendance both of ministers and laymen, representing all denominations of Christians. Among the subjects discussed were "How to reach non-church-goers," "What can be done for Young Men," "Cottage Meetings," "Parlor Bible Studies," "How to promote Christian Temperance," etc. The meetings were remarkable for the earnestness and practical interest manifested by all present, and an apparently sincere desire to find the best means of spreading the Gospel among the masses. Earnest prayer is being offered that the practical suggestions made, and the free interchange of ideas, may be blessed by God to the stirring up of God's people to work for Him, and to the conversion of many souls.

The Sudden Death of Dr. C. P. Bush, the New York Secretary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, is a loss to the cause of missions which will be severely felt. On Sunday morning, February 22d, he delivered his lecture on "Fifty Years' Mission Work in Turkey," in the First Congregational Church at Albany, and had an engagement to address the Sunday-school at three o'clock in the afternoon. But between the two services, while sitting in the house of a friend, he was seized with illness, and expired before medical assistance could be procured. Last summer and fall he spent Great Britain, where he visited the venera African missionary Moffat, the father-in-law Livingstone; he happened to be in the rooms the London Missionary Society at the time wh the tidings of the death of Dr. Mullens were r ceived; he also attended the Conference of t Evangelical Alliance at Basle. Thence he tra elled to Constantinople, visited Smyrna, Eph sus, and other places of Christian interest, a the classic scenes of Greece. He was obliged abandon his project of travelling into Cent Asiatic Turkey, where his daughter is a missi ary; he returned in the early winter to chosen work.

Dr. Bush was sixty-five years of age at t time of his death. He was ordained in 18 and became Secretary to the Board in 18 The disease which removed him from the sce of his labors was an organic affection of t heart.

A Floating Church was Dedicated on Sund February 22d, in the river at the foot of Hend son Street, Jersey City. Flags were hoisted the craft in the river, and there appeared to a general feeling of rejoicing among the cre Some time ago Captain Nicholls, a retired s man, who accumulated a fortune at the bu ness and is now living at leisure, conceived idea of such a place of worship. To secure means with which to build it, he starte subscription, and gathered in about $300. contributed as much more from his priv means, and three weeks ago had the deck one of the boats in the cove cleared for building. On this he erected a plain woo structure, capable of accommodating about worshippers. On Sunday afternoon the float church was opened for worship. Several of ministers of various denominations in Jer City have consented to fill the pulpit on Sun afternoons, and there are encouraging prosp of great good being done.

A Check for Fifteen Hundred Dollars sent a few days ago by a business man at Louis, to a neighbor whom he had wron some years before of that amount. He listened to the preaching of Mr. Moody, and Holy Spirit had blessed the word to his con sion. One of the first things he did when had found peace was to draw this check, t showing the influence his change of heart over his life in the world.

The Headquarters of the Woman's Natio Temperance Union have been established at Bible House, New York. Miss Frances E. lard is President, and Miss Mary T. Burt Se tary. The inauguration of the new centre t place February 26th, at which the Hon. Will E. Dodge delivered an address, and Miss Est Pugh, one of the original "crusaders," sketc in a short but vivid manner the history of movement. Very encouraging reports have received from other cities, and it is believed the prospects of blessing on the woman's w are very hopeful.

Major Whittle has Closed his Evangeli work at Rochester, Minn., after a fortnight very earnest and apparently successful la with the co-operation of four churches. evangelist went immediately to Mankato, M

Irish Famine Relief Fund.—Contributi received up to Monday, March 1st:

Balance from last week	$
Miss E. Johnson, Saybrook, O.
Collected by Wm. Janney and Wm. Johnson, Carthage, Mo.
H. W. B., Owosso, Mich.
Robt. Morrison, Mt. Sterling, Ill.
E. T. Stoddard, Cresco, Ia.
A Friend, Lawrence, Mass.
S. T., Silver Creek, N. Y.
Rev. Jno. Branston, Plum Hollow, N. Y.
Mrs. Mollie E. Rogers, Toccopola, Miss.
J. T. Rogers, " "
J. S. Furr, " "
Frank Sauter, " "
R. E. Journett, " "
Fred. Vockel, Pittsburgh, Pa.
	$3

Disastrous Fire, Resulting in the Destruction of property valued at a million dollars, and the loss of two lives, broke out on Broadway, New York, February 20th. The buildings destroyed were occupied by several wholesale dry-goods firms, whose stocks, when once the flames seized them, were rapidly consumed. The premises, though very deep, had only a small frontage, and were therefore difficult of access to the firemen, who found their most effective position was on the roof. The brave men held their dangerous position for some time, but at length a [illegible] crash was heard, and to the horror of those who witnessed the conflagration, two firemen were seen to fall through the opening into the burning mass beneath. They were burned to death almost instantly. The men were much respected by their comrades, who were deeply affected by the sad occurrence. They were remarkable for their courage, and one of them wore a medal commemorating his daring rescue of a man and woman from a burning building in North William Street, three years ago.

Mr. Pentecost's Work at Detroit is Receiving abundant blessing from God. A correspondent of the Daily Witness writes: "All the meetings are crowded to overflowing, and the Evangelical clergy and ministers attend as often as possible on the platform. Undoubtedly a great awakening has been had both in Detroit and Windsor. Multitudes have come and accepted Jesus, and many are on the point of doing so. The interest is increasing every day and spreading over parts of the city, the inhabitants of which do not usually attend churches.

"On Monday evening all who have been converted or brought back to Christ are to give in their names, and write in a book what denomination they wish to connect themselves with, that the pastors may be able to aid them in their further course."

The Death of Mr. Benjamin Brandreth, the manufacturer of the noted Brandreth Pills, occurred in New York, February 19th. He enjoyed a high reputation in the city among local philanthropists for his ready and liberal contributions to public institutions. It was mainly through his efforts that Trinity Church, Sing Sing, was erected. His career in this country shows how large a harvest may be reaped here by judicious enterprise. He was born in England in 1808, and came to America in 1837. Here he introduced his medicines and advertised them freely. The rates of advertising were then low, but for some years he expended over $60,000 a year in that way. He leaves an estate valued at about two million dollars.

Gratitude for Afflictions.—The Rev. H. O. Sheldon, of Oberlin, Ohio, relates the following: "Once I called at a cabin on a pastoral visit to a maiden lady, whose infirmities allowed her very seldom to attend preaching. I found her with every limb distorted. Her clinched hands could only be opened enough to hold the crutches, with which, at times, she could walk a little. Upon inquiring if she was the subject of much pain, 'Oh yes,' she replied, 'I have not had one night's sleep for pain, these seventeen years. I doze at turns, and lie awake and think about God and Jesus.' Upon my quoting, 'And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God,' with emphasis she said, 'Oh yes; I was a vain, proud, unconverted sinner, and God sent this rheumatism and took away my beauty and my health, and made me a poor, deformed cripple, and set me to thinking, and taught me to love Him.'"

A Man Died to Save his Tribe in Arizona some years ago. Mayor Prince, of Boston, Mass., related recently an incident he had heard from General Averill, who had commanded in the U. S. army in Arizona. The general stated that while he was there an Indian slew a white man, and then made his escape to the woods. Orders came from Washington to demand the murderer from his tribe, and to inform them that unless he was delivered on a certain day war would be made on the whole tribe. The Indian chiefs with their followers hunted for the murderer for several days, but failed to find him. They held a council, and sent a deputation to the commander of the U. S. troops, saying they could not discover the fugitive, but would continue the search, and would deliver him as soon as he could be found. But the commander said his orders were imperative, and that unless the man were brought in, dead or alive, he should commence war on the day named. Another fruitless search was made, and another council was held, when one of the warriors said, "We cannot find this man, and they will make war upon our tribe; our women and children will be killed; take me and shoot me, and lay my body down before the officers." And after a while this was done. The warrior was shot, and his body was laid at the feet of the officers.

The noble act of this Indian in dying to save his people reminds us of the atonement of Christ; but it has this difference—that while the Indian died for his friends, "God commendeth His love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us" (Rom. 5 : 8).

A Remarkable Manifestation of the So-called Spiritualists which has puzzled spectators perhaps more than any other, is that of a man in a state of trance, professedly under the influence of some deceased scientific man, discoursing intelligently on a scientific subject of which in his waking hours he knew nothing. This phenomenon has unhappily convinced some persons who were unconvinced by puerile manifestations. The Rev. Joseph Cook, in his latest Boston lecture, described the way in which this might be done. He said that Prof. Grimes, of Chicago, once explained the structure of the brain to a young man under the influence of magnetic mesmerism, and told him the information all came from Spurzheim, the noted phrenologist. A few days afterward, the young man was mesmerized again before an audience, and he then delivered a lecture lucidly describing the brain and its operations, and said that he was the medium of Spurzheim. Some of the audience were aware that the young man was utterly ignorant of anatomy, and would doubtless have believed his assertion, had not Dr. Grimes explained the mode by which he acquired his knowledge. It is very probable that other Spiritualistic phenomena might similarly be explained, if the exhibitors were not making money by the show.

A Religious Revival of a very Encouraging character has been in progress at the University of Middletown, Conn., for the past two weeks. The entire college is under its influence. On February 13th studies were suspended, and students and faculty devoted themselves to prayer. Fully four fifths of the students were present. The president impressively conducted the service, and the presence of the Holy Spirit was manifest. All classes of students were moved by the power of this awakening. Many conversions have already occurred.

The Loss which the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions will sustain through the failure of the bank in Liverpool in which it had funds deposited is $49,000. About $7000 only of this sum has thus far been made up by subscriptions.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works.—We have much pleasure in announcing that another large consignment of volumes by this eminent author and preacher has just been received. They are now on sale at the office of the Christian Herald, No. 63 Bible House, New York, and are offered at prices so low as to bring them within the reach of every one. Twelve Sermons on various subjects, with photograph of Mr. Spurgeon, price 35 cents. John Ploughman's Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents; in cloth, 60 cents. The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, a volume of fifty sermons, $2.50. The Treasury of David, a homiletical exposition of the book of Psalms, five vols., as far as Psa. 118, $3 per vol. Spurgeon's Birthday-Book. This popular gift-book contains a suitable passage selected from Mr. Spurgeon's writings for every day in the year, with a blank space opposite for autographs. The signatures of Mr. and Mrs. Spurgeon appear at their respective birthdays. The book is elegantly bound, and the price is 75 cents. Remittances should accompany orders.

EXPECTED PROOF OF PROFESSED LOVE.

A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"Shew ye the proof of your love."—2 Cor. 8 : 24.

Love the Outcome of Faith—Four Questions—I. What is the Excellence of this Love?—1. It is Divine in its Origin—2. Surpassing in its Energy—3. Vital in its Necessity—4. Warranted by Facts—5. Eminent in its Achievements—II. What is this Proof?—1. Toward God and the Lord Jesus—2. Toward God's Ministers—3. Toward God's People—4. Toward the Ungodly—III. Why is this Proof called for?—True Love longs to Prove Itself—That it may become a Blessing to Others—Because it is Reasonable—IV. Who calls for the Proof?—Our Lord—It should be Spontaneous.

In every believer's heart there is love to God. He cannot else be a child of God. In every Christian's soul there is love to Jesus Christ. How could he be a Christian otherwise? As a consequence of this, in every Christian's bosom there is a love to the brotherhood: "We know that we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren." In every Christian's breast there is also a love to all mankind. He practises that second great commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." The spirit of God has cast out the demon of selfishness; and in proportion as that is the case the man possesses the mind of Christ, which is love. As all the law is fulfilled in one word, which is "love," so the outcome of our holy faith is also contained in that one word, "love." Oh, that we were saturated with it!

Where there is true love in the heart it becomes a working principle. It does not lie dormant, but it works—works abundantly. It is a vital principle, and where there is life there is movement and a measure of activity. It is a principle that grows, and out of its growth there comes fruit. For these reasons, and in these ways, true believers give sure proofs of the love that is in their hearts.

I wish to speak to you, at this time, by answering four questions.

WHY SHOULD THIS LOVE BE PROVED?

I. First, what is the excellence of this love? that we should be so anxious to prove it? This Christian love must have some great worth about it, or else we should not be exhorted by the apostle once and again to prove that we have it.

1. First remember that true love to God and the saints in the Christian heart is divine in its origin. We should never have loved God if He had not first loved us: and unless His Holy Spirit had turned the stream of our affections in that direction, we should have run away from God and have hated God, but we should neither have loved Him nor His people. It is the nature of the seed of the serpent to hate the seed of the woman, and as long as we were under condemnation and wrath, and in our natural estate, we were on the serpent's side, and we warred against that which is good.

"The carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." If therefore we have even a spark of love to God, God must have given it to us. It is therefore a precious thing, because it is of God, and we ought to take heed that we assuredly possess it; and we also should endeavor so to live that others may be convinced that this divine principle rules our spirits.

2. As it is divine in its origin, so it is surpassing in its energy, for true love to God exceeds all other love. Does not Christ tell us that—that a man must love Him better than father or mother, or the dearest relative He has, or else he does not love him at all? Christ will not be put off with the leavings of our hearts. He must have our whole heart. All human affections, which are natural and proper, are to be held in subservience to this grand and master passion which is to set our soul on a blaze—love to God in Christ Jesus. He loves not Christ at all who does not love him first and best. This affection, like Aaron's rod, must swallow up all others, and our whole heart must belong to the Lord our God.

We must take care that we give proof of an affection which is so surpassing in its energy, for surely if it has such force it must produce its own proof. If it were some minor passion—some little narrow jet of flame that might light up a corner of our being, we might not be so particular about it, but if it is to fire our entire manhood it must produce some effect, or else we may well question whether we possess it.

3. This love is absolutely vital in its necessity. If it can be proved that a man does not love God, love Christ, and love his people, then the life of God does not dwell in him. Life and love are two words singularly alike, and when we get to the bottom and radical principle of the spiritual nature, we perceive that they are singularly bound up together, insomuch that "he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him."

These are some of the apostle John's great little words, which, in their miniature form, contain whole worlds of meaning. Beloved, we must love God, or else we are not in Christ. Hence the importance that the proofs of our love should be very distinct and unmistakable. We should make our calling and election sure; and those things never can be sure unless we have abundant proofs of our love. It is vital in its necessity.

4. However great that love becomes—and I have spoken of it as rising to a superlative degree—it is warranted by the facts of the case. Love to God—I will not spend a word in justifying it. Love to Christ—how can it be needful to commend it to you?

"Love so amazing, so divine, Demands our soul, our life, our all."

And it shall have it too. Do you not say so, my brethren? Do you not yield to this soft yet mighty bond—soft as silk, yet strong as iron? It holds us fast; we cannot escape from it. Not love Christ? Not love His people? Not love the world of sinners lost? Oh! sirs, surely we were of all creatures the most brutish if we were to dispute the necessity of love. "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye through His poverty might be rich."

Go and love Jesus Christ till men call you a fanatic. Go and love Him till you give all your goods to feed the poor. Go and love Him till you lie in a prison till the moss grows on your eyelids. Go and love Him till you burn to ashes at the stake, and you have not loved Him one whit more than He deserves. Oh! our best Beloved, thy deservings warrant us in permitting our zeal for thee to eat us up, and eaten up we would be for thy glory's sake!

5. This love to Christ has been in all ages very eminent in its achievements. Wherever love reigns in a Christian it makes him strong. Faith laughs at impossibilities, and cries, "It must be done;" but love performs the deed, for "faith worketh by love." Love is the right hand of faith. What have not men done out of love to Christ? Truly the time would fail me to tell of its exploits. What you shall do, dear sister, if you become full of love to Jesus, will astonish you; and what you shall do, dear brother, if the love of Christ burns through your soul, will far exceed what you have dreamed of as yet.

Oh, for more love! Let the martyrs tell you what poor suffering flesh and blood can do when love strengthens it. Let holy women that have debated and disputed and bled and died for Christ, in all their timidity and weakness made brave as lions for Christ, tell what love has done. Let the walls of the Colosseum at Rome, let the arenas of hundreds of amphitheatres tell how bravely men have played the man; how bravely women have met death for Christ's sake. All that the Church wants is the Holy Ghost to baptize her into the love of Christ, and nothing will be impossible to her.

Thus have I tried to commend this love, and surely we ought to be able to prove that we have it. If we have any question as to whether we have it or not, let us find no rest day or night till the grand debate is ended. We must love Christ or perish. Oh! by the certainty that His saints shall see Him face to face and be like Him, let us rise to something nobler in the form of love to Him than we have ever reached as yet.

This is the love which we are to give proof of.

II. Secondly,

WHAT IS THIS PROOF?

The text says, "Show ye to them, and before the churches, the proof of your love." What proof shall we show?

There are so many forms of action which would prove love to Christ that I cannot possibly go through them all, especially as each person, I believe, will give a different proof of His love. There is (to use a difficult word) an idiosyncrasy about each believer. He is a man by himself, and his love, if it is genuine, will take a form peculiar to himself in the proof which it gives.

1. Certain proofs look toward God and the Lord Jesus. If you love Him, you will keep His commandments, and His commandments are not grievous. If you love Him, you will seek to honor Him—to spread the savor of His glorious name. If you love God in Christ Jesus, you will be anxious to extend His rule over the hearts of men. If you love God, you will long for communion with Him: you will not be satisfied to live for days without speaking with Him. If you love Him, you will grieve yourself when you grieve Him; your heart will smite you when you have gone astray. If you love God, you will long to be like Him; you will strive after holiness.

If you love God, He will reign over you; Christ will be your King; your mind will be under subjection to Him; your thoughts will be guided by Him; your opinions will be taken from His word; your whole life will be seasoned by His Spirit which dwelleth in you. Do you not see that there are hundreds of ways in which you can show proof of your love toward God? Oh, that we may not be found wanting in any of these things!

2. We may show this love, in the next place, toward God's ministers. I cannot help mentioning them because the apostle so distinctly in this chapter speaks of himself and his brethren. And one special way of showing it is this: If they speak well of you, do not let them have cause to retract their holy boasting, and to say with tears, "I was deceived in these people." If any have brought you to Christ, be an honor to them and to the Gospel that they preach, because, dear friends, the world turns round, and however retired a minister may be, yet worldlings are sure to throw the inconsistencies of his people in his teeth.

They say, "That is one of So-and-So's people: see how he acts;" and our ministry is hindered, and our hearts are grieved, whenever those who profess to have been brought to Christ walk unworthily. Show us a proof of the love you often express to us as your servants in Christ Jesus by endeavoring so to walk that when we give in our account we may do it with joy and not with grief, for that would be unprofitable to you.

3. Next, show proofs of your love in reference to God's people. How can that be done? Some of you need to have this thing gone over with you because you have evidently forgotten it. If you are God's servants you love His people, and the first proof you should give is to go and join with them. Say, "Where the list of their names is kept I will count it an honor to have my name enrolled." Certain of you say "I should count it an honor, but I have hardly the courage to come forward."

What! have I been sitting these various days to see the timid ones, and have you not all come yet? We will have another time for you, then, and try if we cannot get you right, for really we are not so frightful as you think we are, and you need not be timid about telling to a poor servant of Jesus Christ that you really love th name of his Master. He will be glad, and will you be. Nay, but you say you are h afraid of yourself. I wish you were altogeth afraid of yourself. The more afraid of yours the better, for you are good for nothing in you self. But do not be afraid of trusting yours with Jesus, and when you have so done th the very next thing is to become

IDENTIFIED WITH THE VISIBLE CHURCH O CHRIST.

If you say, "I love the brethren," the bret ren may turn round and say, "Give us a pr of your love. Cast in your lot with us." I as she did who, though she had been a heath nevertheless clung to one who worshipped t true God, and said, "Whither thou goest, I w go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: t people shall be my people, and thy God God."

But when you have joined the church, th surely you should show a proof of your love a hearty fellowship with the saints. We do want you to put your name in the book and be a professor, and then to sit in one of th pews up in the corner and come in and go and never speak to anybody. I meet even with some who say, "I have been for months the Tabernacle, and nobody ever spoke to me

Well, I know that there are so many earn Christians on the watch here to speak with str gers that if you have not been spoken to it m be your own fault. Perhaps you are some dre fully stiff body, and you have frightened th I do not know, but it may be so. There some who look as if they said, "Do not co near me. I do not want any questions as me." We have some brethren and sisters will break through your stiffness though, I c say; but if it really is so, I am very sorry fo and it need not be so any longer.

Speak to somebody at this very service. not dislike to hear a low hum of godly conve tion before service begins, though some pe think it horrible; neither do I deprecate a l lingering upon the steps and around the bu ing; you are holding fellowship one with other, and I like that it should be so, for w not meet too often. It is no desecration of Sabbath or of the place of worship for Chris people to speak with one another to edificat When you join the church join it in earnest, converse much with the people of God, an your hearty zeal show them a proof of love.

And then unite with them in all their ser The school wants Sunday-school teachers. love Christ, you say, and you love the you show us a proof of your love. Come and in that good work. There is somethin other that you can do for Jesus, and for church; do it, and thus show us a proof of love.

Show the proof of your love by comfo the saints in affliction; by helping them as as you can when they are in need; by de ing their good name whenever you hear railed at; by suffering nobody to speak ag them falsely when you are by. Stand u them.

Show them the proof of your love by be with their infirmities. The church is not fect, and if it were it would not be perfect you had joined it. You who have so many mities yourself should patiently bear with infirmities of others. If the saints are n you would like them to be, remember, neve less, that they are dear to the heart of Ch and he perhaps sees in them beauties you would see too if you had more be yourself.

Perhaps your power to find fault arises your having so many faults yourself; and were more sanctified, and more like Christ would fix your eye as well upon the beaut their character as upon their defects. Sh the proof of your love. I am not speaki though I did not see among you abu proofs of your love; but I am speaking to vho perhaps, as yet, have never realized their osition of privilege in reference to Christ and o His people; and they have never let their earts go out as they should go out toward hose whom Christ has purchased with His re-ious blood.

4. Show us tne proof of your love to the un-odly too—to this great city of four millions. how us the proof of your love by trying to natch the firebrands from the flame. Be up nd doing. Stand at the street corners, if you an, and preach Jesus Christ. Scatter the rinted Gospel in every room to which you have ccess. Talk of Christ to your workpeople. peak of Him to your companions. Endeavor o spread this potent all-heal, this cure for all nanner of spiritual diseases, for otherwise, talk s you may, profess as you may, we shall have o say to you, "Show us the proof of your ove."

I have only given ou a sort of charcoal ketch of what might be the proof of your love: have not drawn the picture or laid on the olors. Think, dear friends, how you can give uch proof at once.

III. But now, in the third place,

WHY IS THIS PROOF CALLED FOR?

Somebody says, "Why am I called upon to rove my love?" Do not grieve even if I press very hard upon you, for your case will be mething like that of Simon Peter when he too as pressed exceedingly.

Peter was grieved when his Master said to im the third time, "Simon, son of Jonas, lov-st thou Me?" Now the Lord did not ask it be-use He doubted him, for He knew Peter's eart. Peter's appeal was a true one, "Thou nowest all things. Thou knowest that I love ee." Do not therefore resent it, and say, Why should I prove my love?"

No, but just listen. True love always longs to rove itself. It does not need a command to do . It is waiting for an opportunity. It is so ith your domestic life. You know that it is . I need not give instances. What a pleas-re it is to show love to those we love! In a r higher degree, what a delight it is to a Chris-an to do something for Jesus! If you have ever done any thing distinctly for Jesus, what rt of a child of God can you be?

I love my Master's service, and I can truly say at I think that I would do any thing for His eople: but I am not quite so sure about that I am about the feeling that I would do any ing for Him. When I get a hold of some-ing that is distinctly and undividedly for my ord's glory, I am so glad to do it. To break alabaster-box of ointment upon his head is a ch delight: truly it might have been given to e poor and have blessed the poor, but Jesus imself is best. "It is a waste," somebody urmurs. Yes, yes, but to be wasteful for Christ the noblest economy. O hearts that love your ord, never count the silver when you are spend-g for Jesus! Break the box! Pour out the ntment! The room will be filled with the erfume, and it will not be wasted. Even if ere were no nostril to smell it, if Jesus alone d the refreshment of it, it would be all the tter.

I like to enter the glade of a forest where ere are spots unseen of eye of man, and thick-s of brake through which nobody but the red er has ever passed. I delight to sit down by a tle rippling brook upon a bank of thyme un-secrated by human foot, and think, "This is od's garden, and every leaf waves for Him."

How dare the poet say that flowers which ere born to blush unseen are wasting their fra-ance on the desert air? Why, they are flower-g for God, and He delights in them, and they e just the best-used flowers in the world. h, to be just such a flower as that at times, and feel that you have got away—away from the rdens where men may come and praise or dis-aise, and offer mercenary prizes for flowers d fruits—away where God sees you, and de-ghts in you! We should try to work for Jesus ly. Proof is called for, not because Jesus doubts, but because He loves to please us by giving us opportunities of proving our love.

But one reason why we are called upon to prove our love is that it may become a blessing to other people. The Corinthians were to prove their love because the poor folks at Jerusalem were starving. It would be of no use for the Corinthians to sing a hymn about charity while the poor saints at Jerusalem had not a loaf to eat. No, they must prove their love, that it might be a benefit to others, and that the influence of that love might spread to others, because the apostle says, "If you Corinthians do not discharge your promise, those people at Macedonia will throw it in my teeth, and do nothing themselves, and therefore, for the sake of the churches in Macedonia, you must be liberal."

So, beloved, oftentimes one man, by serving his Master well, stirs up a whole regiment of other Christians, who become ashamed to be doing so little. I may preach a great many sermons, brethren, but they will do very little good compared with what your sermons will do if, as a church, you live up to the mark as Christians. If in holy love, and concord, and every grace, you abound, other churches will say, "Look at this church." Oh, that you may be such saints that others may be encouraged in their work for Christ by you! that is why you are asked to prove your love.

You are asked to prove your love, for it is reasonable that you should do so. God did not love you and keep it to Himself, and say, "My name is love, but I will do nothing." No: He gave His Son from His bosom, His only Son, and that Son He gave to die. God is practical. That which He feels He does: that which He speaks is done. We have many idle words, but the word and mind of God come out in deeds of grace. Is it not right therefore that we should give practical proof of our love?

IV. Time fails me, or I would have dwelt on the fourth point, namely,

WHO IS IT THAT CALLS FOR THIS PROOF of our love?

I will leave out everybody else but one, and say, it is your Lord, your own dying, living Saviour, who says, "Show me the proof of your love." I will tell you how He is saying it. Affliction has come into your house. There is a dear one dead; and Jesus says, "Now will you kick against me, or will you yield me your treasure? Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these dear ones? If so, thou wilt part with them and not complain." "Mary, dost thou love me better than mother, or sister, or friend? If so, thou wilt bless me when I take them away. Now is thy time; show me the proof of thy love by bowing before my chastening, and loving me still." Our Lord only takes from us what He gave to us; let us therefore bless His name. Bereaved one, that may be the proof of love to which He is calling you.

Perhaps you have had a difference lately with one to whom you ought to be united in friendship, and now your conscience is saying, "Christians ought to live in peace and love." But Satan is saying, "You were not to blame. Do not humble yourself before such a proud person as your opponent." But my Lord and Master says to you, "Show me the proof of your love. Forgive him for my sake even to seventy times seven; and if you have wronged him confess the wrong, and humble yourself for my sake. Because I washed my disciples' feet, show me the proof of your love by washing one another's feet." Attend to that admonition, I pray you.

But possibly there are some here who have had in their minds the project of doing something unusual for Jesus, or the church, or the poor, or for missions to the heathen. Satan has said, "You must not give so much as that." Jesus says, "I have prospered you: when others have failed in business I have taken care of you. Show me the proof of your love." Will you not hear His call? Do not hold back your hand, and do not want anybody to persuade you, because that will spoil it all. It must be spontaneous. It must come from your own heart, moved only by the Spirit of God, if you wish it to be accepted.

Perhaps I am addressing a young man who has been for years a member of the church; and it is crossing his mind, "What shall I do to show my love?" and it is his ambition to be a missionary in a distant land. Keep not yourself back, my dear young brother. Should it rend a fond connection, or cost you your life, give Jesus such proof of your love as His Spirit suggests to you. Or is it that you ought to speak to people about their souls? The Lord will throw somebody in your way. Give a proof of your love by a holy bravery, and speak right out for Jesus Christ, and do not be ashamed. The Lord invites you to a closer fellowship with Himself, to come higher up the mount of God, and to be more thoroughly consecrated.

I leave this with you. If you love Him, show it. If you do not love Him, tremble. I will not repeat what the Scripture says, as though it came from myself, but I would have you recollect it. Paul says, "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema Maranatha"—cursed with a curse at the coming of Christ. So it must be if you love not Christ.

Oh! if you do love Him, be inventive. Think of a new thing that nobody else ever did for Jesus. Strike out a fresh path. Deny yourselves comforts to have the comfort of proving your love, as His Spirit shall guide and help you; and to His name be praise evermore.

[Portion of Scripture read before sermon, 2 Cor. 8.]

[The prayers of the readers of this Journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors in America and England, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and for its weekly circulation of more than 175,000 copies to be blessed by the Holy Spirit to the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Mr. Spurgeon and Dr. Talmage especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

The Death of a Universalist, at Elmira, N. Y., is described as a warning to others by Dr. Peter Stryker. The Universalist was a Swede, who came to this country in 1864. He was possessed of considerable means, and spent his time in travelling. While camping out on a hunting excursion he caught a severe cold, which developed into pulmonary disease. He hastened back to New York, but was unable to get farther than Elmira, and there his sorrowing friends surrounded his dying bed. Being told that his hours were numbered, he expressed his willingness to die. But his friends were not satisfied about his spiritual condition, and met in another room for prayer that he might be fitted to die before the final moment came. After this it was noticed that a terrible fear of death came over him, and instead of his former callous demeanor, he evinced the utmost concern. He admitted that he had been trusting to the doctrine of universal salvation, and now found no comfort in it. At his request a Christian minister was sent for, and Dr. Stryker came. Faithful gospel teaching, aided by the working of the Spirit, in answer to earnest prayer, brought the dying man the better hope, and he departed rejoicing in the Saviour. But Dr. Stryker says he will never forget how utterly the Universalist doctrines broke down in the trying moment.

An Idol Unearthed.—An Arab Quarrying stone near Gaza recently unearthed the image of a god of the Philistines. The idol is fifteen feet high, and represents an aged man, with hair in long ringlets, and a long beard, one arm being crossed over the breast, while a drapery covers the shoulders. The pedestal bears no inscription, and is carved in one huge piece with the figure, which was found in a recumbent position, buried in the sand on the top of a hill near the sea, and is supposed to have been removed from its original site. The Pasha of Jerusalem has placed a guard over the image to preserve it from injury.

ETHEL'S TRIAL.

On a calm moonlight evening two persons were strolling up and down a path which ran under an avenue of trees beside a gently flowing river.

But the tranquillity without had no counterpart in the breasts of the two companions slowly pacing the narrow path. They were lovers, and were about to part, it might be for years, and this was the farewell walk at a familiar trysting-place. They had been companions from childhood, for the parents of both were not only neighbors, but friends, bound to each other by cordial liking and by the ties of Christian fellowship. The farms they occupied lay near each other, and the children of both families had grown up together as one family. David was a younger son, and when it became clear that he had conceived a passion for Ethel that was deeper-seated than mere boy and girl regard, the parents of both were glad that the affection which united themselves would live again in the lifelong union of their descendants.

After consultation and prayer it had been decided that David should accept a clerkship in a merchant's office in a distant city, which an influential friend of the family was able to place at his disposal. The salary was only $500 a year to start with, but a few years' hard work and strict integrity would be rewarded with an income on which he might support a modest home. Matters having been thus arranged, the young people had gone for a last stroll, on the evening prior to David's departure.

Not a word was said by either of constancy; that was understood, and either would have scorned to speak of that which each felt was beyond doubt. But one thing Ethel felt she ought to say, and that she hesitated to put in words. At length she said:

"David, dear, the excitements of city life—you will not let them draw you away from the Saviour?"

His reply came quickly, firmly, only too firmly, as of one "who thinketh he standeth:" "No, love, I am not so weak as to be moved by outward circumstances in matters of the soul."

So with a long, earnest farewell they parted, he to the city, she to toil patiently in the home and wait the glad news that her lover had won the prize which should make them one.

Two years passed, and news came regularly from the city office to the country homes of steadily advancing prosperity and bright prospects ahead. At length a happy commotion was caused by intelligence that a short holiday had been granted in the office, and David was coming home for a whole week. At length he came, and the night of his arrival was like a burst of summer light into a dark chamber.

But a cloud, at first no larger than a man's hand, appeared on Ethel's horizon before she retired to rest that night. Some incidental mention of the Sunday-school had been received by David with a gesture of impatience, and though fear, like a knife, had gone into Ethel's heart, no word was said, and she alone saw that David's love for Christian work was abated.

Conversation the next day elicited from him that his religious principles, or as he called them, his opinions, had undergone a decided change. They were, he said, "unsettled." Not that he accepted infidel dogmas, but he could not believe as he once had done. He had attended the ministry of a celebrated preacher in the great city who had taught that the opening chapters of the venerated Book were not history, but a drama, a mere fiction, and that the records of miracles and much else, scattered through the sacred volume, were but beautiful fables. From this ministry he had passed with other young men by easy stages to giving his Sunday to hearing popular lectures by men noted for the boldness of their utterance, and for what was known as free thought. Their teachings had destroyed his faith, and had given him in exchange nothing but uncertainty. He denied nothing, he affirmed nothing; he said, "I do not know."

"Not know!" exclaimed Ethel, "when the Word of God states these things as facts. David, you are breaking my heart."

"There," said David, in a soothing, caressing tone, such as one uses to a scared child, "do not worry your little head with these matters. Go on believing while you can; I do not want to unsettle your faith, and it is very natural for you to believe as you have been taught."

Ethel sank on a seat and buried her face in her hands. The tone of superiority David assumed hurt her less than the conviction that he had lost his hold on the faith and hope that were to her dearer than life. She said no more, but turned homewards with an aching heart.

That night she slept little. The question of what it was her duty to do disturbed her too much for slumber. Many times she left her couch, and on bended knees sought light from heaven. "Dear Lord, what shall I do?" was the cry she breathed. But toward morning the prayer changed. Then it was, "Lord, give me the strength to do and to bear." Light had come into her soul, and she saw that union with David in his present state was impossible for her. There could be no union of hearts while he shut his heart from the faith and love so dear to her. But what a struggle it was for her, and dire need was there to ask help where it was to be found.

Help came; with many tears she told David her decision, and though deeply moved by his distress, she received strength to resist his arguments and entreaties. So the visit so ardently expected, so long desired, ended in bitter tears and an aching heart.

Years passed away, and the quiet, gentle girl still moved along the even course of her daily life. Something of the buoyancy and elasticity of other days had left her step, the look of joyous delight in life was missed from her countenance; but instead there had come a calm, serene light, the product of the struggle through which her Lord had brought her victorious. Not that she had ceased to think of David, or ceased to feel the bitter disappointment which had fallen upon her; but she had been given that perfect peace in which the Lord will keep those who trust in Him.

By common consent David's name was not mentioned in her hearing. His parents and her own knew too well how her heart had been wounded, and were too anxious that that wound might heal, to revive the recollection of her suffering. But one day the tell-tale face of David's mother revealed that some trouble had fallen. Ethel, more gentle than of old, made quick to sympathize by her own suffering, saw the cloud and asked the cause.

"David is ill," sobbed the mother. "The doctor says it is a serious illness, and his father has gone to fetch him home."

A few days after, a vehicle carefully cushioned, and driven slowly and with great caution, drew up at the old farm, and David was lifted from inside, where he had lain moaning in pain, and carried to his room.

"May I help you nurse him?" was the gentle but earnest petition Ethel made.

"God bless you," was the mother's reply. "I desire nothing better."

That evening Ethel took her place by the sick man's bed, and though he was too ill to know who smoothed his pillow, yet it was a comfort to Ethel's heart to be doing something to alleviate his suffering. Many days the young life hung in the balance, and Ethel was unwearied in her patient labor. At last one night, while David's mother had gone to take a short rest, David opened his eyes, and grasped Ethel's hand as she stood by the bedside.

"Ethel, is it you?" he asked. "Ethel, I am dying, and my soul is lost! lost! lost!"

Calmly and gently she answered him, pointing to the Saviour. But he persisted, "There is no hope. I have sinned against light; I have denied the Lord, and He has given me up. I believe all now, but I have lost all, and I am dying in despair."

But David did not die. The disease had reached its crisis that night, and it had taken a favorable turn, and by slow and painful stages he gained strength. That was the happiest time Ethel had ever known. To sit by the side of the invalid reading to him out of the precious Book of the tender love of Jesus; reading to him the words of Jesus to Peter after His resurrection; of the return of the Prodigal, and other passages full of comfort and consolation, was to her a joyful occupation.

David was a man no longer in spirit: he was subdued, his spirit was childlike. Cavilling and doubting had passed away, and a simple trusting faith had taken its place. He believed and was at peace. He loved the Saviour, and the next place in his heart was occupied by her who had been the means of his restoration, and when after his complete recovery he had stood with her at the altar, and the village minister joined them in a lifelong union, few men were happier or more grateful than he.

TEN SIGNS OF THE APPROACHING END.*

By Rev. M. Baxter.

(Continued from page 135.)

3. The Preparing of the Way of the Jews to Re turn to Palestine—The Great Confederacy—4. The Three Demon Spirits—Infidelity an Spiritualism—Revolutionary Socialism—Jesuit ical Ultramontanism—Their Frog-like Charac ter—Their Midnight Activity Significant—5 The Gathering of the Nations to War—Th Result of the Action of the Demon Spirits—Disturbed State of Europe—A Terrible Strug gle Coming.

3. The preparing of the way of

THE JEWS TO RETURN TO PALESTINE.

The object for which the Euphrates or Turco Mohammedan empire is to be dried up, is state to be "that the way of the kings from (not of the East may be prepared" (Rev. 16 : 12). Thi has been universally understood by commentators to be a prediction of the return of the Jews as they are a kingly royal nation, deriving thei origin from Eastern countries. Among th numerous expositors who have written on this the celebrated Rev. Samuel Eyles Pierce, whos published works amount to many volume wrote in 1809:

"The Pope arose (fully) about the same tim in the West as Mahomet in the East, who a sumed the prophetic office in 612. Hence it hat been commonly said, they will fall nearly t gether. Toward the close of their 1260 years th following events will most assuredly take plac because the mouth of the Lord hath spoken i The Jews will receive and enjoy a national rest ration to their own land of Judæa. Popery ar Mohammedanism will be destroyed. The Go pel will have an universal spread: a nation w be born at once: the knowledge of the Lord w cover the earth, as the waters cover the sea.

"When the sixth vial shall be poured out the great river Euphrates, it will cause the d solution of the Turkish empire; then a way w be prepared for the Jews to return to their ov land. And under the sixth vial, 'three uncle spirits of demons will come out of the mou of the dragon, the wild beast, and the fal prophet, and go forth to the kings of the ear and of the whole world to gather them to t battle of that great day of God Almighty' (Re 16 : 13, 14). This is yet unaccomplished, a will be followed by the judgments of the sever vial. These are judgments which remain to accomplished on the enemies of Christ, in co parison with which all we have read, seen, heard of, are as nothing. But there will be su distress as is inconceivable. Antichrist will prevail. His power will increase. His conquests will be great.

---

* Extracted from "Coming Wars," by Rev. Baxter, in two pamphlets—five cents each by m First pamphlet contains "Ten Signs of the End, Description of Approaching Events," with two m and four large diagrams. Second pamphlet conta valuable quotations from Forty Expositors on th events. Address, 63 Bible House, New York.

"THE GREAT CONFEDERACY
of Antichrist will consist of the wild beast, or Roman empire, under its last head, and the false prophet or ecclesiastical power of the papacy, and the subordinate vassal kings of the Latin empire. When the Ottoman empire is overthrown, and this great confederacy of Antichrist completed, and when Antichristian France with Bonaparte or whomsoever may be his successor have carried all their designs into execution, and Judæa falls into their hands, it seems probable that they, not knowing what to do with so much territory, will willingly give leave for the Jews, the ancient proprietors of Judæa, to return unto it, and freely possess it. And when they first return, it will be in an unconverted state.

"As it respects the time of this call of the Jews, and the distress which will then be, Daniel gives it thus: 'And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth up for the children of thy people; and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time. And many of those that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and the rest to shame and everlasting contempt' (Dan. 12 : 1, 2). This will be toward the close of the 1260 years when God will cease the scattering of His holy people."

Of late years considerable numbers of Jews have returned to Jerusalem and Palestine; and after the ten-kingdomed confederacy shall be formed, Antichrist will arise as a little horn or sovereign (Dan. 7 : 24), and will make a seven years' covenant with the Jews to protect them in Jerusalem, and to guarantee them permission to maintain their temple-worship. This will be the final seven years of the present dispensation, according to Daniel 9 : 27, as interpreted by more than one hundred expositors, of whom the Rev. T. Parker, in 1646, was one of the earliest.

This will only be a partial and political restoration of the Jews, chiefly in an unconverted state, as described in Ezekiel 38 : 8, 11, 12, and Isaiah 66 : 3. Their full restoration and conversion will not be until the end of the seven years, when the millennium is ushered in. "When the Lord shall build up Zion, He shall appear in His glory" (Psalm 102 : 16).

4. The active going forth of the three unclean frog-like, miracle-working demon spirits of Antichristian Infidelity, Revolutionary Democracy, and Jesuitical Ultramontanism.

Simultaneously with the drying up of the Euphrates or Turkish empire under the year-day sixth vial, three unclean demon spirits, like frogs, are predicted to go forth among the nations out of the mouths of the dragon, and the wild beast, and the false prophet, working miracles (Rev. 16 : 13, 14).

The first spirit, out of the mouth of the dragon, or devil, is necessarily that of Antichristian Infidelity, and the most remarkable modern manifestation of Satanic opposition to Christianity is which is a revival of sorcery and witchcraft. It arose at Rochester, in 1847–48, and, like a new false religion, has been propagated with marvellous rapidity, so that there are now a large number of Spiritualists in the United States, in France, England, and other parts of Europe.

SPIRITUALISM,

Spiritualist mediums are persons possessed by demons, and having familiar spirits, in much the same way as the Witch of Endor, and the demoniacs out of whom Christ cast unclean spirits. The prophecy speaks of them as being like frogs, which are more active in the darkness than in the daytime. And thus mediums prefer dark circles in order to obtain manifestations from the spirits. That these are unclean spirits is shown by the system of free love and abolition of marriage, and by the communism and socialism which advanced Spiritualists often strongly advocate.

Several thousand persons are at the present time in lunatic asylums owing to the pernicious influence of Spiritualism upon them, and tens of thousands of persons have been led by it to give up their belief in the verities of the Christian faith. Other modern forms of this infidel antichristian spirit out of the mouth of the Dragon are Colensoism, Voyseyism, Darwinism, and Huxleyism.

The second spirit of

REVOLUTIONARY DEMOCRATIC DESPOTISM
goes forth out of the mouth of the seven-headed and ten-horned wild beast, which represents the Roman empire. The seventh and last head of this wild beast will be a Napoleon, and therefore a spirit out of the mouth of this wild beast will be, to a certain extent, a Napoleonic spirit, which is emphatically one of revolutionary democratic despotism, blended with an insatiable spirit of military conquest. The workings of this revolutionary spirit have been manifest of late years in the revolutions of the Sepoys in India, and in Communistic outbreaks in France and Spain.

In 1848 a foretaste, on a small scale, of what these three spirits will do in the future was exhibited in the French Revolution. "Like the sudden eruption of a volcano," as Beale, in his "Armageddon," justly observes, "these three spirits burst forth, scattering death and misery around them.

"Atheism, communism, socialism, red republicanism—the elements of apparent liberty, but, in truth, the chains of darkness in which Satan binds the souls of men as with fetters of iron—were the accursed fruits of the working of these spirits. Stirring men up to bloody strife, urging them on in fiendish triumph to the overthrow of all established institutions, they broke down thrones and altars in the name of liberty, and cast titles, honors, property, into one promiscuous heap at the feet of that incarnate Moloch of the day, the Red Republic of Communism."

The third spirit out of the mouth of the False Prophet, or Romish Church, is the spirit of JESUITICAL ULTRAMONTANISM.

It is especially active throughout France, and has largely promoted pilgrimages to so-called sacred shrines, and it has brought to pass the proclamation of the doctrine of the Pope's Infallibility—a doctrine which binds Papists implicitly to obey every command of the Pope. It is partly by Ultramontanism producing disunion between the Catholic and Protestant German States that France will ultimately conquer Germany.

It is, in fact, one of the most formidable foes that Bismarck has to fight against, and it will eventually coalesce with Communism and Socialism, to which it is now antagonistic. It will also be one of the agencies by which the Napoleonic Dynasty will be raised to its final supremacy.

It is singular that France is the chief seat of these three spirits of Infidelity, Revolutionary Democracy, and Ultramontanism, which the prophecy compares to three frogs; and three frogs were formerly the coat-of-arms, or national crest, of France under Clovis. A lesser manifestation of this third spirit of Romanism may be seen in the spread of Ritualism in the Church of England.

The great swelling utterances, ceaseless clamor, prolific multiplication, intrusive pertinacity, slimy contamination, and amphibious politico-ecclesiastical nature of these latter-day Infidel, Revolutionary, and Jesuitical spirits renders their comparison to frogs the most lifelike and graphic that could be conceived; and as the croaking of frogs in tropical climates is loudest at midnight, so must we expect the croaking of these three Frog-like Spirits to wax loudest as we approach the world's hour of midnight, which, in the Parable of the Virgins, is placed just before the Bridegroom's coming, and which is the darkest hour preceding the dawn of the unsetting Sun of Millennial Righteousness that shall soon arise with everlasting healing in His wings.

5. THE GATHERING OF THE NATIONS TO WAR is predicted to be the result of the going forth of the three unclean spirits of Infidelity, Democratic Revolutionism, and Ultramontane Popery to the rulers of the earth and of the whole world —"To gather them to the war of that great day of God Almighty" (Rev. 16 : 14). And all this happens just before the epoch of Christ's second advent is announced by Himself to have then arrived—"Behold I come as a thief" (Rev. 16 : 15).

It is an ominous sign that throughout all Europe vast and unexampled military preparations are being made. France, Germany, Austria, Russia have larger and more formidably equipped armies than have ever been known. The muskets and artillery of the first Napoleon's armies were clumsy and puny weapons compared with modern Miniè rifles and Armstrong cannon; and the timber ships, which constituted England's "wooden walls," are entirely superseded by iron-clad men of war.

The troubled political state of the European nations leads them to augment their standing armies and their navies, and to provide their forces with the most deadly instruments of destruction. (Joel 3 : 9, 10; Ezek. 38 : 4; Dan. 12 : 1; Matt. 24 : 7–21; Zech. 14 : 2, etc.).

The Rev. G. S. Faber, in 1852, in his "Revival of the French Emperorship," which showed that the Napoleon Dynasty was the seventh head of the Roman empire, destined to be healed of its Waterloo deadly wound, said,

"The three unclean spirits have not yet fully gone forth to the Kings of the Earth to gather them to the war of that great day of God Almighty; but we perceive them ready prepared harmoniously to co-operate for a bad end—Infidelity and Military Despotism, called into action by Revolutionary Anarchy and Jesuitism of the most arrogant and tyrannical Ultramontane school. Their co-operation might once have been thought paradoxical, but we have already seen enough of their conjoined practices to feel little difficulty in believing that they will cordially act together, and will be the main artificers of the final great Antichristian Confederation (Rev. 16 : 14).

"We are constrained to arrive at the anticipative conclusion that we must indeed expect this general war in Europe in no great length of time; and when we consider the baleful perfection to which the military art of destruction has now been carried, we may readily understand the force of the declaration that in the latter scenes of this internecine war, which opens out at the commencement of the Time of the End, synchronically with the Restoration of the Jews, there shall be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation, even unto that same time (Dan. 12 : 1).

"And another impressive sign of the times and indication of our appalling nearness to Daniel's predicted Time of Trouble is the impending Extinction of the Ottoman Power, which is ominously looming on the prophetic horizon. With rare unanimity commentators have agreed that the drying-up of the waters of the mystic Euphrates during the sixth vial, under which we are now living, must import the final dissolution and destruction of the Ottoman Power. And there seems to be a general anticipation that the fall of Turkey is not far distant; and the consequent quarrel of the great European Powers about its division, like the quarrel of wolves over a carcass, which they have jointly deprived of life, will probably be the cause of that final predicted war which, commencing in Europe, will pass, at the Time of the End, into Palestine (Rev. 16 : 12).

"Fearful events are coming upon us. I, in my eightieth year, shall probably be taken away from the evil to come. That evil is coming, I make no doubt; but it is evil introductory to great good. For when the predicted Antichristian Confederacy shall have been broken, and when at last its mighty armaments shall have perished between the two seas, on the mountains of Palestine (Dan. 11 : 45), then will be inaugurated that holy and happy period which is usally distinguished by the name of the Millennium."

(To be Continued.)

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 143).

A Suitor for Rose.

It was late that morning when Ernest came down to the sunny breakfast-room, which he found deserted. Charles had ridden over to Dartford, he was told, and Rose and Jenny were unpacking the luggage from London, which had just arrived, under Mrs. Clifford's superintendence. He was glad to be alone. The feverish and fitful sleep that had visited him had refreshed neither mind nor body. His spirits had been exhausted by the sharp mental conflict of the night before, and he felt it a relief to be spared the effort of keeping up a conversation.

He found himself anxious, preoccupied, and undecided. He felt himself altogether at a loss; a strange experience for Ernest, whose intuitions were swift and clear, and his decisions equally sharp and defined. A voice from heaven would have suited him at this juncture, but there is no voice audible to ears deafened by the world. The world's trumpets had been braying too lately around him for him to hear the low still voice, full of awe, which calls us out of the darksome cave wherein we dwell, into the light of God.

A servant came in to bring him the letter-bag, which did not reach Clifford till late in the morning. There was a letter for himself, and another for Rose, which he sent at once to her. His own lay before him on the table for a while, his troubled heart and busy brain still pondering over his present difficulty. At last he took it up, and the color mounted to his pale and anxious face, for it brought a fresh complication to be dealt with.

"Dear Clifford: My son and I called at your hotel a few minutes after you left to-day. I must therefore write to you instead of speaking, and I must do it with equal frankness. Our young people, it seems, have formed an attachment to each other, and Robert gives me no peace till I lay the matter before you.

"I need not say that your daughter is all I could desire for my son's wife. We should welcome her most cordially into our family. But I am compelled to own that Robert must marry a wife with some considerable dowry. Miss Clifford is everywhere regarded as your only child and heiress, but it is absurd to take it for granted that a man of your age will never marry again.

"Consequently it is incumbent upon you and me to come to some definite understanding before either of us gives our consent to the young folks. I am disposed to believe you have no objection to my son. You saw a good deal of him while you were in town, and I can only add, if this marriage is as agreeable to you as it is to me, we may set the lawyers to work at once.

"Yours truly,

"R. Fortescue."

Ernest tossed the letter from him with a gesture of impatience. Why! Rose was but a child still; a little, innocent, heedless girl, into whose head no thought of a lover could come. It seemed but yesterday that she was sitting on his knee and reading stories of fairies and mermaids in her shrill, childish voice. He could not entertain the idea of his little Rose loving any man but himself. There was so much dainty natural charm about Rose that must be spoiled, he thought, if it was displayed to any other eyes but his own, her father's.

Yet if Rose were ever to marry and leave him, no match could be better than this one. Young Fortescue was heir to a good estate, a little encumbered, as Ernest knew, and to his father's baronetcy. Rose's new home would be within ten miles of Clifford—a pleasant distance. He had not looked at the young man as a probable suitor for his daughter, but all he had observed of him was favorable. The letter he had just read from his father implied that an attachment was already formed; if so, Rose was in love. Rose in love was a fresh element of anxiety and sorrow.

It seemed almost a shocking thing to Ernest to be compelled to ask his young daughter if she loved this unwelcome candidate for her hand. It needed a mother's delicate tenderness, he fancied. How could Rose tell him what she felt for the young man, who had been an utter stranger to her three months ago? Three months ago! Was it possible the child could learn to love any one in so short a time?

All the other affections of her life had developed slowly, and struck root naturally. There might be some mistake, and he was being anxious about a chimera. They had taken Rose's freedom from conventional shyness and reserve for a sign that she had given away her heart to the first suitor that came.

But Rose had had a letter, possibly from young Fortescue himself. Ernest summoned all his resolution and courage to aid him in asking his little daughter this unpleasant question. It was part of his chivalrous devotion to his motherless child not to send a formal message by a servant bidding her come to him, but to go himself to seek her. Rose's room was one she had chosen when they first came to Clifford Grange, because of an oriel window in it, raised two or three steps from the floor, and looking out upon the sea.

It was a low, spacious room under the roof, with long and narrow casements, giving glimpses of the country lying about the house. She had hoarded here all the treasures she had gathered during her life. The plume of peacock's feathers, that had charmed her eyes years ago, was still preserved and cherished, and every shelf and window-sill was crowded with the foreign curiosities brought for her by every sailor Clifford-born, who had carried them over sea and land as an offering for their Miss Rose.

Her mother's water-color sketches, stiff and raw in color, hung upon the walls, with her father's school-boy drawings of boats, crags, and water, destitute of perspective and devoid of shadow. The whole place was filled with keepsakes and trifles of no value save in Rose's eyes. A mere lumber-room if she was not in it; but in her presence it was like a shrine, to which every poor votary had brought some willing offering.

Rose was sitting in the oriel window, gazing out with soft, dreamy eyes over the sea. The letter was folded caressingly between her small white hands. The pretty head, and rounded chin, and sunny curls, were clearly defined against the sky, and Ernest stood on the threshold for a few moments, looking at her with a keen pang of sorrow in his heart. This bright blossom of his had grown up in an atmosphere not its own, and if it must be transplanted into rougher climes, how would it bear the change?

What would Rose be without her little kingdom, where she had queened it so gracefully? A poor man's daughter! How could she be that? She had been like the lilies; she toiled not, neither did she spin. The sole purpose of her life had been to give delight to others by her sweetness and beauty. If she should be uprooted, would she not be like those flowers of Paradise, "that never would in other climates grow?"

"Rose!" he said at last, in a quiet voice. Yet she was startled, and her face grew crimson. As he drew near to her he could see the tears swimming in her blue eyes, and the letter crushed in her unconscious grasp. Ernest spoke again in his tenderest manner.

"Is your letter from young Fortescue?" he asked.

"Yes, father," she answered falteringly.

"And you love him, my darling?" he said.

"Oh! I think so," cried Rose, bursting into a passion of tears, and running into her father's outstretched arms, as she had been used to do in every time of trouble.

But Ernest felt that this too must be weighed in the balance before he formed his final resolution.

Under any circumstances Ernest would have gone over to Rockwood to see Ruth on this first day of his return after so long an absence. He had never entered the faded and sombre little sitting-room belonging specially to her with a heart so perplexed and burdened. He was longing for a plain path, and his path was intricate and clouded.

Even with Ruth he could not converse with the frank unreserve which had been the chief charm of their intercourse. Hitherto Ruth had been the confidante of all his plans and purposes. But he had come to a knot in the skein of life which could not as yet be shown to her. No human being could see the whole matter, with all its bearings, beside himself.

If he should finally resolve upon abiding by his step-father's later will, and thus setting aside what he knew to be the old man's intentions in his dying hours, he could never tell Ruth. There must be always this secret between them. It had been between them, in fact, all these years, but it had been slumbering and inoperative, scarcely making itself felt even by him. Now it would have an active, all-pervading existence for him—a reflected influence upon all belonging to him. It is in circumstances like these that the abundant promises in God's Word of help in time of anxiety become precious to the Christian (Psalm 37 : 24; 55 : 22; Prov. 13 : 5, 6).

Ruth had caught sight of Ernest coming over the cliffs, and she had run away to add some trifling decoration to her simple and inexpensive dress. She did it as a sort of homage to him, though he was unaware of it. When Ernest came to see her she liked to wear ribbons of the color he was fond of, and she wished to smooth out of sight the few silver lines that were beginning to shine among her dark hair.

She had been enjoying a more complete rest than had been her lot for years. Her father's illness had been protracted; but Julia Rush had borne the chief stress and strain of it. Julia had proved an efficient and invaluable nurse, and Ruth felt very grateful to her. She had not been placed on a footing with the servants, according to the stipulation she had made; and she had gained so much mastery over her patient that she was able to keep him from plunging into any new excesses.

None of the old, disgraceful boon companions had been admitted into Squire Symons's presence; and he was submitting to Julia's rule with a singularly good grace. Ruth was making up her mind that she must practise some new economy, if possible, in order to find the means of retaining Julia permanently in her position as attendant upon her old father.

Ernest was almost startled by the change in Ruth's appearance when she came to greet him. She was looking younger and happier and brighter than she had done for years. The tranquillity congenial to her nature, which had been banished by the dreary isolation of her circumstances, was dawning upon her face. The joy of seeing him again was shining in her dark eyes; and as she came toward him, with frank and hearty gladness, he felt that he could not separate himself from her by a self-imposed exile from Clifford.

"So poor Charles is come home at last!" she said as soon as their first greetings were over. He was holding her hand in his own, but he dropped it hastily as she spoke these words; and Ruth knew instantly that Charles's return was looked upon as a misfortune. Her heart sank a little with an inward chill. Was Ernest so excellently good in every other relationship, about to show himself in the light of a hard and stern brother? She looked up wistfully into his face as she waited for him to speak.

"Yes, Charles has turned up again," he said with gloomy emphasis. "Ruth, I cannot pretend to rejoice. I know you women are all ready to make a hero of him; but I cannot. In my eyes he is the same Charles who ran away; only many years older."

"But surely," she answered, "surely you are glad to know he is alive and well! Your brother, Ernest! It does not seem so long ago since you left no stone unturned to find out whether he was still living, and where he was. Do you forget?"

"That was for a year or two after his father's death," he rejoined; "if he had come back then all would have been well. I could have welcomed him home then; but not after all these years! We were getting on so well without him; and now our black sheep is among us again. What am I to do with him?"

"Do with him!" she repeated; "were we not all lost sheep once? and did not our dear Lord come down to the wilderness, seeking us who had gone astray? It is not difficult to know what to do with a brother who comes home repentant."

"My dear Ruth," he said impatiently, "Charles is no penitent, I assure you. I find it a much harder matter to settle than to talk about. He cannot go on wearing the best robe, and having the fatted calf killed for him every day. The question is, what am I to do with my prodigal, in his father's house?"

He paced up and down the melancholy little room restlessly. The question was not put so much to Ruth as to himself. If she had become his wife ten years ago he would have laid bare his inmost heart to her, and taken her counsel in his hour of bewildering temptation. He knew instinctively what her counsel would be; the counsel of a woman utterly ignorant of the world. How gladly would he have blotted out those ten intervening years, and placed himself back again in his little vicarage, with Rose only the poor vicar's daughter!

He might have done his uttermost to counteract the mischief of his younger brother's influence and possibly he might have succeeded in restraining him from extreme wildness. At any rate he would himself have kept his hands clean and his conscience clear. He would not now be burdened with a secret which he was ashamed to tell to the woman who loved him best. Ruth looked down with sad eyes, not caring to lift them to Ernest's cloudy face.

Ernest Clifford was yet a stranger to the promise "Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of his servant, that walketh in darkness and hath no light? Let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God" (Isa. 50 : 10).

"There is another difficulty," he said, after a while, seating himself beside her and opening Sir Robert Fortescue's letter. He read it aloud, in a hard, dry tone. It was plain to her that he did not altogether like it; but she could not see why. She did not speak, even when he folded it up and returned it to his pocketbook.

"Ruth," he said, in a softened voice of great earnestness, "I wish I could reply by saying that you had consented to be my wife."

"Oh, no, no!" she cried; "Ernest, how can I? We decided long ago that I must stand at my post. I believe God has placed me here, and must be faithful to Him; or how could I be faithful to you? But let us set the matter at rest forever. You have been very happy all this time; and why should we not go on as we are, friends always, but knowing that we shall never be more to one another? Do not let me stand in the way of Rose's happiness. I must not bring shame on my father, even for your sake. He is my black sheep."

(To be Continued.)

THE FALSE AND THE TRUE.

Lesson for Mar. 14.—Matt. 7 : 15–29. Golden Text, James 1 : 22. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

OUR subject for to-day opens with a warning, "Beware of false prophets." Before we examine in Holy Scripture the character of false prophets, let us first consider what persons these are who stand to us in the light of prophets. Surely, not only preachers, although they exercise this office most directly; but also chosen friends to whom we look up, and on whose opinion we rely, and also all those to whom we speak of our circumstances, and who have therefore right to pronounce judgment upon our actions and the actions of those who are connected with us: all these are placed more or less, either by God or by our own selves, in the light of prophets to us. And the Lord would warn us as to our choice that we should never allow ourselves to come under the influence of those which are false.

Scripture discovers to us two methods by which we may discover whether the prophets are true or false. First in this chapter, "Ye shall know them by their fruits," i.e., by the manifestation in their lives of all which they say and teach. They may come in sheep's clothing, outwardly appearing as the members of Christ's flock, but what is the spirit which actuates them? Is it that of the wolf which "scattereth the sheep" (John 10 : 12), i.e., which causes division and dissension instead of disseminating love? "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" Only that which is divine can bear divine fruit, the thorn bears thorns, and the natural man can only produce what is natural, and not that which is divine, while the nature of Christ in a teacher can only produce what is Christ-like.

It is the most dangerous thing to fortify a carnal spirit in ourselves by calling upon some one else whose spiritual standard is no higher than our own to justify or to excuse us. "I really could not help being vexed, it was so provoking," we hear it often said; and the party appealed to replies, "Yes, indeed, it is a wonder you bore it as well as you did." And such expressions among Christians, who profess to believe that "all things work together for good to them that love God," and yet, when appealed to, speak as false prophets, showing their sympathy on the side of nature, and not of grace. Can God make a mistake in His Fatherly providence, and allow us to be placed in circumstances in which vexation is justifiable? And yet a Christian has said to another Christian that it was so; is not this a false prophet?

The second method of discovering the false prophet is shown us in 1 John 4 : 1, 3, "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God," etc. Why should the confession that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh manifest a spirit which is of God? Our blessed Lord came on earth to be the second Adam (1 Cor. 15 : 45, 47). The first Adam "begat a son in his own likeness, after his image" (Gen. 5 : 3), and the second Man, which is the Lord from heaven, "shall see His seed" (Isaiah 53 : 10) begotten of God after His image. If Jesus Christ has come in the flesh, and introduced into men a new nature which is divine, then we are responsible to be divine like Him and in Him, "to put off the old man, etc., and to put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness" (Eph. 4 : 22–24). A spirit which confesses that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is a spirit which can excuse nothing in itself which is contrary to Jesus Christ. It is a spirit which sees, hears, and knows Jesus only.

How, then, are we to distinguish between false prophets and true? It is not enough that their word comes to pass. Such may happen, and God says, "If there arise among you a prophet or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a sign or wonder, and the sign or the wonder come to pass, . . . thou shalt not hearken to the words of that prophet, . . . etc., for the Lord your God proveth you, to know whether ye love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul" (Deut. 13 : 1–3). In Deut. 18 : 21, 22, the non-fulfilment is made the gauge of the prophet's words. But in Jer. 23 : 22, we have a close test, the prophet is tried by his spiritual power over others. God says, regarding prophets, "But if they had stood in My counsel, and had caused My people to hear My words, then they should have turned them from their evil way and from the evil of their doings." Here is the good fruit which manifests the true prophet's power to make others depart from evil.

In our Lord's teaching, as well as in that of John the Baptist, the axe is laid to the root of the trees, and "Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit shall be hewn down, and cast into the fire." The fruit which God looks for from the teacher and the taught is always the same: "Not every one that saith unto Me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of My Father which is in heaven." Praying without doing God's will, attending religious services and Bible readings, while the life is not subjected to the will of God—this can avail nothing.

And our Lord lifts the veil of the future, and shows us how in that day—the day when the fruitless tree shall be cast into the fire—many will be utterly surprised that they are not saved. Oh, what a revelation have we here! Men who live and die in the belief that all is well with their souls, and who will wake up at that day to find themselves deceived. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name?—then there are preachers, Gospel preachers, among them—"and in thy name have cast out devils; and in thy name have done many wonderful works?" Then there are among them those who have healed the sick and cast out devils by the power of the name of Jesus, and yet we read, "Then I will profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from Me, ye that work iniquity."

O God! lay thine axe to the root of the tree with us all, that this most awful picture be not realized in us; purge out all which is unreal and unholy, all which is not Christ; and, O reader! weigh thyself in God's balances lest He weigh thee and thou be found wanting. It is the rule of our loving God that, "If we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged" (1 Cor. 11 : 31). It is not enough that we are respected members of our several churches, that we teach in the Sunday-school, that God blesses us in the conversion of souls, that we have faith to heal the sick, or even to cast out devils in His name; there must be in all these things the ceaseless doing of His will, the leading when and where He will, the working, not haphazard at our convenience—we must learn to wait His convenience.

How then may we know the will of God? Paul writes to Timothy, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrines, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works" (2 Tim. 3 : 16, 17); and only by a thorough knowledge of His word can we come to an understanding of His mind, through the enlightening power of the Holy Ghost, who guides us into all truth.

This is confirmed by the words which follow in our subject, "Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of Mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock." "These sayings of mine," i.e., the Word of the living God, this is our sure rock, but it is one which we must not only know of, but build on; i.e., we must not only hear, but do. Rains, floods, winds, there will be, on the part of Satan, the world, and the flesh, and these are allowed by God to try us; but the will which is anchored in the expressed will of God is immovable; there is no vacillation, there are no regrets, there is no wavering experience. Such a spirit life can stand trial: "it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock."

And just as firmly as he stands who carries out with honest purpose the will of his God as soon as he knows it, just in so great danger stands the man who hears, i.e., understands the will of God, and fails to do according to his knowledge. The storm of circumstances, temptations, natural disposition, etc., which grounds the obedient child of God more firmly on the rock, razes to the foundation the building of him who hears and does not. To know God's will and not to do it is diabolical. God is not to be trifled with. If He comes down so low as to make known to us His will, it is the least thing we can do to obey it. His love can command or will nothing which is injurious to us, and it is both a wrong and a treachery to Him if we fail to obey Him. The end of disobedience is ruin.

FOREIGN TOPICS.

The English Parliament is Debating on the propriety of adopting measures to defeat the obstructive policy of its Irish members. For several sessions the Home Rule party has endeavored to force from the House of Commons a consideration of its scheme for granting to Ireland some concessions which may lead to the affairs of Ireland being managed by a separate Parliament composed exclusively of Irish members. As the British House refused to consider such a scheme, the Home Rule party has revenged itself by obstructing English legislation by a strained use of the forms of the House, such as repeated motions to adjourn made in the course of debate. The ministers now propose that any member considered by the Speaker to have been guilty of unfair tactics shall be refused permission to speak for a specified length of time. The Liberal leader, the Marquis of Hartington, supports the Cabinet in this proposal, but it is stated that Mr. Gladstone will oppose it.

The German Military Preparations, which Prince Bismarck continues to aver are merely proportionate to the population, according to the long-existing military law of the Empire, evoke daily the comments of the European press on the subject. A French-Italian paper says Germany has taken up a decidedly adverse position to Russia, and is preparing to make war on that power with the aid of Austro-Hungary. If this war, which it believes to be inevitable and imminent, should be limited to Germany and Austro-Hungary on the one side and Russia on the other, the evil would be relatively moderate; but would France let slip such a favorable opportunity to try a revenge? "Would that were so!" adds the paper, "but we dare not hope it. And, should France draw the sword, what will be the attitude of Italy? Can she remain neuter? In any case she must arm strongly, if only to protect her neutrality. Such is the sad situation which Prince Bismarck's policy is preparing for us and all Europe. He alone is the author of the dark and alarming future which we must seriously prepare to meet."

Scripture prophecy, as interpreted by many diligent students of the Word, indicates that a tremendous war involving nearly all European nations is in the near future.

The Nihilists Threaten to burn St. Petersburg during the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Czar's accession to the Russian throne. With grim humor they have sent notices to the authorities, informing them that they need not trouble themselves to make arrangements for illuminations on the occasion of the Czar's anniversary, as the revolutionists are preparing for such an illumination as has not been seen since Nero burned Rome. The Nihilists have hitherto been able to execute their threats, but it is to be hoped that these desperate men may be defeated in an attempt so horrible as that of burning the city.

An Inquiry into the Disaster to the Railway bridge over the Frith of Tay, on the night of December 28th, by which many lives were lost, is now proceeding at Dundee, Scotland, before the Board of Trade. Several painters who painted the bridge last summer have testified that they saw numerous bolt-holes empty; that they found bolts in holes where there should have been rivets, and found rivets without heads and bars loosened and nuts unscrewed; that one of the supporting columns of the high girders which was cracked from top to bottom was held together with four hoop bands; that sometimes, while they were painting the bridge, its oscillation was so great they feared it would fall. The evidence has created considerable sensation, but its value cannot be estimated until the railway inspectors are heard on the subject.

An Alliance between England and Persia.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of the London Daily News states that, according to intelligence which has reached him from a reliable source, a treaty has been signed between England and Persia, consisting of three clauses. By the first, Persia is permitted to take the city of Herat; by the second, she is to aid England in Afghanistan; and by the third, England is to construct a railway from Teheran to a port on the Persian Gulf. The Journal de St. Pétersbourg has an article upon the occupation of Herat by Persia, in which it says that if the Persian Government acts against Russia, it will be at its risk and peril. The Golos, an influential Russian journal, says the idea of Persia occupying Herat without assistance is absurd. Thus the dangers of war between England and Russia are not yet dissipated.

The Sultan of Turkey and the English.—A Constantinople correspondent says that the situation in Turkey has become exceedingly grave, and that English influence is at its very lowest possible ebb. Until recently the Turkish attitude was one of passive resistance only. It is now one intended to show by acts that Turkey will not be dictated to. The Porte will not have reforms, and is taking every effort to show that it will not be led in the way of civilization by English advice. The Sultan has been giving evidence of ill-will to the English. He recently insisted upon the dismissal of every Englishman employed in the Turkish navy, and it was only when the Minister represented that this would disorganise the service that his majesty contented himself for the present with directing that a lost of such employés should be drawn up. At the same time he intimated his intention to dismiss the greater part of them.

The Christian Liberality of a Merchant has been rewarded by God with increased prosperity. At his own cost he supported a number of native missionaries in India. Being asked one day how he could do it, he replied, "When I served the world, I did it on a grand scale and at princely expense; and when, by His grace, God called me out of darkness, I resolved Christ should have more than the world had had. But if you would know how I can give so much, you must ask of God, who enables me to give it. At my conversion I told the Lord His cause should have a part of all my business brought me in; and every year since I made that promise it has brought me in more than double what it did the year before, so that I can and do double my gifts in His cause."

John Dunn, the Englishman who was selected to be one of the chiefs of Zululand on account of his previous connection with the Zulus, is a man strangely unsuitable for such a post. His character is not one fitted to inspire the savages with respect for Christian England. Major Malan, who formerly commanded a British regiment in South Africa, writes in Africa, his missionary journal: "John Dunn was unworthy, because, from all accounts, he was a trader in fire-arms to the Zulu chief for years before the war. He must have known well, like every other white man, that sooner or later a conflict was unvoidable between the powerful Zulu king and his army and the white colonists of Natal. He was unqualified, because a white man who could condescend to wallow in the mire of Kaffir polygamy was not a fit representative for the British nation in the eyes of an intelligent people. No service which a knowledge of the country and acquaintance with the chiefs enabled him to render during the war could entitle him to this honor."

A Turkish Trick Appears to have been played with the design of injuring Dr. Koelle, the missionary whose persecution by the Turkish Government was described in the CHRISTIAN HERALD of February 5th. A book denouncing the Moslem religion has been found among Dr. Koelle's papers, and has been made a ground of complaint against him. It is proved that the book is one of a number sent to Constantinople sixteen years ago. The Bible Society's agents refused to receive it, on the ground that it spoke in disrespectful terms of Moslemism. The package was therefore left at the Custom House. Shortly after, a man was observed at the Stamboul Bible Society's house to be placing some books secretly on a shelf. When he went out these books were examined, and found to be copies of the objectionable work. They were mediately removed. This was in 1864. N day the zaptiehs (police) entered the building make a forcible search, and immediately ceeded to the shelf in question. Finding books had been removed, all interest in search ceased. The books are evidently kept stock by the Turks to be placed surreptitio in the possession of Christians in order to br false charges against them.

Miss Havergal's Jewels.—A few months be the death of Miss Frances Ridley Havergal, sweet and accomplished missionary poet whose portrait and life appeared in the CHTIAN HERALD October 23d, 1879, she sent to Church Missionary Society her jewels, value $ Had she been strong enough, she herself w have gone to India. Her friends have start memorial fund, which is called the "Fra Ridley Havergal Missionary Fund," to be pended by the same Society in the training employment of native Bible-women, and in translation and circulation in India of suit and selected portions of Miss Havergal's bo

A Reliable Blind Leader.—During the palence of one of those dense fogs which been so frequent lately in London, a gentle was trying to find his way out of Hyde P He knew the road well in ordinary weather, was unable to find it in the fog, which preve his seeing a yard ahead. At length he m man of whom he inquired his way. "C with me," said the man; "I can show you way; the fog does not affect me; I am bli The man who could see surrendered himse the guidance of the man who could not see, was led safely to his destination. It is thus men learned in philosophy and scientific kn edge have sometimes been led in the wa God by men whose educational attainments natural abilities are inferior to their own (I 10 : 21).

A Thief was Detected in a Church in recently. An infant was to be baptized, while the nurse was waiting with the chil her knees, a man came up and asked pe sion to kiss the little one. His request granted, for in France such instances of sp neous affection are not uncommon. Whil embrace was being bestowed the nurse f hand in her pocket, and exclaimed, "Th The man ran away, but was captured wit woman's purse in his possession. Men wh tend church and simulate emotions they d feel, that they may pursue wicked design not few in other countries besides France. are not always so promptly detected.

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, the Cable inform occupied his pulpit at the Tabernacle on F ary 15th, and preached with his accust power. Whilst at Mentone he preached i French Protestant Church. The church crowded half an hour before the time anno for the beginning of the service, and many had to leave without finding even stan room. A large portion of the congregation sisted of French, German, Norwegian, D and other foreign admirers of Mr. Spurgeon regularly read his sermons in the various tr tions. Though Mr. Spurgeon did not " with tongues," still his utterance was so di and his style so admirably simple, without ing anything of its originality and verve, many of his foreign hearers it was an agr surprise to find that the celebrated E preacher was so much more intelligible tha had ever ventured to hope.

An American Missionary Ill-used in —Rev. Nathan Sites, of the American Met Episcopal Mission, has been attacked by th of Yenping-foo. In accordance with the of the district magistrate, he had close chapel and refrained from preaching; yet walking quietly through the streets he wa laid and severely beaten. In fact, his perse were upon the point of drowning him, wh magistrate arrived, and barely succeeded i ing his life.

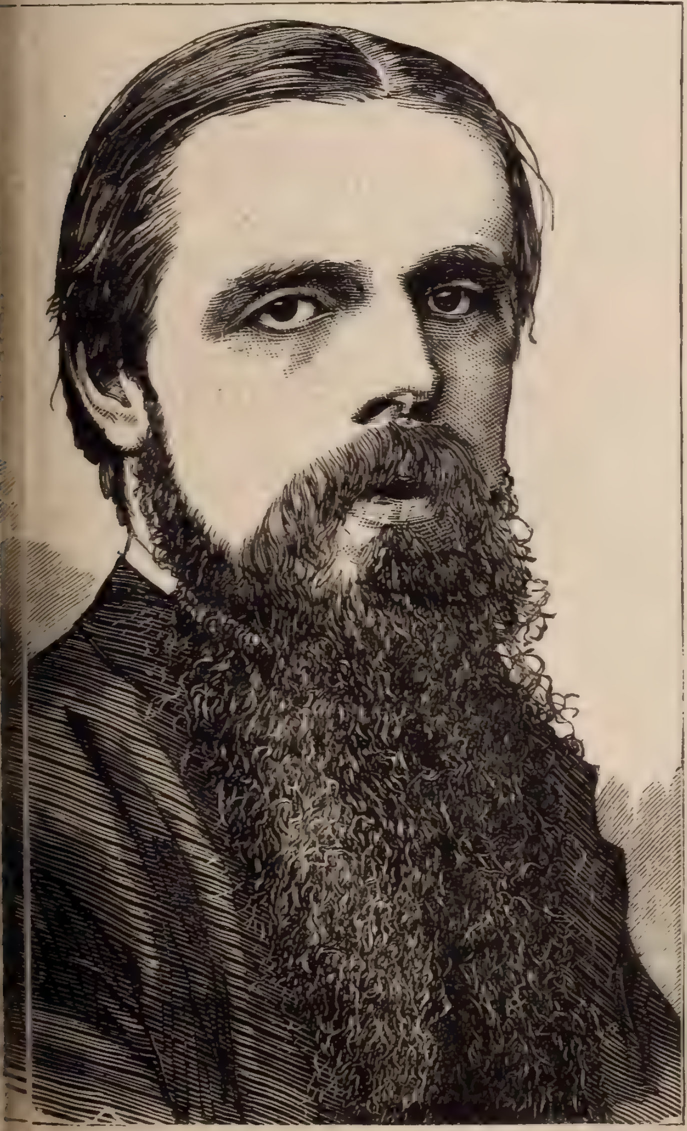
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Published at 63 Bible House, New York City, and 2 Ivy Lane, London. Edited in London by the Rev. M. Baxter, in New York by Mr. B. Aitken.
This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. TALMAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also occasionally a Sermon by the Rev. W. MORLEY PUNSHON, LL.D., the celebrated Methodist Minister, Rev. W. M. HAY AITKEN, or some other Eminent Preacher; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

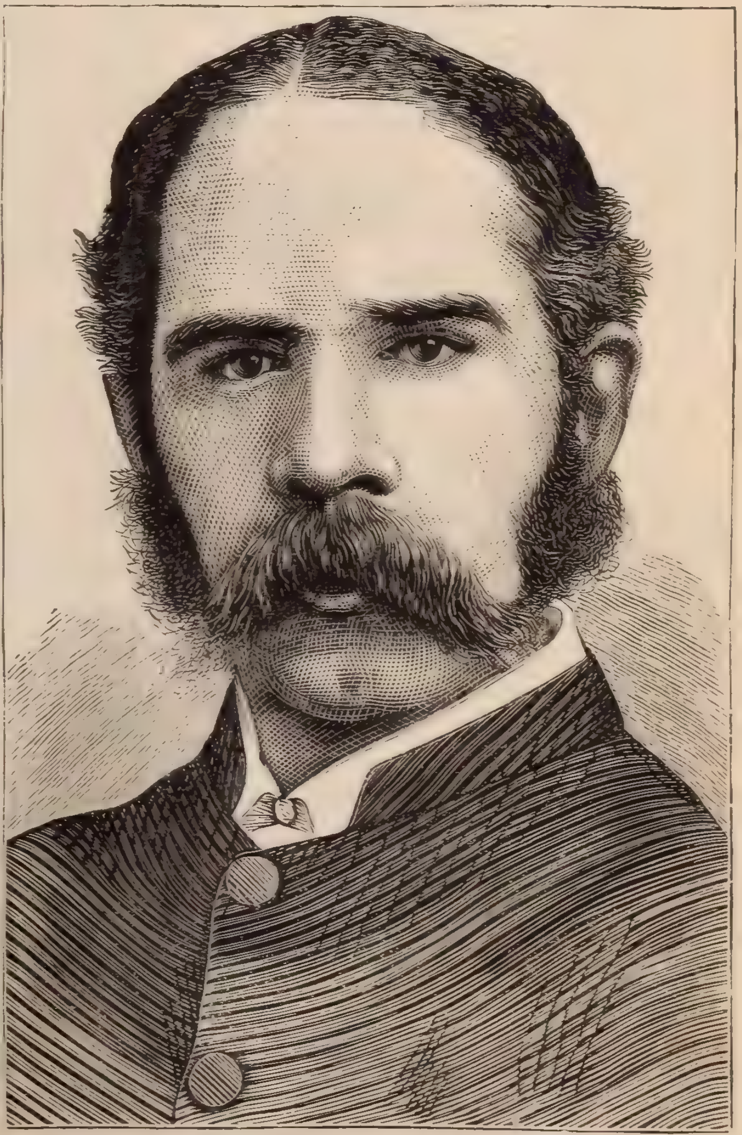
Single Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, MARCH 11, 1880. 14th Year. No. 11—New Series.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

PORTRAITS OF REVS. W. HAY AITKEN and H. P. STOKES, with Sketches of their Lives.
THE BLESSING AND CURSE OF MORTGAGES. A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage.
HAROLD PERCIVAL MONTAIGNE. A Thrilling Serial Story by the Author of "Felicia Cuffe."
The Result of the Inspection: by Major Malan—The Ruined Glasgow Merchant—Dare to be a Daniel.
THE SALVATION ARMY IN ENGLAND; Farewell Meeting to the Expedition to America.
CURRENT EVENTS: Congress—An Anti-Fraud Ballot-Box—The Chinese Exodus—A Child's Chest Examined by Telephone—A Dog like Elijah's Ravens—An Owl at Sea—The Price of Success—A Chinese Presentation—Two Significant Answers to Prayer, etc.
TEN SIGNS OF THE APPROACHING END, by Rev. M. Baxter. (Continued.)
THE ROYAL PREROGATIVE. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
A WEIGHT OF WEALTH. (Continued.)
The Great Physician. S. S. Lesson by Mrs. M. Baxter.
FOREIGN TOPICS: A Government Scandal—The Czar's Celebration—The Longest Tunnel in the World—A Porcelain Regiment—An Exciting Rescue—The Diamond Manufacturer—I Ken the Lord—The Carriage-Builder and the Publican, etc.



Rev. W. HAY M. H. AITKEN.



Rev. HENRY PELHAM STOKES.

The Famous Mission Preachers.

THE REV. W. HAY M. H. AITKEN,

The Eloquent Mission Preacher.

Early Life—Self-Education—Early Conversion—The Youthful Evangelist—At College—Dangers of the University—Curacy at Mildmay Park—Twelve Days' Mission in London—Removal to Liverpool—Remarkable Blessing at Leeds in 1875—Association with Mr. Moody—Resignation of his Living and Devotion to Evangelistic Work—Character of his Teaching.

CONSIDERABLE surprise has frequently been expressed by Christians who are not familiar with the history of the Established Church of England at the great divergence existing between its ministers in matters of doctrine. The cause of that divergence is to be found in the principles on which the church was established. The design held prominently in view was to make the Church of England the church of all the people of England, and to make it so comprehensive in its doctrine as to admit men of all shades of opinion who agreed on the fundamental doctrines of Christianity. The consequence has been that men are found identified with the Church whose creed so nearly approaches that of the Church of Rome that only matters of minor detail separate them from that church, and even the ecclesiastical courts of the realm have in many cases failed to show cause in the canons of the Church for their expulsion.

Again there are men occupying the pulpits of the Church whose teaching approaches very closely to that of Unitarians, and these too contend that they can conscientiously give their "unfeigned assent and consent" to the thirty-nine articles of the Church while they preach a system of theology in which the Atonement holds a very subordinate place.

Again there are others who with earnestness and faithfulness present to their hearers the doctrines of the cross, and preach Jesus the one and only Saviour of the world. This party is called the Evangelical party as distinguished from the Ritualists and the High Church party, and to their efforts, under the blessing of God, is due the fact that the English Church has not sunk into the slough of Ritualism or become petrified on the cold rocks of Unitarianism.

Among the Evangelical party, shines, conspicuous by his earnestness, fidelity, and eloquence, the eminent preacher whose sermons we have occasionally had the privilege of presenting to our readers, the Rev. W. Hay M. H. Aitken. We are this week enabled to give his portrait and a sketch of his useful life.

William Hay M'Dowall Hunter Aitken was born in 1841. He is the son of an earnest evangelical clergyman and mission preacher, the Rev. Robert Aitken, who died in 1873, more than seventy years old. His father at his birth was the incumbent of St. John's Church, Liverpool, England, but he afterward removed to Cornwall, where for twenty-four years he labored in a district about which perhaps the best thing that can be said is that it never failed to furnish a field for hard and continuous effort.

The duties and responsibilities of a Christian parent were to Mr. Aitken, Sr., no unmeaning form of words. He wanted his boy to become a man of God—a man who should be useful to the world—and that desire he ranked far above worldly distinctions or worldly prosperity. It is the custom in England to send boys intended for the clerical profession to a great public school such as Eton, Harrow, or Rugby preparatory to entering one of the universities. But this Christian minister dreaded the influence of a public school on his son. He was anxious that he should be kept "pure and unspotted from the world," and therefore he decided that though he might get a better classical and mathematical education at school, yet it would better conduce to his spiritual health and training that he should spend his early years in the old parsonage at his father's side.

On one occasion a friend managed to obtain a presentation for him to Merchant Taylors' School, a thing that most parents would have greatly prized. He put the paper into the fire, and only told his son of it some weeks afterward. But even in the matter of scholarship and secular learning, the boy's being thus thrown somewhat early on his own resources, and being left to acquire knowledge for himself and for its own sake, may not have been wholly disadvantageous to him, for at least it had the compensating value of inspiring habits of industry and self-help, and may have tended to develope and foster a certain independence and originality of thought.

He seems to have been very early impressed by the power of divine truth, and to have begun to evangelize even as a boy. Before he reached his sixteenth year he was engaged in Sunday-school teaching and in conducting cottage meetings.

HIS FIRST MISSION.

When he was seventeen he went on a visit to his uncle, the well-known Scotch evangelist, the late Mr. Hay McDowall Grant, of Arndilly. He was to deliver addresses in the neighboring town of Elgin, and so great was the interest awakened there that his uncle determined that he should accompany and assist him in a tour which he proposed making in the extreme north of Scotland, as a substitute for Mr. Brownlow North, who was unable to fulfil an engagement in that locality.

It was during this tour that Mr. Aitken first discovered that God had permitted him in some degree to inherit the evangelizing gifts of his father. In the town of Thurso thousands flocked to the meetings, and on one occasion not less than 4000 persons were addressed by this youthful preacher and his uncle.

Unquestionably this early success exercised an important influence upon his subsequent career in more ways than one. It indicated, to him the work for which he was most suited, and at the same time stimulated him to prepare himself for it. The memory of this wonderful manifestation of divine power served him in good stead in many a dark hour of intellectual doubt and conflict in his subsequent career. After reading for a few months with a private tutor, he matriculated at Wadham College, Oxford, at the close of the year 1859.

Though he found himself somewhat backward in the elements of a classical education, he surprised his tutors by announcing his intention of reading for classical honors; and owing to his natural aptitude for mental philosophy, and especially for logic, he succeeded in obtaining a second class on the list of classical honors. During the whole of his university course Mr. Aitken continued his evangelizing work, conducting a mission service regularly twice a week in a room in the suburbs of Oxford.

No thoughtful man can pass through Oxford in our day without having the foundations of his faith severely tested, and Mr. Aitken has often referred in his sermons to the severe intellectual conflict through which he passed at this time. One text, he has often said, was in these days of trial—"Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." This was what he felt his soul demanded, and he could find it nowhere else. He has often since expressed his belief that he was specially prepared by this severe discipline to be the better able to sympathize with and help those who are passing through a similar ordeal.

HIS SHEET ANCHOR

After taking his college degree in 1865, Mr. Aitken found himself perplexed by the offer of no less than sixteen different curacies, while two or three Oxford Professors urgently pressed him to come into residence, and seek to get a fellowship, which he had good prospects of obtaining. The event which finally decided his choice was the visit of the widely-beloved Rev. W. Pennefather, Vicar of St. Jude's, Mildmay Park, London, to Pendeen, to persuade him to become his curate—a step which was recommended also by his father. During his subsequent curacy with Mr. Pennefather

AT MILDMAY PARK,

he was in sole charge of the large iron h which Mr. Pennefather held his Conferenc fore the erection of his present Conference In this Mr. Aitken formed a regular cong tion and carried on a continuous mission w

In the year 1867 he married a young (Miss Barnes) who had long been a clos devoted friend of his incumbent, and wh proved in every way a helpmeet worthy of Mr. Aitken has often been heard to say t his parish he considered his wife's work successful and satisfactory than his own certainly her self-denial in surrendering so of her husband's society for the sake c Lord's work argues a devotion to that wo inferior to that of her husband. Deep an was the affection that existed between the W. Pennefather and his curate, and to his fell, when that saintly man was called t rest, to commit his remains to their last re place.

In the year 1869 the celebrated

TWELVE DAYS' MISSION

took place in London. It proposed to en men of all parties, but, as a decidedly Church tone was given to it by its origin Mr. Pennefather was censured by some p for permitting his curate to take part in it. sequel has, however, more than justifie fondest hopes that Mr. Aitken and other gelical preachers who took part in the mov entertained, and indeed this mission may be looked back upon as the date of a new the history of the English Church.

In reference to his curacy with the Re Pennefather at Mildmay Park, Mr. Aitke said, "As I look back to the five years which I was connected with him in the mi I regard it as no small privilege that for ei months I lived under his roof and saw hin personal friend alone could see him, as who walked with God."

In 1871 Mr. Aitken was appointed by M Horsfall Bros. to the charge of Christ Cl Everton, near Liverpool, where he remain four and a half years. During this period endeavoring to be faithful to the home du his position, he so mapped out his time give a considerable portion of every year t sion work, and the Church of Christ at lar reason to be thankful that he followe course.

MISSION AT LEEDS.

Perhaps the most remarkable blessing tl ever rested on his labors was at Leeds, year 1875. Beginning with small thin services went on swelling, until at last the Victoria Town Hall could not contain th sands that flocked to the services. In th dle of the day the hall would be filled wit 3000 people, and at night anxious souls be numbered by hundreds. About the time Mr. Aitken energetically co-operatec to whom he continued to act as a sort o tenant during his stay in England.

WITH MR. MOODY AT LIVERPOOL,

Mr. Moody's influence and suggestion bined with the precarious state of his health, decided Mr. Aitken to leave Liv and give himself up entirely to evang work. Indeed he clearly felt that the strain of parochial and mission work was w him out before his time. He resigned his pool parish in the autumn of 1875, and set Holmside, near Derby, where his home During the subsequent two years he con meetings, which were very largely atten churches in the towns of Huddersfield, Sh Hull, Manchester (cathedral), Blackburn tingham, Hertford, Doncaster, Halifa mingham, Newcastle, Southsea, besides visits to London.

While Mr. Aitken is very definite in hi gelical views of elementary truth, he has tense repugnance to party spirit, and has taken a prominent part in controversy. same time, with a sincere desire to be libe charitable, Mr. Aitken combines a hear all priestly pretension, and above all, ray of the confessional. His preaching zed by simple statements of Gospel ered with intense earnestness, genu- forcible illustration, and a yearning mmend the truth to every man's the sight of God.

V. ENRY PELHAM STOKES.

The Mission Preacher.

nd Education—Desire to Enter the Attends Mr. Moody's Meetings— the Seat for Him—The Arrow of —His Conversion in Answer to his Prayers—His Meeting with Mr. Ait- nters Holy Orders—Conducts Suc- sion Work.

Henry Pelham Stokes was born at Sussex, England, November 25th, ather is Rector of Whitton-cum- and Rural Dean. He was educated zabeth's School, Ipswich, under Dr. proceeded from there to the Uni- Oxford, where he graduated at lege in the year 1874. At a very expressed a great desire to become and often used to erect a pulpit in ouse, and preach to his family and aying there.

now in the presence of the King recall the sermon on a portion of 's Progress," and tell of the earn- simplicity which characterized it. hool life, however, his tastes seemed very rapidly, owing to his being in the society of his cousin, Col- Palmer Warden, who served in the xpedition, and for the rest of his s inclinations were turned toward he had made up his mind to enter raining school at Sandhurst, and his name for the 23d Royal Welsh parents, who were against his en- ny, decided that he should proceed and accordingly he matriculated old desire for the army became stronger, whereupon he entered University Rifle Volunteer Corps, with them in the autumn manœu- gain wishing to join the army.

career at Oxford the foundation of rinciples seemed to be completely falling into the society of some ng men, for three years this con- which time the early impressions seemed to be buried, but happily ally soon to burst forth into "new-of his Oxford life he remained in g for his commission, and during ved in the giddy whirl of fashion- One evening, while playing a with some friends, the Holy Spirit down upon him and brought a to his mind to this desire that he gave expres- ch naturally caused some degree among the company assembled. was perfectly wretched all that he following morning came down ill more miserable. Many of his y in Rotten Row (the Hyde Park ve) remarked it, and asked him if which he replied, "Something is e. I cannot tell what." After ening he drove up in a cab to the Hall, Islington, and on reaching hundreds coming away, unable on. Nothing daunted, he pushed h the crowd, and found one seat ar end of the hall, and when giv- t of his conversion from the pul- ays,

AND HEAR MR. MOODY.

EPT THAT SEAT FOR ME."

y hear a very small portion of the was on the text, "The Spirit say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Mr. Moody went on to say, "Perhaps there are some who are deaf, who do not hear the Spirit and the Bride; perhaps there are some hungry and not thirsty. Therefore God said to His beloved disciple John, Before we close our book let us put the offer of salvation as broadly as we possibly can, 'Whosoever will;'" and, pointing right at him, he said,—"'Whosoever' that is you, young man." It was the King's arrow of conviction. He saw it all, and was among the first to rise when Mr. Moody asked those who wished to become Christians to stand up to be prayed for.

He walked out with hundreds of others into the inquiry room, and the Lord sent Captain the Hon. Reynolds Moreton up to him, and on the evening of March 23d, 1875, he "passed from death unto life." Directly after his conversion he was appointed secretary to Captain Moreton, at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, and here he was trained in evangelistic work for six months; and just before proceeding to Italy for a holiday he was suddenly sent by God, in a remarkable way, to the Highlands of Scotland, where he met with Mr. Aitken, at that time incumbent of Christ Church, Everton, Liverpool. The result of that meeting was, the way was opened for him to take holy orders, and shortly afterward he was ordained to the curacy of Christ Church, Everton, under Mr. Aitken's successor, the Rev. R. D. Monro.

Here he labored with much blessing for eighteen months, during which time he was sent to conduct a few missions. The Lord graciously owned and his gift as a mission preacher seemed to be brought out at once. At this time, amid several offers, one came from Mr. Aitken inviting him to join him in his mission work. It seemed to be unmistakably the Lord's call, and therefore he left his curacy in January, 1878, to join Mr. Aitken in his great work.

HIS MISSION WORK,

His conversion under God was an answer to his mother's prayers; and in addressing large congregations of women, he always urges the mothers present to go on pleading for the conversion of their sons and daughters. The Lord owns, in a marked way, the special addresses to special classes he gave at the Chilton Mission. One of his most blessed mission services was to the railway men in the station at East Stonehouse. The Lord did great things through him among the ragwomen at Dublin; among the children at St. Peter's, Cranley Gardens; among the servants at Spitalfields; among the navvies at their dinner hour, among whom he sat for a short time, day by day, talking to them of the things concerning the kingdom, in a brotherly, happy manner, the signs following.

We hope that earnest prayer will be offered by our readers for the rich blessing of God to be continued upon his ministrations and those of Mr. Aitken.

RESULT OF THE INSPECTION.

A Recollection by Major Malan.

General Hay's Commendatory Report and Request to Major Malan not to Resign—The Major Adheres to his Resolution—God's Faithfulness to His Promises.

GENERAL HAY, on his return to Cape Town, after inspecting these troops under my command at King William's Town, when telling an officer of this inspection, said, "I could see that the men were determined that they would do well; and they did it all for him." He was quite right. Soldiers will stand by officers who treat them with justice and kindness. On this occasion, as of old, the Lord, for His own and His servant's sake, made them willing (Ex. 35 : 21; 36 : 1).

It was my duty as commanding officer to wait upon the general until he had left the barracks. We walked across the parade ground alone. I was silent. I could not help thinking of all that the Lord had shown me to-day. "Ye shall not need to fight in this battle" is His word to His servants in all their trials; "stand ye still, and see the salvation of the Lord with you."

"Well, major, I must honestly tell you I have never been so mistaken in any man as I have been in you." Thus began the general. "I came up here thoroughly prejudiced against you. The Horseguards correspondence, reports I had heard about you, etc., made me expect to find another state of things. I assure you I think very differently now."

"I thank God it is so, sir."

"Yes, I had expected to find everything in confusion, your officers discontented, and your men—why, I find everything in perfect order; everybody happy. I never saw such a happy body of men before in my life."

"I thank God, and you too, sir, for those words."

The general simply remarked that many years' experience among soldiers enabled him to see that my men were happy, and that this depended upon the commanding officer.

We then walked on for some time in silence. At length he began once more. "You will excuse me, major. I have no wish to intrude in your private affairs; but, knowing as I do why you are leaving the service, I consider it my duty, in the position I occupy, to request, for the sake of the country, that you will reconsider the step you have taken, and withdraw the resignation of your commission. I will write to the Horseguards and explain the real state of the case." He added more than this, urging me not to leave the service.

It was some time before I could make any reply. Could I have ever expected to hear such language from a general of our army? I was reminded of Daniel's words, "Forasmuch as before Him innocency was found in me. And also before thee, O King, have I done no hurt." Love of country and of my comrades urged me to remain.

But I had been led to see, a few days before, that it was God's will I should go to the heathen. I had told a magistrate, among whose people I had proposed to work, that it was my purpose to come and live for Christ among them. I could not, now retreat, and I had no wish to do so.

"Thank you, general, very much. It is too late now. I have passed my word that I will go with the Gospel of Christ to the heathen north of the Kei, and, God helping me, I will do so."

He expressed his regret at this decision, hoping that I should yet change my mind. He spoke most kindly to me. When we were outside the barracks I asked his leave to call on him at his quarters that evening, and we then parted.

I was in his room at the time appointed. "General, I have come to ask you to grant me leave to proceed to England."

"I cannot refuse your leave," he replied, "I find everything in such admirable order. No man could spoil your men in four months."

Here was the Lord's answer to the charge against me that I had deteriorated discipline.

I assured the general that the officer on whom the command would devolve was quite competent to perform the duty, or I should not have asked for leave.

He dined at mess with us that evening. I learned in conversation with him how deeply he was interested in the welfare of the British soldier. When I bade him good-night he gave me a most cordial invitation to visit him at Cape Town on my way to England.

When I returned to my quarters that night I thanked and praised the Lord who had fulfilled to me His Word—"He shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noonday."

Fellow-Christian, are you suffering for the Lord's sake? Have your efforts to serve Christ our Lord drawn upon you misunderstanding or calumny? Count it all joy. Let patience have her perfect work. Let your yieldingness be known unto all men; the Lord is near (Phil. 4 : 5). Either now or in the glory "He shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noonday" (Psalm 37 : 6).

THE BLESSING AND CURSE OF MORTGAGES

A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage, preached on Sunday Morning, March 7th, 1880.

"We have mortgaged our lands, vineyards, and houses, that we might buy corn, because of the dearth. We have borrowed money for the king's tribute."—NEHEMIAH 5 : 3, 4.

The Israelites' Mortgage—A Blessing and a Curse—Commercial Enterprises founded on Mortgage—The Mortgage a Blessing—What Mortgage has Done for all Nations—A Church Mortgage a Legitimate Transaction—The Hardest Thing to Kill is a Church—Church Credit Superior to Business Credit—Corporations have Souls—The Mortgage a Blessing—The Blessing Becoming a Plague—The Mortgage like Rheumatism—The Tabernacle Debt an Occasion of Offence—A Hindrance to Usefulness—A Private Letter—The Plan Proposed—My Cry for Relief—The Difference between Subscription and Payment—The Spiritual Blessings of Eleven Years—The Last Year the Best—Victory over Assailants—Reception in Europe—A new Departure.

GOOD-MORNING to the Israelites, just got back from Babylonish captivity to their dear old city of Jerusalem! But to reconstruct their homes and their temple and to pay their taxes was a tough struggle. They borrowed money at 12 per cent, according to verse eleven, and that is a killing rate of interest. They had plastered everything over with mortgages—mortgages on their houses, mortgages on their lands, mortgages on their vineyards, and mortgages on their families. But the mortgage had been a blessing. By it they had bought corn and saved the life of their families, and paid the taxes, so keeping their property from confiscation. But now

THEY WANT TO BE DELIVERED.

The mortgage blessing has become a mortgage curse, and there are tears in this pronunciamento: "We have mortgaged our lands, vineyards, and houses. We have borrowed money for the King's tribute."

The history of the mortgage would be the history of the domestic, social, financial, political, and ecclesiastical progress of all ages. It will be useful if I can intelligently and practically speak this morning of the mortgage as a blessing and as a curse.

There is much absurd and wholesale denunciation of borrowing money. If I should request all those who have never asked a loan to rise, there would not out of this audience one get up, unless it were some one who had acted so badly from the start that he knew no one would trust him. At the inception of nearly all enterprises, great or small, a loan is necessary. You say this is not so when one is born to large inheritance. Then the man borrows of his father. The younger son, in the parable of the prodigal, borrowed his one third and cleared out.

All the great estates were founded on obtained credit. The mortgage rebuilt Chicago, the City of Palaces—yea, built it the first time. Dig down under the great warehouses and palaces of our cities, and you find the five dollars, the one hundred dollars, or the one thousand dollars with which the estates began.

Years ago an Irishman landed with fifty cents in his pocket on the Battery, asked the loan of one dollar from an entire stranger, and now is among the New York princes. Let a young man, as soon as he can pay one fourth the value of a house, buy it, put on it a mortgage for the other three fourths, marry a prudent wife, and then with four hands toil until it is all theirs.

By the industry, the forecast, the wholesome economy, and the good habits which are thus compelled, tens of thousands of young men have been saved for both worlds. Others who were resolved on purchasing no homestead until they had sufficient to pay the entire amount have meanwhile got on them the habits of dissipation which put such a heavy mortgage on their bodies and souls that they do not live to get a homestead at all.

Out of one hundred thousand homesteads now clear from incumbrance, ninety-nine thousand started with a mortgage. The mortgage has built the railroads, purchased the farms, levelled the mountains, dredged the bays, bridged the rivers, built the cities, and put the world centuries farther on in civilization than it would have been without it. All the nations stand on a mortgage. You say better that they stood on solid ground. Yes, but suppose during our last war or the war of the Revolution it had been impossible for us to borrow money. As a nation we would have perished from history. When nations are assailed they must fight or die.

To show the vast foundation of mortgage, the United States owe more than two billion dollars, France over three billion, England over three billion, Spain over one billion, Italy over one billion. Pull the mortgage out from under nations and Europe and America would tumble into barbarism, anarchy, and annihilation. A mortgage is merely borrowed strength of others to help us in crises of individual or national life on the promise that we will pay them for the help rendered.

But what is true in secularities is more true

IN ECCLESIASTICAL AFFAIRS.

If churches had not been built till all the money could be raised, tens of thousands of our best churches would never have been built, and millions of those who are now Christians on earth or saints in heaven would never have been comforted or saved. The old Collins line of steamers went into bankruptcy, but that does not change the fact that they transported hundreds of passengers in safety across the sea; and if all the churches in Christendom to-morrow went down under the thump of the sheriff's hammer, that would not hinder the fact that they have already transported thousands into the kingdom, and have done a stupendous good, that all earth and hell can never, never undo.

There is an enormous absurdity in the idea that a church must not be dedicated until it can all be paid for. All consider it right to borrow for a secular institution. Is it not right to borrow for a religious? Is not the Lord as good pay as a Baring, a Rothschild, or the Vanderbilts, or the Astors? It is safer to borrow for the church than for any other institution, because other institutions die, but a church seldom. I have lived in this city eleven years, and, notwithstanding all the hard times, but two churches have died, one a Reformed church and the other a Methodist church, and I understand that they have both come to resurrection. The spirit of John Livingston would not let the one rest in its grave, and the spirit of John Wesley would not let the other stay dead.

The hardest thing in the universe to kill is a church. Men sometimes get mad and go away from churches, and, getting at a safe distance off, look back, and expect to see all tumble into a mass of ruins; but the church stands, because God stands with it, and a man had better plant his foot very firmly and solidly and roll up his sleeves and brace himself before he attempts to throw the Almighty. He who attempts to throw a church attempts to wrestle down Omnipotence. But for the advantages of the mortgage the majority of the most useful churches would not have been built. But for the blessing of the mortgage during the recent hard times many of the missionary societies would have stopped and their missionaries have been called home. Next to the happiness of cash down to forward religious movements is the happiness of being able to get the money on loan.

The wide slang against churches in debt had better cease until business men give no notes, ask no extension, get no discount, apply for the use of no name on their paper, pay no bonuses, and seek no accommodation "till next week." By the time the world does business cash down the church will do business cash down. The banks and insurance companies and great monetary institutions of the country cannot appreciate the good they do when to asylums and universities and churches they loan money.
They get not only the six per ce which the law allows, but the bles
God who is to such institutions the c
What they lend to the church t Christ. They have not only the p security, but the strongest name o is that of the Lord Almighty.

It is a lying proverb that says " have no souls." During our exp church we have found corporations i and Brooklyn which, having per officers and directors, had twenty s added—the great soul of corporate

We have not forgotten that whe financial midnight of this country w rebuild our church after its destruc an insurance company said, "Here and the president of the company is a thousand dollars, my own priv tion. Say nothing about it."
have souls.

When the Israelites of my text w build their homes, and wanted to b for that purpose, the mortgagors d them have it, though I wish they h twelve per cent.

THE BLESSING BECOMING A P

But after a while the mortgage the text ceased to be a blessing a plague. It had helped them throug and ecclesiastical crisis, but now the it no longer, and they cried out for blessing lies too long it gets to be the first moment the farmer can g gage off his farm, and the mercha gage off his merchandise, and th mortgage off his home, and the ch tution the mortgage off its asylum ligious society the mortgage off its had better do it.

I have heard people argue the ad dividual debts and national debt debts; but I could not, while the going on, control my risibilities. such debts keep the individual an and the State busy trying to pa doubt of it. So rheumatism keep busy with arnica, and neuralgia kee busy with hartshorn, and the coug ges, and the toothache with lotion no argument in favor of rheumatis gia, or coughs, or toothache. Be ble, get rid of these things and something else.

A church that is obliged to take its time in nursing its mortgages its mortgages amputated. On the is free from debt it mutiplies itsel stead of spending its time in mixi the fortification walls, it spends it limbering its guns against the com

No church in either hemisph friends than this glorious Brookly and everywhere multitudes inn praying for its welfare, and we lands that it is a blessing to the let us have our church-decks cl and we will, God helping, shake the thunders of Armageddon. W dous audience-room is here! Wh stalwart men and consecrated w an illimitable field! What unpar tunities! Only one hindrance.

I do not ask anything of you t prayers. I have what I believe is from God in this matter, and it a private letter which a West wrote to a newspaper editor, and allowed to see, in which the write do you allow Dr. Talmage to be misrepresented by those clergym debt on his church? Open your subscription, and we people will

Over that idea I have broode three or four weeks, and

I PROPOSE THIS PLA

which, with the help of these ge press, who have been with us so that I have come to look upon t ce, be successful. Through the report mon, or through a personal card in ls, I hope to reach all our friends t the earth, and to say to them :

r one dollar. By enlarging our old year, building our first Tabernacle ear, then enlarging that on the suc-ar, and, after its total destruction by ng the substantial and commodious the present, and doing all this while was in great financial depression, we large debt. We yet owe $59,554.42.
has been so misrepresented and so ex-that it has been a huge obstacle in the usefulness. We run against it in ement. My clerical enemies have e chief cudgel with which to pound have used it in newspaper correspond-image me and my church. Ever and debt is the egg over which Satan
s wing and hatches out a Presbyterial some other malformation.

R THIS MY CRY FOR RELIEF.

: in the name of Christ and the irst : Will all those who read my ser- one dollar each through the editor of n which they read them, that I may d from this load? Between these myself there has been a warm rela-any years. I have been told again these readers would clear my church if I asked them. If I have been of or help to them, let each one send rch one dollar. I will give them bet-, and every week for the next twenty-I live so long.
e who read the sermons to audiences ouses and churches with no pastor, e of this matter in their neighbor-lp me out of this thraldom. One each would do it. You say it would accomplish it. Yes, but they are not rous as you are, and what is every-ness is nobody's business, and if there lus some great charity would get it.
"I thought the church debt was paid was all subscribed and on condition uld all be paid. But some persons, th the church, left it, and refused to ubscriptions, and so the whole plan
. We want no more subscriptions.
dollar in money. We want it now.
rsonally acknowledge the receipt of to the person who sends it, such a name and address, whether it be sent or of some paper, as I prefer, or to urthermore : Will all my friends of and of this time send a dollar each?
of all denominations, my friends in y and out of it, young and old, a dolsympathizers with my work, whether orth or south of Mason and Dixon's d a dollar each with their blessing, ine in return. I ask all my friends, ave seen them or not, in this way to
of the hands of my enemies, clerical want to preach the gospel without This debt is the only obstacle, but it broad and exasperating.
s from any source I receive response eal I will reply with my own hand, ang the scroll of names in my study ore me who did the work of emanci-to remind me that the work was ny people. My friends have often or being too modest in asking money purposes, and as being a very poor ive me credit that by this one solicitallar from everybody, I have become beggars.
I have in this anniversary sermon had he Christian temporalities. Of the ssive and spiritual affairs I mention de that in these

EVEN YEARS OF PASTORATE ceived 2026 members, and these but o of the multitudes here converted to g other churches in this and other and other lands. If we had enough faith we could have ten thousand conversions in a year. God is ready, but the trouble is we are not ready.

Some men are afraid of revivals. I am afraid of not having them. The world is to have two universal conflagrations. Before the final one, which turns the round earth into ashes, there is to be a conflagration of religious awakening that will set all nations into a blaze. The morning telegrams, before they transmit the state of the money markets, will give intelligence of kingdoms saved. For that final consummation God told Guttenberg to invent printing, and Robert Fulton the steam-engine, and Morse the electric communication, and Cyrus W. Field the submarine cable, and Edison the telephone, and Eli Whitney the cotton-gin, and De Lesseps the Suez and Darien Canals. All the wheels, and all the levers, and all the batteries, and the winds and the lightnings, and all the land, and all the sea shall feel millennial pressure.

If fifty years ago some one had been wild enough to prophesy that Europe and America would be in instantaneous communication he would have been handed over to the doctors to be treated for mental aberration. I should not wonder if before these young men get to be sixty years of age, instead of the union of two hemispheres they shall see a grander marriage—the marriage of earth and heaven, all the towers celestial and terrestrial striking the wedding-bells! Hosanna! Hosanna!

During these eleven years I have dwelt among you I consider the past year the most fortunate. As a pastor in an anniversary sermon is expected to be somewhat autobiographical, I will say there have been two events which afford me especial satisfaction. One is the complete defeat of my clerical enemies. It seemed to many as if they had planned our extermination. God overruled their assaults, to the making for us innumerable friends, through the strengthening of our church in all departments, to the opening of many new doors for preaching the gospel through the printing-press; and, whereas, when they started the combat they were the plaintiffs and I the defendant, by providential ruling they have become the defendants, anxious about their own reputation, crying aloud for investigation. Let them stand as a warning to all men that the spirit of pursuit is the spirit of the devil, and that when Haman builds a gallows for another, himself hangs on it. Toward them I cultivate a forgiving spirit, while at the same time I would be unchristian and an ingrate if I did not recognize the fact that God gave me complete victory over them. All the revenge I wish against my pursuers is that our church debt be paid so that they can no longer use it to our disadvantage.

Another event of the year that fills me with gratitude was my reception in Great Britain and Ireland during last summer. The story of kindnesses received in all the towns and cities will never be told in this world. What encouragement to work, what faith in God, that foreign visit gave me! The high and the low and all classes met me with a heartiness of welcome which I cannot describe. Whenever an Englishman or a Scotchman or an Irishman appears at these church doors, give him the best attentions, in memory of foreign kindnesses shown your pastor. One of my anticipations of heaven is of meeting the mighty assemblages to whom in foreign lands last summer I preached the gospel. "There shall be no more sea." From the banks of the Hudson I wave a salutation to dwellers on the banks of the Shannon, the Clyde, the Doon, and the Thames.

I thank you for your kindness and forbearance during the last eleven years. It required all the trials we went through to consolidate us. After the departure of my excellent and successful predecessor, Rev. Dr. Rockwell, a name I mention with great affection, there was a long interregnum between pastorates, and the church scattered and nearly ecame extinct. The church could muster only nineteen votes to make out a call for me eleven years ago. This congregation has come together more suddenly perhaps than any other congregation was ever gathered. All strangers, all denominations, all conditions, it was necessary that our old church be burned, and that from time to time we should be maligned and caricatured and assaulted, and go through the Red Sea. All these things drove us closer together, until now we are one till death do us part.

I think you will either bury me or I will bury you. We have struck hands in everlasting friendship. We may part a little while at the marble pillar of the sepulchre, but we will meet each other beyond it. How many have crossed over during these eleven years! What crowds of beautiful children who skipped down to the margin of the river and sprang into the loving arms of Christ! And how many of the aged, whose footsteps got shorter and shorter until they stopped eternally to rest!

How near it brings heaven and earth when part of a family is here and part there! When our hands of affection reach up, and their hands of affection reach down, I think we almost touch each other. Oh, children, and parents, and brothers and sisters glorified, bend this way! bend this way! In your behalf, oh ye bereaved of earth, I stand on tiptoe and reach up and grasp the hand of celestial greeting! Hark! That must be the tramp of their blessed feet coming through the gate to meet you!

From this day let our church take into wider catholicity, grander enterprise, and higher expectations. If after what God has done we ever doubt, we deserve to be wiped out, and some minister of more faith take the pulpit and a congregation of more gratitude take the pews. God's goodness to us puts on us a mortgage, not like that spoken of in the text which takes only part, but a mortgage of gratitude for all we have, and all we are, and all we expect to be.

A NEW DEPARTURE

God helping, we must make this year more telling than any of its predecessors. Instead of a slight skirmish for God, let us bring on a general engagement. Shield in left hand, battle-axe in right hand, strike! Strike now! Strike through! and if in the battle you fall, let your last words be those of a brigadier-general who, dying at Spottsylvania, when desiring to be turned in the hospital, and they asked him which way, he answered: "Turn my face toward the enemy!"

The Bethany Institute in New York has commenced the ninth year of its existence. It has done a most useful and efficient work in the training of lady missionaries, of whom 178, educated there, are now laboring for Christ in this or other lands. An important branch of study pursued in the institute is that of medicine, which is under the supervision of competent professors, who give lectures gratuitously to the students. The knowledge thus obtained enables the missionary to alleviate physical suffering, and in doing so gain a hearing for their more important mission where otherwise the door of usefulness might be closed. There are now thirty-four ladies studying there.

The Presentation of a Walking-stick to Rev. C. H. Spurgeon by Mr. John B. Gough is an interesting event. During his recent visit to England the intercourse between the American champion of temperance and the pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle was of the most cordial kind; nor has their friendship cooled now that the two families are separated by the Atlantic. Since his return home Mr. Gough has consigned to London an ebony walking-stick, with a massive gold head, elegantly chased, the centre being inlaid with a piece of California quartz dotted over with the precious metal in its natural state. The inscription runs, "To the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon with the affectionate regards of John B. Gough." In addition to this Mr. Gough also sent $125 as a donation to Mrs Spurgeon's Book Fund for poor ministers.

ARNOLD PERCIVAL MONTAIGNE;

Or the Heir of a Deferred Inheritance.

A Thrilling Story by Henry Martin, Author of "Felicia Cuffe."

(Continued from page 151.)

Mr. Gogharty is Worsted in Argument by the Wily Jesuit Superior—He Appeals to the Sense of Justice of the Superior.

"You are silent, Mr. Gogharty," said the Superior, "and, though conscious of the truth of all I have stated, you will make no admission. It does not matter, however," he added, "for I have here in my hand three letters—one your own, and two others—containing the positive testimony of unchallengeable witnesses to the fact of Arnold Montaigne's conversion to the holy Catholic Church, and that quite within the twelve months which I assigned for our holy and blessed enterprise. I dare say you will at once guess who are the writers of these two letters. One of the unimpeachable witnesses is the Rev. Jerome Grant, and the other is Father Prout, the parish priest of ——, near Portarlington. Shall I read to you what they say, Mr. Gogharty?" and without waiting for a reply he said, "I think I had better."

The Superior was opening the epistle for perusal, when Mr. Gogharty, having recovered from his condition of mental perplexity, with great energy interrupted him.

"What in the world, Mr. Superior," he cried, "has all this to do with the matter before us? Granting that what Mr. Jerome Grant and Father Prout once wrote to you is true, what has that to do with the present question? Arnold Montaigne is no Papist now; but upon the condition of his being one depends, you are well aware, the possession by my son Alick of the Percival property."

"Quite so, Mr. Gogharty," said the Superior with a placid smile, "but not the fulfilment of my engagement, my dear sir. That required me, you will remember, to accomplish, if possible, the conversion—which I have done—of Arnold Montaigne to the true faith, not his abiding in it. That is a matter which would, of course depend upon God's will and the measure of grace in young Montaigne's own heart, and, alas!"—the Superior, as he spoke, piously raised his eyes—"the measure of grace has proved too small, and 'the dog has returned to his vomit, and the sow to its wallowing in the mire,' and," in a severe and stern voice he added, "your own conscience, Mr. Gogharty, will bear witness that this young man's relapse to heresy is entirely due to your breach of my injunctions, and your stupid and wicked interference.

"I told you never from the time we parted, without my direct and positive leave, to take hand or part in this matter. You gave your solemn promise to this effect, but you perfidiously broke your word, and now, sir, you must abide the consequences."

As the Superior spoke, confusion, rage, and fear by turn took possession of Mr. Gogharty: confusion, for he saw at a glance that Percival's temporary relapse to Roman Catholicism fulfilled, if not the spirit, at all events the letter of the Jesuit's bond; rage at himself and Alick, the one the instrument and the other the occasion of Percival's return to his early faith; and fear, because now, without his payment to the Jesuits of the promised £2000, he saw he could not claim his deeds, and he knew that their absence from his hands would some day be sure to entail a professional catastrophe. Casting about in his thoughts his dreadful dilemma, he came to the conclusion of appealing to the generosity of the man in whose power he felt himself, and who eyed him so keenly and with such self-possession as he stood before him.

"Superior," he said, in a more subdued tone than he had before used, "I confess I have been to blame, but my joy at seeing your miraculous success was so great I could not curb my impetuosity. You see, however, Superior, that from the abortive nature both I and my son are shut out from any share in the Percival property."

"Quite so," remarked the Superior, with his former placid smile, "for your possession of the estate, according to the old knight's will, depended upon this Arnold Montaigne's continuing a Catholic. You are quite right there, my dear sir," he added, as though Mr. Gogharty needed any confirmation of the fact. It was said, however, not from this idea, we fear, but to torture him.

"But then, Superior," said the wretched Mr. Gogharty, in a whining tone, "I never could have anticipated such a course of events as has taken place, and I cast myself, Superior, upon your mercy. It was upon the supposition of this property coming to my family, you know, that I promised you the £2000. I think, Superior, you must see that. And surely, as that supposition has failed, and I gain nothing by Montaigne's temporary Romanism, you will return me my deeds as freely as I gave them."

The Jesuit Superior, however, had no such intention; he had this man in his grasp—a man who he believed was wealthy. He had also expended upon this scheme of Percival's perversion considerable thought and time. Were his labors, then, to go for nothing? He thought not, and especially since his "Society" in — was any thing but rich, and needed money to further its operations.

"You are a lawyer, Mr. Gogharty," he said, "and will know whether it is the custom of the world to forego reward for laborious and successful service. My certain belief is, it is not. In any case, however, as the head of our Society here, I cannot and will not surrender my just claim upon you. See, sir, here are the deeds which you left in pledge with me;" and, to tantalize the lawyer, he took them from a safe close at hand and laid them on the table. Then pressing his fingers upon them, he slowly and distinctly said,

"Mr. Gogharty, when these papers were given me you solemnly engaged, in the presence of my brother here," and he nodded toward that worthy, "that, upon my winning Arnold Percival Montaigne to the Catholic faith, you would pay me, for this sacred Society over which I preside, £2000. According to the testimony of your own letter, of two faithful witnesses, and of your words now spoken, that consummation was duly effected. I have nothing to do, sir, with subsequent occurrences, which I neither brought about nor provided for; and my final resolve and declaration is this, that, unless you fulfil your part of the covenant between us, these deeds shall never leave my custody."

"But, Superior," cried Mr. Gogharty, greatly agitated, "I declare solemnly I have not the money. Through the discovery of our—I mean, Superior, your plot, I have lost even the Percival agency, and am become a very poor man, and am altogether dependent now upon my general practice. The want of these deeds will be my utter ruin; for goodness' sake do not drive me to destruction."

"No fear of that, Mr. Gogharty," was the response; "none in the least, sir. You surely can compass £2000, at all events, if not directly, yet indirectly. Why, your son Alick, from the absurd and fantastic friendship, as you call it, which he has shown to this Percival Montaigne, must have, I should say, an unbounded influence over him. There is plenty of money there, sir—plenty. Use, your son, sir, to come at it. Whether you will or not, however, of this be certain, Mr. Gogharty, I have spoken my last word about this £2000, and will keep to it."

The suggestion of the Superior was one which we are aware Mr. Gogharty could by no means carry out. "No, the thing can't be entertained for a moment," said the lawyer to himself. "I know well what a reception I should meet with from that high-flown Alick if I could screw up my courage to propose such a measure to him. He'd scout the very idea of it, that he would, and, while professing in his usual style to be very sorry for me, would tell me to my face that I only got my natural deserts for against the innocent Percival, fors conspirators.

"Yet what in the world shall I there ever a respectable professional in so trying a position?" and Mr. G cerely and deeply sympathized with his dreadful dilemma. Since confe fault and appeal to the Superior's Cl erosity, as he called it, had failed, M thought he would now see what virt in a little braggadocio and threateni not, however, feel much encouragen expedient as he looked at the firm li ble features, and cool and stern dem Superior as he sat before him. But only strategy, he thought, that now him. He was, besides, as we know, what irascible temper, and the adva the Superior was taking of him, deemed a mere quibble, roused his i "Superior," he said, "you mus aware of the sharp practice, for I nothing else, which you are trying t me. I have not hitherto called i wished this affair between us to be cably and pleasantly, but, since I fir deal with a man that knows nothing imity, and is set upon pushing an u tage to the uttermost, instead of re deeds, temporarily placed in your h demand them. You have given me lent, Superior, no quid pro quo for legally, you have no right to retair pleased, then, to place them at hands, and do not force me in a cou to expose you and the confounde schemes of you and your fraternity.

(To be continued.)

THE SALVATION AR

Farewell Meeting in London to t Battalion.

Aspect of Whitechapel—Headquarte vation Army—Mr. Booth's Wo Farewell to Mr. Railton and S Lasses Detached for an American Presentation of the Flags—Tou ments.

Whitechapel, in the east of L the district to which one would w one's steps when intent on passir evening. On the one side of White one seems to thread a labyrinth markets, where the trade of this c ited in perhaps its least pleasing as the other side one passes so many and wholesale tobacconists' stores t ger might be pardoned if he erro posed the inhabitants of Whitecha freely in gin and tobacco.

But when the inconveniences of in Whitechapel are surmounted, a hall, once a market-place, until M cured it, is reached; the elements a passing the pleasant evening to whi adverted.

The hall at No. 272 Whitechape enormous building. It is well sea lighted, and for the head-quarters Mr. Booth would search long, ev limited supplies of cash in his poc he can testify most emphatically is for, to use his own language, he i state of semi-beggary), for a more s for his work.

Mr. Booth has labored here with for many years, but latterly the fer ious enthusiasm thrown into his perhaps never been equalled sinc electrified his audiences in Mo Wesley carried the banner of the umph through the half-civilized Western England.

For many years Mr. Booth has be by a noble band of workers, but there has not been one more faith from the nature of the work he more useful, than the man whom, perhaps, the "General," Booth is called, can the least spare, and has felt it laid upon his heart to allow o go to America as "Special Commis-" with power to conquer, if he can, the ontinent for Christ.

MR. GEORGE SCOTT RAILTON.

It as to bid him farewell before starting on nomentous campaign that the crowded g assembled on the evening of Feb. 12. we are told, went forth to meet Goliath sling and a stone, and George Scott n left for America, on Saturday, February t two o'clock, from the tidal basin in the hip Australia, for the conquest of Amer- a, ccompanied simply by six country girls. ow little else than that Christ died to save that they have been washed in His blood, at the same fountain is open for all whom n induce to plunge into its healing and ng waters.

Th building was crowded long before the g began, and there was a spirit of enthu- and of religious fervor which for intensity ve never seen equalled. Among the in- d spectators of the scene at the opening, erved Lady Cairns, Mr. S. A. Blackwood, obert Paton, and prominent ministers and m.

neral!" Booth soon made his appearance the meeting. He is a tall, somewhat thin, her prepossessing man, with an aquiline d a piercing eye, though time has made hat gray the locks that once were jet His eyes are, perhaps, the most remark- ature of his face. Fully half a moment he makes a "point" you can tell it is com- the flashing of the eyes.

Th control he exercises over his numerous fol- is paramount. He is obeyed instantly hout question; but the obedience is the f love, and not fear.

Hi wife also accompanied him to the plat- nd did good service when it came to her address the meeting. We have rarely a lady speak to more purpose or more to the hearts of her hearers than Mrs. ; and if what we heard of her advocacy rsday be a specimen of her general style ery, no one need be surprised that the as so greatly blessed her efforts all over ntry.

Mr Bramwell Booth, the son of this most couple, was on the platform and off it— everywhere—making all the arrange- for a comfortable and happy meeting; we saw him moving about, his heart so in the work, we could not help thinking ppy his parents must have been to have so thoroughly in sympathy with them.

was a good deal of singing before the s began, and more hearty singing was never heard before. Verse by verse was out by Mr. Booth, and the more striking s evoked such exclamations as, "Halle- "Glory!" "Praise the Lord!" and the he excitement became greater as various f other hymns were taken up and chanted ame refrain. One verse was taken from hymn,

> "The dying thief rejoiced to see > That fountain in his day."

, and living thieves, too!" said a man oncertina, with great heartiness. her hymn commenced,

> "Oh, I do love Jesus!"

ress being laid on the word do, the refrain e usually associated with a worldly song, ropriated to holy purposes here.

r was then offered by several in the meet- h men and women. Nearly all present own, and many of the concluding parts tences were lost in the cries for mercy, clamations of gratitude to God.

Booth himself prayed for the hearts of all ed so that we might, like Christ, be ever bout doing good. "People," he said, ying this is the cure and that is the cure of England's woe, but we have found out the cure—it flows from Calvary." Toward the end of his prayer he became greatly animated, and his hearers with him, and this feeling was not lessened by the singing of another hymn, with perhaps the loudest chorus we ever remember to have heard.

It was at this stage that Mr. George Scott Railton, the appeared. He was clad in the uniform of the Salvation Army, which seemed to be a dark thick serge, with red braid round the collar. He is a most intelligent-looking man, and one whose services we can readily believe the "General" will miss.

"COMMISSIONER FOR AMERICA,"

He was followed by six country-looking girls, also dressed in the plain dark habiliments of the female portion of the army, with neat black straw hats, trimmed with a red band, on which were the words, in illuminated letters, "Salvation Army." The girls were modest in demeanor, and apparently quite absorbed in the great mission to which, for the time at least, they had devoted their lives.

The reason Mr. Railton was furnished solely with these "officers" for his American campaign is not apparent to those unacquainted with the strategy of the Salvation Army, but "General" Booth, who has shown that he knows how to manage this kind of work better than any one else, has purposely chosen these apparently weak instruments that the excellency of the power may be seen to be of God.

The first speaker was "General" Booth himself. He reminded his hearers that it was fourteen or fifteen years since, a few yards from where he now stood, he commenced the work of the Salvation Army, but he had no conception to what lengths it would grow. He had no plans. All was before him as a sheet of white paper. He only knew that the thousands who were passing to and fro had souls, and that the blood of Christ was as much shed for them as for the frequenters of churches and chapels, and that it could perform as miraculous transformations upon their hearts and lives as it had done upon his. There must, he felt, be some way of reaching them.

Well, out of that effort—the story of which in its fulness and spiritual romance had yet to be told—sprang all the work that had since resulted. He was not going now to tell what the Lord had done, but let his hearers bear in mind that it was not because they had not successful fields of labor at home that they were sending some of the army abroad. There was an amount of work on hand that almost defied contemplation.

At this very hour he could point to two cathedral cities which were being convulsed from one end to the other, from their centre to their circumference, and at this very moment there were thousands struggling to get into the meeting-places in order to listen to the words of mercy at the lips of the simple evangelists of this army. But how did this arise? A dear young girl was converted by the Salvation Army when at Coventry. Her mother and father were godly people, and had previously joined the army, and God rewarded them (as He rewarded everybody who aided its operations) by the conversion of their daughter—and what reward to any godly parents was equal to that of the salvation of their child? They made her into an "officer" of the army, and she was sent to be trained for a while to the North of England.

CALL FROM AMERICA

She went to America with her father and mother; they went into the streets and got a few of the rebels converted, and a most marvellous movement had been the result; but he could not stop to give the details, which are fully told in the War Cry, the official organ of the army.

Well, he had been led to set apart for this work in America, in response to the appeal for help made, Brother Railton, his esteemed secretary, and there were six dear sisters who were leaving father, mother, friends, and home, at such short notice that they had hardly had time to weep.

For six or seven years Brother Railton had been his right hand, in season and out of season, and a more devoted, godly, and capable man there did not breathe. He believed he would do great things for God and through God in America. He would receive from the funds 200*l.* and have to sign a legal document, properly sealed and prepared for registration in two courts—in the Court of Chancery on earth and in the Court of Redemption on high. He expected to get the 200*l.* back from the States very soon after the commencement of this "spiritual buccaneering."

A hymn was here sung, after which Mr. Whittington, solicitor to the Salvation Army, read two documents couched in the usual legal phraseology, the first authorizing George Scott Railton to go into "all the States of America" on the work of the Salvation Army, but to act solely under the command of "General" Booth, and the second was on the part of Mr. Railton accepting the office. The deeds having been duly signed, Mr. Railton spoke at some length on the object and and his intention to fulfil it to the best of his ability as God should help him. He defended the army from any charge of carrying the military idea too far, and said that past ideas of spreading religion were, in his belief, thoroughly inadequate, and had been foisted upon Christian people by the devil, so as to prevent the prevalence of Christ's kingdom. He hoped they would be more and more determined to say, "You must not live without Christ; you must not reject Him."

PURPOSES OF HIS MISSION,

The Rev. Lancelot Railton, brother of the last named speaker, though not a member of the Salvation Army himself, said he thanked God his brother belonged to it. If the dear sainted father and mother who trained them both for God were here, they would rejoice at the honor conferred upon their family. His mother used to say she didn't care if her boys were sweeps so long as they served God. (Mr. Booth, "That's the right sort of mother!") His mother went to Sweden and mastered the language, and employed herself afterward as a missionary schoolmistress in the West Indies, where she married his father. An attempt was made to dissuade her from undertaking a toilsome voyage, and a work which seemed not likely to be productive in good, but she said, "If I can only be instrumental in saving the soul of one little black child I shall be quite ready to go."

Mrs. Booth then presented the banners—one for Philadelphia and one for New York—to Mr. Railton. On them were inscribed the words, "Blood and Fire."

In a remarkable address, which embodied a most original exposition of the career of Gideon, showing his great achievements with weak instrumentalities, Mrs. Booth commended the leader and his six followers to the God of Jacob, and prayed that His blessing might descend richly upon them.

Five of the girls addressed the meeting at this stage in a few words of deep earnestness and religious feeling. One was from Salisbury, two from Nottingham, one from Hammersmith, one from Stoke Newington, but the sixth did not speak.

Mr. Bramwell Booth briefly addressed the meeting, and bade Mr. Railton, who has been more than a brother to him, a touching farewell.

Mr. Booth said the funds had been lately recruited by donations of 50*l.* from Mr. Denny, 30*l.* from the Rev. M. Baxter, of the CHRISTIAN HERALD, 20*l.* from Mr. Webb, and 10*l.* from Mr. Terry.

The immense meeting, which had remained intact up to this moment, though it was verging upon ten o'clock, then sang its closing hymn and separated.

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

THE aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50
per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to MR. BENJAMIN AITKEN, 63 Bible House, New York. The paper may also be obtained weekly from all newsdealers in the United States and Canada.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of specimen copies to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

SUBSCRIBERS frequently write to us for single copies of the CHRISTIAN HERALD. We always endeavor to oblige them, but single and occasional copies can more easily be obtained from a newsdealer. Sometimes we receive complaints that the CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer. Such complaints are promptly attended to, when made to us; but in all cases we desire that our friends will give the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

LAST week's edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, March 3d, at 2.45 P.M., at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Senate Spent Nearly the Whole of last week in discussing the Fitz-John Porter case, in which an effort is being made to reverse the decision of the court-martial held seventeen years ago.

In the House Mr. Fernando Wood introduced his refunding bill, which was received with marked coldness, both by his own party and his opponents. The object of the measure is to liquidate the existing public debt at the earliest practicable period, and meanwhile to secure the lowest practicable rate of interest. For this purpose it is proposed to issue 3½ per cent bonds, thereby effecting a saving in interest of $14,481,042 per annum. The bill also provides for the issue of bonds redeemable at the expiration of twenty years, in order that the payment of the debt may not be prevented by the unwillingness of the holders of bonds to sell them at a fair price. It is also provided that the principal of the debt shall be reduced by the utilization of the surplus revenues, as far as the necessary expenditures of the Government will permit.

The speech of Mr. De la Matyr on the Greenback platform was understood by many persons to imply the advocacy of an unlimited extension of the issue of soft money. It appears that Mr. De la Matyr does not go so far as this. He desires an extension of the issue limited by the necessities of the people.

A Chinese Exodus from San Francisco is reported. The presence of the Chinese laborers in the city has long been an offence to Denis Kearney and the orators of the sand lots, and active measures have been adopted to drive them out of the locality. The companies employing Chinamen have been waited on by a deputation and have been warned in unequivocal terms that the Chinamen must be dismissed. The Mayor of San Francisco is believed to sympathize with these proceedings, and the companies do not therefore feel assured that if they resist the dictation of the sand lots party they will receive the protection of the authorities. They have, in consequence, in many cases complied with the demand, and large numbers of Chinamen being thrown out of employment are on their way to the Eastern cities. Some intend settling in Philadelphia, but the majority are coming to New York. The Chinese minister at Washington has made the San Francisco proceedings the subject of protest to the President as an infraction of the Burlinghame Treaty. Considerable heroism was manifested in the recent disturbances by an intelligent Chinaman named Yung Wing, who, while trying to protect the Chinese coolies, was cautioned that he was putting his life in danger; he replied that perhaps it was the best thing he could do with it. If he thought he could do his people any good he should have no delicacy about his life at all.

An Anti-Fraud Ballot-Box was Exhibited by Rev. Joseph Cook at his Monday evening lecture at Boston, March 1st. Its adoption was recommended by many distinguished men as an effectual means of preventing some of the commoner modes of deceit which have disgraced our elections. This mechanical device consists of a square glass box with movable top and bottom. It contains a hook on which the ballots must be strung and an enumerator which registers the number of persons placing their votes there. This contrivance, the inventor claims, will detect any man placing more than one ballot at a time, and will also prevent any returning officer cancelling or altering a ballot once deposited. In view of the severe struggle which must shortly take place throughout the Union, such an invention is one of weighty importance, and if its merits are such as are claimed for it, its adoption should be universal.

A Measure for the Solution of the Indian problem has been agreed upon by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs. It is proposed to allot homesteads to the Indians, the titles to which shall be absolute and—for 25 years—inalienable. The Indians will be placed under civil and criminal laws, having the same footing in the courts as white men now have. The assistance given to the Indians by the Government is to be continued to some extent, but only so far as may be needful to lead them up to a position of self-maintenance.

Dr. Talmage Addresses to the Readers of his sermons, in the discourse preached last Sunday morning and printed on another page of this journal, a special appeal which we heartily commend to the readers of the CHRISTIAN HERALD. Many of them have written us testifying to spiritual blessings received through the instrumentality of Dr. Talmage's sermons published from week to week in these pages. Dr. Talmage is laboring under a crushing weight of debt, owing to the peculiar circumstances under which the Tabernacle was built. Here is an opportunity of proving in a practical way that the gratitude expressed is a sincere and genuine feeling. We shall be happy to receive and forward to Dr. Talmage any contributions we may receive, and will acknowledge them each week in the CHRISTIAN HERALD.

A Battalion of the Salvation Army has been commissioned by General Booth to come to America and work here for Christ. The extent to which the efforts of the Salvation Army have been owned and blessed by God in Great Britain has been previously mentioned in these columns. The movement was at the outset opposed by many, while even Christians stood aloof from it, doubting its usefulness and objecting to its methods. But General Booth kept on his way, working amongst the very lowest classes of English society, and God has granted him signal success. The London correspondent of the New York Herald had an interview with Mr. Booth recently, and says of his work: "There is much about the movement to rouse opposition and contempt, but if it can reach the millions whom no other agency can reach, and there can be no doubt that it is doing such, it ought to be hailed with pleasure, and not decried and discouraged." Mr. Railton, the leader of the band commissioned for Ame was Mr. Booth's "right-hand man," and his thorough confidence. On another page be found a report of the meeting held in don to bid farewell to the party under o "to conquer America for the Saviour." Railton and his friends left London in the tralia February 14th, and their arrival is h expected as we go to press.

A Sunday Evening Theatrical Perform was stopped by the police in New York on ruary 29th. A number of German Jews h ranged for the representation of a play in race Garden Theatre, to be followed by a and a large company, numbering 2500 o most aristocratic section of the Jewish co nity, assembled on the evening in question. device of charging a dollar for "hat-ch instead of for tickets of admission was ad to evade the law. But just as the hour a for the curtain to rise the manager app and announced that the performance had interdicted by the police. Much disappoin was expressed, but ultimately the audien persed, receiving their money back at the It is satisfactory to find that the law agains atrical performances on Sundays is not alto a dead letter, and that influence and wealt ed to "arrange" an amusement which have been a scandal to the city.

The Report of the Chickering Hall Gospel Services, conducted by the Rev. S Colcord, states that the results of the pa have exceeded any previous year. Exc the warm months, the congregations hav the hall, and sometimes have overflowed i ranking as one of the largest congregati the city. A very large proportion of tho have attended these services are non-c goers, who would hear gospel preachi where if not at the hall.

Inquiry meetings have followed the S afternoon preaching services, and many sought the way of life. How many hav really converted to Christ it is not for say; God, who searcheth the heart, alo tell; but apparently the number has bee large. Many have been introduced to m ship in churches of the various Evangeli nominations.

Mr. Moody's Meetings at St. Louis been thronged with eager crowds since th of the Christian Convention. Special will be made during the month for the r tion of drunkards. Captain Latimore a Morton, of Chicago, and Mr. Bliss, of more, who have had personal experience curse of liquor, will remain some time. perience of Messrs. Latimore and Bliss, a before the recent Christian Convention, a most thrilling and effective character. meetings will be held every night—one Central M. E. Church, for persons general the other for men only, at Tenth and streets. Mr. Sankey will sing at the d meetings, as will also a volunteer chorus.

Diminishing the Work of Police Co one result of temperance agitation. zealous laborers in the cause is Mr. J Drew, who has recently been lecturing i gia. He made Atlanta his central poi from there worked at different spheres neighborhood. The Blue-ribbon Club lished at Savannah through his effort ported to include 2500 members. The b of the Atlanta Police Courts has fallen teen per cent since the movement comme Irish Famine Relief Fund. Contril received up to Monday, March 8th :

A Friend, Huntsville, Miss... ....
Jas. Newman, Bates Mills, Miss..........
A Friend, Turin, N. Y......................
Sunday-school, Sandy Run, Pa..........
Subscriber, Murdocksville, Pa...........
Jno. Williams, Williamsburgh, Tex.......
A Friend, Lansford, Pa.....................
Jas. S. Fain, Poor Hopes Farm, Tenn......

Forwarded to N. Y. Herald..............

A Child's Chest was Examined by the Tele- one in a city of Georgia, only a few weeks o. The child's mother was servant in a house ere there was a telephone connecting with a ntral office among the places of business. e lady of the house became alarmed at the ild's coughing, and calling by the telephone to r family physician, who was nearly a mile dis- nt, asked him if he could listen to the cough rough the wires. The physician said yes, and his ear to the instrument while the child ughed at the other end. He heard the cough tinctly, and prescribed some remedy which on proved beneficial.

A Dog Like Elijah's Ravens.—A Local eacher of the M. E. Church, South, now liv- g, relates that some years ago he was in great- reduced circumstances, and put up with his fe and a large family of children in a hut on a ot of waste land, having no seed, and no tools dig with, and nothing to eat except what God nt him from day to day. Before long a neigh- r passing by offered him a dog, which he ac- pted with a laugh, saying, "My case could t be worse: I am ready to take all I can get." s boys took the dog out hunting every day, d the man now says, "For a long time I and family had nothing to eat except what that g brought to us—a rabbit, a raccoon, a 'pos- m, or something of the sort every day."

An Owl at Sea.—As the White Star Trans- antic steamer Celtic passed the coast of New- ndland on her last passage here, and when she s eight hundred miles from the nearest land, hite owl alighted on the spars of the ship. hen it was brought down to the deck the d was found to be nearly dead from cold and nger, and almost too weak to eat. However, slowly recovered, and is now perfectly well. It a land bird, and is supposed to have been own off the coast of Newfoundland by the sterly gales which had for some days previous evailed there. Finding itself once out at sea, it d probably ceased making efforts to reach the d and had drifted before the gale, its only ef- ts being to keep above water. The bird must ve possessed remarkable powers of endurance have kept up so long. The owl measures arly five feet from wing to wing. The neces- y for continuous exertion night and day to ep itself from destruction must have been a ing ordeal for a land bird, and when it at t found a resting-place on the ship it must ve been thankful, if birds can feel such an notion. The anxious soul once brought to e up all efforts to save itself and rest wholly Christ, enjoys a similar sense of peace and st and security.

The Price of Success is only Known to those o pay it. A Boston gentleman was recently ngratulated on the prosperous issue of some ock-exchange speculations. He replied, "My ogress for the past nine years has been through torturing existence, and if I have reached the al of success I think I have fairly earned it, d any one who wants to get it at the same ice has my sympathy." This is the experience many persons whom the world envies. And metimes the successful man acknowledges that e prize when attained is by no means worth e struggle. But no man has ever heard a ristian who has spent his life in the service of s Master speak disparagingly of the service or e reward.

A Presentation by Chinese Converts to Chris- nity was made to their Sunday-school teach- s at St. Louis, on the Chinese New Year's Day. e Celestials had kept the matter exceedingly iet, and no one had the slightest idea of what s going on until they had taken possession of e Y. M. C. A. rooms and began to decorate. ey brought with them a large and not very epossessing-looking wooden box, which had idently seen hard usage. It had every reason look battered, for it had made the passage from nton, China, to San Francisco, and thence ross the continent to St. Louis. The appear- ce of the receptacle was soon forgotten en the contents appeared. The first thing shown was a hanging basket of Chinese workmanship. A companion basket of this next appeared. Both were hung at the sides of the room. Between them was suspended something which resembles a Chinese pagoda, with revolving figures set inside, the subject of which is "The Charge of the Fortress." It was provided with six little white china cups containing dips, which, being lighted, caused by the heat which they emitted a large number of figures gayly dressed to revolve, and displays considerable ingenuity in construction. Each of the lady teachers of the Sunday-school was presented with a small hanging basket, while the superintendent and the secretary of the Y. M. C. A., received beautiful handkerchiefs of red Chinese silk. It is clear that the Chinese are grateful for the efforts made by the Christian people of St. Louis to enlighten and convert them.

The Prayers of Two Christian Men were Answered in a very significant way lately. A city missionary in Brooklyn was perplexed by the want of money for the purposes of his Mission, and carried his trouble to God in prayer. A merchant in New York needed money to fulfil a contract he had made, and he also prayed for help. The merchant received the supplies he needed from an unexpected source, and after giving thanks for the timely succor he opened his Bible, and the first passage which caught his eye was: "Honor the Lord with thy substance and the first fruits of all thine increase" (Prov. 3:9). He knew what would be his profit on the contract he was now able to execute, and as a practical evidence of his thankfulness he at once dispatched a large proportion of it to the Brooklyn City Missionary, who would, he knew, put the money to a good use. Thus God, who knows the circumstances of all His children in supplying the need of one, prompted him to help another.

The American Missionary Association is now free of debt. During the past year it paid off an indebtedness of $37,389. Among the colored people of the South an important work has been accomplished by this association. It has at present in the Southern States eight chartered institutions, twelve high-schools, and twenty-four common-schools, with a total of 163 teachers and 7207 pupils, in all of which Christian knowledge is promulgated. In addition there are about 5200 Sunday-school scholars under its charge.

Mr. E. Payson Hammond's Work in Canada still continues to enjoy the blessing of God. He has been laboring at St. Catherine's, Ontario, assisted by all the evangelical ministers of the city. Many young men and women, as well as children, have found Christ. A captain of a lake steamer came to the meetings for the first time last Friday night, being led there by his wife, who was hopefully converted two nights before. He went home from the inquiry meeting angry, but soon returned, showing deep feeling. Saturday he went round among his comrades, urging them to come to the meetings. Monday night he confessed Christ before the whole congregation, and went actively to work among inquirers. His brother, another lake captain, and his brother's wife, are also among the saved, as are two who have been avowed infidels.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works.—We have much pleasure in announcing that another large consignment of volumes by this eminent author and preacher has just been received. They are now on sale at the office of the CHRISTIAN HERALD, No. 63 Bible House, New York, and are offered at prices so low as to bring them within the reach of every one. Twelve Sermons on various subjects, with photograph of Mr. Spurgeon, price 35 cents. John Ploughman's Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents; in cloth, 60 cents. The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, a volume of fifty sermons, $2.50. The Treasury of David, a homiletical exposition of the book of Psalms, five vols., as far as Psa. 118, $3 per vol. Spurgeon's Birthday-Book. This popular gift-book contains a suitable passage selected from Mr. Spurgeon's writings for every day in the year, with a blank space opposite for autographs. The signatures of Mr. and Mrs. Spurgeon appear at their respective birthdays. The book is elegantly bound, and the price is 75 cents. Remittances should accompany orders.

THE ROYAL PREROGATIVE.

A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

The first he preached after his return from Mentone.

"He that is our God is the God of salvation; and unto God the Lord belong the issues from death. But God shall wound the head of His enemies, and the hairy scalp of such an one as goeth on still in his trespasses."—PSALM 68: 20, 21.

In the Old Testament God is All in All—His Glory should be more Vivid still under the Christian Dispensation—I. The Prerogative—The Power over Life and Death—1. The Prerogative His by Right—2. God has the Power of the Prerogative—An Aged Minister—3. He has often Exercised the Power—II. The Character of the Sovereign—1. Salvation the Most Glorious of God's Designs—2. The Most Delightful of his Works—3. We Live under the Dispensation of Mercy—4. To the Covenanted specially the God of Salvation—III. The Solemn Warning—The New God of Modern Thought—God is not Indifferent to Character—He will Smite the Rebels—Proud Nations to be Smitten—His Smiting an Utter Overthrow.

WHATEVER may be said of the Old Testament dispensation, however dimly it may have revealed certain truths, there was one matter about which it was clear as the sun. Under the Old Testament economy the Lord God of Israel is ever most conspicuous. God is in all, and over all; and from the pages of the prophets as well as from the lips of the temple choirs we hear loudly sounding forth the note, "The Lord shall reign forever, even thy God, O Zion, unto all generations. Hallelujah!" By priest and prophet, saint and seer, the one testimony is borne, "The Lord reigneth."

You cannot read the Book of Job without trembling in the majestic presence of the Almighty; nor can you turn to the Psalms without being filled with solemn awe as you see David and Asaph and Heman adoring the Lord, who made heaven and earth and the sea. Everywhere, from Abraham to Malachi, man is of small account, and God is all in all. Very little consideration is given to any fancied rights and claims of man, but wonder is expressed that the Creator should be mindful of him.

It will be a great offence if, coming into the brighter light of the New Testament, we are less vivid in our conceptions of the glory of God. If God should be less clearly seen in the person of our Lord Jesus than he was under the symbols of the law, it will be the fault of our blinded hearts. It will be ill for us to turn day into night, and like owls to see less because the light is increased. Let it not be so among us, but let it be in our churches as in Israel of old, of which it is said, "in Judah is God known; His name is great in Israel."

"God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by His Son," and by Him as the incarnate Word He has revealed Himself with a sevenfold splendor, and therefore it should be our soul's great delight to perceive God in all things, to rejoice in His presence, and to magnify Him in all things a King of kings and Lord of lords.

The Psalmist in this particular case ascribes to the Lord universal action and power over us, for he ascribes to Him the mercies of life and the issues of death. He says, "Blessed be the Lord who daily loadeth us with benefits." The Lord heaps up His favors till their number loads the memory, and their value burdens the shoulders of gratitude.

The outline of this morning's discourse, as indicated by the text, is just this: first, the sovereign prerogative of God, "To God the Lord belong the issues from death:" secondly, the character of the sovereign with whom this prerogative is lodged, "He that is our God is the God of salvation:" and then, thirdly, the solemn warning which this Great Sovereign gives in reference to the exercise of His prerogative; weighty are the words, may the Holy Spirit cause us to feel their power—"God shall wound the head of His enemies, and the hairy scalp of such an one as goeth on still in his trespasses."

I. First, then, with deep reverence let us speak upon

THE SOVEREIGN PREROGATIVE

of God—" Unto God the Lord belong the issues from death." Kings have been accustomed to keep the power of life and death in their own hands. The great King of kings, the sovereign Ruler and absolute Lord of all worlds reserves this to Himself—that He shall permit men to die, or shall give them an issue from death at His own good-will and pleasure. He can alike create and destroy. He sendeth forth His Spirit and they are created, and at His own pleasure He saith, " Return, ye children of men," and lo ! they fall before Him like autumn's faded leaves.

The prerogative of life or death belongs to God in a wide range of senses. First of all as to natural life, we are all dependent upon His good pleasure. We shall not die until the time which He appoints ; for our death-time, like all our time, is in His hands. Our skirts may brush against the portals of the sepulchre, and yet we shall pass the iron gate unharmed if the Lord be our guard. The wolves of disease will hunt us in vain until God shall permit them to overtake us. The most desperate enemies may waylay us, but no bullet shall find its billet in any heart unless the Lord allows it.

Spiritually, too, this prerogative is with God. We are by nature under the condemnation of the law on account of our sins, and we are like criminals tried, convicted, sentenced, and left for death. It is for God, as the great Judge, to see the sentence executed, or to issue a free pardon, according as He pleases ; and He will have us know that it is upon His supreme pleasure that this matter depends.

So too does the Lord deliver His own believing people from those " deaths oft" which make up their experience. Though we are in Christ Jesus delivered from death as a penalty, yet we often feel an inward death, caused by the old nature, which exercises a deadening influence within us. At such times God the Lord can give us back the fulness of life. He can restore our soul from the pit of corruption and cause us not only to have life but to have it more abundantly. The issues from death are with the quickening Spirit, and when our soul cleaveth to the dust He can revive us again till we rejoice with joy unspeakable.

As the climax of all, when we shall come actually to die, and these bodies of ours shall descend into the remorseless grave, as probably they will, in the hands of our Redeeming Lord are the issues from death. The archangel is even now waiting for the signal : one blast of his trumpet shall suffice to gather the chosen from all lands, from the east and from the west, from the south and from the north. Then death itself shall die away, and the righteous shall arise

> " From beds of dust and silent clay
> To realms of everlasting day."

" I am the resurrection and the life," saith Christ, and He is both of these to all His people. Is He not life, for He saith, " Whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die?" Is He not resurrection, for He saith, " He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live?" That bright illustrious day in which the saints shall rise with their Lord will show how unto God the Lord belong the issues from death.

1. Concerning this prerogative we may say, first, that to God belongs the right to exercise it. This right springs, first, from his being our Creator. He saith " all souls are mine." He has an absolute right to do with us as He pleases, seeing He hath made us, and not we ourselves. Men forget what they are, and boast great things ; but truly they are but as clay on the potter's wheel, and He can fashion them or can break them as He pleases. They think not so, but He knoweth their thoughts, that they are vain.

This right of God to save is further made manifest by the redemption of His people. It might have been said that God had no right to save it by saving He would abridge His justice ; but now that He hath laid help upon one that is mighty, and His only begotten Son has become a victim in our place, to magnify the law and make it honorable, the Lord God hath an unquestionable right to deliver from death His own redeemed, for whom the Substitute has died. Our God saves His people in consistency with justice : no one can question His doing right even when He justifies the ungodly. His right and power over the issues from death are in the case of His own blood-bought ones clear as the sun at noonday, and who shall dispute with Him ?

Our text, however, puts the prerogative upon the

ONE SOLE GROUND OF LORDSHIP,

and we prefer to come back to that. " Unto God the Lord belong the issues from death." It is a doctrine which is very unpalatable in these days, but one nevertheless which is to be held and taught, that God is an absolute sovereign, and doeth as He wills. The words of Paul may not be suffered to sleep—" Nay, but Oh, man, who art thou that repliest against God ? Shall the thing formed say to Him that formed it, Why hast Thou made me thus ?" The Lord cannot do amiss ; His perfect nature is a law unto itself.

2. Enough with regard to that matter of right. I go on to notice that the Lord has the power of this prerogative. With Him is the ability to deliver men from natural death. Jehovah Rophi is a physician who is never baffled. Medicines may fail, but not the great Maker of all plants and herbs and useful drugs. Study and experience may be at a nonplus, but He who fashioned the human frame knows its most intricate parts, and can soon correct its disorders.

Certainly, as to the soul, there is no case of man so far gone that God cannot find an issue out of its death. He can cast out seven devils, and a legion of diabolical sins. To God the Lord belong the issues from death, however foul the sin, and however forlorn the condition caused by transgression. He who raised Lazarus from the grave after four days can raise the most corrupt from the grave of their iniquities. Oh, that awakened sinners would believe this !

I remember reading of an aged minister who had for some years fallen into deep despondency. He gave up his pulpit, and kept himself very much alone, always writing bitter things against himself. At last, when he was on a sick-bed, a servant of God was sent to him, who dealt wisely with him. This good man said to the despairing one, " Brother, do you believe that passage, ' He is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him ' ?" " I believe it," said he, " with all my heart, but I am convinced—" Here the other stopped him, " I do not ask what your convincements may be, nor what your feelings may be, but I come to say to you, the man who trusts that promise lives."

This plain declaration of the Gospel was made by the divine Comforter the means of supreme consolation to the despairing one ; may it be equally useful to all those who hear it. He who can hang his soul's hope upon the infinite ability of Christ to save is a saved man. He that believeth on Him hath everlasting life. What a blessing this is !

The devil may tell me that I never can issue out of deserved death, and that I am shut up forever under the just results of my trespasses ; my own conscience, knowing my undeservingness, may also condemn me a thousand times over ; but unto God the Lord belong the issues from death, and He can and will pluck me from between the jaws of death since I believe in Him. He is able to bring up those whom He ordains to save even from the utmost depths of despair. The absolute right of God is supported by almighty power, and thus His prerogative is made a matter of fact.

3. Nor is this all ; the Lord has actually exercised this prerogative in abundant cases. As to those issues from death which are seen in restoration from sickness, I need not remind you that these are plentiful enough. At times these have come in a miraculous form, as when Hezekiah had his life lengthened in answer to prayer, and when many others were healed by the Saviour and his apostles. Life has been preserved in a lion 's den, and in the belly of a fish, in a fiery furnace, and in the heart of the sea. Death has no arrow in his quiver which can hurt the man whom God ordains to live.

God has exercised this prerogative spiritually. In what a myriad of cases has He delivered souls from death ! Ask yon white-robed hosts in heaven, " Has not God displayed in you His sovereign power to save ?" Ask many here below, who have tasted that He is gracious, and they will tell, " He saved me." Divine will, backed by divine power, worked out the sovereign purpose of love, and here we are, saved from so great a death by love invincible.

II. Thus have I set forth the prerogative ; and now, secondly, follow me with your thoughts while I show in whom that prerogative is vested. We cannot upon this earth exhibit much love to human princes who claim absolute dominion. Imper alism is not to our mind. Among the worst curses that have ever fallen upon mankind have been absolute monarchs ; nowadays men shake them off as Paul shook off the viper into the fire The Lord grant we may see the last of all despotic dynasties, that the nations may be free.

THE CHARACTER OF THE SOVEREIGN

We cannot endure a tyrant, and yet if w could have absolutely perfect despots it might b the best possible form of government. Assuredly, the great and eternal God, who is King o kings and Lord of lords, is absolutely perfect and we may be well content to leave all prerogatives and vest all powers in His hands. He ha never trampled on the rights of the meanest, no forgotten the weakest. His foot doth not needlessly crush a worm, nor doth he beat down a fl in wantonness. He has never done a wrong, no wrought an injustice. We oppress each other but the Judge of all oppresses none. The Lor is holy in all His ways, and His mercy enduret forever ; and the amplest prerogatives are safel lodged in such hands.

Our text yet further tells us who it is in whos hands the issues of life and death are left : " H that is our God is the God of salvation." Sinner, your salvation rests with God, but do n therefore be discouraged, for that God wit whom the matter rests is the God of salvation or of " salvations," for so the Hebrew has it What mean we by this ?

1. The Scripture signifies, first, that salvatio is the most glorious of all God's designs. Go was pleased with creation, but not as He is wit redemption. When He made the heavens an the earth it was every-day work to Him, and H merely spake and said, " It is good ;" but whe He gave His Son to die to redeem His peopl and His elect were being saved, He did not spea with the prosaic brevity of creation, but he san Is it not written, " He shall rest in His love, H shall rejoice over thee with singing ?"

2. Ask ye yet again what this meaneth—" H that is our God is the God of salvation," and w remind you that the most delightful works whic the Lord has performed have been works of salvation. To save our first parents at Eden's gat and give them a promise of victory over the se pent, was joy to God. To house Noah in th ark was also his pleasure. The drowning of guilty world was needful, but the saving of Noa was pleasant to the Lord our God. He destroye the earth with his left hand, but with his rig hand He shut in the only righteous ones found. To save His people is ever His joy : goes about it eagerly. He rode upon a cher and did fly, yea, He did fly upon the wings of th wind when He came to deliver His chosen.

He takes delight in deeds of grace : these a

HIS ENJOYMENTS.

He comes in His royal robes and puts on H crown jewels when He rises to save His peopl and therefore His servants cry aloud, " ble our God, ye people, and make the voice of H praise to be heard ; which holdeth our soul life, and suffereth not our feet to be moved

This then is the God in whom is vested all sovereignty over the issues from death. He takes pleasure, not in the destruction, but in the salvation of the sons of men. Where could the prerogative be better laid up?

3. "He that is our God is the God of salvation" also means that at this present time the God who is preached to us is the God of salvation. We live at this moment under the dispensation of mercy. The sword is sheathed, the scales of justice are put by. Those scales are not destroyed, and that sword is not broken, nor even blunted, but for a while it slumbereth in its scabbard. To-day over all our heads is held out the silver sceptre of eternal love. The angelic carol, first heard by the shepherds at Bethlehem, lingers still in the upper air, if you have ears to hear it—"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

4. Once more: "He that is our God is the God of salvation" means this, that to his covenanted ones, to those who can call Him "our God," He is specially and emphatically the God of salvation. There is no destruction for those who call Him "our God," for "there is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus." Jesus came not to condemn the world, but that the world through Him might be saved. "This God is our God forever and ever, he will be"—our destroyer?—no, "He will be our guide even unto death." This God is our sun and shield, and He will give grace and glory.

Now mark well this fact: we who believingly call the Lord our God this morning will tell you that we are saved entirely through the sovereign grace of God, and not through any natural betterness of our own, nor through anything that we have done to deserve His favor. He who saith, "I kill and I make alive, I wound and I heal," is He who has quickened us, though we were dead in trespasses and sins. Surely He who has exercised His prerogative so kindly toward us may be trusted to exercise it toward all who come to Him according to His gracious invitation.

If there be any man who says, "I rejoice in the election of God, because, although He has saved me, He hath left others to perish," I desire to have no sympathy with His spirit. My joy is of a far different kind, for I argue that He who saved such an unworthy one as I am will cast out none that come to Him by faith. His election is not narrow, for it comprehends a number that no man can number, yea, all that will believe in Jesus. He waiteth to be gracious, and him that cometh to Him He will in no wise cast out.

The wedding feast needs countless guests, and every seat must be filled. We wish that all the human race would come and accept the provisions of infinite love, and we are anxious to go into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in. We rejoice to know that if any man be shut out from Christ and hope he shuts himself out, though at the same time we feel that if any man be shut in he did not shut himself in, but undeserved grace wrought out his salvation. Justice rules in condemnation, but grace reigns in salvation.

If there is any man here who thinks that he has been saved as the result of his own will, apart from the powerful grace of God, let him throw his cap up, and magnify himself forever. "Glory be to my own good disposition!" But as for me, I will fall at the foot of the throne of God, and say, "Grace reigns through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ. Hadst Thou, O God, left me to my own free will, I had continued still to despise thy love, and to reject thy mercy." Surely all the people of God agree that this is the fact in their own case, however they may differ theoretically from the general statement.

Yes, the prerogative of life and death is in good hands; it is in the hands of Him who is the God of our salvation, and I beseech every one here present who is not saved to be encouraged to bow before the throne of the great King, and sue for mercy of Him who is so ready to save. Go home and try to merit salvation, and you will waste your efforts. Go about to fit yourself for mercy, and to fashion some good that may attract the regard of God, and you will befool yourselves, and insult the majesty of heaven; but come just as you are, all guilty, empty, meritless, and fall before the great King, whom you have so often provoked, and beseech Him of His infinite mercy to blot out your transgressions, to change your natures, and to make you his own, and see if He will cast you away. Is it not written, "There is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared?" And again, "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." His throne is a throne of grace. Mercy is built up forever before Him.

III. Our last duty is to hear

THE SOLEMN WARNING

of our sovereign Lord. A new god has been lately set up among men—the god of modern Christianity, the god of modern thought, a god made of honey or sugar of lead. He is all leniency, gentleness, mildness, and indifference in the matter of sin. Justice is not in him, and as for the punishment of sin, he knows it not.

The Old Testament, as you are, no doubt, made aware by the wise men of this world, takes a very harsh view of God, and therefore modern wisdom sets it on one side. Forsooth, one half the Word of God is out of date, and turned to waste paper. Although our Lord Jesus did not come "to destroy the law or the prophets," but to fulfil them, yet the advanced thinkers of these enlightened times tell us that the idea of God in the Old Testament is a false one.

We are to believe in a new god, who does not care whether we do right or wrong, for by his arrangement all will come to the same end in the long run. There may be a little twisting about for awhile for some who are rather incorrigible, but it will all come right at last. Live as you like, go and swear and drink, go and oppress the nations, and make bloody wars, and act as you will; by jingo, you will be all right at last. This is roughly the modern creed which poisons all our literature. But let me say, by Jehovah, this shall not be as men dream. Jehovah, the Judge of all the earth, must do right.

The God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob is the God of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; the God of the whole earth shall He be called. He hath not changed one whit in the stern integrity of His nature, and He will by no means spare the guilty. Read then the last verse of our text, and believe that it is as true to-day as when it was first written, and that if Jesus Himself were here, the meek and lowly one would say it in tones of tearful solemnity, but He would utter it none the less. "God shall wound the head of His enemies, and the hairy scalp of such an one as goeth on still in his trespasses."

It is clear from these words that God is not indifferent to human character. Our God knows his enemies; he does not mistake them for friends, nor treat them as such. He regards iniquity as a trespass, and therefore He has not broken down the bounds of law, nor the hedges of right; there are trespasses still, and God perceives them, and notes them down, and such as go on in their trespasses are trying his long-suffering and provoking His justice. God sleeps not, neither does he wink at human sin, but calls upon all men everywhere to repent.

And it is clear too that God has the power to smite those who rebel against Him. Dream not of natural laws which will screen the wicked—"He shall wound the head of His enemies." They may lift up those heads as high as they please, but they cannot be beyond the reach of His hand. He will not merely bruise their heels, or wound them on the back with blows which may be healed, but at their heads He will aim fatal blows, and lay them in the dust. He can do it, and He will.

The proud may vaunt themselves of their beauty: their hairy scalp, like that of Absalom, may be their boast, but as the Lord made the hair of Absalom to be the instrument of his doom, so can He make the glory of man to be his ruin. Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall. No man is out of the reach of God, and no nation either. The great ones stand on high upon their lofty places, and they talk about the "vulgar crowd," and despise the godly of the land. As for foreign races, how lightly are they esteemed, though one God has made them all. Populations and nations, what are they? Mere food for powder when a proud nation is set upon its own aggrandizement. Overturn their kingdoms, slaughter their patriotic defenders, redden the earth with blood, burn their houses, starve their women and children. Doth God know, and is there judgment in the Most High?

We are a great people, and have the men, the ships, and the money. Who shall call us to account? Yet let the still small voice be heard. Thus said the Lord to a great nation of old, "Thou hast trusted in thy wickedness: thou hast said, None seeth me. Thou hast said in thine heart, I am, and none else beside me. Therefore shall evil come upon thee; thou shalt not know from whence it riseth: and mischief shall fall upon thee; thou shalt not be able to put it off: and desolation shall come upon thee suddenly, which thou shalt not know." From such chastisements good Lord deliver us.

When the Lord does put His hand to the work of vengeance His smiting will be terrible, even for it will be a smiting upon the head. If He doth not smite His enemies until the hour of death, what a blow will they then receive! They boasted of their self-righteousness, or of their greatness; but, oh, what terror will seize them when at the last moment, while they dream of heaven, they are smitten down into the unfathomable deep, where woe shall be the everlasting reward of their daring rebellion against their King!

AN UTTER OVERTHROW,

Warriors of old times would when they went to battle often shave off all their hair, except those locks which are on the hinder part of the scalp; yet when they turned to flee it frequently happened they were grasped by their pursuers by their flowing hair. God does not often take the wicked by the forelock, for He has great patience, and bears with them. In special cases, as when young men through dissipated habits hasten on their doom, He takes them in front; but as a rule He waits in mercy, and yet He suffers them not to go unpunished, for at the last He seizes their hairy scalp. If for fourscore years infinite patience should permit a man to continue in his rebellion, yet if he goeth on in his trespasses at the very last God shall thrust His hand into his hairy scalp and grasp him to his destruction.

Turn ye, then, ye that know not God, turn ye at His rebuke this morning, for the rebuke is meant in love; and if I have used hard words it is because my heart is honestly anxious that you would repent and escape to Him who hath in His power the issues from death. I am not like yon flatterers who tell you that there is a little hell and a little God, from which you naturally infer that you may live as you like. Both you and they will perish everlastingly if you believe them. There is a dreadful hell, for there is a righteous God. Turn ye to Him, I entreat you, while yet in Christ Jesus He sets mercy before you. He is the God of salvation, and entreats you to come and accept of His great grace in Christ Jesus.

The Lord bless this word according to His own mind, and unto Him be praise forever and ever. Amen.

[The prayers of the readers of this Journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors in America and England, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and for its weekly circulation of more than 175,000 copies to be blessed by the Holy Spirit to the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Mr. Spurgeon and Dr. Talmage especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

THE RUINED GLASGOW MERCHANT.

By J. A. Anderson.

A FEW years ago I had fever when I was in Buenos Ayres, South America. After I was discharged from the infirmary, I was very weak, and consequently was unfit to resume my usual occupation. Fortunately I had saved a little money, and put up in the Cheval de Blanco, a French hotel, well conducted and cheap. It was a dreary life, however, being confined to my bedroom, and when able to be out I used to go to the margin of the river Rio de la Plata, and there enjoy the cool and refreshing breezes ; which put new life in me.

One Sabbath evening in the month of March (the autumn there), I quitted my hotel for my favorite seat under the trees of Paradise which grew by the river. It was a beautiful evening. The sun was about to sink in the deep waters. As I lay and watched it dipping bit by bit, my fancy conjured up beautiful scenes.

At last the glowing orb set, but the scene was enhanced. The moon was now far up, and shed its pale light on the throbbing bosom of the mighty river. I was about to rise—for the air at last was getting to be chilly—when my attention was arrested by some object crawling to where I sat. "What could it be?" I thought. In a moment I had my revolver out and was prepared for it. At last it stood up erect. IT WAS A MAN! What an object! H's trousers scarcely came over his knees. His feet were bare, and I could see that he had got them cut on the sharp stones—they were covered with blood. Poor fellow, he was shirtless ; an alpaca coat was the only covering he had on. His beard was matted and twisted ; his eyes bloodshot ; his lips black and parched. His hat was an old felt one, and the rim hung over his naked neck. Never in my life had I seen such an object. Slowly he approached, and when about two yards from me he said,

"Do you speak Spanish, señor?"

"Muy poco," I said, "What do you want?"

"I am an Englishman, and have not a single pesos. For the love of God, help me!"

I said to him in English, "What has brought you to this pass? You are a disgrace to your country. Come, tell me honestly, and if I can help you I will do so."

"Oh, thanks! I have not tasted food for two days. Do you see yon boat on the beach? It has been my home for the last four months. The covering of my bed has been the sky, and my bed itself the rotten planks."

"Come, tell me what has caused this ; have you been ill?"

"Yes, yes, I have been ill. I have been mad, and am mad now. A thirst is choking me, and I'll die unless you help me. Is there a God? Is there no hand to help me? Must I die?"

"What is wrong with you?"

"I want cana (white rum). My mouth is dry. I can't speak. Give me two pesos (4c.), for the love of God."

I was not a total abstainer ; indeed, up to this time I did not look upon drink as an evil, and seeing the awful anxiety of the man, I gave him two pesos, when he started for a café in the Paseo de Julio. He was not long absent, for he soon returned with a bottle full of cana.

"Will you take a drop?" he said. I refused, when he applied the bottle to his parched lips and drank about the half of it ere he stopped.

"Ah," he exclaimed, "there's life in the bottle. I feel the cana going through me. Now I can speak. What a lovely evening! See how the little waves are tipped with the pale rays of the moon. One would think they are silver!"

The poor fellow in two minutes was a changed being. From his conversation I could easily see that he had been a "something," so I at once determined to find out what he had been.

"You are an Englishman, you say ; are you not a Scotchman?"

"When I said I was an Englishman, I only gave the usual answer to such a question. I am a Scotchman, and was born in Glasgow."

"Indeed? I know Glasgow well. Your name?"

"John R——"

"I knew a Mr. John R——, a manufacturer in Glasgow. Did you know him?"

"Where was his place?"

"Near the Exchange."

"I am he!"

"You!"

"Yes ; pray your name?"

I told him, when he at once knew me. We sat for some time in silence. No doubt he was busy thinking of the past ; at least I was. The last time that I saw Mr. R—— he was standing on the steps of the Royal Exchange. He was then a smart young man, and considered "cute" by many. He was, however, known as being a "wet" hand, and too frequently treated buyers and drank with them.

When I looked at the miserable, idiotic person sitting by my side—for the drink had wonderfully improved his spirits—I could not help putting the question to myself, "Can it be really he?" Alas, it was too true! Once a merchant, now an outcast ; once respected, now a beggar! What a change! My heart yearned for him ; indeed, as I thought on the way he was living, the tears started to my eyes. I could not take him to a hotel ; I could not even take him to a café; so I made up my mind to hear his story, which I now give nearly in his own words.

"I am an only son and received a fair education. It was not my mother's fault if I did not get more of the school. My father died when I was only ten days old. I think no man had ever such a mother. She loved me. She would have cheerfully died to have done me a service. Drunk or sober, I can see her ; even now I can see her calm, thoughtful face traced with sorrow and pain. I had always lots of pocket money, which was my ruin.

"It is the old story. I frequented the theatre, the singing saloons, and night hotels, before I was out of my teens. I was considered clever ; could sing a good song, tell a good story, and, in short, was a jolly good fellow. My conduct was crushing my mother's heart, but then I had no heart to feel. Time passed on. My mother had about 2000*l*., and I asked her to give it me to commence business with. I said it would settle me in life. Poor soul, she freely gave her all. I commenced business, and did well for a time, but my companions led me to contract bad debts. I sent goods to Buenos Ayres, but I did not get any advance on them.

"My mother died. Yes, I believe of a broken heart. This sobered me for a time, but only for a time. About a year after her death I married a lovely woman. I loved her ; God knows I love her still. Shortly after our marriage I had to call a meeting of my creditors. They sent me out to Buenos Ayres to look after the consignments there. I arrived in Buenos Ayres, sold the goods, and kept the proceeds. This is all that is left of me!"

"What about your wife?"

"My wife! Oh, sir, when you mention her it is like pouring boiling lead on my brain. I cannot think of her ; it would drive me mad to think about her. My wife, she is an angel. She is pure, ay, and beautiful as a summer's morn. I hope she thinks I'm dead. Why, sir, my brain reels as I think of the past. I must drink, drink, drink till I die."

We sat together for some time ; and when I left him I gave him twenty pesos (80c.) I said I would see him the following evening.

The next day I was walking along Calle San Martin, when I saw a crowd of people. I asked what was wrong. "A man has been run over by the car, and they are taking him to the dead-house." I followed the crowd, and entered the dead-house and viewed the body. To my horror and grief, it was the mangled remains of poor John R——. I never found out properly how he met his death, but it was a great relief to my mind when I was told he was sober, and a greater relief still when fifteen pesos were taken from his pocket.

TEN SIGNS OF THE APPROACHING END.*

By Rev. M. Baxter.

(Continued from page 157.)

6. The Development of Rapid Intercommunication—The Telegraph an Instrument in the Fulfilment of Prophecy—Society a Huge Powder Magazine—7. The Increased Study of the Prophecies—The Words Shut up until the End Approaches—The Cry that is to Awaken all the Virgins—8. The Increasing Number of Religious Revivals—The Ten Days' Missions—Rev. W. H. Aitken—Spurgeon's Sermons—Moody and Sankey—George Muller.

6. The development of

RAPID INTERCOMMUNICATION

throughout the earth, and the spread of education and knowledge, is a striking feature of these last days. The prediction that at the Time of the End "many shall run to and fro and knowledge shall be increased" is often referred to as indicating this (Dan. 12 : 4). This is a necessary preparation for the universal reign of the Personal Antichrist during his predicted three and a half years, because otherwise, without these modern agencies of swift locomotion and transmission of intelligence, there would not be sufficient time for one man within so short a period to have complete power, not merely over the ten kingdoms of a revived Roman empire, but, to a certain extent, over "all kindreds, and tongues, and nations," and to gather ALL NATIONS to Jerusalem to the battle of Armageddon (Zech. 14 : 11 ; Dan. 7 : 25 ; Rev. 13 : 5, 7).

It is only by the present means for diffusing knowledge by the application of steam to printing presses, and by the telegraph, that sufficient information could be disseminated to cause all the ungodly throughout Christendom within three and a half years to renounce their former religions, and to embrace the new religion of worshipping the future Napoleonic Antichrist as their god, for "all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him" (Rev. 13 : 7, 8 ; 2 Thess. 2).

Within only the last thirty or forty years railways, steam vessels, and telegraphs have been brought into general use, and by means of them astonishing changes have been introduced into the social, commercial, and military movements and operations of mankind. The internal resources of countries have become largely developed, and the nations are drawn more compactly together, and, as it were, within speaking distance of each other.

The prophet Nahum, in his vision of Christ's coming to judgment, most plainly describes the swift running of railway carriages on their errand of conveying military hosts to the battlefields of that day : "The chariots shall be with flaming torches in the day of his preparation. The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall justle one against another in the broad ways : they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightnings" (Nahum 2 : 3, 4).

By the invention of telegraphs the difficulty is obviated that used to be felt in relation to the prophecy that "they that dwell on earth" shall hear of the death of the two personal witnesses in Revelation 11, and exult over it for three and a half literal days, which would have been too short a period for the news to have been carried through all Europe without telegraphic communication. Furthermore, the very perfection to which manufactories, and arts and sciences, are now brought, tends to lift up the heart of the ungodly and to lead them to make an idol of intellectual and material progress, and to ripen them for the deceptions of the coming Antichrist.

The historian Alison has suggestively said, "Great consequences must inevitably result from this prodigiously enhanced rapidity of communication, but it is hard to say whether the consequences will be for good or for evil. Is not the unexampled rapidity with which Europe took fire in 1848 (with revolution from the Paris outbreak) a decisive proof that the increased rapidity in the communication of thought among the nations tends to convert society into a huge powder magazine, liable to blow up on the first spark falling into it?"

---

* Extracted from "Coming Wars," by Rev. M. Baxter, in two pamphlets—five cents each by mail. First pamphlet contains "Ten Signs of the End, and Description of Approaching Events," with two maps and four large diagrams. Second pamphlet contains valuable quotations from Forty Expositors on these events. Address, 63 Bible House, New York.

Ultramontane, democratic, and other conspiracies are much facilitated by the quick transmission of intelligence; and thus, for example, a Romanist rebellion in Ireland might soon communicate itself to the large English cities in the shape of fearful mob riots by the Irish Romanists, who swarm in those cities.

7. THE INCREASED STUDY OF THE PROPHECIES, and loud proclamations of Christ's speedy advent by the raising of the midnight cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," is a sign specially predicted to accompany the TIME OF THE END. In Daniel 12 : 4 it was said, "O Daniel, shut up the words and seal the book, even to the Time of the End: many shall run to and fro: and knowledge shall be increased." Now, although these words may bear, in a general and secondary sense, the meaning usually assigned to them—viz., the increase of travelling and of knowledge in these latter days—yet certainly their primary and particular meaning is, as the Hebrew text implies, that the words are to be shut up and the book sealed until the Time of the End; but that then many shall eagerly examine and go over the pages of the book, and knowledge of its words shall be increased.

This has begun to be fulfilled of late years by the publication of numerous expositions of Daniel and Revelation, by which a flood of light has been cast upon the prophecies which previously were like a hermetically-sealed book. Still, even now the Christian Church at large is comparatively in a state of midnight darkness, coldness, and silence in relation to the speedy Advent of Christ, as foretold in the prophetic parable of the Ten Virgins in Matthew 25 : 1–10, "While the Bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept." But the rest of the prophecy will soon be fulfilled, "And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him. Then ALL those virgins arose and trimmed their lamps," etc.

These words foretell that there will be a tremendous stir and unparalleled excitement throughout the whole Christian Church, like the arousing and the lighting up of a vast city in the dead of night, so that actually ALL Christians, even the Foolish who are to be left behind to the Great Tribulation, as well as the Wise who are to be translated to heaven before the Tribulation, will arise and trim their lamps and give heed to the prophecies and signs of the times in relation to the Speedy Advent of Christ. And at the same time hundreds of preachers will loudly proclaim the personal coming of Christ to be close at hand, their special message being, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him."

No such extraordinary movement as this has yet taken place, but it will come to pass when events of such a striking character and unmistakable significance shall happen as the extension of France to the Rhine and formation of the Ten Kingdomed Confederacy, and the subsequent rise of the Napoleonic Antichrist as an eleventh little sovereign (Dan. 7 : 24), and his SEVEN YEARS' COVENANT with the Jews. Such events will convince many of the nearness of the End.

The prophecy in Revelation 12 of the sun-clothed woman, which represents the Christian Church travailing in labor, pained to be delivered of a man-child (which denotes the first-fruits company of saints translated before the three and a half years Tribulation), also shows that there will be a great agitation and commotion throughout the visible Church preparatory to the catching up to heaven of the man-child, or first-fruits body of translated saints, at Christ's Advent.

8. The increasing number of RELIGIOUS REVIVALS* and evangelistic meetings and aggressive efforts of Christian zeal and activity indicate the Time of the End to be at hand. Before great Judgments have been brought in past times on any nation, God has frequently caused special religious warnings to be given it. Thus, the Jewish nation was favored with the preaching of Ezekiel and Jeremiah before their subjugation by the king of Babylon, and with the ministry of John the Baptist and of Christ and his apostles before the destruction of Jerusalem by the Roman armies.

The British Isles have been remarkably favored with religious revivals since the year 1859, when a powerful spiritual awakening visited the North of Ireland and resulted in the conversion of thousands. Since then the awakening spread to Scotland and England, and many churches were greatly quickened, prayer-meetings multiplied, evangelistic services instituted in theatres, halls, and in the open air, and many revival preachers raised up. The London Open-air Mission Society has about two hundred unpaid open-air preachers who are preaching every week.

The holding of special revival services for a week or ten days under the title of mission services has now become very general throughout the Church of England, and powerful revival preachers, such as the Rev. W. Hay Aitken, are engaged incessantly in carrying on such services, which are aided by personal conversation with anxious souls after the preaching; and through these means very many are converted.

A great work of evangelization has also been carried on ever since 1854 by the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's spoken and published sermons, which probably have reached at least 50,000 persons every week, and many able preachers have been trained in his college and have permanently gathered large congregations in various parts of the country. It is remarkable, too, how many laymen, who used to think that all preaching should be left to ordained ministers, have been recently raised up as successful evangelists, including several noblemen, such as Lords Radstock, Farnham, Cholmondeley, Cavan, Polwarth, Cecil, Teynham, Garvagh, Carrick, Congleton, etc.

The unparalleled religious revivals in 1873–4–5 that accompanied the evangelistic meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in Edinburgh, Glasgow, Belfast, Dublin, Liverpool, Manchester, London, etc., are an extraordinary sign of the times. Their meetings gave a marvellous impulse to religious activity all through Great Britain, and the wide diffusion of their hymns and tunes has greatly contributed to the promotion of spiritual life.

Mr. Moody is a firm believer in the speedy personal Advent of Christ, and often observed in his sermons that he was strongly impressed with the conviction that these religious revivals were the prelude to some tremendous judgment, either of war, famine, or pestilence, presently to befall Great Britain, and to cut off thousands of its population.

The important subject of Christian consecration and holiness—"the higher Christian life"—has been brought forward more prominently of late years, and an eminent instance of faith in Christ and of encouragement to Christians to pray to God, as the "rewarder of all who diligently seek Him," has been given in the instance of Mr. George Muller, of Bristol, who, in answer to faith and prayer alone, has during the last forty years received and expended about three quarters of a million of pounds ($3,650,000), upon home and foreign missions, and principally upon his Ashleydown Orphan Houses, in which about two thousand orphans are at present maintained. His whole work costs more than £1,000 a week, and though he is more than 70 years old, he preaches as earnestly as ever. His book, "The Lord's Dealings with George Muller," published at Nisbet's, Berners Street, London, and in America as the "Life of Trust," should be read by every one.

This closing era of the Christian dispensation is also characterized by a wonderful multiplication of charitable institutions and missionary and religious societies, and by an encouraging increase in their annual incomes. All this is the commencement of an enlarged outpouring of the Holy Spirit in these last days, as predicted in Joel 2 : 28–32, and Isaiah 59 : 19, for "when the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him," and thus the working of the three unclean spirits is opposed by the outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

It is, moreover, in immediate connection with the approaching "Time of Trouble such as never was" that special mention is made of "many being turned to righteousness." And the prophetic parable of the Marriage Supper foreshows that the greatest ingathering of souls will be at supper time, just before the Marriage Feast at the Lord's return, and will consist largely of the most neglected classes from the highways and the hedges (Dan. 12 : 1–3; Luke 14 : 17–23).*

But a far greater and more general religious revival than has ever been known will soon begin, when, after the ten-kingdomed confederacy and the seven-years' Covenant have been formed, ALL the virgins—i.e., all Christians—will arise from their present comparative slumber and trim their lamps, in expectation of Christ's Second Advent (Matthew 25 : 7).

(To be continued.)

DARE TO BE A DANIEL.

SOME years ago, a Scotch boy contracted a liking for the life of a sailor, and prevailed on his parents to allow him to go to sea. His name was James, and his father was a respected citizen of a town six miles from the coast. On James's first voyage to Calcutta he kept up the habit of praying in the forecastle before turning in to his hammock, for he had been accustomed to do so regularly at home. Nobody said any thing to him on the matter, but Bob Shearer, an able seaman, watched him.

In Calcutta some of the seamen left the ship, and others were engaged in their place to work the ship home. One of these was "a rough," whose first name was also Robert. Hence he was called English Bob, and Shearer was called Scotch Bob. One night, soon after the homeward voyage began, James was on his knees, when the eye of English Bob happened to fall on him. "I declare," he cried, with an oath, "here's a younker praying. Did you ever?" And thereupon he flung a heavy shoe at his head with excellent aim. Before James had time to rise, Scotch Bob had the coward by the throat and told him to come upstairs and settle with him at once.

The result was that English Bob was soundly thrashed. That night James went into his hammock without praying. But he had not time to fall asleep before Scotch Bob came and pitched him out. "What do you mean, you young coward? Say your prayers like a man! Do you think I'm going to fight for you and be disgraced in this way?" And so James never again failed to kneel before he slept, and tells to this day that his being ashamed of his Father in heaven and of the Saviour who died for him was well rebuked by the friendly courage of Bob Shearer.

Long after these events occurred, and when he was at the head of his profession, and his name had a title before it, James had pleasure in finding Bob Shearer's mother, and bringing her to visit the mother who taught him to pray. This story is related by James himself.

---

* This eighth sign, and the succeeding ninth one, on the Napoleonic dynasty, are rewritten in the seventh edition of this pamphlet in 1876.

* Since the above was written a remarkable confirmation has appeared in the success which has attended the work of the Salvation Army in Great Britain. Thousands of persons of the lowest classes of society, degraded and vicious, have, through the blessing of God on the efforts of this band of devoted men, been brought out of spiritual darkness into the glorious light of God's countenance.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 159.)

Ernest Perplexed.

RUTH had no idea how keen a reproach was conveyed to Ernest by her last words. He had often said to himself that Ruth was a saint and a martyr; but he had hardly thought of her as one immeasurably before him in the Christian life. He had felt himself capable of martyrdom. He saw now, as by a sudden flash, what a perfect self-denial her whole life had been, and that the love of her Redeemer was her controlling motive.

She was, by her own choice, in the wilderness, upon the rough and stormy mountains, bruised, afflicted, and wounded, patiently seeking to bring back her lost sheep. He was grudging the return of the prodigal son, who had sought home of his own free-will. A clamor of voices made a Babel in Ernest's conscience; but there was no certain voice.

"I will never give you up," he said curtly, and Ruth's face brightened; "but what answer must I give to this letter? Shall I tell Sir Robert that I have the most definite intention of marrying again as soon as I have the chance? He could not ask me to hamper Clifford Grange with any large dower for Rose. I wish I could say she did not care for the young jackanapes! Why do children fall in love so young, Ruth?"

"I loved you earlier than that," she answered in a low voice.

"God bless you, my darling!" he rejoined. "Would you really have married me if I had been only the poor vicar of Clifford? Would you marry me now if I did not know where to look for my next year's income?"

"If I were free to marry you at all," she said, "I would become the wife of Ernest Clifford if he had not a shilling in the world."

She said it fervently, her deep eyes looking frankly into his. Ernest felt her words to be absolutely true; but would Ruth Symons become his wife if she knew that he was holding an inheritance not indisputably his own? He quitted her side and paced to and fro again across the room.

"Why should you not settle half of your estate upon Rose," she said at length, "if that would satisfy Sir Robert? Surely you and I could live on the other half. You have no idea of how little I spend; and I have been poor so long I should feel embarrassed if I was ever as rich as you are; besides, I have my own fortune from my mother—three thousand pounds; that brings in more than I spend upon myself. Could you not promise half to Rose? We could not be happy if she was not, dear child!"

"God bless you, Ruth!" he exclaimed again, becoming more and more unsettled by his troublesome secret, "you are worlds too good for me; but I cannot settle yet. There is Charles come home again; how do you suppose he feels at seeing a stranger in his own place under his father's roof? How can I promise half the estate to Rose when, perhaps I ought to give up the whole to Charles?"

"Give up Clifford Grange to Charles!" said Ruth in amazement; "oh, Ernest, I never dreamed of that. Go away forever from Clifford and leave him master there? Oh, my dear Ernest, do not act rashly! consider it well. It seemed so providential to us all when old Mr. Clifford made you his heir. You had been a better son than Charles to him, and no one wondered at it.

"Be quite sure you are right before you give up the power intrusted to you. Of course you must make ample provision for him, but do not give him more power and influence than you can help. See what my poor father has done for Rockwood. I have always looked to Clifford as one of the happiest places in our county. I have thanked God often that He has made you master there."

"But what am I to do?" he asked; "must I drive him from his home again?"

"No, that cannot be right," she said, her face showing her perplexity; "oh, Ernest, how easy it would have been if you had been left in trust only till he came home! Then we should all have known exactly what your duty was. But it was left so absolutely to you it seems impossible that you ought to give up every thing. It is hard for him, poor fellow! How can he ever be happy with the thought of his own father dying and never forgiving him? How hard it will be for him to seek the love and forgiveness of God!"

"He does not care much about either," said Ernest. It seemed to him that it would have been comparatively easy to resign all his own worldly advantages to one who was worthy of them. To William Britton, for instance. Or he could have settled the reversion of his estates upon Rose and young Fortescue; nay, he could have given up the present possession of them and contented himself with a trifle. But to cast his pearls before Charles; his property, his influence, his authority, his reputation! How Charles would trample them under his feet! His brother was come home, giving no sign of repentance, making no promise of amendment.

Ernest talked about him to Ruth, but with no solution of his difficulty and but little tranquilizing effect upon his disturbed spirit. He left her at last, still undecided how to answer Sir Robert Fortescue, or what he ought to do with his brother's birthright.

After his interview with Julia Rush on the cliffs, Charles took his brother's horse and rode over to Dartford to see his uncle Wright, carrying with him Julia's little silk bag and its treasured contents. His uncle was on the very point of starting for Clifford to see him and welcome his return. Charles had always been a favorite with him, and he had done his utmost to prevent old Charles Clifford making his second will; though when he found all his remonstrances were in vain, it had been drawn up in his office, and executed and attested in his presence.

Of late years he had grown increasingly proud of the position taken by Ernest in the county, and had learned to rejoice in what he looked upon as the lucky chance that old Clifford's will had been made in his favor. When, therefore, Charles told him his story, and fitted in the ragged fragments of yellow paper on his desk, so as to display the few words inscribed upon them, he merely shook his head.

"My dear lad," he said, "I feel very strongly for you—very strongly indeed; but this is all rubbish; there is positively nothing to shake Ernest; nothing even to suspect in the way of foul play. Ernest is quite incapable of that. I can testify that he was ready to move heaven and earth to discover you when your father died.

"Come, come; you are both my nephews, my sister's sons, and if there is one favorite with me, it's you, Charlie. But I tell you, you could as easily shake Clifford cliffs as Ernest. It is hard upon you, of course; but, my boy, why did you run away? and why did you not come back sooner? When one's father is over eighty, there's small chance of his living long, and Ernest was always like a son to him. He is a good man, is Ernest, and everybody knows you are a scapegrace."

"But what does all this mean?" asked Charles angrily, pointing to the torn papers on the desk.

"Nothing to any purpose," replied the lawyer; "apparently it's only the cover of your father's first will, which was made when you were a baby; see, the date is in the forties, and the last will was in the fifties. If you had the will itself it would be worth no more than waste paper. No, Ernest did his best to find you, and no doubt if you had come forward then he'd have acted handsomely by you. But you chose to stay away ten years longer, and he is Clifford of Clifford. Even if he was willing to give it up then, he would not do it now; he could not with all the claims there are upon him. Look at Rose, brought up as his heiress. What could he do with her, to say nothing of himself?"

"He's no Clifford," growled Charles.

"Now, now," interrupted his uncle, "we have forgotten all that. He has raised the name all through the county; but he is bound to make some provision for you, of course; I will see to you having a nice younger son's portion. Your mother has saved two or three thousand pounds too, and she must leave all she saves to you. Ernest has nearly doubled the value of the property. His oyster-beds bring him in a very good percentage. He has some sloops, and carries on a capital coasting trade. Ernest's head is worth two of mine; he will be a very wealthy man before he dies."

"It's all with my money," cried Charles, striking the desk with his clenched fist till the fragments of paper flew in all directions; "he was a beggarly parson, with no more than two hundred pounds a year, when I went away. It's my money has done it."

"Ernest's head and your father's money," said Mr. Wright; "he had a right to do as he chose with it, and he knew you would make ducks and drakes of it."

"The estate ought to have been entailed," answered Charles; "but who would have expected any father to be such an unnatural brute as to oust his own son and put another man's son into it? A wicked will like that ought not to stand good by law."

"But the estate was not entailed, and the will stands good," replied his uncle; "you have not a leg to stand upon, my poor Charlie! Make yourself as pleasant as you can to Ernest, and I'll see what I can do between you."

Charles rode back to Clifford in a very different mood from that in which he had galloped to Dartford. Julia Rush's faithful custody of the scraps of paper had been all in vain. He tossed the faded silk bag away contemptuously into the first ditch he came to, feeling angry with her for having awakened false hopes. Ernest was safe in his possession of Clifford; and even Charles's sanguine imagination, which was always looking for something to turn up, could no longer cherish the expectation of recovering his forfeited birthright. He must take his uncle's advice, and make himself as pleasant as he could to his elder brother.

This was by no means an easy task. He did not see Ernest till they met at the dinner-table, and then he was silent and preoccupied. It was quite another thing to make his way with his mother and Rose. Rose's sweet face was lit up with radiant smiles, whilst his mother hung upon every word he uttered, as if she was delighted with all he said. Jenny Britton, too, was encouraging in her fresh country-bred simplicity.

But Ernest did not seem to hear Charles's wondrous stories and somewhat silly attempts at wit. Even when they were together after dinner, an interval of a few minutes only, they could hit upon no safe topic of conversation; and Ernest soon found an excuse for leaving his brother to enjoy his wine alone.

When Ernest entered the drawing-room he found only Mrs. Clifford and Jenny. It was still daylight, though the sun was low in the sky, and long gray shadows stretched over cliff and sea. Rose had stepped out, through the open window, upon the grassy terrace, with its border of summer flowers, among which the evening primroses and tall white lilies were gleaming softly in the tender night. She was flitting to and fro restlessly, as though some unquiet emotion had taken possession of her. Her head was cast down, and her arms drooped at her side. Ernest watched her sorrowfully for a minute or two before going out to join her. This was no longer his playful, light-hearted child! He drew her hand fondly through his arm, and they paced up and down the grassy terrace for a little while, with soundless footsteps and silent lips.

"Father, may I answer his letter?" whispered Rose at last.

"Whose letter?" he asked; for, in the multitude of perplexing thoughts crowding upon his mind, he had well-nigh forgotten that Rose had a letter to answer, as well as himself.

Mr. Robert Fortescue's," she replied in a demure tone, and then, breaking into a low, tremulous laugh, she went on, "but I'm not to call him Robert, like everybody else. I've given him a new name, that no one will use but me. I call him Richmond, because we saw one another first in Richmond Park. You recollect meeting him, father? Under those beautiful old trees! I never saw trees so beautiful as those."

"And has he given you a new name?" inquired Ernest, feeling as if every word of Rose's stabbed him to the heart.

"No," she answered, "he says he loves the name of Rose; it is for love, you know. May I answer his letter, dear father?"

"How do you like Sir Robert Fortescue?" he asked, evading her question.

"I should not like him much if he was not his father," said Rose, "but I know no one ever had such a father as mine! Richmond said so over and over again. He is like a disciple to you; he is ready to follow you anywhere, and do exactly what you wish him to do. He said he had never known any one half so good and clever as you are. That was before I ever thought he loved me; but I could not help loving him for what he said of you."

"Cunning young rascal!" thought Ernest. "When did you know he loved you, Rose?" he asked.

"Not for certain till this very morning," she replied, dropping her voice again to a happy whisper. "Yesterday when we left London I made up my mind that I'd been only a silly girl; and when we reached home at night, and I saw how lovely and peaceful it was, I felt as if I should never care to marry anybody or go away again, but live with you always, like Ruth lives with her father. But this morning his letter came and then I knew. He loves me with all his heart. Oh! I cannot tell how happy I am. But I have not answered his letter; I would not till you gave me leave."

Again for a few minutes they walked along the soft sward of the terrace in silence, so blissful to Rose that she did not care to break it by speaking again.

(To be continued.)

THE GREAT PHYSICIAN.

S. Lesson for Mar. 21. Matt 8 : 1–17. Golden Text, ver. 17. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

Our golden text for to-day is the key-note of all which the Holy Scriptures teaches us of Christ the Great Physician our Healer. He "healed all that were sick, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses." This quotation, from Isa. 53 : 4, shows that it is absolute bodily pain and disease which He bore upon the cross for us, as well as our sins, for the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all." And just as surely as He wills that His word shall be fulfilled in our souls, so surely does He will it to be fulfilled in our bodies also. He has provided a perfect redemption for our entire being from the effects of the fall; it is ours to appropriate it to ourselves. When He was on earth no sinner and no sick person came to Him in vain, and He healed and forgave not out of pity, but that His word might be fulfilled.

The special passage in the Old Testament which names God "Jehovah thy Physician" a condition seems to be annexed to healing. "If thou wilt diligently hearken to the voice of the Lord thy God, and wilt do that which is right in His sight, and wilt give ear to His commandments and keep all His statutes, I will put none of these diseases upon thee which I have put on the Egyptians, for I am the Lord that healeth thee" (or Jehovah thy Physician). The same condition is repeated Ex. 23 : 20–25, Deut. 7 : 12–15, and, on the other hand, Lev. 26 : 14–16, Deut. 28 : 15, 21, 22, 27, 28, 35, 58–61, for they do not hearken. And this is confirmed in the New Testament (1 Cor. 11 : 30–32).

It is doubtless on this ground of Christ's redemption that the Apostle James founds his exhortation to the sick members of the church (the only exhortation in the whole Word of God addressed to them as a class). "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord, and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up, and if he have committed sins they shall be forgiven him. Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." The Lord healed all that were sick, making no exception in any case among those who came to him; the apostle also makes no exception. Is any sick among you, etc. The only cases of the sick, and who came in contact with Jesus and were left unhealed, were the sick at Nazareth (Luke 4 : 23, Matt. 13 : 58, Mark 6 : 5, 6), and those who were afflicted with divers diseases at the Pool of Bethesda, and who in the presence of the great Healer, and even in the presence of the cure of the impotent man, sought their deliverance from the troubled waters of the pool and not from Him.

We have too long been in the same case, and looked to other means which God in loving mercy has often employed for our healing, taking for granted that which is certainly not expressed in Scripture, that the healing of the sick and the exhortation of James are for apostolic times and not for our own day. And some who have wakened up to the fact that Jesus Christ the Saviour and Jesus Christ the Physician is the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever, and who recognize that the gifts and calling of God are without repentence, yet stand in the place of the leper in our lesson for to-day, and they say, "Lord, if Thou wilt Thou canst make me clean." "If Thou wilt." How can He will other than the fulfilment of His own Word? "I will," He says, "be thou clean." But, say many, I have prayed for years that I may be healed, and yet it has not pleased God to answer my prayer. Let us seek solemnly in the light of God to investigate the cause.

First, for what purpose do you desire and pray for healing? Is it that you may enjoy the use of your powers, or is it that you may carry out the will of God? Do you want to be healed for your sake, or for God's sake? Is the healing in itself the end you propose to yourself, and do you expect it from the compassion of God, who does not like to see His children suffer? From the references we have given, as well as from Job 33 : 14–33, we perceive that God's aim with regard to us is quite another. Sickness or health are in His hands not ends but means by which He works out His own purposes of love and glory in us. When His first voice or language (Job 33 : 14) is not understood, He uses another (ver. 19)—i.e., sickness, but with the same end in view, the education of His children. If He can gain our ear without employing sickness and lead us to judge ourselves in the light of His Word, we should not be judged, and He could take away sickness from us (1 Cor. 11 : 31; Ex. 15 : 26).

If we desire healing, let our motives be holy and divine, that we may serve God with every member we possess, and at all times; and let us seek it, not as a favor of God to us individually, but for the fulfilling of His Word. Let us seek to know all that His Word says about it, and although neither past experience nor the opinion of other Christians may coincide with our deductions, let God be true, and every man a liar. We can afford to wait when we stand on the firm ground of His Word, that He may justifiy by facts all which He has therein declared, for "the Scripture cannot be broken" (John 10 : 35). We see therefore that there may be three hindrances to healing—the lack of an opened ear (Ex. 15 : 26), the expectation from other means (John 5 : 4), and unbelief (Matt. 13 : 58). We must not wonder that these things are not at all apparent in the cases of those whom the Lord healed when on earth. But His redemption work was not then perfected and the light of the written Word was dim in comparison to our days, when the whole revelation of God is within every one's reach.

In the case of the centurion's servant there is much to be learned. From Luke 7 : 3 we find that this Roman was so diffident that, not liking to venture, Gentile as he was, into the presence of the great Jewish prophet, he sent the elders of the Jews to Jesus to request Him to come and heal his servant. Later he seems to repent of having asked too much at Jesus' hands, and he sends friends (ver. 6), saying, "Lord, trouble not Thyself, for I am not worthy etc." And in our subject, we find that he must have followed after his friends, and that he says, in answer to the assurance of the Lord Jesus, "I will come and heal him," the same thing which he had said by his friends, "I am not worthy that Thou shouldest come under my roof, but speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed."

Here is a Gentile who has had no scriptural instruction, and yet whose faith in the Word of Jesus is so strong that he does not even require Him to come in contact with his servant. He believes that, just as he himself said to this man "Go, and he goeth, and to another, Come, and he cometh, and to his servant, Do this, and he doeth it," so He, to whom all things in heaven and earth are subject, has but to command, whether near or far, and the sickness which is subject to His sway must depart. Have we a like faith? Do we look away from what is probable or improbable, away from past experience and present hindrances, and do we regard not only what the Lord has said, but everything which the Lord has said on the subject?

The Lord Jesus manifests deep joy in the centurion's faith, and says, "Verily, I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, no in Israel. And I say unto you that many shall come from the east, and from the west, and shall sit down with Abraham (the father of all them which believe), and Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven, but the children of the kingdom shall be cast into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth"—i.e., faith and its reward will be given when men expect it least. And He said to the centurion, and He says unto us, "Go thy way, and as thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee." And his servant was healed from the selfsame hour. But let us remember that our faith and our knowledge go together; if we understand that God requires an opened ear, we can expect no healing until the ear is opened, while for such as are in ignorance of God's requirements, simple faith may be the only condition of healing.

Passing on from the centurion, Jesus came into Peter's house and saw his "wife's mother laid, and sick of a fever. And He touched her hand, and the fever left her, and she arose and ministered unto them." A simple case, but Oh, how full! no unbelief to hinder as at Nazareth, and the presence of Jesus and His touch drove away the fever. And the healed body took its right place at once, and ministered to Jesus and to His disciples. It was a day of healing, and "when the even was come, they brought unto Him many that were possessed with devils; and He cast out the spirits with His word." We think we are right in saying that He never laid His hands upon those who were possessed with devils, but always cast them out with His word, while in many cases He touched, took by the hand, or laid hands upon the sick, but not always. The great power lay in His word, and shall it not be so now? If indeed "He healed all that were sick, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, Himself took our infirmities and bare our sicknesses," shall we not be jealous that His word may be fulfilled in us, and that we Christians may be witnesses to the world that the Great Physician heals now as much as ever those who come unconditionally to Him, yielding up their bodies to be living sacrifices unto Him, and instruments whose only use shall be to glorify Him, and do His pleasure. Oh let us remember that we have no right to seek healing for ourselves; we are to glorify God in our bodies and our spirits, which are His.

FOREIGN TOPICS.

The Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the Accession of Alexander II. to the throne of Russia was celebrated March 2d with great pomp. Distinguished representatives of European nations flocked to St. Petersburg to join in the festivities, and congratulations were telegraphed by friendly sovereigns. The Nihilists had threatened to burn St. Petersburg on the occasion, and a request had been sent to London by the Russian Government, that in the event of a conflagration breaking out, a detachment of firemen might be sent to assist the Russian brigades. But the Nihilists did not attempt to execute their threat, and the day passed peacefully if not enthusiastically.

The Czar has made one of his generals—General Melikoff—practically military dictator of the empire, and even stronger repressive measures are expected under his hand than those of the Czar. An attempt to assassinate the newly appointed functionary was made March 3d by a young man who fired a pistol at him as he stepped from his carriage. The general providentially escaped injury.

A Grave Public Scandal is Reported in the telegrams from Great Britain. The government has formulated a scheme to purchase the stock of the London Water Companies for a sum equivalent to $150,000,000. The price is stated by Conservative and Liberal newspapers to be far above the market value of the shares, and a determined attempt is expected to be made by the Liberals to cancel the bargain. It is authoritatively stated that last year, before overtures were made for the purchase, the outside value of the property was estimated at $85,000,000, but as soon as it became known that the government contemplated acquiring the stock the price of shares was forced up. As many members of Parliament of both parties are shareholders in the companies, an opportunity will be afforded for proving their disinterested fidelity to the interests of the people.

The Longest Tunnel in the World, that through Mount St. Gothard, was completed February 29th. It is over nine miles in length, and has been seven years in construction. Its cost is $9,700,000. It affords direct communication between Germany and the Mediterranean Sea, and will do much toward opening up the resources of Germany, Switzerland, and Italy. Hitherto all persons travelling between the Rhine valley and Italy had to travel by diligence over the mountain, or make a long detour by way of Geneva. The tunnel is one of the greatest engineering triumphs of the age, and has been a work involving much danger, owing to the caving in of the rocky roof and the frequent irruption of water. Many lives have been lost during its construction, the most notable being that of M. Favre, the contractor in charge of the work, to whose melancholy death we referred in a former number of the Christian Herald.

A Temperance Appeal by English Clergymen has been forwarded to the archbishops and bishops of the established church. It is signed by fourteen thousand ministers. The petition says: "We, the undersigned clergy of England, venture respectfully to appeal to your lordships, as the only members of our order in Parliament, as such, most earnestly to support measures for the further restriction of the trade in intoxicating liquors in this country. We are convinced, most of us from an intimacy with the people extending through many years, that their condition can never be greatly improved, whether intellectually, physically, or religiously, so long as intemperance extensively prevails among them, and that intemperance will prevail so long as temptations to it abound on every side."

Restrictions of Liberty of Worship in Austria have been modified but slightly. The Rev. Edwin Adams, of the American Board of Foreign Missions at Prague, has made an earnest appeal to the Austrian Government, and has been allowed a degree of liberty. Mr. Adams is permitted to hold worship in his own house, in presence of invited guests, but he must first give legal notice, and in the customary formal manner secure the attendance of a policeman. Children under six years of age may be brought by their parents, as the law regards these young persons unable to understand anything. But children from six to fourteen are excluded, if either they or their parents belong to any of the religious bodies recognized by the Government. The theory is that such children might hear something calculated to unsettle them as to the faith of their fathers, or otherwise to demoralize them. The legal fees incident on each service amount to about a dollar. Outside of this it is considered necessary to make a trifling donation to the policeman in attendance.

A Demand for New Testaments has arisen in Greece. The Greek Minister of Education has issued an order to school inspectors to add the New Testament to the reading books of the national schools. The number of copies of this neglected book required by the schools is now greater than the missionary depositories there are able to supply, and an enterprising publisher has issued the Gospels, and is getting out the other parts as quickly as possible. Before this order it was with difficulty that the missionaries could sell a thousand copies a year in all the kingdom, and there was no native publisher brave enough to risk his money and his reputation in publishing the book.

The Astuteness of the present Pope as compared with the "Non possumus" of his stubborn predecessor has been unmistakably manifested. Those English clergymen who, by the pathway of Ritualism, had arrived at the point when they were ready to take the final step of joining the Romish communion, were in many cases deterred from doing so by the fact that they were married, and so would, by the canons of the church, not be allowed to preach or officiate as priests. The Pope has now smoothed away this difficulty by a concession. Married perverts may in future perform all the functions of the priest with some exceptions. This is a satisfactory reform. Many clergymen will join the Roman Catholic communion, and true Protestants will be spared the pain of seeing men occupying Protestant pulpits and receiving Protestant pay while preaching Romish doctrines and undermining the faith of their congregations. We trust that now, being let go, they will go to their own company.

An Exciting Rescue was Effected at Plymouth, England, on February 9th. Five boys were playing on the beach, when they entered a cave in the rocks, and remained there until the tide, which flowed with unusual rapidity, completely hemmed them in. Their screams were heard from the road above, but no boat could be sent to their relief owing to the surf at the mouth of the cave. The waves were dashing in, and it was manifest that in a few minutes the boys' cries would be finally silenced. Ropes were procured, and two seafaring men were lowered over the precipitous rocks above the cave's mouth through the seething spray, and allowed themselves to be washed by waves into the cave far enough to seize a boy, when they were hauled up. This was repeated until, amid ringing cheers, the last boy was drawn through the waves to the road. No wonder that the people pressed around these two brave seafaring men to shake hands with them. But there are those around us in imminent peril of eternal death, for whose rescue efforts as earnest should be made. They are perishing—a hand may help, may save them; and then how melodious will be the congratulations of heaven—how sweet the Master's encomium, "Well done!"

Baby-farming in England has Received another warning. A woman at Chester was charged recently with neglecting to give proper nourishment to a child entrusted to her by its mother, who had to labor for a living for herself and her child. She gave the nurse $25 as a first payment, but the child was found by an inspector of police lying in a basket in a horribly emaciated condition. It came out in the evidence that the only nourishment it was allowed was some skim-milk twice a day, at morning and nig "It had nothing but the dry bottle to suck at day." The jury found her guilty, and the ju sentenced her to six months' hard labor, obse ing that "this was a terrible offence, which law relating to manslaughter had probably contemplated."

A Porcelain Regiment.—A Paper has Lat been discovered in the State archives of Sax which contains some curious particulars of corps in the Prussian service known as "Porcelain Regiment," and from which present First Dragoons and the Third, Fou and Fifth Regiments of Cuirassiers claim have sprung. According to tradition, the ment was bought by King Frederick Willia Prussia from the King of Poland for some c porcelain vases; and the documents lately l in the Saxon archives show that substant the tradition was correct. The men were va at twenty thalers each, (about $15.) and the w regiment at 12,000 thalers; while the porc given in exchange for them was considered worth considerably more.

How to Make Diamonds is a Problem w has engaged the attention of European che for some time. Mr. James MacTear, of Glas thought he had solved the question, but Pr sor Maskelyne, of the British Museum, four testing his productions, that they would not all the tests it is customary to apply to gems. A fellow-townsman of Mr. MacTe Mr. Hannay, has, it is announced, succeed the enterprise. His diamonds have been nounced genuine by Professor Maskelyne, is an eminent authority. They will cut sap which can only be done by the diamond they may be consumed on platinum in the manner as the mineral diamond. The m by which Mr. Hannay makes his artificial has not been disclosed, but it is said to be ple process, with comparatively inexpensiv terial. If the rumor turns out correct, orna which have cost fabulous sums will sudden come almost valueless, and those who hav large parts of their fortunes in their pu will regret the expenditure. The condit those who for the sake of the Pearl of Price have suffered loss is very different. gem will outweigh during all eternity every ly possession (Matt. 13 : 16).

"I Ken the Lord, and He kens me," poor uneducated Scotch boy who was str on a bed of sickness, expecting death. Christian friend had visited him and ha him that at death the angels would ca spirit to heaven. The poor boy was al at the thought. "I have had nothing with the angels," he said; "I ken the Lo He kens me, but the angels would not what to do wi' me." His fears were at dissipated, and he fell asleep in Jesus, ful vinced that his soul would be safe after parture. The simple trust evinced expression "He kens me," was a positio older and more highly cultured Chr have failed to reach.

A Carriage Builder and Publican.— significant and suggestive inquiry was m cently by one member of the Canadian ment of another during a discussion on t perance question. Mr. Ford, of Queen's in alluding to a member of one of the fam the province who had lately died and been in a pauper's grave, in consequence of of intoxicating liquors, said that such stance was "a temperance lecture in a nu Mr. Pugh, a member from Halifax, imme rose to oppose Mr. Ford, and stated that himself a liquor-seller, and that the b was just as honorable and legitimate as age-builder's. Mr. Ford promptly res and said: "I build carriages, and whe out a fine wagon and put it to rolling al street, I say, 'That is my work.' I would honorable member from Halifax if he is of his work as he sees it rolling along the Mr. Ford's query is also "a temperance in a nutshell."

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Single Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, MARCH 18, 1880. 14th Year. No. 12—New Series.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

RTRAITS AND LIVES OF THE RUSSIAN ZAR AND CZARINA, with View of the Explosion in their Palace on February 17th.

E POUTING SON. A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage.

NOLD PERCIVAL MONTAIGNE. A Thrilling Serial Story by the Author of "Felicia Cuffe."

THE SALVATION ARMY; Incidents of their Voyage and Reception in New York.

CURRENT EVENTS: Congress—The Supreme Court on the Election Laws—Wreck of a Trans-Atlantic Steamer—The Largest Mortgage in the World—A Dispute Over a Calf—A Snow Avalanche in Nevada.

TEN SIGNS OF THE APPROACHING END, by Rev. M. Baxter. (Continued.)

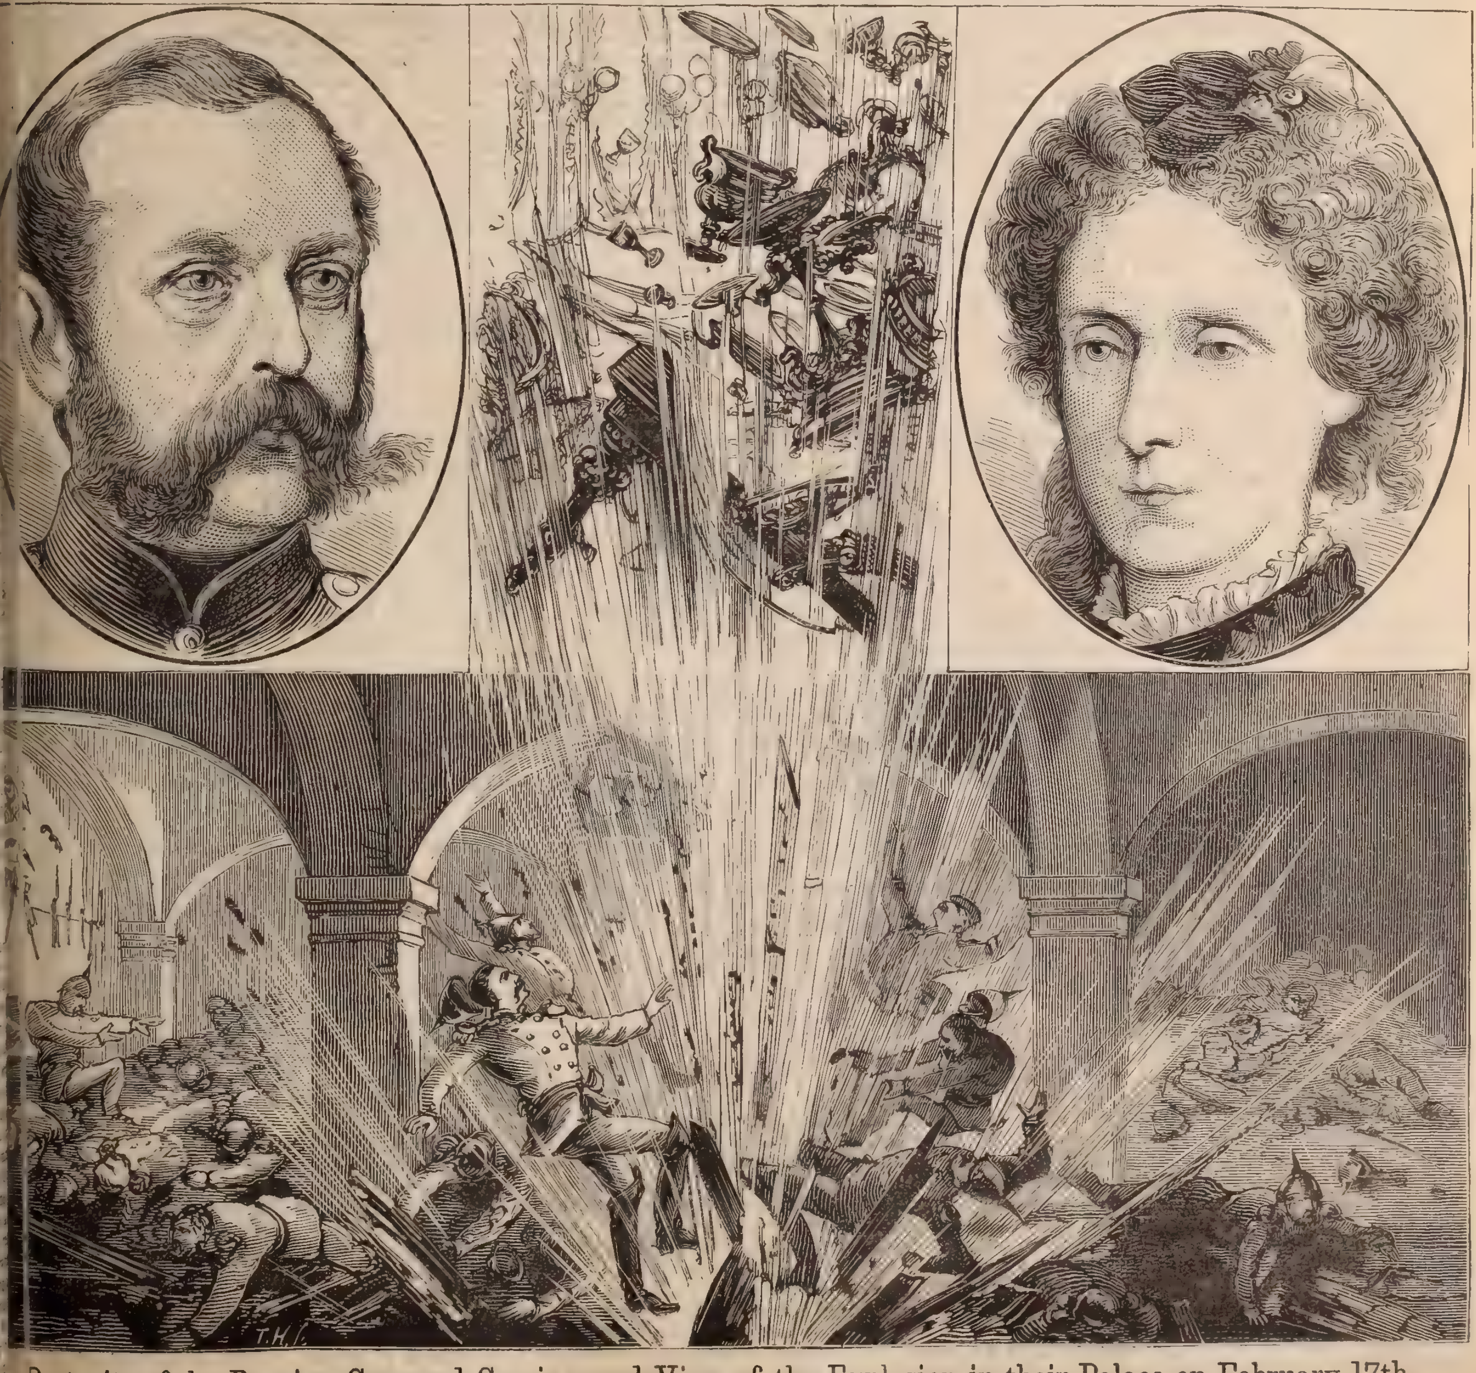
YOUR PERSONAL SALVATION. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH. (Continued.)

Review of the Quarter's Lessons. S. S. Lesson by Mrs. Baxter.—Mr. Moody's Interview with aSwearer.

PICTURE OF THE CZAR'S WINTER PALACE.

FOREIGN TOPICS: Dissolution of the English Parliament—The Electoral Issue, etc.



Portraits of the Russian Czar and Czarina, and View of the Explosion in their Palace on February 17th.

THE EMPEROR OF RUSSIA.

His Birth in 1818 and Early Life—Crimean War—Becomes Emperor in 1855—Emancipates the Serfs—Other Moral and Religious Reforms.

On Tuesday March 2d was celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the accession of the Czar Alexander II., to the throne of Russia. For a quarter of a century the lives and liberties of eighty-six milions of people have been committed into his hands. This is no figure of speech, for the Government of Russia is despotism pure and simple, and in every part of that vast land, which comprises one seventh portion of the habitable earth, the will of the Czar is the highest law. To the Russian peasant, as to the Russian noble, there is no appeal from the decision of the Czar. In him are centred all legislative as well as all executive powers, and he rules without check and without restraint.

We think it dangerous to confide the executive functions of our government, limited as they are, by a clearly defined constitution, to one man for a longer period than four years ; but in Russia unlimited power is confided in one man for his life, and to his son after him, although, as the Preacher observes, "none knoweth whether he shall be a wise man or a fool." That Russia is in a state of semi-barbarism will be inferred from this fact, for in no country where intelligence, education, and culture exist among the people would such a government be endured.

Russia, however, must not be judged by the same rules as other countries. She is the youngest of European nations, and the rigors of her climate and the exclusive policy of her rulers have combined to keep back the march of civilization, which intercourse with other nations would have facilitated. Looking back to early periods of Russian history, as well as to more recent epochs, the rapid advances she has made are astonishing. She has grown during the last century as rapidly as other nations have grown in many centuries, and though she is yet far behind them, yet she must be credited with the advances she has made.

To no other sovereign since Peter the Great is Russia so deeply indebted as to her present ruler Alexander II., whose portrait we publish to-day.

He was the eldest son of the Emperor Nicholas I., and was born April 29th 1818. His were passed at St. Petersburg, under the care of his mother, to whom he was tenderly attached. She was the daughter of Frederick III., King of Prussia, and she lavished on her first-born son all the wealth of her affection, caring for his wants and his training like a peasant mother. But Nicholas was a stern parent and had no desire that his boy should grow up under any softening influence. He wanted him to be a hard. inflexible man, and feared that under his mother's care the boy would be ill-fitted for the position he was destined to occupy. Accordingly he was, in his seventh year, placed under the direction of military governors, and his life was regulated on the principles and rules of the barrack-room. The change was an unwelcome one to the young prince, who had never any predilection for a military life, and as soon as he could, he obtained permission to complete his education by travel. While visiting Hesse Darmstadt, in 1840, he fell in love with the Princess Maria, daughter of the late Grand Duke of Hesse Darmstadt, and in 1841 was married to her.

EARLY YEARS

Returning to Russia he found that his dislike of a military career had to some extent estranged from him the love of his father, and the confidence of the party who by his father's favor was most powerful in the State. His younger brother, Constantine, a cruel, merciless young man, was in the opinion of these men more suitable for the throne, and at one time it was believed that he would succeed Nicholas. But the aged Czar, despite his own personal preferences, had strong prejudices in favor of the established order of succession, and declared his will that his eldest son should succeed. So determined was he on this question that when Constantine, encouraged by his popularity, openly insulted his brother, he was promptly and severely punished by Nicholas, and was made to take a solemn oath of fidelity to him in a public ceremonial.

Alexander's

ACCESSION TO THE THRONE

occurred in a time of disaster. War had broken out between Russia on the one hand, and England, France, and Sardinia on the other. The disasters of that war unquestionably shortened the life of Nicholas, and his last days were embittered by the tidings of one defeat after another inflicted on his troops by the allied Powers. He died March 1855, and Alexander peaceably succeeded him. Soon after his accession proposals for peace were made by him which after the fall of Sebastopol, were accepted and ratified in the Treaty of Paris.

After peace had been proclaimed, Alexander set himself to effect those internal reforms in the empire, which in the days of his youth he had resolved should be his first care when he had power. He was opposed by the party known as the Old Russian Party, with whom he has never been popular. One curse of the country was the system of serfdom, by which twenty-three millions of human beings were held in abject slavery. After many fruitless efforts to induce the nobles to emancipate them voluntarily, he issued an imperial order in 1861, providing for the extinction of slavery within two years. For this act the nobles have never forgiven him.

He has also reformed the army, abolished that terrible coporal punishment in it, which had been so long a dark blot on the military customs of Russia, made great improvements in the various educational establishments, instituted trial by jury, abolished the farming of indirect taxes, and established elective provincial representative assemblies.

While sedulously cultivating the arts of peace, however, the Czar has not neglected those of war, and his military expeditions have been almost invariably attended with success. In 1862, despite his naturally humane and benevolent disposition, he countenanced, if he did not authorize, the exercise of barbarous severities in repressing the Polish insurrection, worthy of the most bloodthirsty tyrant who ever sat on a throne. By the more recent measures of his government, directed against the unruly tribes of the Caucasus and Central Asia, many important provinces have been added to the empire, and others brought to acknowledge themselves as mere feudalities of the Czar.

But these measures have been characterized by a policy of ruthless self-aggrandizement and harshly repressive domination, which are utterly inconsistent with the promises of the earlier years of his reign. There has too, in the ordinances he promulgated as recently as last year, by which a large part of the empire was placed under martial law, been noticed an indication either that the humane disposition of his younger days has passed away, or that he has fallen under the influence of wicked persons who move him to cruel acts.

His Majesty is father of six children now living. The eldest son, who is Czarewitch or heir-apparent, is the Grand Duke Alexander, born in 1845 and married in 1866 to Princess Dagmar of Denmark, sister to the Princess of Wales. His only daughter, Grand Duchess Marie, was married in January, 1874, to the Duke of Edinburgh, the second son of Queen Victoria.

Of the wicked attempts which have been made upon his life we speak in another column ; but in concluding our brief biographical sketch it is due to its subject to state in clear terms the fact that the Russia of Alexander is as far ahead of the Russia of his father Nicholas in moral and material advancement, as is the England of Queen Victoria in advance of the era of George III. As already indicated, the nation awoke to a new life with the advent of the present Czar, and though that life has manifested itself in strange forms and with ill-chosen guidance, believe that the good effected will ultimat tend to the advancement of the people and glory of God.

The most encouraging fact in the present c dition of the country is that there is now open Bible and unrestrained Bible circulation Russia. Though the Russian Church is as of error as the Romish Church, and is infer to that church in many respects, it stands above it in others. It has no Tridentine Co cil, no "infallible" pope, no strict auricu confession, it does not exclude the laity fr the cup, it has no purgatory, with its acco panying terrorism and roguery, and no celib priesthood. Russia is open to that progr which always follows the circulation of Go Word and the spread of the Gospel.

Under the Emperor Nicholas there were newspapers and magazines, and the writers these saw Siberia looming in the distance for blunder or political offence, but in the pres reign the periodicals and newspapers are a written and well supported. In the extent their information and the talent of their artic they are ahead of the French press.

Though the education of the lower classes very backward, yet the ball is gathering as rolls. The army is now on the short system service, and every soldier is required to kn how to read. What a contrast to the times Nicholas, when reading was almost a disqua cation ! Middle-class female education has tained a singularly high position. We h already referred to judicial reforms and the provement of the police, which have been an calculable good in bringing justice home to common people, and in relieving them to a c siderable extent of the incubus of a tyranni espionage under which they formerly groane

---

THE EMPRESS OF RUSSIA.

Her Imperial Majesty Marie Alexandrov Empress of Russia, originally Princess Maxir iana Marie of Hesse, is the only daughter of late Grand Duke Ludwig II., and the siste the reigning Grand Duke Ludwig III. of He She was born on the 8th of August, 1824, married on the 28th of April, 1841, to the ti Grand Duke Alexander Nicolayevitch, at p ent the Emperor Alexander II. of Russia.

The Empress herself is distantly related to royal family of Great Britain, being the siste Prince Charles William, father of Prince Lud of Hesse, who married the Princess Alice 1866. The alliance of the Hessian dynasty w the Imperial family of Russia is one of those merous features which have for nearly a cent contributed to the friendship and good un standing between the people of Germany Russia, and in the case of this illustrious la her latent influence must doubtless have some share in preserving the dominions of brother almost intact after the war in 1866 which all the minor States of Germany w greatly affected.

Still, it is well known that her Majesty ha all times scrupulously refrained from mix herself up with political affairs, so far as effect produced on public matters can be tra to her. It is rather by the genial influence her individuality than by any kind of active terference that such an effect was ever wroug The Empress devoted herself to other thi than politics.

In all these parts of Russia, of Germany, of Italy, in which she has from time to time journed, frequently for the benefit of her c cate health, her Majesty has made her known and beloved as the true guardian of poor, and many are the acts of genuine cha that may be traced to her, although she had served the divine injunction that her left h should not know the deeds of her right. benevolence is especialy known in her country, whose people delight in calling "the good Empress."

THE EXPLOSION IN THE CZAR'S PALACE.

Causes of Attempted Regicide—Description of the Winter Palace, the Scene of the Explosion, and Details of it—The Nihilist Conspiracy.

The renewed attempt on the evening of February 17th, to assassinate the Czar of Russia comes within the category of crimes which stand forth in history with an unenviable prominence. Regicide is unfortunately one of those glaring outrages frequently plotted but happily seldom ending in success. No matter how good or how great a reigning sovereign may be, an effort is pretty sure to be made sooner or later to take his or her life, and for this there are very apparent reasons.

First and feeblest, and also the most harmless, is the insane desire of wicked minds for notoriety and in such instances the endeavor does not usually succeed. Then comes private malice and after that revolutionary designs, which are undoubtedly the most dangerous of all. The real crime which was so near being a complete success in St. Petersburg, on Tuesday February 17 must, we fear, be placed in this last class.

Following on what has gone before, and because of the terrible condition into which political society in Russia has drifted, it appears abundantly plain that the explosion of a mine under the Imperial Winter Palace was a deliberate attempt of the Revolutionary party to rid themselves of a monarch whom they detest; and the would-be perpetrators of the awful crime evidently would not hesitate at destroying the whole of the reigning family of Russia, provided that they were sure the Czar would be one of the victims.

The circumstances are simply horrible. And they are all the more terrible when we remember that, beyond all doubt or question, some of the most intimate employés of the Romanoff dynasty could not but have been perfectly well aware of what was intended.

So far as the information received can be relied on, the Winter Palace was literally undermined just at that part where the Imperial family were fairly certain to be at a fixed time; and it seems to have been a singularly providential accident that they escaped destruction.

DESCRIPTION OF THE WINTER PALACE.

It covers 700 square feet of ground, and its inmates number 6,000 persons when the Czar is in residence. It is built on the banks of the Neva. In front there is a large open space called the Palace Square in which stands Alexander's Column, a monolith of red granite eighty feet high. On the right of the palace is Peter's Square, which contains the celebrated statue of Peter the Great, and the Field of Mars, a parade ground large enough for 40,000 men to manœuvre in. On the left side of the palace is the Empress Catherine's Hermitage, now a museum, and connected with it by a covered way. It is, in fact, a square building, like a large barrack, with a large space in the interior the square.

OUR PICTURE ON PAGE 192

shows its front on the Palace Square facing Alexander's Column.

Every story in the Winter Palace is separated by vaulted ceilings of great depth, one from the other, and the walls are three yards thick. Oak parquet is placed over the vaulted flooring. The guard-room, under which the mine was laid, is immediately under the Imperial family dining-room with which the back-stairs communicate.

Every member, high and low, of the Imperial household and the officers of the Guards have rooms in the Winter Palace, which on the ground floor and topmost story is honeycombed with suites of small apartments. This practically renders the back-stairs and corridors of the Imperial abode as public as any street, and on festival days at the palace the crowd passing in and out is generally too great to be closely watched by the policemen.

Between six and seven o'clock on February 17th, the Czar, with his daughter, the Duchess of Edinburgh, and Prince Alexander of Bulgaria, were about to repair to the dining-room, when the report of a terrific explosion in the building suddenly terrified and detained them. In an instant afterward his Majesty was informed that the banqueting-hall was a wreck, and that an accidental delay had saved him and his guests from probable death. Dinner had been fixed for the usual hour, and the Emperor, with the Duchess of Edinburgh, was in an adjoining room waiting for the appearance of Prince Alexander, who happily on this occasion was guilty of a slight breach of punctuality, to which his Imperial kinsman and patron probably owes his life. The Empress, still very feeble, was asleep in a remote part of the palace, nor were her slumbers disturbed by the shock and roar of the explosion. When conscious of what had occcurred, the Emperor, though visibly moved, never for a moment lost his self-possession, and his daughter, too, displayed exemplary composure.

An official inquiry was at once commenced as to the circumstances of the explosion. The mine was placed immediately under the guard-room, and was filled with dynamite and gun-cotton. The basement under the dining-saloon blew up with such violence that a gap ten feet long and six feet wide was made in the flooring. No less than forty-seven of the soldiers on guard have been wounded, while ten of them are dead. It will be remembered that on the life of the Czar within a few months. Last April he was shot at by Solovieff; still more recently an attempt was made to take his life when landing at Odessa; and later still a mine was exploded while the Czar was travelling by rail from Odessa to Moscow.

THIS IS THE FOURTH UNSUCCESSFUL ATTEMPT

No human precautions seem capable of preserving the life of a man who is plotted against on all hands and from every direction; who is, as a matter of fact, living over a mine dug under his private apartments; who appears unable to trust any living being of his household, and who has ample reason to see the sword of death always overhanging him, and its grim shadow attending him wherever he goes.

Were the Emperor a private individual there can be little doubt that his wisest plan would be to retire altogether from a position that can be no better than a living torture; but, placed as he is, abdication might seem to indicate a lack of courage and a yielding to intimidation, which is just what the Nihilist conspirators aim at, and which would gratify the aristocracy who are disaffected toward him because of his emancipation of their serfs and of his tendency toward liberal reforms.

A man in such a condition carries the most crushing of burdens. The worst of curses, terror, is about his bed and his board, his coming in and going out. The precautions of Cromwell—the shifting of rooms, the alteration of times of appointment, and so forth—seem to him the only method of safety. The uncertainty as to friends and foes which besets him is almost the worst part of the evil. The sentry who presents arms as he passes, the servant who hands him his clothes or his food, may be—in some cases, it would appear, must be—in league with his unknown enemies. For months, almost for years, the Emperor of a vast empire has been living this life, and the only marvel is that he continues to survive it. We can but pray that his troubles may lead him to exercise true faith in Christ as his Saviour.

These attempts on the Czar's life plainly show that "in these last days perilous times have come." Their constant recurrence shows that hitherto the crusade against Nihilism has been utterly unavailing. One conspirator may be sent to Siberia or to the gallows, but another promptly takes his place. Nor are these crimes the sort of crimes in which failure deters, for the political conspirator is, above all men, prone to inspire himself with the motto, "Better luck next time." Unless Russian statesmanship admits itself to be incompetent, something must be done by it to render the life of the Czar tolerable and safe, and the condition of the country something different from its present state of seething discontent and murderous outbreak.

This conspiracy is an outbreak of the revolutionary spirit predicted in Daniel and Revelation to agitate all nations at the time of the Final Crisis, and we must expect developments of social violence and fierce insurrection to increase and multiply throughout the whole world during the few remaining years of this dispensation.

JUGGERNAUT PILGRIMAGES IN ORISSA, INDIA.

MR. HUNTER gives a vivid picture of these pilgrimages. Day and night, through every month of the year, troops of devotees arrive at Puri, and for three hundred miles along the great Orissa road every village has its encampment. At the time of the great festivals the bands follow so closely that they form a continuous procession miles upon miles in length. They march in orderly companies, each under its leader or guide.

These guides may properly be called the missionaries of the idolatrous Juggernaut. About six thousand of them are attached to the temple, from which they take their departure for every section of the country. The arrival of one of these pilgrim-hunters is a memorable event in the still life of a Hindoo village. He is known by his half-shaven head, coarse tunic, knapsack, and palm-leaf umbrella.

He waits, patiently chewing his narcotic leaf, until the men have gone into the field, and then makes a round of visits among the women. He works alike upon their hopes and fears, their piety and their folly. The older ones long to look upon the face of the merciful god who will remit the sins of a life. The younger ones are allured by the prospect of a journey through strange lands. Widows catch at any thing to relieve the tedium of their blighted existence; childless wives long to pick up the berries from the child-giving banyan which grows in the sacred inclosure.

In a few days the idol's missionary has picked up a band of pilgrims. Fully nine out of ten are women, and when the bands come together on the great Orissa road they present a motley spectacle. Here are a company of white-clothed slender women from Lower Bengal, limping wearily along. Next a train, clad in bright red or blue, with noses pierced with rings, trudges stoutly forward: they are the rugged peasantry of Northern India. Now and then is a lady from near Delhi, ambling along upon a little pony, while her husband walks by her side.

A bullock cart creaks past upon its wooden wheels. A long train of palanquins conveys a Calcutta banker and his family. Sometimes there is a great north-country rajah, with a whole caravan of elephants, camels, and horses. But ninety-five out of every hundred are on foot. Mingled with all are devotees of every sort, some covered with ashes, some nearly naked, with matted hair stained yellow. Almost all have their foreheads streaked with red and white paint, a string of beads around their necks, and a stout staff in their hands.

So this great pilgrim army marches hundreds of miles along burning roads, across unbridged rivers, through pestilent jungles and swamps. Many perish by the way; all are weary and footsore. But no sooner are they within sight of the holy city than all the miseries of the journey are forgotten. They hurry across the ancient bridge with shouts and songs, and rush to one of the great artificial lakes and plunge beneath the sacred waters.

The dirty bundles which they have carried all the long way are opened, and yield forth their treasures of spotless cotton, and the pilgrims, refreshed and cleanly clad, proceed to the temple to partake of the sacred rice which has been cooked within its walls—that sacred rice for which the idol Juggernaut is fabled to have longed in his old jungle home, and of which he is now supposed to partake in his temple.

THE POUTING SON.

A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage, Preached on Sunday Morning, March 14th, 1880.

"And he was angry, and would not go in."—Luke 15 : 28.

The Elder Son in the Parable Neglected—One Son was a Rake and the other a Churl—A Premium on Vagabondism—The Elder Brother still Lives—He is a Type of Men in Our Day—I. The Self-congratulatory Man—Good Men always Humble—Two Kinds of "Higher Life Men"—II. The Man who has no Faith in the Reformation of Others—Prodigals Kept back by Incredulity—From what a Height to what a Depth—Who that Man was—The Ruined Glasgow Merchant—III. The Spirit of Envy and Jealousy—Jealousy in all Professions—Prayers for Rain Explained by a Mohammedan—A Grumbling Soldier Shot—IV. The Pouting Christian—Contrasts in a Picture—Surrender All!

Many times have I been asked to preach a sermon about the elder brother of the parable. I received a letter this week from Canada, saying, "Is the elder son of the parable so unsympathetic and so cold that he is not worthy of recognition?" The fact is that we ministers pursue the younger son. You can hear the flapping of his rags in many a sermonic breeze, and the cranching of the pods for which he was an unsuccessful contestant.

I confess that never before now have I been able to train the camera obscura upon the elder son of the parable. I never could get a negative for a photograph. There was not enough light in the gallery, or the chemicals were poor, or the sitter moved in the picture. But now I think I have him. Not a side-face, or a three-quarters, or the mere bust, but a full-length portrait as he appears to me.

The father in the parable of the prodigal had nothing to brag of in his two sons. The one was a rake and the other a churl. I find nothing admirable in the dissoluteness of the one, and I find nothing attractive in the acrid sobriety of the other. The one goes down over the larboard side, and the other goes down over the starboard side; but they both go down.

From all the windows of the old homestead bursts the minstrelsy. The floor quakes with the feet of the rustics, whose dance is always vigorous and resounding. The neighbors have heard of the return of the younger son from his wanderings, and they have gathered together. The house is full of congratulators. I suppose the tables are loaded with luxuries. Not only the one kind of meat mentioned, but its concomitants. "Clap!" go the cymbals, "thrum!" go the harps, "click!" go the chalices, up and down go the feet inside, while outside is a most sorry spectacle. The senior son stands at the corner of the house, a frigid phlegmatic.

He has just come in from the fields in very substantial apparel. Seeing some wild exhilarations around the old mansion, he asks of a servant passing by with a goat-skin of wine on his shoulder what all the fuss is about. One would have thought that, on hearing that his younger brother had got back, he would have gone into the house and rejoiced, and if he were not conscientiously opposed to dancing, that he would have joined in the Oriental schottische. No. There he stands. His brow lowers. His face darkens. His lip curls with contempt. He stamps the ground with indignation. He sees nothing at all to attract. The odors of the feast coming out on the air do not sharpen his appetite. The lively music does not put any spring into his step.

HE IS IN A TERRIBLE POUT.

He criticises the expense, the injustice, and the morals of the entertainment. The father rushes out bare-headed and coaxes him to come in. He will not go in. He scolds the father. He goes into a pasquinade against the younger brother, and he makes the most uncomely scene. He says, "Father, you put a premium on vagabondism. I stayed at home and worked on the farm. You never made a party for me; you didn't so much as kill a kid; that wouldn't have cost half as much as a calf; but this scapegrace went off in fine clothes, and he comes back not fit to be seen, and what a time you make over him! He breaks your heart, and you pay him for it. That calf to which we have been giving extra feed during all these weeks wouldn't be so fat and sleek if I had known to what use you were going to put it! That vagabond deserves to be cowhided instead of banqueted. Veal is too good for him!" That evening, while the younger son sat telling his father about his adventures, and asking about what had occurred on the place since his departure, the senior brother goes to bed disgusted, and slams the door after him.

THAT SENIOR BROTHER STILL LIVES.

You can see him any Sunday, any day of the week. At a meeting of ministers in Germany some one asked the question, "Who is that elder son?" and Krummacher answered, "I know him; I saw him yesterday." And when they insisted upon knowing whom he meant, he said, "Myself; when I saw the account of the conversion of a most obnoxious man, I was irritated."

I. First, this senior brother of the text stands for the self-congratulatory, self-satisfied, self-worshipful man. With the same breath in which he vituperates against his younger brother he utters a panegyric for himself. The self-righteous man of my text, like every other self-righteous man, was full of faults. He was an ingrate, for he did not appreciate the home blessings which he had all those years. He was disobedent, for when the father told him to come in he stayed out. He was a liar, for he said that the recreant son had devoured his father's living, when the father, so far from being reduced to penury, had a homestead left, had instruments of music, had jewels, had a mansion, and instead of being a pauper, was a prince. This senior brother, with so many faults of his own, was merciless in his criticism of the younger brother.

The only perfect people that I have ever known were utterly obnoxious. I was never so badly cheated in all my life as by a perfect man. He got so far up in his devotions he was clear up above all the rules of common honesty. These men that go about prowling among prayer-meetings, and in places of business, telling how good they are—look out for them; keep your hand on your pocket-book! I have noticed that just in proportion as a man gets good he gets humble. The deep Mississippi does not make as much noise as the brawling mountain rivulet. There has been many a store that had more goods in the show-window than inside on the shelves.

This self-righteous man of the text stood at the corner of the house hugging himself in admiration. We hear a great deal in our day about the higher life. Now there are two kinds of higher-life men. The one are admirable, and the other are most repulsive. The one kind of higher-life man is very lenient in his criticism of others, does not bore prayer-meetings to death with long harangues, does not talk a great deal about himself, but much about Christ and Heaven, gets kindlier and more gentle and more useful until one day his soul spreads a wing and he flies away to eternal rest, and everybody mourns his departure.

The other higher-life man goes around with a Bible conspicuously under his arm, goes from church to church, a sort of general evangelist, is a nuisance to his own pastor when he is at home, and a nuisance to other pastors when he is away from home; runs up to some man who is counting out a roll of bank bills, or running up a difficult line of figures, and asks him how his soul is; makes religion a dose of ipecacuanha; standing in a religious meeting making an address, he has a patronizing way, as though ordinary Christians were clear away down below him, so he had to talk at the top of his voice in order to make them hear, but at the same time encouraging them to hope on; that by climbing many years they may after a while come up within sight of the place where he now stands!

I tell you plainly that a roaring, roy bouncing sinner is not so repulsive to me higher-life malformation. The former pent; the latter never gets over his phai
The younger brother of the parable cam but the senior brother stands outside oblivious of his own delinquencies and pronouncing his own eulogium. O hov easier it is to blame others than to bla selves! Adam blamed Eve, Eve blamed pent, the serpent blamed the devil, the brother blamed the younger brother, ar of them blamed themselves.

II. Again, the senior brother of n stands for all those who are faithless reformation of the dissipated and the di
In the very tones of his voice you can l fact that he has no faith, that the reform the younger son is genuine. His entire seems to say, "That boy has come l more money. He got a third of the p now he has come back for another thi will never be contented to stay on the far will fall away. I would go in too and rejo the others if I thought this thing was g but it is a sham. That boy is a confirr briate and debauchee." Alas! my frie the

INCREDULITY IN THE CHURCH of Christ in regard to the reclamation recreant. You say a man has been drinker. I say, "Yes, but he has ref

"Oh!" you say, with a lugubrious face, you are not mistaken, I hope you are taken." You say, "Don't rejoice too m his conversion, for soon he will be unco I fear. Don't make too big a party for turned prodigal, or strike the timbrel t and if you kill a calf, kill the one that i commons and not the one that has bee ating in the paddock."

That is the reason why more prodiga come home to their father's house. It is infidelity in the church of God on this There is not a house on the streets of that has not in it a prodigal that retu stayed home. There could be unrolle you a scroll of a hundred thousand na names of prodigals who came back fo formed. Who was John Bunyan? A prodigal. Who was Richard Baxter? turned prodigal. Who was George W
the thunderer? A returned prodigal.
could go out in all the aisles of this c day and find on either side those who, astray for many years, have been fait their eternal salvation is as sure as tho had been ten years in Heaven. And yet you have not enough faith in their retu

You do not know how to shake hand prodigal. You do not know how to him. You do not know how to greet h wants to sail into the warm gulf-stream tian sympathy. You are the iceberg which he strikes and shivers. You sa been a prodigal. I know it, but you sour, unresponsive, censorious, saturnin elder brother, and if you are going to one would think some people would be to go to perdition to get away from y hunters say that if a deer be shot the o shoves him out of their company, and eral rule is, away with a man that wounded with sin.

Now, I say, the more bones a man
ken the more need he has of a hosp that the more a man has been bruise with sin the more need he has to be ca human and divine sympathy. But for there is not much room in this world—who want to come back after wandering.
of room for elegant sinners, for sinners and satin and lace, for sinners high-for kid-gloved and patent-leatherd sin sinners fixed up by hair-dresser, po and lavendered and cologned and friz crimped and "banged" sinners—pl room!

Such we meet elegantly at the urches, and we invite them into the best ith Chesterfieldian gallantries; we usher to the house of God, and put soft otto- under their feet, and put a gilt-edged book in their hands, and pass the con- on box before them with an air of apology, hey, the generous souls! take out the ex- portmonnaie, and open it, and with dia- d finger push down beyond the ten-dol- pieces and delicately pick out as an ex- n of gratitude their offering to the Lord of such sinners plenty of room, plenty of But for the man who has been drinking is coat is threadbare and his face is ery- ed, and his wife's wedding-dress is in the oker's shop, and his children, instead of n school, are out begging broken bread at ement-doors of the city—the man, body, nd soul on fire with the flames that have from the scathing, scorching, blasting, ng, consuming cup which the drunkard trembling, and agonized, and affrighted, esses to his parched lip, and his cracked and his shirking yet immortal spirit—

NO ROOM.

if this younger son of the parable had not far off, if he had not dropped so low in , the protest would not have been so se- out, going clear over the precipice as the r son did, the elder son is angry and will in.

be not so hard in your criticism of the est thou thyself also be tempted. Do you who that man was who, Sabbath before aggered up and down the aisle in this disturbing the service until the service stop until he was taken from the room? a minister of the Gospel of Jesus Christ ister denomination! That man had ed the Gospel, that man had broken the of the holy communion for the people. hat a height to what a depth! Oh! I was ere was no smiling in the room when that s taken out, his poor wife following him is hat in one hand, and his coat on her t was as solemn to me as two funerals—the of the body and the funeral of the soul. lest thou also be tempted.

nvalid went to South America for his and one day sat sunning himself on the when he saw something crawling up the wriggling toward him, and he was af- . He thought it was a wild beast, or a and he took his pistol from his pocket. e saw it was not a wild beast. It was a immortal man, a man made in God's age; and the poor wretch crawled up to t of the invalid and asked for strong and the invalid took his wine flask from ket, and gave the poor wretch something k, and then under the stimulus he rose gave his history.

He ad been a merchant in Glasgow, Scot- He had gone down under the power of drink until he was so reduced in poverty was living in a boat just off the beach. " said the invalid, "I knew a merchant gow once," a merchant by such and such ; and the poor wretch straightened him- l said, "I am that man." "Let him that h he standeth take heed lest he fall."

III Again, I remark that the senior brother ext stands for the spirit of senior brother thought that all the honor d to the returned brother was a wrong to He said, "I have stayed at home, and I o have had the ring, and I ought to have e banquet, and I ought to have had the s."

ENVY AND JEALOUSY.

for this spirit of envy and jealousy com- wn through the ages! Cain and Abel, nd Jacob, Saul and David, Haman and ai, Othello and Iago, Orlando and An- Caligula and Torquatus, Cæsar and Pom- lumbus and the Spanish courtiers, Cam- nd the brother he slew because he was a marksman. Dionysius and Philoxenius, whom he slew because he was a better singer. Jealousy among painters. Closterman and Geoffrey Kneller, Hudson and Reynolds. Francia, anxious to see a picture of Raphael, Raphael sends him a picture. Francia, seeing it, falls in a fit of jealousy from which he dies. Jealousy among authors. How seldom contemporaries speak of each other! Xenophon and Plato living at the same time, but from their writings you never would suppose they heard of each other.

Religious jealousies. The Mohammedans praying for rain during a drought, no rain coming. Then the Christians begin to pray for rain, and the rain comes. Then the Mohammedans met together to account for this, and they resolved that God was so well pleased with their prayers he kept the drought on so as to keep them praying; but that the Christians began to pray, and the Lord was so disgusted with their prayers that He sent rain right away so He would not hear any more of their supplications. Oh, this accursed spirit of envy and jealousy! Let us stamp it out from all our hearts.

A wrestler was so envious of Theogenes, the prince of wrestlers, that he could not be consoled in any way; and after Theogenes died, and a statue was lifted to him in a public place, his envious antagonist went out every night and wrestled with the statue until one night he threw it, and it fell on him and crushed him to death. So jealousy is not only absurd, but it is killing to the body and it is killing to the soul.

How seldom it is you find one merchant speaking well of a merchant in the same line of business! How seldom it is you hear a physician speaking well of a physician on the same block. Oh! my friends, the world is large enough for all of us. Let us rejoice at the success of others. The next best thing to owning a garden ourselves is to look over the fence and admire the flowers. The next best thing to riding in fine equipage is to stand on the street and admire the prancing span. The next best thing to having a banquet given to ourselves is having a banquet given to our prodigal brother that has come home to his father's house.

Besides that, if we do not get as much honor and as much attention as others, we ought to congratulate ourselves on what we escape in the way of assault. The French general, riding on horseback at the head of his troops, heard a soldier complain and say, "It is very easy for the general to command us forward while he rides and we walk." Then the general dismounted and compelled the complaining soldier to get on the horse. Coming through a ravine, a bullet from a sharpshooter struck the rider, and he fell dead. Then the general said, "How much safer it is to walk than to ride!"

IV. Once more I have to tell you that this senior brother of my text stands for

THE POUTING CHRISTIAN.

While there is so much congratulation within doors, the hero of my text stands outside, the corners of his mouth drawn down, looking as he felt—miserable. I am glad his lugubrious physiognomy did not spoil the festivity within. How many pouting Christians there are in our day—Christians who do not like the music of the churches, Christians who do not like the hilarities of the young—pouting, pouting, pouting at society, pouting at the fashions, pouting at the newspapers, pouting at the church, pouting at the government, pouting at high Heaven.

Their spleen is too large; their liver does not work, their digestion is broken down. There are two cruets in their castor always sure to be well supplied—vinegar and red pepper! Oh! come away from that mood. Stir a little saccharine into your disposition. While you avoid dissoluteness of the younger son, avoid also the irascibility and the petulance and the pouting spirit of the elder son, and imitate the father, who had embraces for the returning prodigal and coaxing words for the splenetic malcontent.

Ah! the face of this pouting elder son is put before us in order that we might better see the radiant and forgiving face of the father. Contrasts are mighty. The artist, in sketching the field of Waterloo, years after the battle, put a dove in the mouth of the cannon. Raphael, in one of his cartoons, beside the face of a wretch put the face of a happy and innocent child. And so the sour face of this irascible and disgusted elder brother is brought out in order that in the contrast we might better understand the forgiving and the radiant face of God. That is —that God is ready to take back anybody that is sorry, to take him clear back, to take him back forever, and forever, and forever, to take him back with a loving hug, to put a kiss on his parched lip, a ring on his bloated hand, an easy shoe on his chafed foot, a garland on his bleeding temples, and Heaven in his soul. Oh! I fall flat on that mercy. Come, my brother, and let us get down into the dust, resolved never to rise until the Father's forgiving hand shall lift us.

THE MEANING OF IT

Oh, what a God we have! Bring your doxologies. Come, earth and Heaven, and join in the worship. Cry aloud. Lift the palm branches! Do you not feel the Father's arm around your neck? Do you not feel the warm breath of your Father against your cheek? Surrender, younger son! Surrender, elder son! Surrender, all!!

Oh! go in to-day and sit down at the banquet. Take a slice of the fatted calf, and afterward, when you are seated, with one hand in the hand of the returned brother, and the other hand in the hand of the rejoicing father, let your heart beat time to the clapping of the cymbal and the mellow voice of the flute. It is meet that we should make merry and be glad, for this, thy brother, was dead and is alive again, he was lost and is found.

The Horrors of the Famine in Persia have not abated. A correspondent of the New York Tribune narrates some heartrending details witnessed in the famine-stricken districts. He says: "Parents have sold their children to get bread. One grandmother took poison when she found it impossible to obtain food for herself and grandchild, that he might live. A father, unable to see his children dying before his eyes, procured one more meal, thoroughly poisoning it. A woman from one of the Mohammedan villages brought two little girls, and throwing them at my feet exclaimed, 'Take them for your own if you will; they are starving, as are my other children.' The poor have parted with cattle and household goods, to the bed on which they sleep. Many are almost naked, and multitudes, barefooted, are facing the cold, pitiless storms, begging for bread." Another letter speaks of "not only the hordes of poor people who have been transformed into beggars, who make demands on our aid and sympathy, but many respectable and hitherto well-off persons, who are brought to the verge of starvation."

A Struggle to Overcome a Bad Habit.—In the course of a recent address Mr. John B. Gough said: "I knew a man who undertook to give up the habit of chewing tobacco. He put his hand in his pocket, took out his plug of tobacco and threw it away, saying, as he did so, 'That's the end of it.' But it was the beginning of it. O how he did want it! He would chew camomile, he would chew toothpicks, quills—anything to keep the jaws a-going. No use! he suffered intensely. After enduring the craving for thirty-six or forty-eight hours, he made up his mind. 'Now it's no use suffering for a bit of tobacco; I'll go and get some.' So he went and purchased another plug, and put it in his pocket. 'Now,' said he, 'when I want it awfully, I'll take some.' Well, he did want it awfully, and he said he believed that it was God's good Spirit that was striving with him as he held that tobacco in his hand. Looking at it, he said, 'I love you. But are you my master, or am I yours? You are a weed, and I am a man. You are a thing, and I am a man. I'll master you if I die for it.' Every time he wanted it he would take it out and talk to it. It was six or eight weeks before he could throw it away and feel easy; but he said the glory of the victory repaid for his struggle."

ARNOLD PERCIVAL MONTAIGNE;

Or the Heir of a Deferred Inheritance.

A Thrilling Story by Henry Martin, Author of "Felicia Cuffe."

(Continued from page 167.)

The Lawyer Seizes the Papers—He is Captured and Overpowered—The Jesuit Explains the Position—Mr. Gogharty Hopes the Deeds will not be Required in his Lifetime—The Deeds Demanded by his Client's Lawyer—He Asks the Aid of his Son.

THE only reply Mr. Gogharty got for some time for his dangerous threat, as he considered it, was a sarcastic smile on the face of the Superior, but after a few seconds that threatened ecclesiastic, with a contemptuous curl of the lip and careless composure, said,

"Oh dear no, Mr. Gogharty, you will not, I am sure, do that. You, of all men, would not have the heart to bring odium upon our excellent and holy brotherhood; not, however, understand me, from any affection for us, but simply, my dear sir"—and these last words were spoken with a sort of mocking regard—"but simply, my dear sir, for your own sake, for you well know that in exposing us you would disastrously expose yourself.

"No, Mr. Gogharty, no, sir, you will never attempt to execute your angry threat, for, let me also tell you, it is a very stupid one, and a menace that, unless blinded by passion, you would not give way to, Mr. Gogharty"—an exhortation which was given with an aggravating air of moral superiority—"a menace, I say, that you never would have uttered. Self-interest, they say, my dear sir, is an absorbing motive in mean and covetous souls, such as yours is, I fear, Mr. Gogharty: you'll forgive me for saying so."

Mr. Gogharty felt that every word that had been spoken to him was true: that with his character already shaken by his deprivation of the Percival agency he could never afford to peril a further exposure. If it came to be known that he could make private use of bonds and deeds intrusted to his keeping, he doubted not that every client he had would leave him, and not only so, his name would be struck from off the roll.

The workings of his countenance betrayed the agony within, and the Superior seemed rather to enjoy Mr. Gogharty's misery, for, it must be remembered, he was of the genus and temperament of those Inquisitors who, as history attests, could sit in the torture-chamber with their victim, and, while he was put to the "question" on the rack, or torn with red-hot pincers, could impassively look on with no shade of pity for the sufferer, but rather with the air of one who was witnessing an interesting experiment as to the amount of endurance possible in a recusant heretic.

Mr. Gogharty, however, after a while got time to reflect that, whether by bringing the Superior to a trial in open court or not, it was certain his transgressions as a lawyer in connection with these deeds, which lay somewhat beyond his reach on the table in front of him, were destined sooner or later to a disastrous disclosure. He would be required by his client to produce them some day, but to produce them while they were held by this man he knew would be impossible. Have them into his own hands, therefore, he must, or face certain destruction. The money to redeem them, he was conscious, he neither had nor could raise, and his case, he saw, was altogether desperate.

In his despair his eye fell upon the documents he so craved. They lay near a small raised desk on the table where the Superior sat, who indeed had one hand gently laid upon them. The question flashed up into Mr. Gogharty's mind, "Why not make a spring and seize them?" To do this would require him to make a rather long stretch, for the table was wide, and the papers, tied together with red tape, were at the farther side of it. However, since Mr. Gogharty was not of diminutive stature, the feat was possible.

Consequently Mr. Gogharty determined to make a desperate effort to seize the papers on the other side of the table.

In order that he might excite no alarm, he deliberately took two steps toward his coveted treasure, as though he were only coming nearer the Superior for some closer conversation. And then, when his body touched the table's edge, he made one wild tiger-spring toward his prey, got hold of it, clutched it tight, and, recovering his feet before the Superior could grasp him, he hurried toward the door of the apartment, intending to flee from the Jesuit's house to his city lodgings, and there conceal himself. It required some time, however, to turn the handle of the room door and open it, and ere this could be effected the Superior and his colleague in the apartment were upon him. Both of them at the same instant seized the lawyer and retained him.

He held on to his captured deeds, however, long and convulsively, nor were they, all crumpled and torn, taken from his determined grip until, faint from exhaustion, he could battle for them no longer. Deprived of his seizure, Mr. Gogharty was forced to the centre of the room, pressed into a chair, and then his black-robed conquerors, six of them, stood in a circle around him, ready to resist in a moment should he attempt to make another raid upon his papers. The baffled lawyer had no mind, however, for a second assault.

He therefore kept the seat provided for him, and, silent and pale, looked up at his antagonists. The Superior was the first to speak. "Mr. Gogharty," he said, "I hope we have not hurt you; I say it sincerely, and you will believe me when I remind you that your life is a matter of some importance to our sacred brotherhood. Should anything serious happen to you, you know these deeds we have recovered from your robber grasp would be of little worth—we could not retain them; but so long as life and health are yours we shall not despair of obtaining the rather handsome sum for which you have pledged them. But, my dear sir, your violent attempt to plunder me of these papers, was, to say the least, exceedingly irregular—an act for which I am sure you feel regret, and especially since it has proved abortive. I would be justified in giving you into the hands of the police, Mr. Gogharty. I will not, however, do this, and I will candidly give you my reason.

"Once for all, Mr. Gogharty, let us understand one another. It would not do for you to have this affair between us noised abroad, and I frankly admit neither would it do for me. Not, you understand, that our holy principle—that all things are lawful for the Church—would not permit the bargain that exists between us; but you see, Mr. Gogharty, harsh things are thought and said of our sacred order by the prejudiced and bigoted in these lands, and our transaction would be evilly interpreted and spoken against. We both, then, you see, have an interest in keeping matters quiet. I will therefore condone your ungentlemanly and most unseemly behavior—for my own ends alone, if you will have it so; and do you, for your ends, keep quiet my claim upon you; only remember that it is certain you must sooner or later discharge it. There, you may go, Mr. Gogharty, but without your deeds, which, I repeat, shall never again reach your hands without payment to me of my well-earned equivalent."

With this as his final deliverance the Superior, through a small door behind him, went from the room, and Mr. Gogharty was left in the presence of the satellites only. The lawyer felt it was no use to make appeal or remonstrance to these subordinates. After a glance, therefore, upon their unimpassioned and stony faces, he rose from his chair, went for his hat, gave a slight bow to his victors, departed from the Jesuit establishment, and hastened to his city lodgings, and there, alone in his sitting-room, reviewed and revolved again and again his distressful and melancholy circumstances.

"It is all due to Alick," he again said to himself, with a passionate stamp of his foot after his painful meditation. "Had it not been for him all would have been a grand success, for, as rascally Superior truly says, Montaigne was fi and cleverly caught in the Pope's trap, and Percival property was fairly won, and would hour belong to me and mine had not that sc mine—the provoking blockhead!—in a fit o surd self-sacrifice delivered his rival. Yet, again reflected, "as things turned out it rea too bad of those Jesuit sharks to hold me tc bargain. And yet, 'pon my word," he ad upon second thoughts, "I think I'll do them

"It certainly would be very awkward— awkward indeed for me—if those deeds sh be asked for; but, there, 'pon my word, likely they will never be asked for—at least ing my life," he added. "Years have pa since they were placed in my trust, and no has ever sought for as much as a look at tl It is therefore most probable that many c years shall pass before any inquiry is made them, and then, peradventure," he contin "I shall be in my grave, and shall have left confounded Jesuit and Alick to settle it betv them. And, bless me, won't that fellow priest find in Alick his match, aye, and more that."

Mr. Gogharty, notwithstanding the epithe liberally bestowed upon his son, had in his s mind a high estimate of Alick's ability an ergy. "By my word, Alick will floor him. sacerdotal swindler confessed that this would not bear the light. Alick in the twinl of an eye will see this, and, 'pon my consci will drag the whole business into the very of day unless the Jesuit surrenders him t papers. Any exposure of my conduct when in my grave Alick will feel, as I was goir say, that any exposure of my poor folly will little consequence, and so this cunning J will have no counter mine to blow up, and have to yield at discretion. Why, it will my bones shake with laughter in my gra hear of it in the other world." And in th ticipation of such a triumphant conquest the Superior's craft Mr. Gogharty became s what jocular in his lonely lodgings.

"Yes, this will be just my strategy. Le Jesuit, if he will, keep those deeds, and good may it do him. 'Tis a hundred to shall, at all events, not need them. I'll pl memorandum in my safe, however, stating they are, and under what circumstances. will come upon it when at my death he possession of my papers. And then, sure en their will be the mischief's own tiff betwee priest and the Puritan (for Alick's nothing and, as in old Noll's time, there isn't a dou which side will be the victory."

This resolve and conclusion restored Mr. harty's mind to a considerable degree of nimity; he ate a hearty supper that night—i became somewhat hilarious. He, howeve retiring to bed, slept well, and next mornir turned to his home in ——.

All things went on favorably for a time deeds in jeopardy were not inquired after Mr. Gogharty's practice was weekly increa In all probability the lawyer's expectation have been fully realized, and he would have to his grave in peace and quietness, so far as bonds were concerned, had not an event occ which Mr. Gogharty should have taken in calculation, but did not; he forgot that his might die as well as himself, and before him in such case new legal arrangements on th of the heir of his client, involving, as they monly do, a new legal agent and adviser, necessitate the forthcoming of these for documents. Such an eventuality actuall curred. Mr. Gogharty's client, whose deeds in the Superior's possession, suddenly diec Mr. Gogharty had a formal demand fror heir's lawyer to transfer them to him.

The letter he received was not only unlc for, but was as a bolt from the tranquil he and Mr. Gogharty became greatly agitated. goodness!" he exclaimed; "but this i astrous and dreadfully perplexing. W plague is life! One flatters one's self when t was going on pretty well with the hope of a little comfort and quietness, and, hang it, in an hour's time there is nothing but a sea of troubles. Whatever shall I do about these demanded papers? This brother limb of the law that writes to me is as crafty and suspicious as a fox, and I shall never be able to put him off or bamboozle him. Would that this sudden death had come to me and not to my client." Scarcely had he uttered the words, however, when a voice within seemed to echo, "Sudden death!" and in a lower tone, like a second reverberation, again was heard within, "Sudden death!" and then conscience added, "What would that be to you, Gogharty, but sudden ruin?" "Alas!" cried the wretched man, "what a strait is mine! It looks like ruin here or ruin beyond, and which to choose I wot not."

In moody silence the lawyer sat long in his private room unable to arrive at any possible course of action. But at last the reflection came to him, "You postponed in your thoughts this difficulty as one to be encountered and met by Alick. Why not tell him of the whole business at once? You believe in his energy and intelligence; see then if he can devise any solution of this difficult problem. It is true you may expect his indignant reproof for your breach of trust. But then you can retaliate upon him, since your dilemma springs from his doing." Consoling himself with this prospect and intention of reprisal, the lawyer wrote to Alick, who was in Dublin, intimating that he greatly wished to see him.

Alick was pleased to get this letter: its general tone was warmer than his father had now for a long time used toward him; and yet his heart, too, a little misgave him, for he feared its warmth was due to some trouble which had overtaken his father, of his own seeking, from which he wanted him, Alick, to extricate him. Nor was the surmise, as we know, unfounded.

We shall not relate the details of the interview between Mr. Gogharty and Alick; neither shall we describe Alick's sorrowful indignation and remonstrance at his father's dishonorable act in pledging the bonds, nor Mr. Gogharty's mingled expressions of penitence and recrimination. We shall only state that, upon his father's revelation of the whole case, Alick resolved to proceed to —— at once, and taking a legal friend—a Christian brother—with him, to see the head of the Jesuit household.

(To be Continued.)

MR. MOODY'S INTERVIEW WITH A SWEARER.

His Carriage and Cigar—Tears in his Eyes—The Character he had Won—"What do you Want?"—Trying to Give up the Habit—That Sin Goes with the Others—Trembling on the Platform—An Elder in the Church.

THE following incident was related by Mr. Moody in the course of a recent address to young men at St Louis: One evening a man drove up to the building where our meetings were held. He had a fine looking carriage, and he had his hat on one side of his head and a cigar in his mouth, and he acted as if he didn't want any one to know that he was attending the meetings; and in a careless way he was assuming that he didn't care particularly what was going on; but I noticed that he was listening, and I noticed that the tears stood in his eyes. He was trying to conceal it. You know some men act very strange. They don't want you to know that they are affected, and they put up their hands to their faces, and all that. It is not manly for some men to shed tears for sin. It is manly to do a great many mean and contemptible things, but for a man to shed a tear over his sins. I said to some of the friends, after the meeting was over, "Who is that man that drove up in a carriage?" "Well, that is Mr. P——." "Is he a Christian man?" "A Christian man! I will venture to say there is not a man within a hundred miles that has done the damage to the church that that man has done." "Well, how is that?" "Well, he is one of the wealthiest men in this part of the country, and he is a man of great influence, but one of the most profane men, and one of the most vulgar and obscene talking men that is in the community."

IT IS NOT MANLY

"Well," I said, "he is interested."

"No," was the reply, "he is not. If you had heard what he said about you down street today, and the fun he has been making of you and the meetings, you wouldn't think he was interested."

"Well," I said, "you can't tell anything from that. Some men, when the Spirit of God wakes them up, talk right opposite to what they feel. It is no sign, and I will go up to his house and see him, if you will tell me where he lives." They said: "You had better not go. He will only curse you."

"That will not hurt me. It will hurt him more than me. He has not power to curse me."

I went up to the man's house and I met him coming out of the gate of his yard. I said, "I believe this is Mr. P——."

The man straightened up. "Yes, sir; that is my name. What do you want?"

"Well, I would like to ask you a question, if you have no objection."

"What is it, sir?"

"Well, I am told that you have been blessed above every man in this county. That God has given you great wealth, and I am told that He has given you a beautiful wife and a beautiful family of children, and I am told that He has given you good health, and they tell me all that He has ever received in return from you has been curses and blasphemy, and I would just like to ask you why you treat your Lord in that way?"

Well, the man's countenance fell. "Come in," said he, and the tears began to trickle down his cheeks. He couldn't conceal them then. I went into his drawing-room and took a seat on the sofa, and the man said: "How can I help it? If I have tried it once I have tried a thousand times to stop swearing, and I can't do it. I curse my wife, and I believe I love her. I have got, as you say, a lovely family of children, and as I sit at the table, and before I know it, I am cursing them. I feel ashamed of myself. I confess that I am a bad man, but I can't help it. I have tried and tried and am trying, but I am

GROWING WORSE ALL THE TIME."

"Well," I said, "I know all about it: I have been there."

"What," said he, "did you ever swear?"

"Yes."

"Well," says he, "how did you get rid of it; how did you ever stop?" I said, "I never stopped; it stopped itself."

"Why, how is that?"

"Well, one night I let the Lord Jesus Christ come into this heart of mine, and I have never had any desire to swear since."

"Is that so?"

"Yes, sir; that is so."

"It don't seem possible that you ever swore."

"Well, it don't to me. I am a stranger almost to myself. I wonder at myself. It don't seem possible." And then I went on and told him how he could be saved.

"Well," says he, "I don't understand that."

"No," I said, "but the Lord will reveal it to you if you really want to get the victory over sin, if you want to get the victory over profanity and over every other sin; for if God is going to save you it must be thorough work, not only to break off one sin, but all sin. But God lays the ax right at the root of the tree. He don't come to save a man from one sin, but from all sin. And when God works He makes thorough work of it." Well, I preached Christ to him, and after a while I said: "Let us get down here and pray." And after I had prayed I said:

"NOW, YOU PRAY."

"Me pray?" said he, "why, that would be downright blasphemy. I don't want to add sin to sin. Me pray? That would be mockery."

"Why," said I, "don't you want God to forgive you? Don't you want God to have mercy upon you?"

"Yes," says he, "I do."

Said I, "That is honest. Now tell God what you want and ask Him to have mercy upon you." After I had prayed the poor fellow began to pray, "God be merciful to me a great sinner," and when I got up to leave, he said, "Now what shall I do?" "Go right down to the church of God and let these people know that you have made up your mind to be a child of God—to be a Christian." "Why," said he, "go to church? Oh, I can't do that? Why, what would people say?" "Oh," said I, "you have got to trample that under your feet. Never mind what they say. Do right because it is right."

There may be imperfections in the church, but the longer I live the more I am convinced that the best people in this world are in the church after all. Men may say all the

MEAN AND CUTTING THINGS

they have a mind to against the church, but if I wanted to find a holy man in St. Louis I would find him in some church; if I wanted to find a godly sainted woman I would find her in some church. Men are under the power of the devil when they are attacking the church and saying that the church is not the purest institution under heaven. To be sure it is not perfect, but if you want to find holy, godly men you will find them in the church.

And so I said, "Go right down there; take your stand among God's people." "Why," says he, "I'm not fit." "Well," says I, "God will make you fit. Go right into the church and tell them you want them to pray for you and to be known as on the Lord's side." And the next morning at the prayer-meeting Mr. P. was there. I was sitting in front of him, and when he got up he put his hand on the settee that I was sitting upon, and he trembled; I knew the man was trembling; and there was a hush came upon that audience.

It had been years and years since that man had been seen in the church unless at some funeral. There are some people who never go to church except to funerals. He was like Saul among the prophets, and when he rose every one wondered what he had to say. He says, "I want you to pray for me; I want to be a Christian, and if God can save a poor sinner like me I want to be saved." And we did pray for him, and that man is an elder in that same church to-day. He didn't have to stop swearing; it stopped itself.

I tell you if you take Jesus Christ into your heart and give Him full possession of it, those sins that have been pulling you down, those sins that have been marring your life and making it dark and bitter will flee away. That is the way to drive away darkness—to let the light in. Christ is the light of the world, and if you will let Him into that dark heart of yours to-day just let Him save you in His own way and give up trying to save yourself in your own way—if you will just surrender yourself unreservedly to Him, He will save you.

The Irish Famine.—The Correspondent of the New York Tribune in Ireland telegraphed on February 21st, "The distress is greater than has been represented in America. It is increasing rapidly, and spreading in many directions. Fever is breaking out in numerous districts, the physicians say it is produced by want. Pathetic accounts of nakedness and extreme want come from Arran Island, Valentia, and other isles on the west coast. Similar stories come from the Counties of Cavan, Fermanagh, Leitrim, Limerick, Monaghan, and Roscommon. A Dublin paper publishes a cable dispatch saying that American contributions will now probably cease, because it is reported from Dublin that the fund there is sufficient to prevent further suffering. No such fund exists in Dublin, and unless liberal contributions continue, that probably hundreds, and possibly thousands of families will perish."

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

THE aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50 per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to MR. BENJAMIN AITKEN, 63 Bible House, New York. The paper may also be obtained weekly from all newsdealers in the United States and Canada.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of specimen copies to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

SUBSCRIBERS frequently write to us for single copies of the CHRISTIAN HERALD. We always endeavor to oblige them, but single and occasional copies can more easily be obtained from a newsdealer. Sometimes we receive complaints that the CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer. Such complaints are promptly attended to, when made to us; but in all cases we desire that our friends will give the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

LAST week's edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, March 10th, at 12.00 M., at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

A Decision of the Supreme Court of the United States was pronounced March 8th on the subject of the Election laws comprising the questions which agitated the last regular session of Congress and made the extra session necessary. The decision sustains completely the constitutionality of the Election laws. It declares the power of Congress to regulate the election of Representatives in all particulars in which they may require regulation; to do so by explicit and exclusive enactment, or by the partial adoption of the regulations made by the States; to provide for the appointment of Federal officers to attend to these elections, and of Marshals and Deputy-Marshals to see to their enforcement, and it declares the power of Congress to provide for the punishment of any person who shall violate the regulations thus made by Congress or taken from State authority. The two Democratic judges of the court dissent from the judgment. Thus all the Republican judges are on one side and the Democratic judges on the other.

A Committee of the House of Representatiyes has received from M. Lesseps an explanation of the details of his interoceanic canal scheme, and a message on the same subject has been sent by the President to Congress, accompanied by the State correspondence. The President's message is clear and explicit as to the position the United States Government occupies in reference to the canal. He declares that the United States cannot consent to the control of such a canal by any European Power, or by any combination of European Powers. He points out that any promise European Powers might make to protect the canal would be worthless, inasmuch as no such power could interfere to protect the interests of a canal without taking steps upon American soil which the United States would regard as "wholly inadmissible." The President expresses his conviction that the interests of the canal will not suffer by this declaration, and that the controlling influence of the United States over it "will be found not only compatible with, but promotive of, the widest and most permanent advantage to commerce and civilization."

It is understood that Congress is fully in accord with the President on the subject. Mr. Evarts also presented a report in which it was shown that the Government was bound by the treaties executed in former years to protect the isthmus, and could not therefore permit the interference of any European Power.

The position of Great Britain, however, will, it is thought, be antagonistic, and the London Standard, an organ of the British Government, has declared that as the ships of Great Britain will form the bulk of the traffic through the canal, it will be necessary for that country to possess permanent control.

A Reign of Terror in San Francisco, which a few days ago seemed imminent, has, it is hoped, been averted. The followers of Denis Kearney, the sand-lots agitator, passed resolutions threatening that if they were interfered with in their attack on Chinatown they would inflict "a punishment so swift and terrible that the reader of history would shudder at the record." A declaration so violent was regarded by the citizens as a menace too dangerous to be disregarded; a committee of two hundred was formed, and all citizens on the side of law and order were invited to enroll themselves as a protective force. The large number of citizens who came forward appears to have surprised the sand-lots party, and more moderate language has been used since. Denis Kearney has been arrested on a charge of using violent and obscene language, and will be tried for the offence. Altogether a more hopeful state of affairs exists, but the large purchases of fire-arms for the city, and the number of unemployed laborers wandering about the streets, indicate that the social atmosphere is in a highly explosive and dangerous condition.

The Officers of the Salvation Army Detailed for service in America arrived in New York March 10th. An account of their voyage, furnished us by Mr. Railton, will be found on another page. Their first indoor service was held on Sunday evening last at Harry Hill's Music Hall in Houston Street, New York. In selecting this notorious place Mr. Railton has acted on the principle of the Army in England, that where vice and profligacy are most rampant there the Salvation Army is most needed. The hall was crowded with persons who had the appearance of being its habitual frequenters, and though the spectacle of the Salvation Army in uniform on the stage must have been a novel one to them, they gave the proceedings their quiet and respectful attention. Mr. Railton announced that the Army would be at Hudson River Mission Hall, in Ninth Avenue, every night this week. Two of the officers have gone to Philadelphia to commence work in that city.

The Montana, an Ocean Steamer of the Guion Line, which left New York March 2d, has been wrecked on the coast of Wales. The steamer, next to the Arizona, is the largest and best-built ship of that line. She arrived safely at Queenstown March 12th, and having landed some passengers and the bulk of the mails, proceeded on her voyage to Liverpool. Early on the morning of the next day a dense fog prevailed, and the speed was reduced. About 3.30 A.M. the passengers and crew were alarmed by a sudden shock and a heavy grating sound. The vessel had struck on the rocks at Church Bay. The captain was on the bridge, and he instructed the doctor, who ran on deck at the first alarm, to arouse the passengers. The boats were at once got out. There was no confusion, and no panic, the captain telling the passengers that if they quietly obeyed orders all would be right. Six females, with the third officer and a pilot, were placed in one boat, and six males in another with the fourth officer. These were pulled to Holyhead. In the meantime guns were fired and blue lights burned, showing the locality of the disaster. A subsequent telegram announced the safe arrival of all the passengers at Liverpool. The captain and crew remained on the vessel, the forward compartments of which are full of water. She is afloat aft, but there is not much prospect of saving her.

How the Miserable Indian Wars Have arisen may be learned from an incident which occurred in a parley between United States officers and the chiefs of the Modoc Tribe. An order had come from the Government to remove these Indians to the Klamath Reservation, peaceably or forcibly. The peace trial failed, and suddenly soldiers surrounded the Modoc camp. The Indians snatched their arms, but as Major Jackson, commanding the United States troops, wished for no bloodshed, a parley was had, and the Indian chief advised his people to lay down their arms. They all did so except one man, who had seen his father killed by a mob of white men, twenty years before, while going to warn some other white people of danger from another tribe of hostile Indians. A lieutenant was ordered to disarm this Indian. He, with oaths and insulting epithets, ordered him to lay down his arms. The Indian offered to do so if decently addressed, affirming that "he was not a dog." The officer drew his revolver instead, both fired at the same instant, and both fell dead. An Indian war followed, which cost the Government about two hundred lives and $3,000,000.

Dr. Stephen H. Tyng, Sr., Preached a Thanksgiving sermon on March 7th, on the occasion of his attaining his eightieth year. His theme was the continual necessity of looking heavenward, and he praised God for having given him so many opportunities of preaching that necessity. Though his venerable face shows the marks of his advanced years, his voice and the enthusiastic manner which characterized his youthful labors are unchanged. A portrait of this venerable servant of Christ, with a sketch of his life, appeared in the CHRISTIAN HERALD of February 27th, 1879.

The Delegates from America to the Great Raikes Sunday-school Centenary, to be held in London next June, have been appointed to represent the M. E. Sunday-school Union. They are General Clinton B. Fisk and Dr. W. H. De Puy. The programme comprises a reception of foreign delegates at 56 Old Bailey; a choral service in St. Paul's Cathedral; a gathering of teachers and scholars at the Crystal Palace; concert by the great orchestra, singing on the terraces, etc.; a great meeting in Exeter Hall; and a sermon, on July 2d, by the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, and communion service, at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. On Saturday, July 3d, the Raikes Memorial Statue on the Thames embankment will be unveiled. Prayer should be offered that the convention may be blessed to the stirring up of those interested in Sunday-school work to a fresh dedication of themselves and renewed exertion in this great cause.

Irish Famine Relief Fund.—Contributions received up to Saturday, March 13th:

Mrs. M. Jackson, Columbus, Miss.	$1 0
Friends in Hanover, Mich.	10 7
T. D. Weld, La Grange, Ark.	5 0
W. P. Weld, " "	2 0
W. T. Beaty, " "	1 0
J. H. Lounsbery, " "	1 0
W. Thomas, " "	1 0
E. P. Burrows, " "	5
W. W. Hickey, " "	5
Ben. Paterson, " "	2
Greenwood Church, Rev. R. A. Sublett, Greenwood, Tex.	25 0
A Friend, Bethel Spring, Tenn.	2 0
Forwarded to N. Y. Herald	$50 0

The Debt on Dr. Talmage's Church.—We have much pleasure in acknowledging the following contributions forwarded to the Christian Heral in response to Dr. Talmage's appeal:

Mrs. W. J. Valentine, N. Y. City	$1 0
F. A. S. Storer, Boston, Mass.	1 0
Mrs. Catharine G. Love, Providence, R. I.	1 0
E. L. Kennedy, Bloomsbury, N. J.	1 0
L. S. Sterrit, Newburg, N. Y.	2 0
J. S. W. Sherman, Boston, Mass.	1 0
	$7 0

A Source of Income Cut Off.—The Demand that "the Chinese must go" is so loud and often repeated in California that many inquiries have been made as to the cause of the antipathy to the race. A clew to one reason for the anti-Chinese agitation is furnished by a correspondent of the Independent. A San Francisco lady said to him, "The Chinese are most valuable domestic servants. Before they came we were obliged to employ Irish girls, who charged us from $25 to $45 a month. The real secret of this outcry against the Chinese is that the Catholic Church can no longer levy a tax on every Protestant family of five dollars a month, which used to be added to the Irish girls' wages; and the Irish girls openly avowed it." No wonder the priests object to the introduction of Chinese labor.

The Sunday Evening Concert has been Introduced at Toronto by the lessee of the Royal Opera House. He asserts that his object is to afford recreation for those hard-worked persons who are unable to attend performances on other evenings. The concerts are described as a jumble of sacred, sentimental, and comic music. The Canadian authorities consider that the lessee's philanthropic enterprise is not a disinterested one, and that it is besides an infringement of the law. Legal proceedings have been commenced against him, which the Christian citizens pray may result in the wicked innovation being summarily put down.

The Largest Mortgage in the World has been foreclosed. A Kansas journal announces that this month a tract of land fifty-one miles by thirty-eight in extent, lying in Colorado, and known as the Maxwell land grant, is to be sold on mortgage foreclosure. This sale will be the largest on a foreclosure ever made in the world. The mortgage calls for $5,000,000. The sale will no doubt fire the ambition of capitalists to possess so vast an estate, and the purchaser will be regarded as an enviable man; but there are many persons unknown to fame, whom the world despises or pities, whose possessions exceed even that princely holding. We are told of certain men poor in this world's goods, that all things are theirs (1 Cor. 3:21).

Thirty Thousand Prayers Answered.—George Muller, of the Bristol Orphanage, England, in the course of an address at Chicago last week replied to the question, "Why our prayers are not all answered." He said the question resolved itself into three points of consideration: First, Do I ask for things which are according to the Word of God? Secondly, Do I ask in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ? And, thirdly, Do I believe in the willingness of God to answer the prayer? Even suppose all three points to be settled, it still behooved them to await God's pleasure in answering the prayer. There was no promise from God that He would answer in a given time." As for himself, he had received 30,000 answers to prayer in the same day in which he had made his supplication, but, on the other hand he had to wait often weeks and months and years before the blessing came in response. In some instances he had waited for twenty years and in one case he had prayed for thirty-six years, and the blessing asked for had not yet arrived. He did not, however, have any doubt of its coming.

A Dispute over a Calf, which has for some time produced considerable unpleasantness between two deacons of a church in Illinois, has recently been settled by their minister. The deacons had turned their cattle loose into a pasture, and among them were two calves so much alike as to be undistinguishable even by their owners. One calf belonged to one deacon and one to the other, but the similarity was not important so long as both calves were there; but some thief stole one of the calves and then both men claimed the other. The dispute ran so high that at length a lawsuit was threatened, but eventually it was agreed to submit the question to the arbitration of the minister, both deacons promising to abide by his decision. Meanwhile the calf had been sold for $16, and the question was who should have the money. The minister advised them to put the $16 which the calf had sold for into the missionary treasury, and assured them that if they had any doubt, in their minds as to which of them it was who was giving the money, the Lord knew all about it, and He would settle it justly and equitably. The deacons accepted this mode of settlement, and the Board of Missions entered the donation as "calf money."

Fall of a Snow Avalanche in Nevada.—Eight men were passing on foot through a narrow, deep cañon in Nevada, when they saw an immense bank of snow detach itself from the precipitous side and slide rapidly down toward them. Three of them escaped injury by running, two took refuge behind stumps, and were subsequently rescued alive, and three were killed by burial under tons of snow. It is almost impossible to realize what must have been the sensations of those eight men when they perceived the danger threatening them. However light-hearted they may have been before, the sight of that descending mass must have banished every thought but that of self-preservation. They did not notice the signs of danger till they saw the avalanche moving, and so it will be with many in the day of which we are warned (1 Thess. 5:3), when men will say, "Peace and safety until sudden destruction come upon them." In that day no exertion will deliver. Happy are they whom the Lord at His coming finds watching. (Luke 12:37.)

An Entire Congregation Organized into a Temperance Society.—Rev. Alfred Corn, writing from High-Tower, Ga., to the Gainesville Eagle, says: "At the close of preaching last Sabbath at the High-Tower Baptist Church I proposed to the entire congregation to organize themselves into a temperance society, which was done by a unanimous vote save one, a stranger, who, I learned, sanctioned the measure afterward. The old Washingtonian pledge was adopted in due form." The evils of the drink traffic are brought home to the church daily in startling form. They appeal to all those who have a sincere desire for the welfare of their fellows to take a decided stand in this matter and to show by example and precept that they do not sanction the habit of drinking intoxicating liquors in any way. This Georgia congregation sets an example which is worthy of imitation.

Sanitary Reforms are Reported to be in active progress at Memphis, and the Health Board, which possesses more power than heretofore, hopes to have them completed before the hot weather comes. All the rotten wood pavement, which is believed to hold the germs of yellow fever, is being replaced by stone, and a new system of sewerage has been introduced, which it is hoped will do much to render the city a healthy locality.

The Second Volume of the Christian Herald, comprising Nos. 37 to 62, (July to Dec. 1879) may be had, elegantly bound in cloth, at No. 63 Bible House, New York. Price $1.75.

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London) for March may be had at the office of the CHRISTIAN HERALD. Price six cents.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works.—We have much pleasure in announcing that another large consignment of volumes by this eminent author and preacher has just been received. They are now on sale at the office of the CHRISTIAN HERALD, No. 63 Bible House, New York, and are offered at prices so low as to bring them within the reach of every one. Twelve Sermons on various subjects, with photograph of Mr. Spurgeon, price 35 cents. John Ploughman's Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents; in cloth, 60 cents. The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, a volume of fifty sermons, $2.50. The Treasury of David, a homiletical exposition of the book of Psalms, five vols., as far as Psa. 118, $3 per vol. Spurgeon's Birthday Book. This popular gift-book contains a suitable passage selected from Mr. Spurgeon's writings for every day in the year, with a blank space opposite for autographs. The signatures of Mr. and Mrs. Spurgeon appear at their respective birthdays. The book is elegantly bound, and the price is 75 cents. Remittances should accompany orders.

YOUR PERSONAL SALVATION.

A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls. Of which salvation the prophet shave enquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you . . . . which things the angels desire to look into."—1 PETER 1:9–12.

"Let thy mercies come also unto me, O Lord, even thy salvation, according to thy word."—PSALM 119:41.

A Change of Messengers but not a New Salvation—I. The Salvation Commended—1. It is a Salvation of Grace—A Blessed Tautology—2. It is by Faith—3. It has Engrossed the Thoughts of the Prophets—4. The Apostles Testified to it—5. The Angels Desire to Look into it—6. Christ its Substance—7. The Holy Spirit its Witness—II. The Prayer Recommended—1. It is a Gracious Prayer—2. Supported by Gracious Arguments—3. It will be Answered.

THESE two texts will be to me as a bow and a sword: the first for shooting the arrows of truth, and the second for close quarters in dealing with individual consciences. You will see the reason for the pair of texts as we proceed. May the Holy Spirit make use of both according to His own mind.

Last Sabbath-day I discoursed upon the God of salvation: this morning our principal object is to speak of that salvation itself. I then tried to show that God is always the same, and that the God of the Old Testament, unto whom belongeth the issues from death, is the God of our salvation still. My first text runs upon the same line, for it teaches us that the prophets of old, who spoke by the power of the Holy Spirit, testified concerning the same salvation which has been reported to us by the apostles as actually accomplished.

There has been no new salvation; there has been a change in the messengers, but they have all spoken of one thing; and, though their tidings have been more clearly understood in these latter days, the substance of the good news is stiil the same. The Old Testament and the New are one, inspired by the same Spirit, and filled with the same subject, namely, the one promised Messiah. The prophets foretold what the apostles reported. The seers looked forward, and the evangelists look backward: their eyes meet at one place; they see eye to eye, and both behold the cross.

I shall aim this morning at commending the salvation of God to those of you who possess it, that you may be the more grateful for your choice inheritance; and still more shall I labor to commend it to those who possess it not, that having some idea of the greatness of its value they may be stirred up to seek it for themselves. Ah, my unsaved hearers, how great is your loss in missing the salvation of God! "How shall you escape if you neglect so great salvation?" Oh, that you might be rescued from such folly!

Perhaps God, the Holy Spirit will show you the preciousness of this salvation, and then you will no longer neglect, despise, or refuse it, but will offer the prayer which I have selected as a sort of second text, and entreat the Lord to let His mercies come to you, even His salvation. The prayer may be helpful in enabling you to take with you words and turn unto the Lord. God grant it may be so!

I. First, I shall in much simplicity, with a vehement desire for the immediate conviction and salvation of my hearers, try to commend the salvation of God by opening up what Peter has said in the verses before us.

1. Let me urge you to give earnest heed to the salvation of God, because

IT IS A SALVATION OF GRACE.

The tenth verse says, "Of which salvation the prophets have enquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you." Salvation is altogether of grace, grace which comes from God in His mercy to man in his helplessness. The Gospel does not come to you asking something of you, but its hands are laden with gifts more precious than gold, which it freely bestows upon guilty men. It comes to us, not as a reward for the obedient and deserving, but as a merciful boon for the disobedient and undeserving. It treats with us, not upon the ground of justice, but upon terms of pure mercy. It asks no price and exacts no purchase; it comes as a benefactor, not as a judge.

In the Gospel God giveth liberally and upbraideth not. We are accustomed not only to say "grace," but "free grace." It has been remarked that this is a tautology. So it is, but it is a blessed one, for it makes the meaning doubly clear and leaves no room for mistake. Since it is evidently objectionable to those who dislike the doctrine intended, it is manifestly forcible, and therefore we will keep to it. We feel no compunction in ringing such a silver bell twice over—grace, free grace. Lest any should imagine that grace can be otherwise than free, we shall continue to say, not only grace, but free grace, so long as we preach.

Only give intimation that goods are to be had gratis, and your shop will be besieged with customers. Those who want us to notice their wares are often crafty enough to put at the head of their advertisement what is not true, "To be given away:" but salvation's grand advertisement is true; salvation is everything for nothing: pardon free, Christ free, heaven free. "Come, buy wine and milk without money and without price." Our good Physician has none but gratis patients.

Since the boons which the God of all grace grants to sinful men are beyond all price, He does not barter and chaffer with them, but makes His blessings free as air. I am sure that if you feel yourselves to be guilty, the very idea of being saved by grace will have a charm for you. To a thirsty man the sound of a rippling stream is music, and to a convinced conscience free pardon is as rivers of water in the wilderness. Oh, that all the world would listen when we have such a message to tell.

2. Again, your closest attention may well be asked to the salvation of God when you are told in the text that

IT IS BY FAITH.

"Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls." Salvation is not obtained by penances, painful and humiliating; nor by despondency and despair; nor by any effort, mental or spiritual, involving a purchase by labor and pain; but entirely and alone by faith, or trust, in the Lord Jesus.

Now it is singularly foolish that men should cavil at this which ought to please them. The very simplicity of faith they cavil at. What, shall it be so, that the Gospel shall be regarded as too easy a thing? Will men quarrel with mercy for being too generous to them? If there be a condition, is it wisdom on our part to contend with God, because that condition seems to be too slight? What would you have for a condition? Would you have it proclaimed that men must be saved by works? Which among you would then be saved? Your works are imperfect and full of evil. The law cannot justify you, it condemns you. As long as you are under the law, hath not the Holy Spirit declared that you are under the curse? Ought ye not, ye sons of men, to bless God that salvation is of faith that it might be by grace, and that it might be possible to you, and sure to all the seed?

3. The Gospel of salvation ought to be regarded by you, for it has engrossed the thoughts of prophets. The text says, "Of which salvation the prophets have enquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you." Those great men, the choice spirits of the ages which they adorned, were delighted to preach of this salvation as a blessing to be hereafter revealed. They did not themselves altogether understand what they were called to reveal, for the Holy Spirit often carried them beyond themselves and made them utter more than they understood. The inspiration of the Bible is verbal inspiration. In some cases it must have been only verbal; in every case it must have been mainly so.

The human mind is not able to understand and to express all the thoughts of God, they are too sublime; and therefore God dictated to the prophets the very language which they should deliver—language of which they themselves could not see the far-reaching meaning. They rejoiced in the testimony of the Spirit within them, but they were not free from the necessity to search, and to search diligently if they would for themselves derive benefit from the divine revelation. I know not how this is, but the fact is clearly stated in the text, and must be true.

Oh, my hearers, how diligently you ought to search the Scriptures and listen to the saving word! If men that had the Holy Ghost, and were called "seers," nevertheless searched into the meaning of the word which they themselves spoke, what ought such poor things as we are to do in order to understand the Gospel? It should be our delight to read, mark, learn and inwardly digest the doctrines of grace. Surely it must be a crime of crimes to be living in utter neglect of a salvation which gained the attentive mind of Daniel, and Isaiah, and Ezekiel.

4. Furthermore, when prophecy had ceased, the Holy Spirit came upon another set of men of whom our text speaks. Peter says of these things that they "are now reported unto you by them that have preached the Gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven." The apostles followed the prophets in testifying to this salvation, and with the apostles there was an honorable fellowship of earnest evangelists and preachers.

I will not stay to point out to you the admirable character of these men, but I would beg you to observe that, having seen Christ Jesus for themselves personally, they were not deceived. Many of them had eaten and drank with Him: all the apostles had done so: they had been with Him in familiar intercourse, and they were resolute in bearing witness that they had seen Him after He had risen from the dead. These men spake with the accent of conviction. If they were duped, there certainly never was another instance of such persons, and so many of them, being so utterly deluded. They continued throughout all their lives to bear hardships and to endure reproaches for the sake of bearing witness to what they had seen and heard, and all the apostles but one died a martyr's death rather than allow the slightest suspicion to be cast upon the truth of their report.

These noble bearers of glad tidings continued to report this salvation till they had finished their missions and their lives, and therefore I feel that for us in these times to trifle with God's Word, and give a deaf ear to the invitations of the Gospel, is an insult to their honored memories. You martyr them a second time by contemptuously neglecting what they died to hand to you. From the dead they bear witness against you, and when they rise again they will sit with their Lord to judge you.

5. Nor have we merely prophets and apostles looking on with wonder, but our text says, "Which things the angels desire to look into." We know very little of these heavenly beings: we know, however, that they are pure spirits, and that the elect angels have not fallen into sin. These beings are not concerned in the atonement of Christ so far as it is a ransom for sin, seeing they have never transgressed: they may, however, derive some advantage from His death, but of that we cannot now speak particularly.

They take such an interest in us, their fellow-creatures, that they have an intense wish to know all the mysteries of our salvation. They were pictured, you know, upon the ark of the covenant, as standing upon the mercy-seat, and looking down upon it with steady gaze. Perhaps Peter was thinking of this holy imagery. They stand intently gazing into the marvel of Propitiation by blood. Can you quite see the beauty of this spectacle? If we knew that a door was opened in heaven, would not men be anxious to look in and see heaven's wonders; but the case is here reversed, for we see a window opened toward this fallen world, and heavenly beings looking down upon the earth, as if heaven itself had no such object of attraction as Christ His salvation. Watts sang not amiss when gave us the verse—

> "Archangels leave their high abode
> To learn new mysteries here, and tell
> The love of our descending God,
> The glories of Immanuel."

Methinks, if I saw an angel intently ga upon any object, if I were a passer-by, I sh stop and look too. Have you never noticed ir streets that if one person stands still and l up, or is occupied with gazing into a shop dow, others become curious and look also would enlist that faculty of curiosity whic within every man, and prompt you to search the angels as they pry into the underlying m ing of the fact and doctrine of atonement? stand at the cross-foot ravished, astounded: all heaven to this day has never ceased its am ment at the dying Son of God, made sin for and will none of you spare an hour to look way and see your best Friend?

6. We have already gone a long way with text, rising step by step. We have stood w angels gaze; now behold another wonder rise beyond them to

THE ANGELS' MASTER.

Christ is the substance of this salvation. what saith the text? The prophets spake forehand of the sufferings of Christ and the that should follow." Ah, there is the point. save men Jesus suffered. The manhood an Godhead of Christ endured anguish incon able.

All through His life our Lord was "a m sorrows and acquainted with grief." His the bravest heart that ever lived, and the ge spirit that ever breathed, but the most cru and downtrodden. He went from one e our heavens to the other like a cloud of pathy, dropping showers of blessing. All trials of His people He carried in His heart all their sins pressed heavily upon His soul: daily burden of care for all His people was as none can sympathize with to the full, though like Him they have kept the flock of

I have sometimes had intense sympathy Moses—I hope I am not egotistical in comp small things with great—when he cried, "W fore hast thou afflicted thy servant? and w fore have I not found favor in thy sight, thou layest the burden of all this people me? Have I conceived all this people? h begotten them that thou shouldst say unt Carry them in thy bosom, as a nursing f beareth the sucking child, unto the land thou swarest unto their fathers? I am no to bear all this people alone, because it i heavy for me." But what was the care o tribes in the wilderness on Moses' heart com with the myriads on myriads that lay the heart of Christ, a perpetual burden t spirit?

The sufferings of His life must never b gotten, but they were consummated by agonies of His death. There was never s death. Physically, it was equal in pain t sufferings of any of the martyrs; but its p arity of excessive grief did not lie in His b sufferings; His soul-sufferings were the s His sufferings. Martyrs are sustained by presence of their God, but Jesus cried, "My my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" cry hever came up from the stakes of S field, or from the agonies of the Spanish da-fe, for God was with His witnesses: b was not with Christ. Here was the dep His woe.

Now, I pray you, if you will manifest sign of thought and softness, remember t the Son of God became a man that He suffer to the death for men, it is hard tha should turn deaf ears to the salvation whic accomplished. I hear from His cross Hi complaint, "Is it nothing to you, all that y by? Behold, and see if there was ever s like unto my sorrow, which is done unto Oh, if you are born of woman, and have a at has any flesh about it, think well of the sal- tion, " the grace which is brought unto you," the sufferings of the Son of God.

7. One other step remains. It cannot be gher; it is on the same level, and I beseech u to stand upon it and think a while, you that ve thought so little of yourselves and of your od. It is this. The Holy Ghost is the witness all this. It was the Holy Ghost that spake in e prophets; it was the Holy Ghost who was th those who reported the Gospel at the first; is the same Holy Spirit who every day bears tness to Christ.

Do you not know that we have miracles in the ristian church still? Scoffers come to us and y, " Work a miracle, and we will believe you." e do work these miracles every day. Had you en present at a meeting held here last month u would have heard something not far short of e hundred persons one after another assert at by the preaching of the Gospel in this place ely their lives have been completely changed. the case of some of these the change is very vious to all persons acquainted with them. ow was this great change achieved? By the ly Spirit through the Gospel of your salva- n.

I have seen moral miracles quite as marvellous their line as the healing of a leper or the sing of the dead. This is the witness of the ly Ghost which He continues to bear in the urch, and by that witness I entreat you to stop d think of the blessed salvation which can rk the same miracle in you.

I. So far have I commended my Lord's salva- n, and now I would desire you, with all this your own minds, to turn to the prayer in the e hundred and nineteenth Psalm: " Let thy rcies come also unto me, O Lord, even thy vation according to thy word." Use the yer with this intent: Lord, I have been ring what prophets and apostles and angels nk of Thy salvation, what Thy Son and what y Spirit think of it; now let me humbly say at I think of it: O that it were mine! O that would come to me! This, then, is my second d. I would recommend the prayer of the lmist.

. I will say about it, first, that it is in itself

A VERY GRACIOUS PRAYER,

it is offered on right grounds. " Let thy cies come also unto me." There is no mention merit or desert. His entreaty is for mercy y. He pleads guilty, and throws himself n the prerogative of the King, who can par- offenders. Are you willing, my dear hearer, who have never sought the Saviour, are you ling at this moment to stand on that ground, to ask for salvation as the result of mercy? shall have it on such terms, but you can er be saved until you will own that you are lty and submit to justice.

t is a gracious prayer, because it asks for the nt thing: " even Thy salvation," not a salva- of my own invention, but " Thy salvation." 's salvation is one in which His divine sov- gnty is revealed, and that sovereignty must accepted and adored. Do not dispute against 's salvation, but accept it in its entirety, just t is revealed.

eceive the salvation which the Lord planned ternity, which He wrought out on Calvary, which He applies to the heart by the Holy rit. You need salvation from sinning as well salvation from hell, and that the Lord will you. You want salvation from self to God, that, too, He will bestow. Ask for all that Lord intends by His salvation and includes it. " Let thy mercies come also unto me, Thy salvation."

ou see, dear brethren, that the prayer is put he right form, for it is added, " Even Thy sal- on according to Thy word." He wishes to be ed in the manner which the Lord has ap- nted. Dear hearer, where are you? Are you den away in the foggy corners? I wish I could a hold of your hand and speak as a brother ou You do not want God to go out of the of His word to save you: do you? You are willing to be saved in the scriptural way, the Bible way.

People nowadays will do anything but keep to the Word of God, they will follow any book but the Bible. Now, do pray the Lord to give you the salvation of the Bible in the Bible's own way. Lord, if Thy Word says I must repent, give me Thy salvation, and cause me to repent; if Thy Word says that I must confess my sin, give me Thy salvation in the confession of sin; if Thou sayest I must trust to Christ, Lord, help me now to trust Him; only grant me Thy salvation according to Thy Word.

Observe that the whole prayer is conceived and uttered in a humble spirit. It is " Let Thy salvation come also unto me." He owns his helplessness. He can not get at the mercy, he wants it to come to him. He is so wounded and so sick that he cannot put on the plaster nor reach the medicine, and therefore he seeks the Lord to bring it to him. He is like the man half dead on the road to Jericho, and needs that one should pour in the oil and wine, for he cannot help himself by reason of his spiritual lethargy and death.

2. In the second place this prayer may be SUPPORTED BY GRACIOUS ARGUMENTS.

May the Spirit of God help you to plead them. I will suppose some poor heart painfully longing to use this prayer. Here are arguments for you. Pray like this. Say, " Lord let Thy mercy come to me, for I need mercy." Do not go on the tack of trying to show that you are good, because mercy will then pass you by. To argue merit is to plead against yourself. Whenever you say, " Lord, I am as good as other people; I try to do my best," and so on, you act as foolishly as if a beggar at your door should plead that he was not very badly off, not half so needy as others, and neither scantily fed nor badly clothed.

This would be a new method of begging, and a very bad one. No, no; tell out your case in all its terrible truthfulness. Say, " O Lord, I feel that nobody in all this world needs Thy mercy more than I do: let my need plead with Thee, give me Thy salvation. I am no impostor, I am a sinner: let Thy mercy and Thy truth visit me in very deed." Your soul's wounds are not such as sham beggars make with chemicals: they are real sores: plead them with the God of all grace. Your poverty is not that which wears rags abroad and fine linen at home; you are utterly bankrupt, and this you may urge before the Lord as a reason for His mercy.

Next plead this: " Lord, thou knowest, and Thou hast made me to know somewhat of what will become of me if Thy mercy does not come to me; I must perish, I must perish miserably. I have heard the Gospel, and have neglected it: I have been a Sabbath-breaker, even when I thought I was a Sabbath-keeper; I have been a despiser of Christ, even when I stood up and sang His praises, for I sang them with a hypocrite's lips.

In every man's case there will be a conviction that there is a something so special about his guilt that there will be something very special about the mercy which can put that guilt away. Plead then the peril of your soul, and the glory which grace will gain by your rescue. Plead the greatness of the grace needed, for Christ delights to do great marvels, and His name is Wonderful. " Lord, pardon mine iniquity, for it is great. Lord, save me, for I am a nobody, and it will be a wonder indeed if Thy grace shall visit me."

Then you can put this to the good Saviour. Tell Him if He will give you His salvation, He will not be impoverished by the gift. " Lord, I am a thirsty soul; but Thou art such a river that if I drink from Thee there will be no fear of my exhausting Thy boundless supply." They put up over certain little nasty, dirty ponds by the roadside, " No dogs may be washed here." Pity the dogs if they were! But no one puts up such a notice on the banks of great, glorious Old Father Thames. You may wash your dogs if you like, and his flood will flow on; there is too much of it to be so readily polluted. So is it with the boundless mercy of God. God permits many a poor dog of a sinner to be washed in it, and yet it is just as full and efficacious as ever.

You need not be afraid of enjoying too much sunlight, for the sun loses nothing by your basking in his beams. So is it with divine mercy: it can visit you, and bless you, and remain as great and glorious as ever. Out of the fulness of Christ millions may still receive salvation, and He will remain the same overflowing fountain of grace.

There is another plea implied in the prayer, and a very sweet argument it is—" Let Thy mercies come also unto me, O Lord." It means: " It has come to so many before, therefore let it come also unto me. Lord, if I were the only one, and Thou hadst never saved a sinner before, yet would I venture upon Thy word and promise. Especially I would come and trust the blood of Jesus: but, Lord, I am not the first by many millions. I beseech Thee, then, of Thy great love, let Thy salvation come unto me."

You notice in the parable of the prodigal that was the only son that had gone astray, and consequently the first that ever tried whether his father would receive him. The elder brother had not gone astray, and was there at home, to grumble at his younger brother; but the poor prodigal son, though he had no instance before him of his father's willingness to forgive, was bold to try by faith his father's heart. None had trodden that way before, yet he made bold to explore it. He felt that he should not be cast out. But when we hear any of you say, " I will arise, and go to my Father," scores of us are ready to leap out of our seats and cry, " Come along, brother, for we have come, and the gracious Father has received us."

THE FORLORN FEEDER OF SWINE

I do not know whether the elder brother is here to murmur at a penitent sinner; I am happy to say I have none of his spirit. It will make my heart happy; the bells of my whole nature will ring for joy if I may only bring one of my poor, prodigal brothers back to my great Father's house. Oh, come along with you, and let this be the plea: " Thou hast received so many, O receive me." Cry, " Bless me, even me also, O my Father." Jesus has not come to the end of His saving work yet. There is room for you, and there will be room for thousands upon thousands yet, until the Master of the house hath risen up and shut to the door.

3. I will close by assuring you that this blessedly gracious prayer, which I have helped to back up with arguments, will be answered by our gracious God. Oh, be sure of this, He never sent His prophets to preach to us a salvation which cannot be ours; He never sent His apostles to report to us concerning a mere dream; He never set the angels wondering at an empty speculation; He never gave His Son to be a ransom which will not redeem; and He never committed His Spirit to witness to that which after all will mock the sinner's need. No, He is able to save: there is salvation, there is salvation to be had, to be had now, even now.

We are sitting in the light in this house while a dense fog causes darkness all around, even darkness which may be felt; this is an emblem of the state of those who are in Christ: they have light in their hearts, light in their habitations, light in Jesus Christ. O come to Him and find salvation now. May God bring any that have been in darkness into His marvellous light, and bring them now, and unto His name shall be praise for ever and ever. Amen and amen.

[Portion of Scripture read before Sermon—1 Peter 1.]

[The prayers of the readers of this Journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors in America and England and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and for its weekly circulation of more than 175,000 copies to be blessed by the Holy Spirit to the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Mr. Spurgeon and Dr. Talmage especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

A FASHIONABLE YOUNG LADY'S CONVERSION AND THE NEGLECTED CAMELIA.

I WAS brought up religiously, as the world uses the expression ; my parents taught us that to go to a theatre was sinful and evil. While at home I was strenuous in teaching at the Sunday-school, playing the organ at the parish church, tract-distributing, holding Bible classes, etc.

After my marriage I was persuaded to go to London amusements, theatres, concerts, and the like. At first I had misgivings of conscience, but soon they were all hushed, and in the spring of 1869 I was looking forward to a gay season in London. Having taken tickets for a reading by Charles Dickens, before leaving my country house I went into my conservatory and gathered a white camelia to wear in my hair, sealing the stalk and putting it carefully into a little tin box to keep it fresh for the occasion, little thinking that before the time came to wear it I should have lost all taste for such amusements, and the flower would be left to die in its little receptacle, my soul having, through grace, obtained "eternal life."

I was invited to stay two days with my sister and her husband, who, through mercy, are Christians not in name only, but in deed and in truth. I regretted that I could not refuse the urgent desire expressed for me to be with them, knowing the time would hang heavily on me, the only subject in their household of real interest being the Lord Jesus and His glory. When I arrived I found my brother-in-law at home, suffering from indisposition. During conversation he said, "Have you ever heard me relate the circumstances of my conversion ?" On my replying in the negative, he told me how he had had exercise of conscience and knew that his soul was not safe for eternity ; but Satan whispered, "If you give up the world and make a profession of religion you will be sure to fall, and then you will be worse off than ever."

Continuing unhappy and unsettled, he spoke to a brother in Christ, who took him aside and read to him the 53d chapter of Isaiah. When he came to the blessed verse, "All we like sheep have gone astray ; we have turned every one to his own way, and the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all . . . with His stripes we are healed," he could see it all. The way of escape had been provided by the judgment being borne by the sinner's substitute. It seemed to him like a glorious pattern woven by a skilful workman, every color in its place shining brightly, and he finished the account by saying, 'Blessed be God ! ever since that moment I have never had one doubt of my complete acceptance and salvation."

How I secretly longed to be able to echo that joyful certainty in my own heart ; but, instead, there was nothing there but the hollowness of the world, the blank wretchedness of uncertainty. I was told some of the Lord's people were coming to a Bible-reading at his house. I cannot forget the happy faces of those who came with their Bibles in their hands. I knew I was the only hypocrite present, and when they knelt to ask the Lord's blessing I said, "Lord, do not hinder the blessing because I am here." I rose to leave as they were meditating on Hebrews 11, when this thought came with mighty power into my soul—I shall be punished forever in hell if I do not believe Jesus died for me. I had believed that He died on the cross, but never that His death had atoned for my sins, and now I saw with terrible reality that unbelief as to this would sink my soul into the lowest hell. Then came the Word of God over and over in my stricken heart : "He that believeth not God hath made Him a liar ; because he believeth not the record that God gave of His Son. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in His Son" (1 John 5).

On arriving at home the Word of God said to me, "The Lord also hath put away thy sin." I said, "What, Lord, all the long black list of the sins of my whole life ?" The answer came, "As far as the east is from the west, so far hath He removed our transgressions from us." Then I began to praise : "Jesus, Thou shalt never hear the last of this.

"Loudest of the crew I'll sing,
While heaven's resounding arches ring
With shouts of sovereign grace."

I longed for a voice so loud that all the world might hear that Jesus had stooped to save such a guilty one as me. I could see, by faith, my new-found Saviour, once bleeding, dying on the cross—bearing "our sins in His own body on the tree." My head was a fountain of tears of joy, and, falling to sleep that night, I said, "Lord, I will lie down in Thine arms for the first time in my life." And now I can say those same sweet real words, "Blessed be God ! never since that hour have I had one doubt of my complete acceptance and salvation."

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Safe Arrival after a Troublous Voyage—Hot Fight on the High Seas—Reception in New York.

THE Steamship Australia, conveying the officers of the Salvation Army detailed for service in America, arrived on Wednesday, March 10th, having been twenty-five days at sea. The vessel had barely cleared the English Channel when one of the cylinders burst, and with one engine the passage had to be made, against contrary winds, and at times through stormy weather. But had the accident occurred just six hours earlier, it is all but certain that the vessel would have been wrecked on the Scilly Islands.

Many of the passengers were taken off by the Steamship Elysia, of the same line, which passed the Australia on Thursday, the 4th, but the Salvation Army officers preferred to remain on board the boat which was being prayed for by so many thousands of their comrades at home, even if, as they were told was highly probable, they should have to be put on biscuit only, rather than leave the vessel thus specially insured.

The captain and all the ship's company treated them with the greatest kindness, so that they were able to hold three services on board daily. But the very large majority of the passengers preferred card-playing to prayer, and the meetings repeatedly aroused the same sort of hostility which the Army is accustomed to encounter when it marches to storm some citadel of the enemy of souls ashore.

The little party might have been seen praying, speaking, and singing at one half of a table, the other half of which was occupied by the card-players, while others endeavored to drown the sounds of Jesus' name with comic songs. In every case, however, the name "high over all" prevailed before the close of the meeting, the heaving breast and falling tear repeatedly testifying to the effect produced upon many hearts.

The officers of the ship offered to put a stop to any sort of opposition, but the Army preferred not to avail itself of any such special protection, so that victory might be won, not by might nor by power, but by the Spirit of the Lord.

Immediately after landing at Castle Garden the party held a brief service, a large crowd speedily gathering and listening with profound attention. The hymn,

"With a sorrow for sin,
Let repentance begin ;
Then conversion of course will draw nigh ;
But till washed in the blood
Of a crucified Lord,
We shall never be ready to die," having been sung, and some words of exhortation and invitation addressed to the crowd, prayer was offered, and the party marched off. Being dressed in uniform, they naturally attracted much attention, and the newspapers have all described them and their work day after day, so that they have every prospect of obtaining their first requisite—the ear of the crowd. They will commence operations in the open air immediately, and their first indoor service was held in Harry Hill's Music Hall on Sunday evening. They are hoping to secure some warehouse or other large unused building for permanent use.

TEN SIGNS OF THE APPROACHING END.*

By Rev. M. Baxter.

(Continued from page 173.)

9. The Infliction of a deadly Wound upon the Napoleon dynasty—The revived Napoleon—Historical Evidence—Waterloo and Sedan—Another Napoleon to arise—Prince Jerome and Prince Louis—The vile Person of fierce Countenance—Not to arise as Sovereign until the Ten Kingdomed Confederacy is formed—An Ecclesiastical and Political Headship.

9. The infliction of "a deadly wound by the sword of war" upon at Sedan as well as at Waterloo, preparatory to the predicted future healing of that deadly wound, and to the rise of the final great Napoleonic Antichrist, is a notable sign of the End.

THE NAPOLEON DYNASTY

The Battle of Sedan, in September, 1870, was a remarkable prophetical event, clearly predicted in Revelation 13 : 3, 14, as the wounding to death by a sword of the seventh governmental headship of the Roman empire, which in fact is the Napoleonic dynasty, as upward of one hundred expositors firmly maintain. And this prophecy states that the deadly wound is to be healed, to the astonishment of the whole world, and that then the revived Napoleon is to have power given him over all kindreds and tongues and nations ; and al that dwell upon the earth, except the elect, shal worship him as their god: and he will make wa with Christians and overcome them for three an a half years (Rev. 13 : 5–8).

In short, he will become the Great Antichris of the last days, whose fearful character is foretold in 2 Thess. 2 as the Man of sin and son o perdition, who is to sit in the rebuilt temple o God at Jerusalem, claiming worship as God, an at last is to be destroyed by the brightness o Christ's personal Coming—and as the Little Hor of Daniel 7 and 8, who is to wear out the saint for three and a half years, and to think to chang times and laws, but is to have his body given t the burning flame when the Son of Man come in the clouds of heaven. His career is also described as that of "the King who shall do according to his own will" in Daniel 11 : 21–3 and to the end of Daniel 12.

The historical evidence that the Napoleon dynasty is the seventh governmental headship o the Roman empire, or seven-headed and ten horned wild beast, is as follows. The interpre ing angel explained the seven heads in Revelation 17 : 10 by saying to the Apostle John "They are seven kings (or forms of government five are fallen (i.e., passed away—viz., Monarch Consuls, Tribunes, Decemvirs, Dictators) : an one (the sixth head) is : and the other (the seventh) is not yet come: and when he cometh must continue a short space. And the wild bea that was and is not, even he is the eighth, and of the seven, and goeth into perdition—and th that dwell on the earth shall wonder when th behold the wild beast that was and is not and y shall be (verse 8)—i.e., that was alive, dead, an alive again—in fact, wounded to death, an healed of its deadly wound.

The sixth head, which was in existence in S John's time, was the Roman emperorship, whic never ceased to exist in the person of some representative until A.D. 1806, when the title of Roman emperor was formally renounced by Franc II., Emperor of Austria, as stated by Alison, th historian, owing to his being defeated by Napoleon Bonaparte. At that time Bonaparte wa actually master of Rome and Italy, which he annexed to the French empire, and thus the Napoleon dynasty became the seventh governmental head of the Roman empire, the princip portions of which it conquered.

But the Napoleon dynasty only "continued hort space," as predicted, for, in 1815, it was wounded to death" at the battle of Waterloo, s foretold in Rev. 13:3. Then, in 1848–51, ouis Napoleon became Emperor of France, and as beginning to restore his dynasty to sover- ignty over Europe, but in the war to regain the hine frontier he failed, and it was again wounded to death" at Sedan, in September, 870. Nevertheless, the prophecy states that it to be "healed of its deadly wound, and all the orld is to wonder."

---

* Extracted from "Coming Wars," by Rev. M Baxter, in two pamphlets—five cents each by ma First pamphlet contains "Ten Signs of the End, ar Description of Approaching Events," with two ma and four large diagrams. Second pamphlet contai valuable quotations from Forty Expositors on the events. Address, 63 Bible House, New York.

Therefore, within a few years' time at the fur- hest another Napoleon will arise, and gradually store that dynasty to supremacy over the coun- ies of the Roman empire, and he will reign as niversal monarch during the final three and a alf years over "all kindreds, and tongues, and ations," until his destruction at Armageddon Rev. 13:7).

This interpretation of the Napoleon dynasty, eing the seventh headship, which, according to ev. 12 and 17, is to be revived and become the st form of Antichrist, has been maintained in bstance by J. H. Frere in 1815, Rev. G. S. aber in 1818, Rev. H. Gauntlett in 1820, ev. E. Irving in 1826, and subsequently alto- ther by about forty clergymen, including the evs. Dr. Keith, S. Garratt, J. G. Gregory, A. ausset, etc., and by more than sixty laymen, in eir published prophetic treatises.

A great surprise is in store for all who deem e Napoleon dynasty to be hopelessly dead, or, least, irrecoverably disabled from taking any ading part in European affairs for many years come. So far from this, it has died only to e again with more irrepressible vitality. It has len only to rise once more with elastic rebound a greater height. It has been defeated only advance with surer steps and more deep-laid emes to future conquests. Its failure is the ecursor of its ultimate success. Its present akness is the prelude to its eventual strength. A Napoleonic hand will again wield with irre- tible energy the sceptre of d pen despatches for which the world shall nd on the tiptoe of eager expectancy. A Na- leonic voice will agan speak, and the tenor of utterances, flashed on telegraphic wings to tening nations, be awaited with breathless in- est in Cabinet Councils and Parliaments, in urts and camps, upon Bourses and Mercantile changes.

EUROPEAN SUPREMACY;

A Napoleonic eye will again review squad- ns, battalions, and regiments of vast military sts marching with enthusiastic shout of "Vive poleon," and emerging from hotly-contested ttle-fields with restored prestige, and with tory inscribed upon their banners. A Na- leonic ear will again be saluted with flatteries, ch as were addressed by his courtiers to the st Napoleon, who, when he asked them what ople thought of him, was told, "Some men nk you are an angel, and some a devil, but all ee you are more than a man;" and on an- her occasion he was told that the Almighty eated him and rested from his labor. The Na- eonic name is to regain its pristine ascen- cy, and become associated in men's minds h a new and marvellous career of successful itary exploits, so that the world shall uncon- ously utter the predicted challenge, "Who like unto him? Who is able to make war h him?" (Rev. 13:3.)

History is about to repeat itself in presenting new and unexpected Napoleonic career of ndless ambition and achievement, like that h which Napoleon Bonaparte dazzled and as- nded Europe during the first fifteen years of present century. Originally emerging from obscure position, Bonaparte suddenly shot up a comet to an unexampled height of exalta- n. Entering the French army as a lieutenant, became in a few years its commander-in-chief. He invaded Egypt and Syria, and conquered lland, Belgium, Spain, Austria, and the Italian tes of Savoy, Venice, Naples, Genoa, and scany. He raised his three brothers, his ther-in-law, and son-in-law to be the five kings over Holland, Spain, Westphalia, Naples, and Lombardy; and he became Imperial Head and Protector of the Confederation of the Rhine, consisting of sixteen German States. He was thus altogether sovereign over the principal central countries of the original Roman Empire, and Rome was likewise in his military possession.

The rapidity and extent of those marvellous triumphs of Napoleon Bonaparte are now about to be not merely equalled, but very much surpassed by a modern Napoleon, who is announced in prophecy to arise before long as an eleventh Little Horn or Sovereign after a Confederacy of Ten Sovereigns shall have been established over the whole extent of the Roman Empire, and then to overthrow three of them, and gradually, after a few years, to become Roman Emperor for three and a half years over ten new kings elected by universal suffrage over the ten kingdoms of Britain, France, Spain, Italy, Austria, Greece, Turkey, Syria, Egypt, and the North African coast (Dan. 7:24–5; Rev. 13 and 17).

We are standing, in truth, upon the threshold of the most colossal, gigantic, and stupendous events. We have arrived at a crisis in the world's history of thrilling interest, and of the most spirit-stirring and awe-inspiring character. We are on the point of witnessing the fulfilment of the impressive prophecy—"All the world shall wonder when they behold the (Napoleonic) empire that was and is not and yet is."

PRINCE JEROME NAPOLEON AND PRINCE LOUIS NAPOLEON.

If at the present period we could not discover any Napoleon at all qualified to become a mighty monarch, then these prophecies might appear unlikely to be soon fulfilled. But it is an extraordinary fact that there are Napoleons now living precisely adapted to accomplish these prophecies. It is unnecessary for any one to say positively that Prince Jerome Napoleon (who was born in 1823) will become the Antichrist, but no other Napoleon seems more likely than he. The writer published, in March, 1873, in his pamphlet, "The Coming Napoleon," the following remarks:

"Prince Louis Napoleon, who was born in 1856, is the lineal successor of his father, the late ex-emperor Louis Napoleon III. (who died in January, 1873). But although he has the number 666 contained in his name, yet hitherto, at least, he is lacking in the characteristics of being a King of fierce countenance understanding dark sentences, and a vile person (which the Great Antichrist must be according to Dan. 8:23 and 11:21, as well as an Infidel, Dan. 11:36, 37, and a Red Republican Democrat prefigured by the uncrowned scarlet wild beast of Rev. 17). It will remain to be seen whether some Napoleon who is more of a fierce countenance and a vile person does not after some time take his place.

"Prince Jerome Napoleon, who is fifty years of age, is not the direct legitimate successor of his cousin, the late Louis Napoleon III., but is far more qualified to be so than Prince Louis Napoleon, as far as political experience, antecedents, and ability are concerned. He has always been a great Democrat as well as a Voltairean freethinker, and therefore is well adapted to become the latterday Democratic Antichrist.

But in public life hitherto he has been opposed to the temporal power of the Pope, whereas the latterday champion of Democracy is also to be an Ultramontanist and champion of the temporal power of the Pope at the outset of his career, in order to further his own aims, although afterward he is to destroy that temporal power and to despoil the Romish Church. Hence there must be a change in his views regarding the temporal power if he is to become the Personal Antichrist who is to be at first a zealous Ultramontanist as well as a Radical Republican.

"The indispensable characteristics of being a sovereign of fierce countenance and a vile person, which are totally lacking in Prince Louis Napoleon, are remarkably manifest in Prince Jerome, whose countenance is fierce and defiant, the very image of the face of Napoleon I., and although he is possessed of great mental powers and eloquence, yet somehow or other he has contrived to be vilified and ridiculed in Paris for many years—one of his popular nick-names being Plon-Plon.

"The London Weekly News of February 1st, 1873, said of him: 'Plon-Plon the first? it is very difficult indeed at this moment to see, even for one month, into the political future of France; but no man who has the slightest acquaintance with French politics would hesitate one moment in declaring that, come what may to our volatile and unfortunate neighbors, they will never tolerate Prince Jerome Napoleon as a ruler among them."

The Rev. R. A. Purdon, in his Last Vials, for December, 1854, wrote of him:

"Napoleon I. had all the characteristics of the Seventh Head of the Roman Empire or seven-headed wild beast. The Eighth and Last Head is to arise out of the Seventh, according to Revelation 17:10, 11; and therefore we expect the Eighth Head to be a member of the Napoleon family. Whether the particular individual will be a man with a square-cut face, and dark eyes, like Prince Jerome Napoleon now (1854) in command of a Division of the French Army in the Crimea, or whether he be a man with an oval face and blue eyes, like the Emperor Louis Napoleon, can make no difference. Which Napoleon it is cannot matter, so long as the Eighth Head is a Napoleon."

It must, however, be carefully noticed that whatever Napoleon is to be the Antichrist, or Little Horn, he will not arise as a sovereign until after the Confederacy of Ten Sovereigns has distinctly appeared; for in Daniel 7:24 we read that the ten horns are ten Sovereigns that shall arise; and then another, the Little Horn, shall arise after them, and shall subdue three of the ten kings. Also, in Daniel 8, we are told that this Little Horn is to arise out of one of the four Macedonian kingdoms—viz., Greece, Turkey, Syria, or Egypt.

Apparently, at first he is to arise as a Little Horn, or Sovereign, ruling over some little territory parcelled out of one of those four countries—some province or provinces belonging to them—possibly Palestine, or perhaps some of their islands, such as Cyprus, Candia, Sicily, or Sardinia, which once belonged to Greece.

Then, somewhere about that same time, he will make his predicted seven-years' covenant with the Jews (Dan. 9:27), and then, two or three years afterward, he will attain dominion over all the ten kingdoms. But at first he only subdues three of the ten kingdoms, and the ten-kingdomed confederacy seems then to become, to a certain extent, weakened for a year or two, until he reconstitutes it under his imperial rule (Rev. 17:12, 13).

Hence it seems that any Napoleon who is a Sovereign before the ten-kingdomed Confederacy is formed cannot be the Antichrist, who is only to arise as a Horn, or Sovereign after that Confederacy has appeared.

Nevertheless, the Coming Napoleon, although not then a Sovereign, may, in some way, occupy a distinguished position in the predestined tremendous wars or revolutions by which France must be extended to the Rhine, and regain Alsace, Lorraine, Metz, Strasburg, etc., and reverse the defeat of Sedan, and form the Confederacy. For the predicted "healing of the deadly wound" of the Napoleon dynasty will seem more complete, if as the defeat of Sedan was incurred under a Napoleon, so the foreordained reversal of that defeat by the French should take place under a Napoleon, as an influential military or political leader, although he may not at that time be actually a Horn or Sovereign.

If a Bonaparte—for instance, Cardinal Lucien Bonaparte—should become "Infallible" Pope—the Two-horned Pope of Rev. 13:2—the power of the Napoleon dynasty would evidently be greatly promoted. It is surely a strange coincidence that just at this time there exist Bonapartes ready to become the ecclesiastical and political Heads of the Roman Empire.

(To be Continued.)

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 175).

Charles Clifford's Advocates.

It will readily be believed that Mrs. Britton was taking unbounded interest in the exciting event that had visited Clifford, where exciting events were "few and far between." The whole village was agape with curiosity and expectation.

Julia Rush had let fall a few mysterious words, hinting at a speedy revolution in affairs; and it was reported furtively that she had the means of driving out Master Ernest, and setting up Master Charles in his forfeited birthright. Of course Ernest knew nothing of these rumors, nor did they reach Mr. Britton's ears, closed as they were to the echoes of mere worldly gossip. But Mrs. Britton was aware of them from the first, and pondered over them quietly, not breathing a syllable of them to any of those whom they concerned. Her maternal hopes were all aroused.

If Charles should turn out the master of Clifford Grange, what a chance there would be for Jenny? She was still a welcome visitant at the Grange, and she was always reckoned a pretty girl when Rose was away; and Rose could be no rival in this case. She had seen Jenny hearkening, open-eyed and eager, to Charles's traveller's tales, and Charles was not insensible to her simple enthusiasm.

Mrs. Britton grew intensely anxious to learn the whole truth; and who was more likely to know it than Julia Rush's aunt, Mrs. Dunnit?

So thinking, she made up her mind to pay a visit to the old lady. After the usual greetings and some general observations, she came to her point in a seemingly careless manner.

"Who would have expected Mr. Charles to come home again, after all these years? You knew old Mr. Clifford?"

"I've dwelt in Clifford all my days, and I knew the old master well," said Mrs. Dunnit.

"Ah! and was he so wrapt up, as they say, in his son?" she asked, "or was he very fond of Mr. Ernest Clifford? Ernest Wren, he was then, his stepson. Were you and Elijah astonished when the estates came to him?"

"Me and Elijah went down on our knees to thank God for it," she replied, with more vivacity than usual. "Master Clifford was a wrathful man, and a very wilful man; and he'd sworn great oaths he'd cut off Master Charlie if he didn't come home afore he died. But none of us believed it till the will was read. It seemed almost too good to be true."

"But I hear say Mr. Charles will come into his own yet," suggested Mrs. Britton, with an impartial and curious tone.

"That's Julia's fine talk, set her up for a conceited madam!" answered Mrs. Dunnit. "She'll be sayin' Master Charlie's goin' to marry her next. No, no. We do have some misgivin's that Master Ernest maybe'll give up to him. You see it is his birthright, and it's cruel and unfair to him, and our Master Ernest can't abide any thing that's unfair. Somehow it seems like Jacob takin' Esau's birthright from him. But it was a bitter bad day for Clifford when Master Charlie came back, if he is to be master again and turn out Master Ernest."

"Ah!" sighed Mrs. Britton, committing herself to nothing.

"If Master Ernest gives up the Grange," continued Mrs. Dunnit maliciously, "I hear folks say as Master Britton 'll give up the Vicarage to him, and we shall lose you and him, ma'am."

"No, surely," ejaculated Mrs. Britton, as a sudden scathing dread flashed across her mind. She felt, with an ominous heart-sinking, that Wiliam would do it, if Ernest would let him. William would think nothing of turning out to beggary and starvation, if these came in the path of self-sacrifice. She had no very high opinion of Ernest. But she had not a high opinion of any one; her nature was not capable of real trust.

If Ernest had gained the estates in any underhand way, as she was quite willing to believe, he would have no scruple in taking back the living he had bestowed upon his friend. She recoiled with dread from the too vivid idea of going back to some poor curacy in a large town, where they would be nobodies, and where she would meet with no little helps to eke out their scanty income. In her terror she murmured, "God forbid!"

"Amen!" said Mrs. Dunnit. "God forbid, as Master Ernest should give up to Master Charlie! But if he do, why nature says as he must go to the Vicarage again. You've only been here these nine years, but he's always lived amongst us, since he was a little curly-headed lad. And there's Miss Rose, she's been born and bred amongst us; she's like our own daughter, seein' as she never had her own mother, poor lamb! She's just the same as own child to every woman in Clifford. I couldn't fancy to think of Clifford without Master Ernest and Miss Rose. Either squire or parson he must be."

"But, my good woman!" exclaimed Mrs. Britton "the living was given to Mr. Britton for live. No person could deprive him of it."

"God bless him! He'd be the first to see the rights," said Mrs. Dunnit cheerfully, conscious of Mrs. Britton's dismay; "he's a true gentleman and a godly Christian; and he'd never keep another man out of his dues. I'd trust Mr. Britton for that. So I say again, God forbid Master Ernest should give up to Master Charlie!"

"But isn't Mr. Ernest keeping his own brother out of his dues?" asked Mrs. Britton somewhat spitefully.

The old woman's face fell. She did not like to look at the question from that point of view. It was quite evident to her that right and justice would demand the restoration of the church and vicarage to Ernest; but she was not prepared to admit that Ernest was bound to resign his estates to the born heir. Her dread of Master Charlie's reign was too real and too great to allow her to see clearly in that direction. She could only shake her head and repeat, "God forbid it! God forbid it!"

The long summer days passed heavily to all at Clifford Grange. The conflict in Ernest's mind did not come to a speedy conclusion, for he was taking time to observe his brother narrowly. There was no evidence of any change having transformed Charles's character. He was simply the sort of man his boyhood had foretold. If he became master of Clifford Grange, he would be the least estimable Clifford that had ever owned it. In ten years' time, Ernest felt sure, the estate would pass into the hands of strangers and Charles be begging for his bread. Was it not his duty to hold fast the property?

The idea that his elder brother had robbed him by foul play of his inheritance had not been dismissed from Charles's mind, though he had thrown away as worthless the poor evidence of such a crime. He had never practised self-control; and now, though it was to his interest to make himself agreeable to Ernest, he could not refrain from an occasional outburst of angry insolence, alternating with an almost servile deference to him.

He made free with the horses and boats belonging to the house; and he lounged about Clifford, talking with the fishermen on the beach, with hints and innuendoes of Ernest's unlawful usurpation of his birthright. There was a certain sense of justice in the hearts of the men which recognized the claims of the only son to his father's property, and which was kindled into stronger life by Charles's presence.

Each one felt that his small possessions—his boat, his cattle, his household furniture—which he had inherited from his forefathers, he held in a sort of trust for the children that were coming after him. His sons were the grandsons of the father who had left him his goods; and there was a natural law which required of him that after he had served his own life with them, they should pass into the possession of those in whose veins the same blood ran. Yet all the while they knew that Ernest's ownership of Clifford Grange was the most beneficial circumstance every one connected with the estate.

Mrs. Clifford, with all the force of a wea minded woman, took the side of her young son. She behaved as if she could not ma enough of him, and she supplied him with much money as he chose to demand from h under the transparent subterfuge of borrowin Every day the fatted calf was killed, the b robe worn. She invited her friends and neig bors, from far and near, to come and rejoi with her over her long-lost son; and a succ sion of somewhat dreary festivities took place Clifford Grange, enjoyed by no one except Jen Britton.

Jenny's mother kept her well supplied wi pretty, fresh muslin dresses, and an almost u restricted supply of ribbons and gloves. T cost was not very great, and Mrs. Britton f that Jenny was having her chance now. Ern was bound at least to provide handsomely f his brother, who had come home at last safe a sound, though a beggar. Why should not Jen share Charles Clifford's fortunes?

Julia Rush had felt it to be a great blow wh Charles told her that her cherished secret h proved utterly worthless. She scarcely believ it, especially as Charles harped upon the noti that there had been foul play somehow. I took his obligations to her very coolly, and c not make her heart beat fast with gladness kissing her again. In fact he was really irritat against her for kindling hopes that had been rudely extinguished by his uncle.

He almost felt a grudge against her becau the papers had not turned out of more valu When she asked him again for the little silk b she had carried in her bosom for ten years, told her how he had tossed it away, utterly different to the chagrin she felt. Julia sh some bitter tears over the loss; she would ha given her year's wages for that little bag.

"Ernest," said his mother one morning, in cold and distant manner, "my brother Wrig writes me he is coming over to-day. It is hi time to see what is to be done for Charlie. I very hard for him, poor boy! cruelly hard see you here in his place. You should recoll you were not born a Clifford. Of course, if poor, dead husband had taken my advice, should have shown him how very unjust it w to cut off his own son, and quite against wishes. Right is right. But Mr. Clifford alwa kept me in the dark, and my poor boy suffers it."

"I have not yet finally decided what I sh do," answered Ernest; "it is a more diffic question than you suppose. You would ha me deliver up every thing into Charles hands

"I hardly say that," replied the mother m ingly. "Charles is rather a spendthrift. St I cannot help feeling he is the rightful own He goes ordering about more like the ow than you do. He thrashed one of the lads t morning right soundly; and that you wo never do. Anybody could see with half an which is the born master."

"The born tyrant," interposed Ernest, w mingled indignation and sadness.

"Just like his poor father," continued M Clifford. "Oh! there's no question as which is the true Clifford of Clifford. N poor, poor Charlie! he is not in his right pla He was so very young when he ran away. tells me he was actually on his way home, w close at hand, when he heard his father w dead, and how he had left you every thing, a he went off again, broken-hearted. If he h been a fortnight earlier he would have found father alive, and it would all have been alter It was one of his shipwrecks that hindered h from being home in time. He has been in great number of shipwrecks.'

"Then you wish to see Charles master here said Ernest.

"Well, I only wish what is right," she swered; "I cannot believe it is right for poor boy to be a beggar in his own fath house. You would not like Rose to be turn ou n that way for a woman that was not a bit rel ed to you. Blood is blood, and blood is thi er than water. Right is right, and wrong ca never be right."

ter having delivered herself thus oracularly, Mr Clifford leaned back in her chair and adjus d her lace lappets with an air of infinite sel omplacency. As usual when he was in perple ty, Ernest was marching up and down the roo ; but though she hated to see it, she dar not give way to her petulance. She was alw s a little awed by her elder son ; but Charlie ver gave her the same insufferable feeling of ing looked through and silently condemned. She elt sure that Ernest had found her out, and kne her thoroughly, though his manner towa her was unvaryingly kind and considerate. Ch ie would think more of her opinion than e d.

E Ernest was not disregarding his mother's opi on now. On the contrary, he was pondering ver every word she had uttered. Especially e dwelt upon his brother's statement that e s on his way home when his aged father lie As a man watching the outbreak of a hre ening tempest takes heed how a straw is lo , he was carefully considering the least hi that had a bearing on the momentous ue on on hand. He dared not say to himself he was absolutely incapable of saying it—" ll hold what I have, in spite of conscience, u ightness, of responsibility to a higher rule ha he mere legal processes of a court of law."

Y it was difficult to make sure of that higher ule whilst there were so many conflicting lai to adjust. As yet he resembled the man ra lly restored to sight, who saw men as trees alk g. His thoughts and plans and desires ere ll vague, dim, and wandering. He could ot en his eyes and see the path of righteous ess retching before him in a clear light. His ot r's words took the same obscure form and ga to haunt his troubled brain.

(To be continued.)

EVIEW OF THE QUARTER'S LESSONS.

S esson for March 28. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

T first four lessons of the quarter were n from the life of our blessed Lord previous H ministry ; the next eight from His teachi is ministry in word, and the last from His ni ry in deed, His healing power. Whatever e rd Jesus was as man, He was for us, born r (Isa. 9 : 6), persecuted even in infancy for tized for us to "fulfil all righteousness" 3 : 15), for He is "the end or fulfilling of e for righteousness to every one that be e" (Rom. 10 : 4) ; and He was tempted for n that He Himself hath suffered being mp d, He is able to succor them that are mp d" (Heb. 2 : 18).

In verything which He has been for us or ne r us He opens and prepares the way that s uld do or be something for Him. He ho though He was rich, yet for our sakes ca poor" (2 Cor. 8 : 9), teaches us to co e as little children, to become little as came little, as He "made Himself of r utation" (Phil. 2 : 7), or, according to reek, "emptied Himself ;" so must we am empty ourselves, to have no reputation s, no self-life. And all this, not with fish end of our own spiritual progress wi , but the advancement of His kingdom, is ry in the world. It is not written "Ex pt be converted and become as little chil en ye shall not be holy, but "ye shall not te into the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. : 3 Now our great object in life is to seek firs the kingdom of God and His righteous ss" i.e., His interests before ours even in holy ing fully persuaded that while we seek His ter ts He will not fail to seek ours. And ou we may be led into Egypt, into an un ow land where we are all unknown, and no e y understand the life of God which is us r sympathize with our heart's desire to ri our God, yet it is the right way by which He leads us, and while the world knoweth us not, the Shepherd says, "My sheep hear My voice and I know them," etc. (John 10 : 27).

But in temptation ? can we be also tempted for Christ's sake and not for our own ? Truly yes. For while "the trying of our faith worketh patience" in us, it brings glory to the Lamb, by whose blood alone we can overcome the enemy (James 1 : 3, Rev. 12 : 11). It is of the utmost importance that we should not look upon temptation as a personal matter, lest we lay ourselves open to pride and vainglory if they are overcome, so falling into sin in the moment of victory, and robbing Jesus of His glory, or, on the other hand, lest we lay ourselves open to discouragement if they are not overcome. If we look upon every temptation as an assault of the enemy upon Christ Himself in His members, how can we doubt that He will undertake for his own glory, and how can we be uplifted when He gains the victory, seeing that He has done it and not we ?

In the lessons taken from our Lord's teaching we must first perceive that the standard which He sets up is divine, not human, that it is far above the highest moral standard of the natural man ; it is not an assertion of the rights of man with regard to his fellow-man, but it brings in the very law by which God guides Himself and makes it the rule of our conduct. It is newness of life, divine life, proceeding from and maintained by God Himself, and it is only as buried with Christ and risen into His life that we can love the holy precepts which condemn all the instincts of our self-life and discover its utter impotence to fulfil them. But when once we have discerned, in the light of God, the holy dignity of His will, then a divine enthusiasm animates us to be before His eyes true disciples.

We have already seen that "the gospel of the kingdom" (Matt. 4 : 23) contains precepts, and manifests a tone which the natural man can neither imitate nor understand. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God ; for they are foolishness unto him : neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned" (1 Cor. 2 : 14). Therefore we must not be hurt or surprised if, in following these holy principles, we are misjudged and condemned, and unworthy motives are imputed to us ; it can not be otherwise. "Ye are dead," says Paul, "and your life is hid with Christ in God" (Col. 3 : 3). How then can we expect those whose eyes are not opened to understand a life which is hidden from them ? The very sentiment of pain at being misunderstood, when we are poor in spirit, meek, persecuted, etc., when we love our enemies, when we resist not evil, etc., is a clear evidence that we do not understand our position as dead and buried with Christ. That which is dead has not power to feel.

Therefore, in order to be true disciples, we must renounce completely all thought of being understood or encouraged by the world, or by half-hearted Christians while our standpoint is not in their horizon, for we look at ourselves, at the world, and other Christians from God's point of view, and not from man's. But this is just the reason why we are to esteem all others better than ourselves (Phil. 2 : 3). And this we can do without hypocrisy if we know ourselves, for in measure as we walk in the light we shall be aware of our own unfaithfulness, while we cannot so well perceive that of others. And thus we can rejoice when men revile us and persecute us and say all manner of evil against us falsely for Christ's name's sake, and we can afford to love those who thus deal with us, because we know without being divine in their spirit, they cannot understand that which is divine.

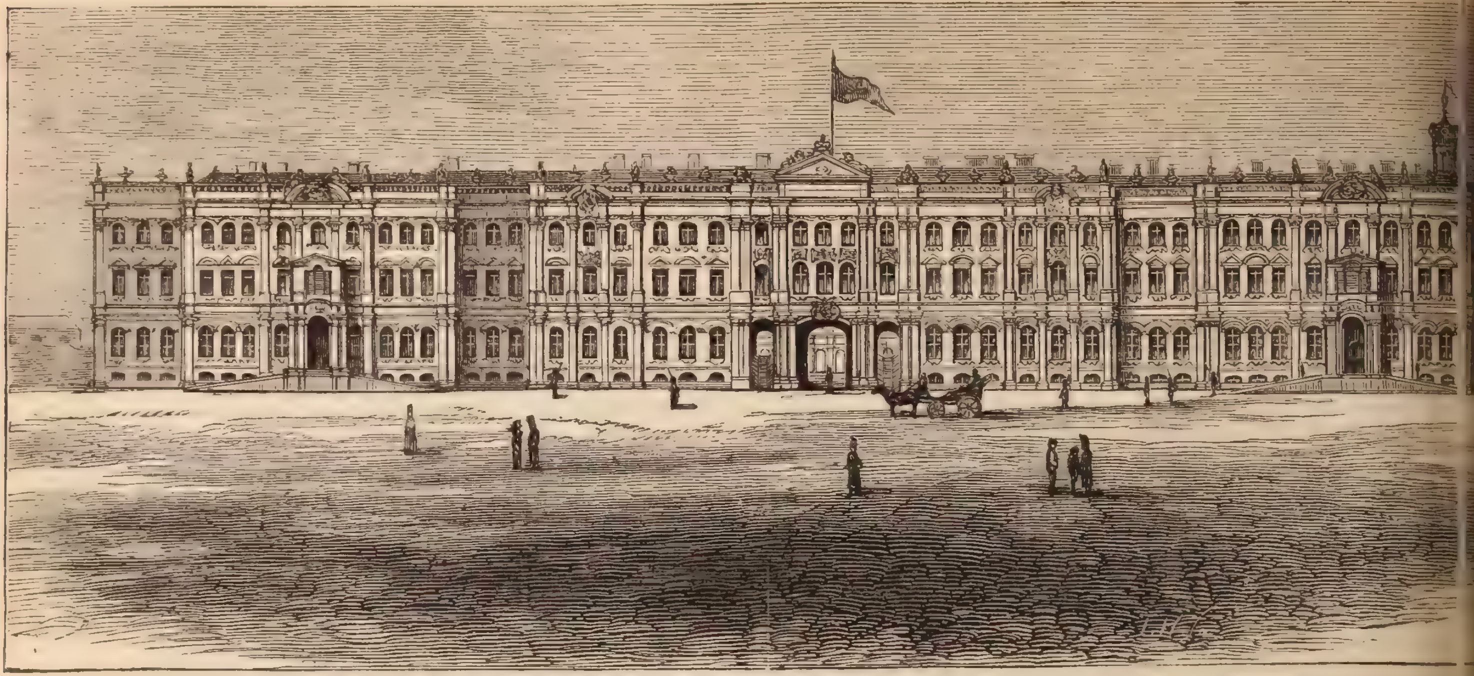
In the light of this newness of life the Lord Jesus passes in review many practical questions, the regulation of the tongue, the eye, the temper, for God and not for us, the giving and praying for God chiefly, and for us only as greater glory shall accrue to God thereby. In the Lord's teaching, self—i.e., our own nature—is not considered, no place is left for it, it is dead and buried with Christ, that He may have all the place as His rightful dominion. Like the four cherubim in Ezekiel, Christ's true disciples are called to be "And they went every one straight forward : whither the Spirit was to go, they went ; and they turned not when they went" (Ezek. 1 : 12). With one purpose, with a single eye, no hesitation, saying like Paul, "One thing I do" (Phil. 3 : 13), so is the true Christian called to live and walk. Always subject and yet always free because it is a willing subjection, a subject will which is brought into union and harmony with God, not a crushed will which is trodden under foot by a mightier.

Oh, God wills that heaven's atmosphere should be brought down to earth, and for a little time it was so after Pentecost, and then disputes arose, and tainted air found its way in among the witnesses of the living God. But surely in our day the Lord, the Holy Ghost is working here and there an intense longing to return to the purity and power of the first days of Christ's church on earth. Let us be true to our position of honor as dead in ourselves, and alive only unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord ; let us deny ourselves all claims of self to judge, to will, to have, and nothing can hinder the return of primitive holiness and power ; for God's sake let us arise and put on our own strength and our beautiful garments (Isa. 52 : 1), that the cry may soon go forth, "The marriage of the Lamb is come and His wife hath made herself ready."

But our Lord in His teaching does not forget that we are in the flesh, and He opens up to us our Father's care, that in the entire self-abnegation to which we are called, we may yet have nothing to fear, since He who cares for the sparrows and the grass of the field knoweth that we have need of earthly things, and He says we are better than the fowls. It is so impossible to live the life of God while one trace of earthly care or sorrow rests upon our spirits. The reflection of God's will upon our souls is like that of the landscape on a perfectly still lake—one ripple, and the reflection is broken and marred.

The last two of our lessons from the Sermon on the Mount treat of that which we owe to our fellow-men. First, to do unto others as we would they should do unto us ; and we have seen how, if we are to be unselfish with regard to God, we must be so also in our faithfulness to our brethren. It must be love from heaven coming down to earth, not earthly love meeting earthly love. God's love does not consider itself, but sacrifices itself, and real love to our brethren must do the same. Our final lesson from this blessed discourse of our Lord's was on the false and the true, and we saw how nothing could stand before God which had not its foundation strongly set in Christ, no tree could remain which did not bring forth good fruit. All unreality, all work which cannot stand the fire must be burned from the children of God. A fiery trial is to try us (1 Cor. 3 : 13, 1 Pet. 1 : 7, 4 : 12). Oh, that we may be found fire-proof, having nothing which is destructible, nothing which is not eternal.

Our last lesson treated of the healing of our blessed Lord, His ministry in deeds of power, His redemption from sickness as well as from sin. We have seen how unbelief and disobedience are hindering us from entering upon the full possession of that heritage of power which four times in the Gospels is spoken of as committed to the apostles (Matt. 10 : 1, 8, Mark 3 : 15, 6 : 7, Luke 9 : 1), once to the seventy (Luke 10 : 9, 19), and once to them that believe (Mark 16 : 17, 18). What then shall be our position in face of such a state of things ? Shall we not arise and begin to take God at His word, and honor Him by expecting the fulfilment of His promises ? We cannot be deceived if our eye is single and we have His glory alone at heart. It is His cause not ours that we would seek, not a personal benefit, but the fulfilment of His own word. It is going out upon the water with Peter, where every step is on His word alone, where we feel and experience nothing, but His word which created the heavens and the earth, must be more solid than the earth which is created, let us then believe.



Front View of the Czar's Winter Palace in St. Petersburgh. (See page 179.)

FOREIGN TOPICS.

The Dissolution of the British Parliament has been announced to the Houses. It is expected to take place March 23d. This event caused general surprise, for, though it had been predicted as likely to occur at an early date, an impression was prevalent that the present session would be concluded before it took place. During the next four weeks there will be general excitement throughout the country, for English political customs differ from ours in that every seat in the House of Commons is declared vacant at the same time, and though all elections are not held on the same day, they are usually held during the same week.

Before separating, the Chancellor of the Exchequer presented his financial statement for the year. He announced that the revenue had not equalled the expectations on which he framed his estimates last year, and that in consequence there was a deficit of £3,356,000 ($16,310,000). The cost of the Zulu War to England is equal to over twenty-five million dollars. The Chancellor stated that during the six years the Conservative ministry has been in office the national debt has been reduced by £20,342,000 ($98,658,000).

The English in Afghanistan.—A Cabul Dispatch reports that Abdul Rahman Khan has been repulsed. The insurgents have made overtures to the British. The Afghans are favorably impressed by the establishment of a dispensary hospital at Cabul, where 11,000 patients have been treated during the past two months. There is much sickness among the Kuram Valley force.

No Peace in Europe.—That there is to be no peace in Europe the North German Gazette still maintains. It continues to affirm that, while Germany is eminently peace-loving, and averse to disturbing her neighbors, there are among those neighbors some who are not of the same disposition. The Gazette insists upon it that "war is in sight," and that military movements in Russia have a warlike meaning hostile to Germany. This journal is known to be generally inspired from the Imperial Chancellor's office.

Appalling Accounts Continue to Arrive from Armenia and Kurdistan. The famine extends over an area of 100,000 square miles. Five months must pass before another harvest can bring relief. An appeal for help has been published in England, signed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Marquis of Salisbury, the Earl of Shaftesbury, and a number of other prominent gentlemen.

The Political Issue on which the Electoral contest in Great Britain will be fought is variously stated by the leaders of the two parties. Lord Beaconsfield is debarred by his position as a member of the House of Lords from issuing a manifesto to the people; but he has written a letter to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, which has been published, and will doubtless serve the same purpose. In this letter the Premier endeavors to force the contest on to the question of Home Rule in Ireland.

The Liberal leaders, on the other hand, arraign the whole foreign and domestic policy of the Government, and protest against the issue being narrowed down to one of Home Rule in Ireland. They contend that the Premier learned from the Liverpool election that if he could identify his opponents in the eyes of English constituencies with the Home Rulers, he would discredit them and insure their defeat, and that his letter is the result. They disclaim any desire to grant Home Rule for Ireland, or to disintegrate the empire.

Both parties are sanguine of obtaining a majority in the new Parliament, though neither hopes to gain a large majority. The fear is expressed by moderate politicians that the two parties will be so evenly balanced that neither will be able to govern without the aid of the Home Rule party, which aid must be purchased by humiliating concessions.

General Melikoff's Coat of Mail.—The Russian correspondent of the London Telegraph says: "Undoubtedly the life of General Melikoff was saved by a chain shirt worn under his uniform. When the Nihilist emissary attempted to assassinate him on the 3d inst., he was on the General's right, and the bullet tore a hole in the latter's coat, between his ribs and hip, where penetration with deadly effect was a certainty had not the protecting mail arrested the bullet."

The Effect of Giving Herat to Persia under a British Protectorate is thus stated by the correspondent of a leading journal: "If Herat be allotted to Persia, the 'British Protectorate' in the East will extend from Constantinople to India. England will secure a union with Herat, receiving a right of passage for her troops from the harbors of the Persian Gulf through the whole of Iran, and a concession for the construction of a railway along this line. S this really occur, the Treaty of Cyprus receive its full realization by the completio chain which would bring the whole of Mah tan Asia, from Propontis to the gates of into a state of dependence upon England.'

The Jesuits in France.—An Effort has made by M. Jules Ferry to get the Jesui cluded from educational institutions in F but his bill has been defeated in the Senate statutes already in existence the members Society of Jesus have no rights, and are lawed; but those clauses of the law whic thorize their expulsion from the country ha been enforced, and have practically lost all for years past. In Ferry's bill the Jesuits not named, but were spoken of with referen this old law against them. It forbade th ployment as a teacher of any person belongi a society forbidden by the law. It is now that the republican government will rigidl force the old law and keep the Jesuits out schools by keeping them out of the countr

Bible Teaching like Tattoo Marks.- prayer a South Sea Islander offered at the clusion of a Sabbath service was as fol
"O God, we are about to go to our resp homes. Let not the words we have hea like the fine clothes we wear—soon to be off and folded away in a box till another Sa comes round. Rather let Thy truth be lik tattoo on our bodies—ineffaceable till deat

The Prince of Wales has a Kindly and A manner which is not common with the ma of royal personages. A recent instance character is related of him. On the nig February 27th, during the Afghan debate House of Lords, he noticed among the s tors Lieutenant-General Sir Samuel Browne commanded the Khyber column durin operations in Afghanistan last year. Sendi him, the Prince said, "We are going to quiet dinner in one of the rooms here, you have nothing better to do, the Princes myself will be delighted if you can dine wit Sam Browne, a rugged soldier, was som nonplussed, for he had left one arm on a field in the Indian Mutiny, and feels a little ward when he dines without his own con tion knife and fork. However, with assis he satisfactorily managed the repast, at the Princess Beatrice and Princess Frede
Hanover were also present.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Single Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, MARCH 25, 1880. 14th Year. No. 13—New Series.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

RTRAIT AND LIFE OF LORD AUGUSTUS LOFTUS, with View of the International Exhibition Building at Sydney, New South Wales.

VE WINGS. A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage.

LORD PERCIVAL MONTAIGNE. A Thrilling Serial Story by the Author of "Fel a Cuffe."

RRENT EVENTS: Congress — Denis Kearney's Sentence—Death of Dr. Dashiell —The Salvation Army—An Unanswered Prayer—Conversion through the Telephone—M. Lesseps' Visit to New York—A Substitute for the Beer Garden—A Destructive Tornado—A Man Attacked by Wolves—A Dog with a Diamond Collar—Home for Intemperate Men, etc.

THE LILY AMONG THORNS. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

TEN SIGNS OF THE APPROACHING END, by Rev. M. Baxter. (Concluded.)

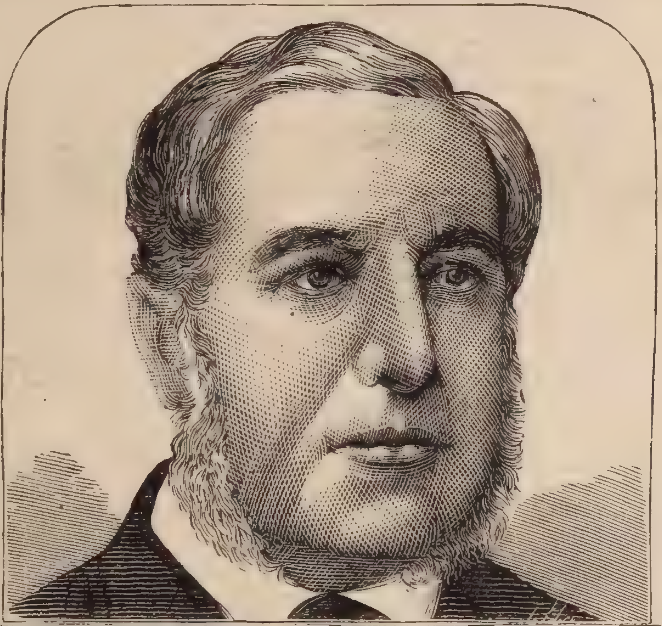
Farewell to my Regiment, by Major Malan —Mr. Gwyther and the Dying Infidel—A Business Man's Tarnished Crown.

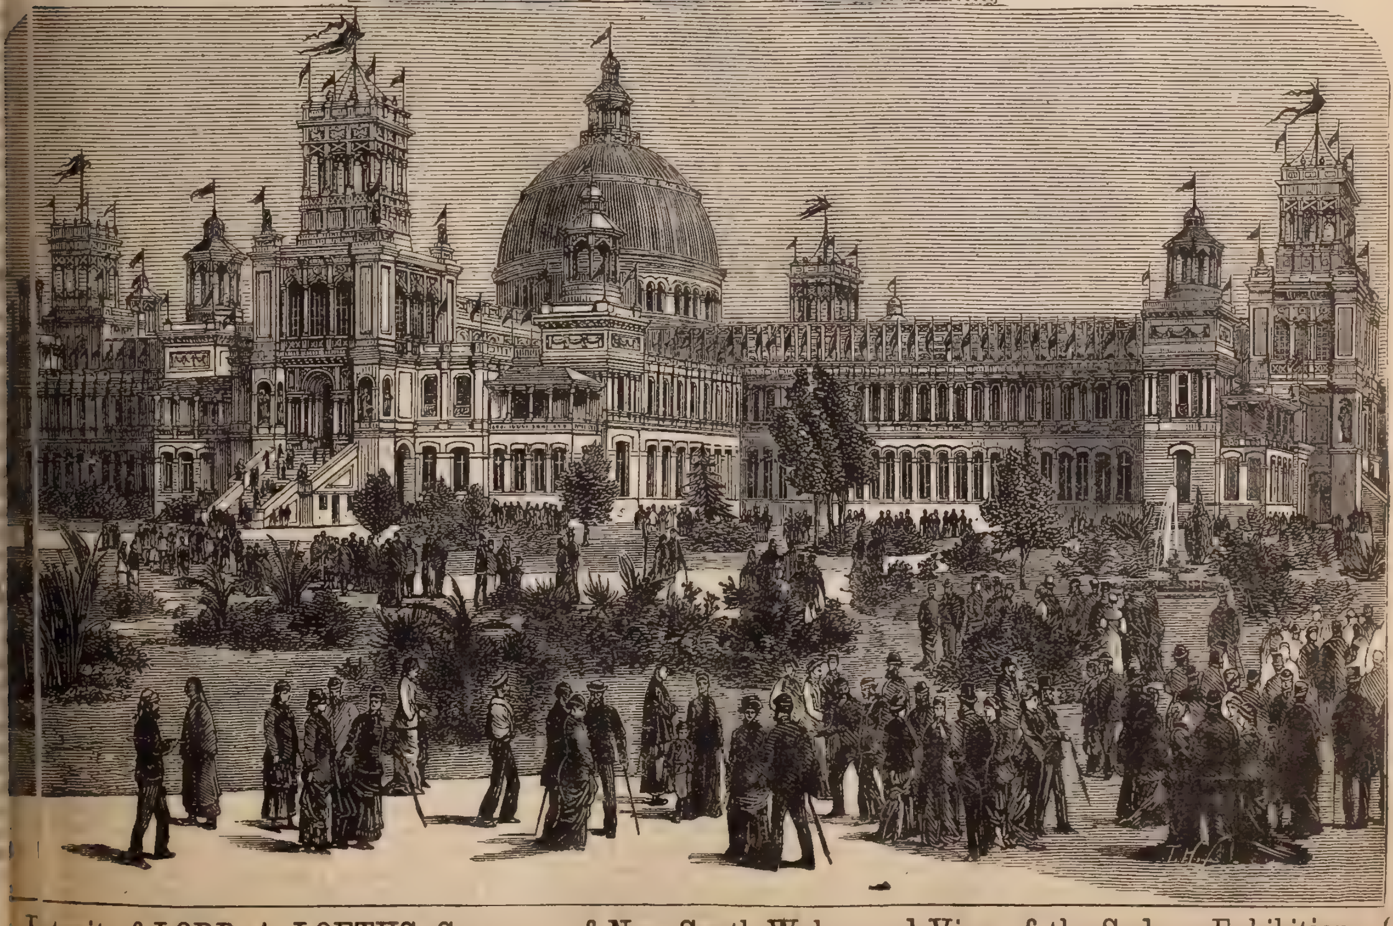
THE SALVATION ARMY; Work in New York.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH. (Continued.)

The Power of Christ. S. S. Lesson by Mrs. M. Baxter.

FOREIGN TOPICS: The British Electoral Campaign—Coolness between France and Russia—A British Colonel Captured by Brigands—A Chinese Ambassador Sentenced to Death—Execution of a Nihilist—Swallowing Land—A Jaguar Releasing an Englishman, etc.





Portrait of LORD A. LOFTUS, Governor of New South Wales, and View of the Sydney Exhibition.

LORD AUGUSTUS LOFTUS,

Governor of New South Wales.

Education—Diplomatic Appointments—The Royal Representative at the Marriage of Prince Leiningen—Transference to Berlin—Marriage —Removal to New South Wales.

The Right Hon. Sir Augustus William Frederick Spencer, commonly called Lord Augustus Loftus, is the fourth son of the second Marquis of Ely by his wife Anna Maria, daughter of Sir H. W. Dashwood, Bart. He was born October 4th, 1817, and is consequently now sixty-two years of age. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and entered at an early age the British diplomatic service, in which he rose to the highest honors, having been appointed attaché at Berlin in 1837. In 1844 he was promoted to be paid attaché at Stuttgart. Subsequently he accompanied Sir Stratford Canning (now Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe) on his special mission to the courts of Berlin, Vienna, Munich, and Athens (March, 1848).

Having been raised to the rank of Secretary of Legation at Stuttgart in 1852, he served in that capacity at Berlin in 1853, and he fulfilled the important duties of chargé d'affaires at the Prussian Court on no less than four occasions between the years 1853 and 1857, for periods varying between four and six months at a time. Having been appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Vienna in 1858, he was selected by Queen Victoria to represent Her Majesty at the marriage of her half-brother, His Serene Highness Prince Leiningen, with the Princess Mary of Baden, at Carlsruhe, in August, 1858. Lord A. Loftus was transferred to Berlin at the end of 1860.

On the elevation of the mission at Berlin to the rank of embassy, he was transferred to Munich, which was on that occasion raised to the rank of a first-class mission. His lordship had now been upwards of twenty-five years in the diplomatic corps, when it was thought fit to reward his distinguished services by bestowing upon him the Cross of Knight Commander of the Order of Bath. He was promoted to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the King of Prussia in 1866, and soon afterward advanced to the rank of a Knight Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath. He was sworn a Privy Councillor in 1868.

After the political changes which followed the battle of Sadowa, Lord Augustus Loftus was appointed Ambassador Extrarodinary and Plenipotentiary to the North German Confederation, and he had been upward of two years at his new post at the Embassy at Berlin, when the Franco-German war broke out, in July, 1870.

THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY.

He was transferred in the autumn of 1871 to the charge of the English embassy at the court of the Emperor Alexander II., at St. Petersburg. Never at any time had British relations with Russia been of a more delicate nature—never had the want been more keenly felt of an ambassador who should combine foresight with tact and unmistakable firmness.

Russia was then engaged in that incessant game of intrigue and violence which culminated in the late Russo-Turkish war, and was at the same time pushing in Asia as well as in Europe what she is pleased to call "her mission," and her progress toward the Oxus was threatening British security in India.

Under those critical circumstances, Lord A. Loftus was never found wanting in any of the qualities which an ambassador, situated as he was, had to display in no ordinary degree. The British Blue-Books of the last seven years bear testimony to his vigilance, to his energy; and his famous despatch of November 2d, 1876, in which he gives an account of a memorable conversation between the Czar and himself in the palace of Livadia, formed a prominent turning-point in those important negotiations.

After having been nearly eight years at this important post, and creditably discharged its onerous duties during so critical a time, Lord Augustus Loftus is now transferred to the equally honorable, but far less laborious and exacting, post of representative of Queen Victoria in New South Wales.

By his marriage (in 1845) with Emma, eldest daughter of Vice-Admiral Greville, C.B., Lord A. Loftus has had four chldren, of whom three are living, two sons, Augustus and Henry, and a daughter, married to Colonel the Hon. Frederick Wellesley, youngest son of Earl Cowley.

It may be of interest if we add to this outline of his career the following, which we find in the Russian daily papers at the period of his transference: "Much regret prevails among the British colony in St. Petersburg at the removal of Lord Augustus Loftus, who has been designated for the office of Governor-General of New South Wales. His lordship, who has represented the British Empire under the most trying circumstances at this court for nearly a decade, deserves, for the really admirable way in which he guarded the interests confided to his care, the highest gratitude and respect of his countrymen. He leaves not because his Government is in the least dissatisfied with his services, but entirely at his own wish.

"It is well known that Lord Augustus Loftus, the father of a large family, and not possessed of ample private means, has long been desirous of quitting a post which, although endowed with a large income, necessitates a far greater expenditure than his emoluments. Of all the leading capitals, St. Petersburg is the costliest; and, somehow or other, the British Ambassador at the Russian Court is expected to surpass in display all his colleagues accredited there.

"Having thus longed for his recall, continually delayed on account of the tension existing between England and Russia, it is quite natural that his Excellency should accept the offer made him. As Governor-General of New South Wales, Lord Augustus, transplanted from a sphere in which his mental powers were tried to the utmost, will enjoy comparative repose, and a salary equal to his present one ($35,000 per annum), without in the least entailing, however, such heavy cost of representation. The best wishes of his countrymen, who always found in him a ready counsellor and often generous patron, will escort Lord Augustus to the distant shores of the Australian continent."

The Reception of Lord Loftus at Sydney.

The Sydney Echo of August 4th, 1879, gave the following account:

"The arrival of our new Governor by the steamship Zealandia yesterday gave the public timely notice of the official landing, and the reception to-day was accompanied by an enthusiastic popular demonstration.

"This morning the city presented a gay appearance, as far as it could be produced by a liberal display of flags and streamers, and the ships in harbor were gay with bunting. An hour before the time appointed for the landing, crowds of citizens had gathered on the wharf and landing-places adjoining the stage opposite the Custom-House, and the concourse spread along the quay and streets to the number of about 10,000 persons.

"A royal salute was fired as the barge reached the landing-place, where his Excellency was received by Sir Henry Parkes, Premier. Afterward the mayor of Sydney advanced, shook hands, and, on behalf of the corporation of Sydney, offered to his lordship a cordial welcome to the city; and said they trusted that his Excellency might long enjoy the honorable position which he now occupied as representative of Her Most Gracious Majesty in this portion of Her Majesty's dominions.

"In reply, his Excellency thanked the mayor and corporation for their kind address and friendly greetings, which, he said, he interpreted as an expression of loyalty and attachment to the Queen. His Excellency assured them that during his residence in the colony it would be his constant aim to further the prosperity and welfare of Sydney, and to develop the commercial and industrial interests of the colo doing which he should feel that he was ing out the wishes of Her Majesty the Q who, in her tender solicitude, watched ov happiness and welfare of all her subjects parts of her extended empire.

"He had had a long sea-voyage, and alth the sea had for him its beauties and char had also its inconveniences and discom but he felt fully compensated by the marv beauty of this enchanting spot, which fa passed any thing he could conceive. H more than fully compensated by the kin cordial welcome he had received on landi these shores.

"His Excellency's remarks were fol with loud cheers, and as he proceeded to h riage the military band struck up the Na Anthem.

"His Excellency then entered the carri waiting for him, accompanied by his ai camp, his sons, and Sir Henry Parkes, start was made for Government House, a loud cheers from the surrounding spect Every balcony and point of vantage alo route was crowded with spectators, and l the guard were crowds of people, some i veyances and others on foot, eager to c glimpse of the new Governor, and chee cheer rent the air as he passed along.
gether the scene from the time of the dep from the Circular Quay was brilliant in t treme, and additional effect was given bells of the churches ringing out merry p

THE SYDNEY EXHIBITION.

Our frontispiece gives, with the port Lord Loftus, a picture of the front elevatio present Sydney Exhibition Building, whi covered glass building, like the Sydenhan tal Palace, and is one seventh of a mile lo

On the 30th of July, 1849, the late la
Prince Albert, the Consort of Her M Queen Victoria, propounded to four mem the Society of Arts, at Buckingham Pal conception of the Great Exhibition, and t established his title to the practical aut of a most important design. In it we prised powerful agencies tending to prom great fourfold benefit of progress in the trial arts, of increased abundance or dim stint of the means of living among men cific relations between countries foun common pursuits, and of what may be reciprocity in general culture.

In May, 1851, the Prince, who had his idea with much confidence and dil saw his design carried out with trium success. Its nearest analogue in past would appear to have been the Frankfor the sixteenth century.

Great discoveries are commonly to b in germ, either unobserved or imperfectl oped, long before the publication and ment which mark the stage of maturity idea, and makes them part of the gener erty of mankind. So came the printin so came the steam-engine, so have come inventions which have proved a means c ing and bounty to the race. The tru d'être for collections and exhibitions of th ucts of industry and skill was indicate great author Sully, two hundred and fif ago, who says, "I conceived a though pointing a large room with its first ra make a magazine for models of whatever curious in machinery, relating to wa trades, and all sorts of exercises, noble, and mechanical; that all those who asp perfection might improve themselves in lent school."

The experiment has been tried with success since 1851, in different Europe tals, and in the Centennial Exhibition country. Its latest manifestation took p September 17th, 1879, in the opening of t
ney International Exhibition, New South
The effort was in every way worthy of the and enterprise of the Australasian co

The building shown on our front page covers seven and a half acres of space. The Government voted a sum equivalent to $250,000 as an instalment toward its erection, but the total cost has been nearly double that sum.

The building has a nave 800 feet long, and transept 500 feet long, 50 feet wide, and 60 feet high, surrounded by a gallery 25 feet wide on each side, and two aisles 50 feet wide and 25 feet high. On the south-western side are what may be termed annexes, or continuations of the aisles, 450 feet long by 100 feet wide, and 25 feet high. On the north-eastern side is a basement 100 feet long, 75 feet wide, and 20 feet high. At the intersection of the nave and transepts a [illegible] dome, 112 feet in diameter, and towers 50 feet square at each of the four entrances, break the horizontal line of this vast structure.

The building was designed by Mr. James Barne colonial architect, to whom the city of Sydney is mainly indebted for its principal architectural adornments, and he personally superintended its erection. It was opened with great magnificence on September 17th, 1879, by Lord Augustus Loftus, the newly-appointed Governor of New South Wales, and will close, we believe during the present month.

The American representative at the exhibition is the Hon. Oliver M. Spencer, Consul-General of the United States at Melbourne, who will also represent this country at the approaching Melbourne Exhibition. Many American manufacturers are among the list of exhibitors at Sydney. Besides the usual array of sewing machines and printing presses, the visitors to this far-away exhibition have an opportunity of examining American books, carpets, artificial teeth, photographs, paints, canned goods, etc.—a totally insufficient exhibit, of course, to give foreigners any adequate idea of our resources, but enough to show that our people are beginning to awaken to the importance of advertising their wares in other markets than our own. Ten years ago Americans hardly knew there was a foreign market for anything but the raw materials; but last year our exports of manufactured articles reached $136,500,000.

There is not a year in which a new market does not open for some American product or manufacture, and often in the least likely places. We now send butter and cheese to the butter-making Netherlands, beef to England, steel to Sheffield, muslin to Manchester, watches to Switzerland, carpets to Kidderminster, and shoes to Northampton. England is as yet our best customer only because we are better advertized in England than elsewhere. That the distance of this market at the Antipodes has no deterring effect is shown by the fact that this city ships horse-cars to New Zealand at a cost of transportation of over $200 each, and agricultural implements to Australia.

A Converted Spanish Shoemaker.—Mr. Blamire, who, with Mr. Wigstone, left Mr. Spurgeon's College seven years ago to labor in Spain, [illegible]ted the following interesting narrative of God's blessing on their labor at the Home of Industry on February 19th: "At Vigo three of us were out one day selling Bibles. We sold none all that morning. I went into a shoemaker's shop and asked him to buy a Bible. He shook his head at the Bible. I gave him an outline of the book, beginning at the Old Testament 'In the beginning,' etc. Then we come to the New Testament and the Virgin Mary, and then you get their attention, etc. At last he bought one, and read through it rapidly. A friend of his went to see him one day, and said, 'You ought to come and hear these men preach.' He said, 'I have got a book of theirs here, but do not understand a word of it; I will go and hear them preach,' and, to use a Spanish expression, he got nailed on the spot,' and came to us every day to ask us questions. He had to give up his work for a fortnight. After many prayers and simple expositions of the Word he was saved. He said, 'I am happy now,' and that man has never looked back."

FAREWELL TO MY REGIMENT.

A Recollection by Major Malan.

"Because thou hast made the Lord, my refuge, the Most High, thy habitation, there shall no evil befall thee."—Ps. 91 : 9, 10.

ONE of the "standing orders" in God's Word is, "There shall no evil happen to the just" (Prov. 12 : 21), come what may. Let the foundations be cast down, the Lord's word to His people is, "Say ye to the righteous, It shall be well with him" (Isa. 3 : 10). Blessed assurance! "All things shall work together for good." "Nothing shall by any means hurt you." What unlimited promises of blessing and protection! Well may Christians, those who do indeed believe in the Lord Jesus, be commanded to "rejoice in the Lord alway."

No; no evil can happen to the righteous. It was no evil when the enemies of the Gospel massacred the helpless inhabitants of Merindol, in France, the home of my forefathers, because they worshipped God through Christ. They suffered for righteousness' sake, and theirs is the kingdom of heaven. It was no evil when the Socinian doctors of Geneva turned my beloved grandfather, pastor Malan, out of his ministerial office in the National Church because he preached Christ. It was no evil when he was dismissed from the professorship by which he maintained his family for the same cause. He knew this. He went back to my grandmother, who told me this story, and, throwing on the table a few francs, said, "Jenny, this is all we have in the world. Let us pray." He who declared that no evil shall happen to the righteous did not forsake him. It was no evil when I found myself, through the circumstances I have before narrated, led to leave the British army.

No; it was no evil. I have never ceased to thank God for having permitted it. No words of mine could adequately convey my sense of the blessing He has made this event to me. It was a great trial while it was going on. But its result, like the result of all His dealings with His people, is that I praise Him. "Call upon ME in the day of trouble. I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify ME" (Ps. 1 : 15). I did call on Him in my trouble; He did deliver me; and now it is my pleasure to glorify Him.

No evil. That which most troubled me in giving up my profession was leaving the little band of Christian soldiers in my own regiment. To them I was deeply attached; and I knew well that, although I might never speak to them upon the Gospel, in obedience to the order received, a smile would cheer them, and that my presence and example would help them in serving the Lord.

But even here the Lord assured me that His grace would be sufficient for them. I knew that HE would not fail His word, that they should never perish, and that none—man or devil—should take them out of His hands. It is now, at the time I am penning these lines, nearly four years since they left me to go to Hong Kong, and this is the report received by last post concerning them: "All the old hands remain steadfast in the faith."

The Lord has added others to this little church in my old regiment, and my heart is full of gratitude and praise to Him for these mercies to them and to me.

The time came for me to say farewell to those among whom I had tried to live as friend and brother, as far as the relentless demands of military discipline will allow. Twelve years, except two on the staff, had been spent among these brothers-in-arms. Toward each one I had a strong feeling of Christian love. The Lord gave me full proof in parting "how holily and justly and unblamably" I had behaved myself among them by His grace.

The night before I left the regiment, after I had bidden my comrades farewell on parade, had resigned the command "in orders" to the next senior officer, and had said good-by to my brother officers at mess, I invited any of my fellow-soldiers who wished to meet me in the room I had hired for them for reading God's Word and prayer. There was no disobedience of orders in this. I had resigned my commission and my command, and was virtually no longer a soldier. The room was full. Many there, Roman Catholics and Protestants, I never expected to see. I spoke to them of HIM only who is the Light of this dark world; urged them to take HIM as their Light, and to walk in His light.

I shall never forget my partings on that occasion. Next morning all my old brother officers went down to the town to see me off by the mail cart—a compliment which I duly appreciated, and which every soldier knows is not paid to a commanding officer who is not respected. I called on the general as I passed through Cape Town. He was most kind to me. I received much kindness from other officers. It was on the anniversary of the Lord's great deliverance toward me at the assault on Sebastopol that I had the joy once more to land in England.

When I landed I was very ill. I was worn out; my strength was exhausted. I now know that if I had not resigned my commission when I did, I should, humanly speaking, never have seen England again. My physician told me that I was a spirit in a shell, that I had no body in me. It is far better for Christians to depart and be with Christ; and for that we should all have an earnest desire. Nevertheless, to abide in the body may be more needful for others; and as long as He sees this good for us, we should be glad to remain to labor for Him.

Work for the Lord Jesus on this earth is, as far as we know, the highest honor that created beings can enjoy. Angels cannot tell sinners of salvation in His name. Only His redeemed on earth can do this. Yes; far from any evil, this very thing had prolonged my days. "The fear of the Lord prolongeth days" (Prov. 10 : 27).

No evil. I could have appealed to the Horse Guards against the restriction imposed upon me by the letter of the adjutant-general, but this I knew would be useless. A friend urged me, as a matter of principle, to allow the case to be brought forward in the House of Lords. He had interest enough to secure this. I declined for several reasons. One was: An appeal to Parliament would have implied that I was not satisfied with the Lord's will concerning me. As I was perfectly satisfied with it, and did not doubt that He had permitted all that had happened to me for His own glory and my abundant blessing, I had nothing to complain of or against which to appeal.

No evil indeed. My return to England brought me once more into the society of Christian friends. Some of my own relations gave me a warm welcome. The pleasure of meeting those we love soon makes us forget past trials. I enjoyed a long and delightful visit at Beckenham, with my beloved mother in the faith, and my kind friend her husband.

No evil. My retirement from the army was duly gazetted; the whole of that day my soul was full of praise and thanksgiving. I found myself continually saying these lines, most appropriate to the story of my life as a soldier:

"With mercy and with judgment
My web of time He wove;
And aye the dews of sorrow
Were lustred with His love.

I'll bless the Hand that guided,
I'll bless the Heart that planned,
When throned where glory dwelleth
In Emmanuel's land."

As I lay down my pen after having tried thus briefly to sketch a soldier's experience of the love of God, memory takes a retrospect of these years. Blessed be God the Father, all the sins are forgiven! Blessed be Christ the Saviour, who put them away by His own blood! Blessed be God the Holy Ghost, who revealed to me this priceless love, that precious Saviour! How many scenes rise before me! The Crimea, India, America, China, Singapore, and Africa, each has its special record of God's goodness. What countless and undeserved mercies!

SILVER WINGS.

A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage, Preached on Sunday Morning, March 21st, 1880.

"Though ye have lain among the pots, yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold."—Psalms 68 : 13.

In Egypt the Israelites had to Sleep among the Utensils of Work and Cookery—Sin the Hardest of all Taskmasters—I. What Religion will do for a Man's Heart—Cheerfulness without Religion—Trouble Kills it—The Christian Independent of Worldly Success—II. Religion Enables a Man to be Useful—Three Spectacles—Napoleon's Life and Death—Voltaire's End—Paul's Life Work—Death-bed Contrasts—A Minister's Son and his Infidel Friend—Scene at a Hotel—III. What Religion will do for a Man in Heaven—Watching of Loved Ones Gone Before—Only a Question of Time—How Louis Phillipe Lost his Empire.

I suppose you know what the Israelites did down in Egyptian slavery. They made bricks. Amid the utensils of the brick-kiln there were also other utensils of cookery—the kettles, the pots, the pans, with which they prepared their daily food—and when these poor slaves, tired of the day's work, lay down to rest, they lay down amid the implements of cookery and the implements of hard work. When they arose in the morning they found their garments covered with the clay and the smoke and the dust, and besmirched and begrimed with the utensils of cookery.

But after a while the Lord broke up that slavery, and He took these poor slaves into a land where they had better garb, bright and clean and beautiful apparel. No more bricks for them to make. Let Pharaoh make his own bricks. When David in my text comes to describe the transition of these poor Israelites from their bondage amid the brick-kilns into the glorious emancipation for which God had prepared them, he says, "Though ye have lain among the pots, yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold."

Miss Whately, the author of a celebrated book, "Life in Egypt," said she sometimes saw people in the East cooking their food on the tops of houses, and that she had often seen, just before sundown, pigeons, doves, which had, during the heat of the day, been hiding among the kettles and the pans with which the food was prepared, picking up the crumbs that they might find—just about the hour of sunset would spread their wings and fly heavenward, entirely unsoiled by the region in which they had moved, for the pigeon is a very cleanly bird. And as these pigeons flew away the setting sun would throw silver on their wings and gold on their breasts.

So you see it was not a far-fetched simile, or an unnatural comparison, when David in my text says to these emancipated Israelites, and says to all those who are brought out of any kind of trouble into any kind of spiritual joy, "Though ye have lain among the pots, yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold."

Sin is

THE HARDEST OF ALL TASKMASTERS.

Worse than Pharaoh, it keeps us trudging, trudging in a most degrading service; but after a while Christ comes, and He says, "Let my people go," and we pass out from among the brick-kilns of sin into the glorious liberty of the Gospel; we put on the clean robes of a Christian profession, and when at last we soar away to the warm nest which God has provided for us in Heaven, we shall go fairer than a dove, its wings covered with silver, and its feathers with yellow gold.

I am going to preach something this morning which some of you do not believe, and that is that the grandest possible adornment is the religion of Jesus Christ. There are a great many people who suppose that religion is a very different thing from what it really is. The reason men condemn the Bible is because they do not understand the Bible; they have not properly examined it. Dr. Johnson said that Hume told a minister in the bishopric of Durham that he had never particularly examined the New Testament, yet all his life warring against it. Halley, the astronomer, announced his scepticism to Sir Isaac Newton, and Sir Isaac Newton said, "Now, sir, I have examined the subject, and you have not, and I am ashamed that you, professing to be a philosopher, consent to condemn a thing you never have examined." And so men reject the religion of Jesus Christ because they really have never investigated it. They think it something impractical, something that will not work, something Pecksniffian, something hypocritical, something repulsive, when it is so bright and so beautiful you might compare it to a chaffinch, you might compare it to a robin redbreast, you might compare it to a dove, its wings covered with silver, and its feathers with yellow gold.

But how is it if a young man becomes a Christian? All through the club-rooms where he associates, all through the business circles where he is known, there is commiseration. They say, "What a pity that a young man who had such bright prospects should so have been despoiled by those Christians, giving up all his worldly prospects for something which is of no particular present worth!"

Here is a young woman who becomes a Christian, her voice, her face, her manners the charm of the drawing-room. Now all through the fashionable circles the whisper goes, "What a pity that such a bright light should have been extinguished, that such a graceful gait should be crippled, that such worldly prospects should be obliterated!" Ah! my friends, it can be shown that religion's ways are ways of pleasantness, and that all her paths are peace; that religion, instead of being dark, and doleful, and lachrymose, and repulsive, is bright and beautiful, fairer than a dove its wings covered with silver, and its feathers with yellow gold.

I. See, in the first place,

WHAT RELIGION WILL DO FOR A MAN'S HEART.

I care not how cheerful a man may naturally be before conversion, conversion brings him up to a higher standard of cheerfulness. I do not say he will laugh any louder, I do not say but that he may stand back from some forms of hilarity in which he once indulged; but there comes into his soul an immense satisfaction.

A young man, not a Christian, depends upon worldly successes to keep his spirits up. Now he is prospered, now he has large salary, now he has a beautiful wardrobe, now he has pleasant friends, now he has more money than he knows well how to spend, every thing goes bright and well with him. But trouble comes—there are many young men in the house this morning who can testify out of their own experience that sometimes to young men trouble does come—his friends are gone, his salary is gone, his health is gone; he goes down, down. He becomes sour, cross, queer, misanthropic, blames the world, blames society, blames the church, blames every thing, rushes perhaps to the intoxicating cup to drown his trouble, but instead of drowning his trouble drowns his body, and drowns his soul.

But here is a Christian young man. Trouble comes to him. Does he give up? No. He throws himself back on the resources of Heaven. He says, "God is my Father. Out of all these disasters I shall pluck advantage for my soul. All the promises are mine—Christ is mine, Christian companionship is mine, Heaven is mine. What though my apparel be worn out? Christ gives me a robe of righteousness. What though my money be gone? I have in the promise, 'All are yours.' What though my worldly friends fall away? Ministering angels are my body-guard. What though my fare be poor and my bread be scant? I sit at the King's banquet."

A TITLE DEED TO THE WHOLE UNIVERSE

Oh, what a poor, shallow stream is worldly enjoyment compared with the deep, broad, overflowing river of God's peace, rolling midway in the Christian heart! Sometimes you have gone out on the iron-bound beach of the se when there has been a storm on the ocean, an you have seen the waves dash into white foam a your feet. They did not do you any harm While there, you thought of the chapter writte by the Psalmist, and perhaps you recited it t yourself while the storm was making commentar upon the passage: "God is our refuge an strength, a very present help in time of trouble Therefore will I not fear though the earth be removed, and though the mountans be carried int the midst of the sea; though the waters there roar and be troubled, though the mountain shake with the swelling thereof. Selah."

Oh! how independent the religion of Chris makes a man of worldly success and worldly ci cumstances! Nelson, the night before his las battle, said, "To-morrow I shall win either peerage or a grave in Westminster Abbey." An it does not make much difference to the Christian whether he rises or falls in worldly matters he has everlasting renown any way. Other plumage may be torn in the blast, but that sou adorned with Christian grace, is fairer tha the dove its wings covered with silver, and it feathers with yellow gold.

You and I have found out that people who pr tend to be happy are not always happy. Look a that young man caricaturing the Christian religion, scoffing at every thing good, going int roystering drunkenness, dashing the champagn bottle to the floor, rolling the glasses from th bar-room counter, laughing, shouting, stampin the floor, shrieking. Is he happy? I will go t his midnight pillow. I will see him turn the ga off. I will ask myself if the pillow on which h sleeps is as soft as the pillow on which that pu young man sleeps. Ah! no. When he open his eyes in the morning, will the world be bright to him as that young man who r tired at night saying his prayers, invoking God blessing upon his own soul and the souls of h comrades, and father and mother and brothe and sister far away? No, no. His laughte will ring out from the saloon so that you hea it as you pass by, but it is hollow laughter; in is the snapping of heart-strings and the rattle prison gates. Happy! that young man happy Let him fill high the bowl; he cannot drown a upbraiding conscience.

Let the balls roll through the bowling-alley the deep rumble and the sharp crack cannot ove power the voices of condemnation. Let hi whirl in the dance of sin and temptation an death. All the brilliancy of the scene cann make him forget the last look of his mother he left home, when she said to him, "Now, m son, you will do right, I am sure you will right; you will, won't you?" That young ma happy? Why, across every night there flits th shadows of eternal darkness; there are adde coiled up in every cup; there are vultures despair striking their iron beak into his hear there are skeleton fingers of grief pinching the throat.

I come in amid the clicking of the glasses a under the flashing of the chandeliers, and I cr "Woe! woe! woe! The way of the ungod shall perish. There is no peace, saith my Go to the wicked. The way of transgressors hard." Oh! my friends, there is more joy one drop of Christian satisfaction than in who rivers of sinful delight. Other wings may drenched of the storm and splashed of the te pest, but the dove that comes in through th window of this heavenly ark has wings like t dove covered with silver, and her feathers wi yellow gold.

II. Again I remark, religion is an adornme in the style of into which it inducts a man. Here are tw young men. The one has fine culture, exquis wardrobe, plenty of friends, great worldly su cess, but he lives for himself. His chief care for his own comfort. He lives uselessly. H dies unregretted. Here is another young ma His apparel may not be so good, his educati may not be so thorough. He lives for othe s happiness is to make others happy. He is self-denying as that dying soldier, falling in the nks, when he said, "Colonel, there is no need those boys tiring themselves by carrying me the hospital; let me die just where I am."

USEFULNESS

So this young man of whom I speak loves d, wants all the world to love Him, is not amed to carry a bundle of clothes up that k alley to the poor. Which of those ing men do you admire the better? The one ham, the other a prince imperial. Oh, do you ow of any thing, my hearer, that is more utiful than to see a young man start out for rist?

Here is some one falling; he lifts him up. re is a vagabond boy; he introduces him to a sion school. Here is a family freezing to th; he carries them a scuttle of coal. There eight hundred millions perishing in midnight then darkness; by all possible means he s to send them the Gospel. He may be ghed at, and he may be sneered at, and he be caricatured; but he is not ashamed to everywhere, saying, "I am not ashamed of Gospel of Christ. It is the power of God the wisdom of God unto salvation." Such oung man can go through every thing. There o force on earth or in hell that can resist h..

show you

THREE SPECTACLES.

pectacle the first: Napoleon passes by with host that went down with him to Egypt, and with him through Russia, and crossed the tinent on the bleeding heart of which he set iron heel, and across the quivering flesh of h went grinding the wheels of his gun-car- es—in his dying moment asking his attend- to put on his military boots for him.

pectacle the second: Voltaire, bright and ned and witty and eloquent, with tongue voice and stratagem infernal, warring nst God and poisoning whole kingdoms with infidelity, yet applauded by the clapping ds of thrones and empires and continents— last words, in delirium supposing Christ ding by the bedside—his last words, "Crush wretch!"

pectacle the third: Paul—Paul, insignificant erson, thrust out from all refined association, rged, spit on, hounded like a wild beast from to city, yet trying to make the world good Heaven full; announcing resurrection to e who mourned at the barred gates of the l; speaking consolations which light up the of widowhood and orphanage and want the glow of certain and eternal release; aunted before those who could take his life, heek flushed with transport, and his eye on ven; with one hand shaking defiance at all e foes of earth and all the principalities of and with the other hand beckoning mes- er angels to come and bear him away, as he "I am now ready to be offered, and the of my departure is at hand; I have fought good fight, I have finished my course, I kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up ne a crown of righteousness which the Lord, ighteous Judge, will give me."

hich of the three spectacles do you most ire? When the wind of death struck the ueror and the infidel they were tossed like gulls in a tempest, drenched of the wave and of the hurricane, their dismal voices heard ugh the everlasting storm; but when the and the wind of death struck Paul, like an ross he made a throne on the tempest, and day floated away into the calm, clear sum- of Heaven, brighter than the dove, its wings red with silver, and its feathers with yellow go.

! are you not in love with such a religion— igion that can do so much for a man while ves, and so much for a man when he comes ie? I suppose you may have noticed the rast between the departure of a Christian the departure of an infidel. Deodorus, dy- n chagrin because he could not compose a equal to the joke uttered at the other end of his table. Zeuxis dying in a fit of laughter at the sketch of an aged woman—a sketch made by his own hand. Mazarin, dying playing cards, his friend holding his hands because he was unable to hold them himself.

All that on one side, compared with the departure of the Scotch minister, who said to his friends, "I have no interest as to whether I live or die; if I die I shall be with the Lord, and if I live the Lord will be with me." Or the last words of Washington, "It is well." Or the last words of McIntosh, the learned and the great, "Happy!" Or the last word of Hannah More, the Christian poetess, "Joy!" Or the last word of the wounded and dying soldier in the hospital, in his delirium mistaking the call to the other world for the roll call of the regiment, and answering in his last moment, "Here!" Or those thousands of Christians who have gone, saying, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit. Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." "O death! where is thy sting? O grave! where is thy victory?"

BEHOLD THE CONTRAST.

Behold the charm of the one, behold the darkness of the other. Now I know it is very popular in this day for young men to think there is something more charming in scepticism than in religion. They are ashamed of the old-fashioned religion of the cross, and they pride themselves on their free thinking on all these subjects. My young friends, I want to tell you what I know from observation that while scepticism is a beautiful land at the start, it is the great Sahara Desert at the last.

Years ago

A MINISTER'S SON

went off from home to college. At college he formed the acquaintance of a young man whom I shall call Ellison. Ellison was an infidel. Ellison scoffed at religion, and the minister's son soon learned from him the infidelity, and when he went home at vacation broke his father's heart by his denunciations of Christianity. Time passed on and vacation came, and the minister's son went off to spend the vacation, and was on a journey and came to a hotel. The hotel-keeper said, "I am sorry that to-night I shall have to put you in a room adjoining one where there is a very sick and dying man. I can give you no other accommodation." "Oh!" said the young college student and minister's son, "that will make no difference to me except the matter of sympathy with anybody that is suffering."

The young man retired to his room, but could not sleep. All night long he heard the groaning of the sick man, or the step of the watchers, and his soul trembled. He thought to himself, "Now there is only a thin wall between me and a departing spirit. How if Ellison should know how I feel? How if Ellison should find out how my heart flutters? What would Ellison say if he knew my scepticism gave way?" He slept not. In the morning, coming down, he said to the hotel-keeper, "How is the sick man?" "Oh!" said the hotel keeper, "he is dead, poor fellow! the doctors told us he could not last through the night." "Well," said the young man, "what was the sick one's name; where is he from?" "Well," said the hotel-keeper, "he is from Providence College." "Providence College! what is his name?" "Ellison." "Ellison!" Oh, how the young man was stunned! It was his old college mate—dead without any hope.

It was many hours before the young man could leave that hotel. He got on his horse and started homeward, and all the way he heard something saying to him, "Dead! Lost! Dead! Lost!" He came to no satisfaction until he entered the Christian life, until he entered the Christian ministry, until he became one of the most eminent missionaries of the cross, the greatest Baptist missionary the world has ever seen since the day of Paul, no superior to Adoniram Judson. Mighty on earth, mighty in Heaven—Adoniram Judson. Which do you like the best, Judson's scepticism or Judson's Christian life? Judson's suffering for Christ's sake, Judson's almost martyrdom?

Oh! young man, take your choice between these two kinds of lives. Your own heart tells you this morning the Christian life is more admirable, more peaceful, more comfortable, and more beautiful. Oh! if religion does so much for a man on earth,

III.. WHAT WILL IT DO FOR HIM IN HEAVEN?

That is the thought that comes over me now. If a soldier can afford to shout "Huzza!" when he goes into the battle, how much more jubilantly he can afford to shout "Huzza!" when he has gained the victory! If religion is so good a thing to have here, how bright a thing it will be in Heaven!

I want to see that young man when the glories of Heaven have robed and crowned him. I want to hear him sing when all the huskiness of earthly colds is gone, and he rises up with the great doxology. I want to know what standard he will carry when marching under arches of pearl in the army of banners. I want to know what company he will keep in a land where they are all kings and queens forever and ever.

If I have induced one of you this morning to begin a better life, then I want to know it. I may not in this world clasp hands with you in friendship, I may not hear from your own lips the story of temptation and sorrow; but I will clasp hands with you when the sea is passed and the gates are entered.

That I might woo you to a better life, and that I might show you the glories with which God clothes His dear children in Heaven, I wish I could this morning swing back one of the twelve gates that there might dash upon your ear one shout of the triumph, that there might flame upon your eyes one blaze of the splendor.

Oh! when I speak of that good land, you involuntarily think of some one there that you loved—father, mother, brother, sister, or dear little child garnered already. You want to know what they are doing this morning. I will tell you what they are doing. Singing. You want to know what they wear. I will tell you what they wear. Coronets of triumph. You wonder why oft they look to the gate of the temple, and watch and wait. I will tell you why they watch and wait and look to the gate of the temple. For your coming. I shout upward the news to-day, for I am sure some of you will repent and start for Heaven. Oh! ye bright ones before the throne, your earthly friends are coming.

Angels, poising mid-air, cry up the name. Gatekeeper of Heaven, send forward the tidings. Watchman on the battlements celestial, throw the signal.

"Oh!" you say, "religion I am going to have; it is only a question of time." My brother, I am afraid that you may lose Heaven

THE WAY LOUIS PHILIPPE LOST HIS EMPIRE.

The Parisian mob came around the Tuileries. The National Guard stood in defence of the palace, and the commander said to Louis Philippe, "Shall I fire now? Shall I order the troops to fire? With one volley we can clear the place." "No," said Louis Philippe, "not yet." A few minutes passed on, and then Louis Phillipe, seeing the case was hopeless, said to the general, "Now is the time to fire." "No," said the general, "it is too late now; don't you see that the soldiers are exchanging arms with the citizens? It is too late." Down went the throne of Louis Philippe. Away from the earth went the House of Orleans, and all because the king said "Not yet, not yet."

May God forbid that any of you should adjourn this great subject of religion, and should postpone assailing your spiritual foes until it is too late—too late, you losing a throne in Heaven the way that Louis Philippe lost a throne on earth.

> "When the Judge descends in might,
> Clothed in majesty and light;
> When the earth shall quake with fear,
> Where, O where, wilt thou appear?"

ARNOLD PERCIVAL MONTAIGNE;

Or the Heir of a Deferred Inheritance.

A Thrilling Story by Henry Martin, Author of "Felicia Cuffe."

(Continued from page 183.)

Alick Gogharty has an Interview with the Jesuit—War Declared—A Mandamus Served on the Jesuit—Interview between Percival and Alick—A Decision Arrived at.

Alick Gogharty upon asking to speak with the Superior perceived both suspicion and reluctance upon the attendant brother's face. He therefore, with pardonable guile, told him who he was, and that he had called to arrange about the deeds which his father had left in his custody. Both the attendant brother and the Superior, when they received Alick's message, supposed, as the sender intended they should, that the arrangement meant was payment of the money demanded. With promptitude, therefore, Alick and his friend were ushered into the Superior's presence.

"My father," said Alick, after one or two formal and introductory remarks, "has not repeated his application to you for his bonds since his interview with you in this room, because unable to redeem them on your terms, he has left them lie in your custody, Superior, hoping, I confess, that events would not require him to use them. Circumstances, however, have transpired of late which make it necessary that they should be in his own keeping, and I have his power of attorney to authorize your handing them over to me, which I respectfully, but firmly, require you to do."

"Certainly, Mr. Gogharty," responded the Superior. "That I am quite ready to do; but of course you know the covenant between your father and myself; he has, for service rendered, to reimburse this sacred foundation £2000, which sum, I take it for granted, he has commissioned you to pay."

"No, he has not," promptly replied Alick. "It is not in his power, and if it were, with my consent it never should be done."

Affecting great surprise at such an absence of honorable regard in a son for his father's liabilities, the Superior was about to interrupt, when Alick said,

"Stay, Superior, until I have done. You speak of service rendered, but how such a perversion of language is possible in one calling himself a servant of religion is more than I can understand. I am quite aware of what you refer to, Superior—the perversion by nefarious schemes of my friend Arnold Montaigne from the faith of his fathers, and that for the most sinister motives in my father's mind. Call you that service, Mr. Superior! and service to my father forsooth! Why, every principle of right should have made you repudiate such a task, and have influenced you to warn my father from the hideous crime which he, a Protestant, was seeking to have perpetrated. No, Superior, there is no definition of service current or possible in any civilized community in the world that would include the task you performed, or rather sought to perform. And therefore, as you have not the shadow of a right to hold those documents, in an evil hour put within your power, I call upon you here to give them up."

Alick moved a step or so toward the man he addressed in token of an expectation of compliance, but the Superior had no intention of surrender; quite the opposite. "Mr. Gogharty," he said, "you have taken upon you, sir, to tell me my duty. I now tell you, young man, what is yours; and my suggestion to your father when he was here I in conclusion repeat to you. Employ the resources of this Montaigne to relieve you if your own are insufficient, for I do not question that with him your influence, for reason I need not explain, is unbounded."

"Superior," retorted Alick, "do not encourage yourself with the thought that, to shield my father and spare my own feelings as a son, I will screen you. Too long has my father warranted you in calculating upon this method of defence. Exposure will be his temporal ruin, no doubt, but I will take care to raise him from that, and, thank God! I am in a position now to do so. Hold those deeds if you like, and refuse my authorized demand; my possession of them is only a question of time. But make up your mind to this, Superior: you shall answer in a court of justice, and that speedily, both for your reception and your retention of them. Good-day, Superior." And with this curt salute Alick, followed by his friend, left the apartment.

When they reached the street, Alick's friend said, "That was capitally done, and though the fellow, thoroughly disciplined by his system, braved it out, I could see he didn't feel altogether comfortable. But what will be your next move, my friend?"

"Oh," replied Alick, "I haven't the least uncertainty about that. I shall proceed to ——, and see the lawyer who is acting for the heir of my father's late client. I shall put him in possession of all the facts, and leave him, or rather urge him, to deal about those deeds both with my father and this Jesuit. I know pretty well what Mr. Hawke is: he's as keen and active as a sleuth hound on the scent. This case will excite all his energies, and I prognosticate rather lively times for this Jesuit."

Alick's prophecy was not long of fulfilment. In a few days a mandamus was served upon the Jesuit Superior for the surrender of the pledged documents. Matters, he felt, therefore, were becoming rather serious. From his standpoint as a Jesuit, we know, he had done nothing either in regard to Percival or the deeds to merit either blame or punishment; he had only been, in his belief, subtly zealous for his church. But at the same time he was fully conscious he should never get the general public to see with him.

A consultation, therefore, was held by the senior members of the Jesuit household as to the most expedient method of meeting the present difficulty; and it was resolved to temporize matters, not, however, with the heir's lawyer, nor with Alick, but with Mr. Gogharty, senior. "He is more pliable," said the Superior, "and no doubt if an offer were made, within his means, of securing those deeds, he will snap at it." Accordingly, this gentleman soon received a courteously worded invitation from the Superior to an interview at St. Xavier's, which the lawyer, without consulting or even informing Alick, by return of post accepted. While his father was absent from home, fulfilling this acceptance, Alick ran over to Oakwood Hall, the newly purchased residence of Percival, to see him.

"Percival," said Alick, after a brief introductory conversation, "I am sorry to say it is a matter anything but pleasurable that I have come to see you about." And then giving a significant glance at Jemmy, who was standing on one side, he gave Percival to understand that he wanted some private conversation with him.

"Jemmy," said Percival quietly, "go tell Tom I shall need the carriage in an hour." Jemmy in a twinkling comprehended the hint.

He then informed him of the whole of the circumstances concerning the deeds, of which we have already put the reader in possession. After this recital, Alick went on to say:

"Mr. Hawke, the heir's law agent, showed more kindness of heart in the matter than any one had given him the credit of possessing. He was quite reluctant, Percival, to drag the affair to light, lest in prosecuting this Jesuit Superior he should have to expose my father, who is a brother professional man, and thus also pain me.

"But, Percival—but, Percival," repeated Alick, in deep emotion, "my father's conduct all through has been so bad, each revelation of his character, to my bitterness of soul, only opening up to view deeper and deeper gulfs of iniquity, that I cannot, Heaven help me! seek to shield him any longer."

"Oh, Alick!" cried Percival, "your tidings are unutterably sad, and I cannot express my grief for your dreadful trouble, and sore predicament; and what can I say, my dear friend, to comfort you, especially as my wretched weakness and fickleness are at the bottom of all yo are suffering? Had I been faithful, as was m duty, to my dear father's memory and his Protestant creed, this Jesuit Superior, there is n ground to question, would have kept his promise to your father, and at the twelve months close would, without fee, have returned him hi deeds; or even when I was beguiled from th faith, had I continued in my folly this harn would not have reached you; so that in either way Alick—and I say it with deepest shame an remorse—my unstable soul is at the very roo of all your trial.

"Alick, let me pay that money to this mar which he makes the condition of surrenderin the deeds, and then allow the matter to pas into oblivion, and be settled quietly. I fe bound to offer some atonement for my folly, an you well know that this is to me the easiest an smallest I can make."

"Ah, Percival," rejoined Alick, "permit m to say you are, I fear, quite too free with yo money. Three thousand pounds for Arthu Lemaire, and the two thousand which you no propose for the Jesuit, would make, you shoul see, a considerable aggregate. But, Perciva it cannot, must not be. Every moral instin within me revolts at the thought of those Je uits in —— encouraging fraud and preying sc free upon society, and that in the name of r ligion; and, above all, of making booty of th substance of the old knight, Sir Percival, yo testator, that sturdiest of Protestants. Ho ever, there can be no debate on the matter. is settled beyond change between Mr. Hawk and me that this affair shall come before a pu lic tribunal; that is, Percival," added Alic "if you, sinking personal considerations, w give your consent; and it is to get this that have come."

"Heaven bless you, Alick!" exclaimed Pe cival, as he clasped his hand. "Was ever ma so favored with a friend as I am in you? Th only thing is, you make me feel so little besi you, Alick. I have no hesitation, however, replying to your question. It will, I kno bleed my very heart, Alick, to speak in op court the details of my treacherous, most unf ial, and apostatizing folly—my insane dream an hour; but let it bleed. If it help to bri these spiritual conspirators to justice, and gi me opportunity of stating in public, before m countrymen, the grounds of my return from Christ-dishonoring and superstitious creed, it a small thing that I should suffer. Alick, wh you will, summon me as a witness; I shall a pear."

"Thank you, Percival," said Alick. "Fro what I know of your public spirit, I did not a ticipate a different answer; but still, as I ha stated, Mr. Hawke and myself felt it was on right that you should be consulted. That ma ter now settled' I wish to talk with you abo another thing," added Alick. "There are t points, you see, Percival, in this affair abo that Superior and those deeds—one, that received them knowing they were, I am forc to say, embezzled; and the other, should th count happen to fail, that he retains them und a pretence of having fulfilled his contract in yo conversion, Percival, to the Church of Ron of which he declares, as my unfortunate fatl tells me, 'he has certain proof.'

"Now, Percival, old fellow, if the indictme should reach this stage, I would have you to well prepared to assert clearly and boldly bef all who may be present your firm adhesion pure scriptural Protestant belief, and the grour of your rejection of the Romish creed. I w now say good-by, Percival, for I promised see Mr. Hawke as soon as possible after I h brought the matter before you. I left my ho with your Tom, whom I saw as I came up avenue near the stables, and will go to hi Good-by!"

Jemmy, following within call, came to wh Alick mounted. With a warm adieu, the lat gave rein to his steed and soon vanished.

(To be continued.)

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Work in New York.

Characteristics of the Army—Harry Hill's—The Mayor's Prohibition—The General's Ultimatum—Crowded Meeting in Water Street—The Hudson River Mission Hall—Mr Railton's Plans.

The daily journals of New York have devoted a considerable portion of their space to the operations of the Salvation Army in the city. But readers who form their estimate of the Army and its labors from those reports are likely to form a very partial, if not absolutely erroneous, opinion. Covert sneers and half-concealed contempt run as an undercurrent through out their descriptions. They speak of this little band of devoted Christians as Nehemiah and his laborers were spoken of by their enemies, who said "What do these feeble Jews? Will they make an end in a day? Will they revive the stones out of the heaps of rubbish?" But the Christian who knows that "it is not by might, nor by power, but by the Spirit of the Lord," that souls are won for Him, needs only to follow the Salvation Army through one day's work to see why such writers are deceived, and to cherish a very different hope as to the results of their efforts.

The first characteristic of this little band that impresses a Christian spectator is their reliance on God, and the next is their faith in the power of prayer. Those two characteristics, which distinguish every one of the detachment, are the key to the secret of their success. They know their own weakness, their own incapacity, but they believe that God can work through the meanest, the most inadequate means—that He can work through them—and they believe also with a fervor of faith which we have rarely seen equalled that He will work through them in answer to their prayers. What Christian will question, with these two elements in their character, that they are laborers for Jesus whose work should have the hearty indorsement and earnest prayers of every lover of the Saviour?

AT HARRY HILL'S.

The service at this most notorious of New York's haunts on Sunday night, March 14th—the first indoor service in the city, to which we briefly alluded in our last issue—was an event scarcely any who witnessed it will ever forget. A variety performance is held in the place every Sunday night, and a large crowd of men and women who never enter a place of worship regularly congregate there to spend the evening in smoking and drinking, and listening to music and worldly songs. The same crowd, filling every seat in area and gallery, and blocking up all the avenues, was present when Mr. Railton and his companions replaced the usual occupants of the stage.

In a few well-chosen words Mr. Railton explained to his hearers why he was there, and what he hoped to accomplish through the power of the Spirit. Then the hymn "You must be a Lover of the Lord" was sung, and at its conclusion he pronounced the words (novel within those walls) "Let us pray." Mr. Railton knelt on the stage, with his face to the audience, and offered an earnest prayer, which was followed by prayers from the other officers of the Army. Then the hymn "I'm a Happy Soldier on my way to Heaven" was sung, and at its conclusion Mr Railton read the parable of the Marriage Supper (Luke 14 : 16–24), and in stirring words, and with impassioned earnestness, urged his hearers to make no excuses, but come to the Saviour there and then.

Each member of the band afterward addressed the meeting in simple, unadorned language, speaking of their own conversion and of the happiness they had enjoyed since coming to the Saviour, and begging those who heard them to come too.

At nine o'clock Harry Hill stepped upon the stage and made an explanation. He dwelt principally on the—to him—incomprehensible conduct of Mr. Railton in refusing remuneration for "his services." Mr. Hill said twenty-five cents admission had been charged, and he was prepared to pay the Salvation Army twenty, or five-and-twenty dollars, as he would any other company who came on that stage; but Mr. Railton had obstinately refused to receive a cent. He did not know "how he expected to get a living." Mr. Railton then thanked Mr. Hill for his offer, and explained why he could not accept the money, and told the meeting that he had no fear for their living; "the Lord always provided for those who trusted in Him."

Mr. Hill's speech had been regarded as a sign that the service was over, and the regular performance was about to commence. Cigars were lighted, and drinks called for. Amid the clatter that ensued Mr. Railton and his friends fell on their knees once more and besought God that although no apparent good had been done, yet that the word spoken might not return to Him void. The sight of the giddy, frivolous throng conversing in merry tones with each other, while the Army knelt on the stage, was a deeply impressive spectacle.

THE MAYOR'S PROHIBITION.

An application had previously been made to the Mayor for permission to preach in the streets. The Mayor informed Mr. Railton that permission would be cheerfully given if he were an ordained minister. On the Commissioner stating that the only commission he held was from General Booth, the Mayor replied that the city ordinances would not allow him to grant permission. This was a disappointment; but still hope was not lost, and Mr. Railton forwarded to the Mayor an earnest appeal to grant the desired authority, and, as an ultimatum, informed him that unless he received it in two days he must reluctantly remove his headquarters to another city. As the Mayor remained obdurate, the headquarters will be located at Philadelphia, three of the officers remaining in New York to carry on the work.

IN WATER STREET.

The old Mission House at the corner of Dover and Water Streets was densely crowded on Thursday afternoon, March 18th, to listen to the exhortations of the Army. Sailors, stevedores, laborers of all kinds were there in large numbers, and listened attentively to the earenst words of the speakers. Prayer, singing, and simple but impressive addresses occupied two hours, and many hard and callous countenances were at the close marked with tears.

Every evening last week, services were held at

THE HUDSON RIVER MISSION HALL,

at Twenty-ninth Street and Ninth Avenue, and on several evenings the room has been so crowded that it was found necessary to hold an overflow meeting at Dr. Tyng's Mission Hall. The same plans of conducting the service were observed as at the first meeting at Harry Hill's, except that at the Mission members of the Army walked down the aisles while hymns were being sung, and spoke with any whose countenances indicated that their hearts were touched.

The service on Thursday night, March 18th, was unusually impressive. A deep solemnity pervaded the crowded meeting, and at its conclusion several persons knelt at the platform and asked the prayers of the congregation that they might find peace in believing.

When Mr. Railton asked for quarter-minute testimonies for Christ, many rose in different parts of the building, and in a few words spoke of the joy they had experienced since they had been saved. Two young men said that they had recently come to America, and they had found Christ through the instrumentality of the Salvation Army in England.

Mr. Railton has secured the Odeon Theatre at Newark for services, and on last Sunday he and two of his officers occupied the stage there, three of the band remaining in New York, while the other two are laboring in Philadelphia.

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London) for March may be had at the office of the CHRISTIAN HERALD. Price six cents.

MR. GWYTHER AND THE DYING INFIDEL.

THE late Rev. James Gwyther was hastening home from a committee meeting one very busy day to prepare for evening service when a Christian surgeon met him and begged him to call upon an avowed infidel, who might die in an hour, and could not live a day. He went at once. The sick man had been known to him for many years as being honest, sober, and industrious. On his arriving at the door the wife exclaimed, "I am glad to see you, Mr. Gwyther; but I fear my husband will not receive you."

"Say, please, I have come to make friendly inquiries, and should like to shake hands with him once more."

On entering the sick-room he was accosted by the sick man. "I am pleased to see you, Mr. Gwyther, but mind, as a friend, not as a minister."

"As a friend I came, and it would be unkind not to do so when I heard you were ill."

For some time they chatted about general matters and the future of the family. At last Mr. Gwyther rose to leave. Fixing his keen, tearful eye upon the man, he said, "And now I suppose I must say farewell—perhaps forever."

"But you will call again, Mr. Gwyther?"

"Yes, early in the morning. But, my friend, you may not be here to receive me. Now, as a minister, I shall not presume, contrary to your wish, to offer a word of counsel; still, as a friend, let me ask you to give me one promise."

"And what is that?"

"That when I am gone you will offer a favorite prayer of mine. It will do no harm; it may do you much good. I will tell you why I ask it. My honest conviction is that you fail to see eye to eye with me because you have not humbled yourself to ask light from God. That is why I wish you for once to pray."

"And what is the prayer?"

"'Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me.'"

"I learned that as a child from my mother. Well, I promise you. Good-by."

Next morning at nine o'clock Mr. Gwyther was there again.

"My husband will be glad to see you this time—and as a minister too," exclaimed the wife. "Thank God, light has begun to break upon his mind."

So it was. On entering the room Mr. Gwyther found the man very weak, but ready to converse. He told the struggle it had been to keep the promise that had been extracted from him the previous night. During the struggle the thought occurred that it was pride which kept him from yielding; and that pride and self-righteousness had been his besetting sins through life; that in very deed he was a sinner—and one doubly guilty because he had in vain tried to stifle convictions which had never left him; that he deserved, and would receive, punishment, if he died impenitent. Then the thought of God as revealed in Christ occurred to him. He remembered the Saviour's mercy to the malefactor. He began to long for salvation from sin and pride, and since God alone could make so radical a change as he needed, how reasonable it was that he should pray! The words put into his lips by Mr. Gwyther exactly expressed his new-born desires, and without further delay he determined to crucify his pride.

At midnight he had risen in bed and turned upon his knees. Hour after hour found him still praying, and at dawn of day he was able to say, "Not my will, but Thine be done." Peace, deep and sweet, "passing all understanding," possessed his mind and heart. And now he wished only to express his gratitude to Mr. Gwyther, and to ask for further instruction.

With what gladness of heart it would be given we can well imagine. And the fact that it was received with the meekness of a little child accounts for the joy which reigned in the heart of the man whose life was ebbing away. He died at noon, glorifying and praising the Lord his God.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

THE aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50 per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to MR. BENJAMIN AITKEN, 63 Bible House, New York. The paper may also be obtained weekly from all newsdealers in the United States and Canada.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of specimen copies to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

SUBSCRIBERS frequently write to us for single copies of the CHRISTIAN HERALD. We always endeavor to oblige them, but single and occasional copies can more easily be obtained from a newsdealer. Sometimes we receive complaints that the CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer. Such complaints are promptly attended to, when made to us; but in all cases we desire that our friends will give the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

LAST week's edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, March 17th, at 12.45 P.M., at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Deputy-Marshals Bill, which has been the subject of so much acrimonious debate, has at length advanced one stage toward settlement. An amendment moved by General Garfield was accepted in the House on Friday, March 19th, by a vote of 115 to 107. The amendment was apparently received by Democrats as the least objectionable compromise likely to be offered, and was accepted as the best way out of an embarrassing position. In the form finally adopted, General Garfield's proposition provides that an equal number of deputy-marshals hereafter appointed to serve at elections shall belong to each political party, and that they shall be appointed by the Judges of the Circuit Courts instead of by the United States Marshals. Mr. MacMahon had announced that the decision of the Supreme Court on the subject would not be recognized, so that the acceptance of Mr. Garfield's proposition occasioned some surprise.

A Proposal that Congress do Adjourn on May 24th has been introduced by Mr. Buckner, of Missouri, but it is extremely improbable that the state of public business will be sufficiently advanced to permit of an adjournment on that date. The regular business of the session is in arrear; in fact it has hardly been commenced. Not one of the large general appropriation bills has yet been reported to the House, and several of the bills have not yet been touched by the Committee on Appropriations. These alone could not be disposed of before the date named in Mr. Buckner's resolution. There is also other business that must be attended to. Congress would scarcely venture to adjourn without enacting some measure to provide for the refunding of that part of the public debt which will fall due next year. Any law on this subject will demand careful deliberation and a full discussion in both Houses. Besides all this, there are many questions on which legislation cannot be postponed without national injury.

Denis Kearney's Arrest on the Charge of using violent and obscene language has resulted in his conviction. He had neglected to demand a jury trial, believing that a person so influential in San Francisco would not be severely punished; in fact he openly stated his expectation that "a fine of twenty dollars would settle that little affair." Judge Rix, who tried the case, appears to have entertained a different view of the Sand-lots orator's offence, for he has passed upon him a sentence of six months imprisonment and a fine of one thousand dollars. This sentence, the Judge explained, was not inflicted from vindictive motives, but to express the opinion of the court on the danger to society liable to be produced by harangues like those Mr. Kearney has been wont to deliver. A conference has been held between representatives of the two parties which oppose each other in the city, in which Mayor Kalloch was one of the representatives of the workingmen. The result has not been made public, but is said to have been of a satisfactory nature.

The Death of Dr. R. L. Dashiell, the Corresponding Secretary of the Methodist Episcopal Church Missionary Society, occurred March 8th. He was regarded as one of the ablest men in the Methodist ministry, and his loss will be severely felt. Dr. Dashiell was born at Salisbury, Md., in 1826, and was admitted to the Baltimore Conference in 1848. He was elected President of Dickinson College in 1868, which post he occupied until he accepted the appointment of Missionary Secretary.

The Salvation Army has been Prohibited by the Mayor of New York from preaching in the streets. This act has not prevented its officers doing effectual work in the city. The morning of each day during the past week they spent in the squalid locality known as Five Points. In the saloons, in the wretched tenements—anywhere that the miserable, the vicious, and the depraved were to be found, there they sought to win souls for Christ. The evenings found them at the Hudson River Mission Hall, which was crowded every night. Open-air meetings in a vacant lot opposite the hall preceded the indoor meeting.

The headquarters of the Army will be fixed at Philadelphia, in which city, Mr. Railton informs us, there will be no opposition on the part of the authorities to street preaching. On another page will be found an account of their work in New York up to this date.

A Prayer Unanswered.—A Remarkable Incident was related at the Fulton Street Prayer-meeting last week. It illustrates the truth that it is often for our own good that our prayers for specific blessings are left unanswered. A widow on whom devolved the care and support of several children was living in small apartments in a tenement house. Unable to pay the rent, she was told by her landlord that she must seek other quarters. This was a hard blow, and she prayed God to avert it. But in spite of all her prayers she had to go; the Lord had apparently forgotten to be gracious. Other quarters were found, into which the widow and her little ones removed. Not many days afterward she was offering thanks that her prayer had not been answered. A fire had broken out in the old tenement house from which she had been ejected, and the majority of the children in the house had perished in the flames.

Children at Prayer-Meetings.—An Important testimony to the influence of the prayer-meeting on families was recently related in conversation by the elder of a Christian church. He said that three fourths of all the prayer-meetings he had ever attended were under very discouraging circumstances, only two families uniting their members to sustain them. Said he, "They were held at Union Grove," and added: "But the families were pretty large; uncle's numbered eight and father's ten, and what is worth noting is the fact that every one of both families is now a Christian." He said he had known his father to stop the corn planter at noon when he could have finished planting in the afternoon in order to attend the mee which was held at three o'clock. Another cited a case where ten children, big and li were taken regularly to prayer-meeting by t mother, through all their youthful years, every one is a Christian.

A Conversion through the Medium of Telephone occurred last week in the mining gion of Lake Superior. A gentleman who been aroused to a sense of sin and the nece of seeking salvation, but who had not yet fo peace in the Saviour, was in an office whe telephone was in use, and requested permis to witness its operation. Putting his ear to instrument, he listened, and there came thro the transmitter, sounding with strange be and power, the words, sung by four little child

What a friend we have in Jesus,
All our sins and griefs to bear.

The appeal went home to his heart, and he t and then determined in God's strength to cl to Jesus.

Irish Famine Relief Fund.—Contribut received up to Saturday, March 20th:

Rev. E. D. Kendig, Fisherville, Va.	$
A Friend, Princeton, Ind.
Danish Baptist Church, Cedar Falls, Iowa.	1
A. B. M., New Lisbon, Ohio.
Bethel Community, Hopkins Co., Tex.	1
M. E. Sunday-school, Saranac, Mich.
Forwarded to N. Y. Herald.	$3

The Debt on Dr. Talmage's Church.—Co butions received up to Saturday, March 20th.

A Friend, Salem, Mass.	$
Charles Porter, Dover, N. H.
Jno. Smellie, " " Constant Sears, East Dennis, Mass.
Mrs. Job Tower, Northampton, "
Miss Arsula Clark, " "
Miss Sarah Nash, " "
Mrs. Jehiel Russell, Greenwich, N. Y.
Fred. Mockel, Pittsburgh, Pa.
M. J. & L. M. Doyle, Baltimore, Md.
Fred. Taylor, Chester, Pa.
A Friend, Clinton, N. J.
Jas. W. Howarth, Glen Riddle, Pa.
A Mother, Hackensack, N. J.
Thos. Waddell, Bay View, Wis.
C. C., Pittshurgh, Pa.
Mrs. E. B. Colby, Kewane, Ill.
A Reader of C. HERALD, Silver Creek, N. Y.
Jno. Johnston, Blackinton, Mass.
Mrs. E. Davis, Hillsdale, Mich.
John Getz, Fredericktown, Ohio.
J. R. Harris, Boston, Mass.
John Cragg, Clyde, N. Y.
H. W. Kettering, Union Deposite, Pa.
O. L. A. F., Trenton, N. J.
A. Bryant, Holt, Miss.
F. W. Collyer, Coxsackie, N. Y.
W. E. Settle, Balston, N. Y.
Mrs. O. B. Strong, Huntsburg, Ohio.
Chas. T. Mason, East Otto, N. Y.
Hamilton McElnea, Chicago, Ill.
Thos. Pattison, Oshtemo, Mich.
Esther A. DeKalb, Middle Granville, N. Y.
E. L. Brichbill, Oberlin, Ohio.
Mrs. S. M. Haster, Crawfordsville, Ind.
Mrs. D. Willock, Marine, Ill.
Mrs. S. A. Cochran, Brownsburg, Pa.
E. D. Scott, Scandia, Kan.
Ciayton St. John, Linderville, Ohio.
John Moore, Victor, Mich.
Thos. Gibbard, " "
G. W. Blackman, Des Moines, Iowa.
A. W. Moore, Owensville, Mo.
Dr. H. W. Bramel, " "
L. L. Keiser, Naperville, Ill.
Mrs. Mary Jane Irving, Jefferson, Iowa.
W. S. Griffith, Lebanon, Ohio.
Rev. Jno. Wittenberger, Platteville, Wis.
Chas. J. Bartlett, Lewiston, Me.
Mr. R. Kee, Algonquin, Ill.
Rev. O. P. Rogers, Marengo, Ill.
Dr. J. H. Brearly, Norristown, Ark.
E. H. Wright, Gaffney City, S. C.
Mrs. M. M. Burgess, South Walden, Vt.
James Tonge, 4 Willoughby Street, Lawrence, Mass.
Forwarded to Dr. Talmage.	$

he Visit of M. Lesseps to New York has atacted renewed attention to his interoceanic cail scheme, but the distinguished visitor confeed when his visit came to a close that alough he had been received personally with th utmost courtesy and enthusiasm, his project ha not found favor in the eyes of American engiers or capitalists. They have no faith in his sc me, preferring the shorter route with locks or nnels. The route advocated by M. Lesseps is rty-five miles in length, of which seven are th ugh solid rock. Its principal advantage is th it will need no locks, and would thus facilita and expedite the passage from the Pacific to th Atlantic. M. Lesseps estimates the cost at $1,000,000, and believes that shipping of the an al amount of six million tons would pass th ugh it and would pay a toll equivalent to te per cent on the cost of construction. A ne survey of the isthmus by the United States Go rnment is proposed, that the merits of the dif ent routes may be finally settled.

ubstitute for the Beer Garden.—The New Yo Coffee-House Company (limited) has been org ized by the election of Mr. Joseph W. Dr el as Chairman, Mr. Morris K. Jesup as Tre urer, and Mr. Henry E. Pellew as Secretar and arrangements are being made to plant fe-houses in the most frequented thorougare and most densely-populated localities. Comnodious premises in suitable localities will be eas l and fitted up, and furnished in a cheerful nd ttractive style, so as to compete successfully respects with the beer saloons and garden They will consist of refreshment rooms, whe working people may enjoy, in company wit their friends, tea, coffee, cocoa, milk, and oth simple refreshments, including food, with hea ful recreation, instruction and amusement.

A isastrous Tornado Passed over Cleveland, hi on March 5th. The storm struck the bluff t e south side of the lake soon after midigh and in its progress tore up trees and hrubbery, and demolished chimneys and buildngs It swept along at the rate of fifty miles a ur. The roof of a seminary in Woodland ave ue was lifted bodily and dashed to the ro d. At Newburgh the whole west end of a ew uilding of the Cleveland Rolling Mill Coman was crushed in, while the roof was carried eve l hundred feet away. A dozen workmen ere buried beneath the falling timbers. One as illed, four were severely injured, in all rob bility fatally so, and five others were badly urt The total damage throughout the city as stimated at nearly $100,000, not less than hir dwelling-houses being more or less damgec

A an was Attacked by Wolves in his Own arn few days ago at Clermont, Bradford Co., enn The farm is somewhat isolated, being tua d on the borders of a dense forest. om aints have been prevalent for some time at attle have been killed by the wolves, but w not thought that they would dare to enter rm buildings. It is supposed, however, that m of them were rendered desperate by hunr, or the farmer going to feed his cattle ear a strange noise, and entering the barn disve d two large wolves trying to kill one of e imals. He was armed only with an ordiary table-fork, and the wolves turned upon im. For some time his position was extremely il, but after suffering several wounds he cc ded in slaying his ferocious assailants.

In atitude for a Brave Rescue.—Rev. E. Pay- n ammond, in a recent address to children, lat the following incident. He said: W e I was in Detroit I noticed the gentleman w se house I was a guest looking wistfully ut a window which commanded a view of the ad or a long distance. The side of the genm 's face was disfigured by great scars, which ld f his having received serious wounds. I ke him what he was thinking about, which a wered by a touching narrative. 'About ne ears ago,' he said, 'I was looking out of is indow, when I saw a horse galloping up e rd. There was no one in the carriage but a little girl. I ran downstairs and out on the road just in time to stop the horse, but in doing so I was knocked down and almost killed. The father of the girl coming up, jumped into the carriage and drove off. For three days I remained unconscious between life and death. On regaining consciousness the first question I asked was, "Where is the little girl?" but they could only say that she was unhurt. For these nine years I have been confined to the house with chronic neuralgia. My physicians say I shall not recover. I would have died for that little girl, and yet she never came to thank me.'" Such ingratitude arouses indignation, but how many are there for whom Jesus actually died who are guilty of still worse ingratitude?

A Dog with a Diamond Collar is Advertised as lost in the recent issue of a daily journal. The animal had around its neck a gold chain bearing a plate in which were inserted diamonds, rubies, and sapphires, so arranged as to form the name by which the dog was known. It is supposed that thieves carried off the animal for the sake of the jewels it carried, but the owners grieve more for its loss than for that of the gems, so that possibly a compromise may be effected by which the thieves keep what they prize, and the owners recover their lost pet. The desire for display and ostentation has seldom gone so far as this, of lavishing jewels on the decoration of a dog. While people are dying of hunger, and souls are perishing in darkness and ignorance, and missionary societies lacking funds to preach the Gospel to the heathen, it seems incredible that money should be spent in so silly a fashion (Matt. 19:21).

A Scene of Desolation was Produced at Frankfort, Ind., on Wednesday, March 11th, by a terrific boiler explosion which occurred at the large flax mill of Lehman, Rosenthal & Co. The mill was situated on the outskirts of the town, and was a large structure. Such a spectacle of ruin, desolation, and misery has seldom been seen. From what can be learned, it appears that, the morning being chilly, ten of the men had assembled in the engine-room to warm themselves, and that while they were there the explosion occurred. Not one of the ten escaped instant death. The destruction was complete. Not a piece of the boiler exceeding three hundred pounds in weight can be found anywhere. The brick foundation on which the boiler stood was scattered so that scarcely one brick lay upon another. Mangled and distorted human bodies lay about the fields, some thirty feet from the boiler house, although one body was thrown a hundred and fifty yards. Every one of the unfortunate men was horribly mutilated. Two had their heads entirely blown away. It is supposed that the boiler was worn out, and that the small amount of water in the boiler was all converted into steam and gas in an instant, thus producing the explosion.

Christian Home for Intemperate Men.—An effort is being made to found a permanent institution for the above purpose in New York. The amount needed is $100,000, and Messrs. William H. Vanderbilt, C. K. Garrison, William E. Dodge, James Talcott, and others have already subscribed $30,000 towards that amount.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works.—We have much pleasure in announcing that another large consignment of volumes by this eminent author and preacher has just been received. They are now on sale at the office of the CHRISTIAN HERALD, No. 63 Bible House, New York, and are offered at prices so low as to bring them within the reach of every one. Twelve Sermons on various subjects, with photograph of Mr. Spurgeon, price 35 cents. John Ploughman's Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents; in cloth, 60 cents. The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, a volume of fifty sermons, $2.50. The Treasury of David, a homiletical exposition of the book of Psalms, five vols., as far as Psa. 118, $3 per vol. Spurgeon's Birthday-Book. This popular gift-book contains a suitable passage selected from Mr. Spurgeon's writings for every day in the year, with a blank space opposite for autographs. The signatures of Mr. and Mrs. Spurgeon appear at their respective birthdays. The book is elegantly bound, and the price is 75 cents. Remittances should accompany orders.

THE LILY AMONG THORNS.

A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"As the lily among thorns, so is my love among the daughters."—SOLOMON'S SONG 2:2.

A Sacred Marriage Song—The Church Christ's Bride—She is like a Lily among Thorns—I. In her Relation to Jesus—1. She has His Love—His Love a Distinguishing Love—Openly Avowed—2. She Reciprocates His Love—3. She Bears His Likeness—4. Her Position Draws out His Love—5. She is thereby Kept for His Own—II. In Her Relation to the World—1. She has Incomparable Beauty—2. An Intrinsic Excellence—3. Called to Endure Singular Trials—Persecution of the Thorns—The Truest Flower Mission.

WE shall not enter into any profitless discussion this morning. We take it for granted that the Song of Solomon is a sacred marriage song between Christ and His church, and that it is the Lord Jesus who is here speaking of His church, and indeed of each individual member, saying, "As the lily among thorns, so is my love among the daughters."

I will not even enter into any disquisition as to what particular flower is here intended by the word translated "lily," for it would be very difficult to select a plant from the Holy Land about which travellers and botanists would agree. The lily, which we should most naturally fix upon, is, as I have gathered from books of travel, not at present found in that country, though we may not therefore be sure that it was never there, or may not yet be discovered. Several other fair and beautiful forms, according to the fancies of various travellers, have been preferred to occupy the place of the plant intended by the original Hebrew, but none of them quite come up to the ideal suggested to an English reader by our translation.

I will for once take the liberty to clothe the Scripture in a western dress, if need be, and venture to do what Solomon would surely have done if his Song of Songs had been written in England. I shall assume that he means one of our own lilies: either the lily of the valley or one of those more stately beauties, matchless for whiteness, which so gloriously adorn our gardens. Either will do, and serve our turn this morning. "As the lily among the thorns, so is my love among the daughters."

It is of small moment to be precise in botany so long as we get the spirit of the text. We seek practical usefulness and personal consolation, and proceed at once in the pursuit, in the hope that it may be with us as with the great Bridegroom Himself, of whom the golden canticle saith, "He feedeth among the lilies."

Many are taking root among us now, newly transplanted from the world, and it is well that they should be rooted in a knowledge of their calling by grace, and what it includes. They ought to know at the very commencement what a Christian is when he is truly a Christian, what he is expected to be, what the Lord means him to be, and what the Lord Jesus regards him as really being; so that they may make no mistakes, but may count the cost, and know what it is that they have ventured upon. Thinking over this subject carefully, and anxiously desiring to warn our new converts without alarming them, I could not think of any text from which I should be able, in the exposition of it, better to set forth the position, condition, and character of a genuine Christian.

Jesus Himself knows best what his own bride is like; let us hear Him as He speaks in this matchless song. He knows best what His followers should be, and well may we be content to take the words out of His own mouth when in sweetest poetry He tells us, "As the lily among thorns, so is my love among the daughters." Join me, then, my brethren, at this time in considering how they grow.

OUR LORD'S LILIES,

Concerning the church of God, there are two points upon which I will enlarge: first, her relation to her Lord; and secondly, her relation to the world.

I. First, I think my text very beautifully sets forth the relation of the church, and of every individual to Christ. He styles her my love. An exquisitely sweet name; as if His love had all gone forth of Him, and had become embodied in her.

1. The first point, then, of her relation to Christ is that she has His love. Think of it, and let the blessed truth dwell long and sweetly in your meditations. The Lord of life and glory, the Prince of the kings of the earth, has such a loving heart that He must have an object upon which to spend His affection; and His people, chosen from among men, whom He calls His church, these are they who are His "love," the object of his supreme delight.

"Christ loved the church and gave Himself for it.". He looked on His people and He exclaimed, "As the Father hath loved me, even so have I loved you." Every believer, separated from mankind, and called unto the fellowship of Christ, is also the peculiar object of His love. Not in name only, but in deed and truth, does Jesus love each one of us who have believed on Him. You may each one of you say with the Apostle, "He loved me;" you may read it in any tense you please: He loved me; He loveth me; He will love me, for He gave Himself for me.

This shall be your song in Heaven, "Unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in His own blood, to Him be glory." Let your hearts saturate themselves with this honeyed thought; Heaven lies hid within it, it is the quintessence of bliss—Jesus loves me.

This love is distinguishing love, for in its light one special object shines as a lily, and the rest, "the daughters," are as thorns. Love has fixed on its chosen object, and compared with the favored one all others are as nothing. There is a love of Jesus which goeth forth to all mankind, for "the Lord is good to all, and His tender mercies are over all His works;" but there is a special and peculiar love which He beareth to His own. As a man loveth his neighbors but still he hath a special affection for his own wife, so is beloved above all the rest of mankind, and every individual believer is the favored one of Heaven. The saint is united to Christ by a mystical union, a spiritual marriage bond, and above all others Christ loves the souls espoused to Him. He said once, "I pray for them. I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me;" thus indicating that there is a specialty about His intercession. We rejoice in the largeness and the width of Jesus' love, but we do not therefore doubt its specialty.

THE CHURCH CHRIST'S BRIDE,

The sun shines on all things, but when it is focussed on one point, ah, then, there is a heat about it of which you little dreamed! The love of Jesus is focussed on those whom the Father hath given Him. Upon you, my brother or sister, if indeed you are a believer in Jesus Christ, the Lord's heart is set, and He speaks of you in the words of the text as "my love," loved above all the daughters, precious in His sight and honorable, so that He will give men for you and people for your life.

Observe that this is a love which He openly avows. The Bridegroom speaks and says before all men, "As a lily among thorns, so is my love among the daughters." He puts it upon record in that book which is more widely scattered than any other, for He is not ashamed to have it published on the housetops. The love of Christ was at first hidden in His heart, but it soon revealed itself, for even of old His delights were with the sons of men, and He bent His steps downward to this world in divers forms, or ever Bethlehem's song was sung. And now, since the Incarnate God has loved and lived and died, He has unveiled His love in the most open form, and astonished Heaven and earth thereby. On Cavalry He set up an open proclamation, writ in His own heart's blood, that He loved His own even unto the end.

2. This love, wherever it has been revealed to its object, is reciprocated. By this, dear hearer, shall you know whether this text belongs to you or not. What sayest thou when Jesus asks of thee, "Lovest thou me?" Is your heart warmed at the very mention of His name? If you can truly say with Peter, "Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee," then rest assured you love Him, because He first loved you. Doubt not the fact, but be well assured of it, that love in your heart toward Jesus is the certain and infallible pledge of His infinite, eternal, and immutable love to you.

3. Next,

SHE BEARS HIS LIKENESS.

Notice the first verse of the chapter wherein the Bridegroom speaks, "I am the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the valleys." He is the lily, but His beloved is like Him; for He applies His own chosen emblem to her—"As the lily among thorns, so is my love among the daughters." Notice that He is the lily, she is as the lily, that is to say, He has the beauty and she reflects it; she is comely in His comeliness which He puts upon her. There is no beauty in any one of us, but what our Lord has wrought in us.

Note, too, that He who gave the beauty is the first to see it. While they are unknown to the world, Jesus knows His own. Long before anybody else sees any virtue or any praise in us, Jesus descries it, and is pleased therewith. He is quick to say, "Behold, he prayeth," or "Behold, he repenteth." He is the first to say, "I have surely heard Ephraim bemoaning himself." Love's eyes are quick, and her ears are open. Love covers a multitude of faults, but it discovers a multitude of beauties. Let us bless and love Him because He deigns to think so highly of us who owe everything to Him. "Thou art," saith He, "my love, as the lily."

There is a wealthy household, honored and famous among the old county families, but in it there is no lover of the Saviour except one, and she perhaps is a little maid whose service is among the pots, yet shall she be as the wings of a dove covered with silver. "As the lily among thorns" shall she be. All the kingdoms of the earth are but thorn-brakes to the Lord Jesus compared with His church. The Lord has given to His people His likeness, and that likeness He looks upon and loves.

4. Bringing out still further the relationship between Christ and His church, I want you to notice that her position has drawn out His love. "As the lily," saith He, "among thorns, so is my love." He spied her out among the thorns. She was at the first no better than a thorn herself; His grace alone made her to differ from the briers about her; but as soon as ever He had put His life and His grace into her, though she dwelt among the ungodly, she became as the lily, and He spied her out. The thorn-brake could not hide His beloved. Christ's eye toward His people is so quick because it is cleared by love.

There may at this time be in a Popish convent one truly seeking Jesus in spirit and in truth. He spies out the believer among the trusters in themselves, and calls her His love among thorns. There may be at this moment in the most godless haunt in London a poor, trembling heart that loves Jesus in secret: the Lord knows that heart, and it is to Him as a lily among thorns.

You, perhaps, are the only serious working-man in the shop in which you earn your daily bread, and the whole band hold you in derision. You may hardly know yourself whether you are really a Christian, for you are sometimes staggered about your own condition; and yet the enemies of Christ have made up their minds as to whose you are, and treat you as one of the disciples of the Nazarene. Be of good courage, your Lord discerns you, and knows you better than you know yourself. Such is the quickness of His eye that your difficult and perilous position only quickens His discernment, and He regards you with the more attention. The thorns cannot hide you, thickly as they cluster around you: in your loneliness you are not alone, for the Crucified is with you.

"As the lily among thorns" wears also other meaning. Dr. Thompson writes of a tain lily, "It grows among thorns, and I h sadly lacerated my hands in extricating it fr them. Nothing can be in higher contrast t the luxuriant, velvety softness of this lily, the withered, tangled hedge of thorns about Ah, beloved, you know who it was that, in ga ering your soul and mine, lacerated not hand only, but his feet, and his head, and side, and his heart, yea, and his inmost soul

5. Yet once more I think many a child of may regard himself as still beng a lily am thorns, because of his afflictions. Certainly church is so, and she is thereby

KEPT FOR CHRIST'S OWN.

If thorns made it hard for Him to reach us our salvation, there is another kind of th which makes it hard for any enemy to com us for our hurt. I look on John Bunyan prison writing his "Pilgrim's Progress," a cannot help feeling that it was a great bles for us all that such a lily was shut up among thorns, that it might shed its fragrance in famous book, and thereby perfume the ch for ages. You that are kept from roamin sickness or by family trials need not regret t things, for perhaps they are the means of ma you more completely your Lord's.

How charmingly Madame Guyon wrote she was immured in a dungeon. Her wing closely bound, but her song was full of lib for she felt that the bolts and bars only shu in with her Beloved, and what is that but erty? She sang:

"A little bird I am,
Shut from the fields of air;
And in my cage I sit and sing
To him who placed me there;
Well pleased a prisoner to be,
Because, my God, it pleaseth thee.

"Nought have I else to do,
I sing the whole day long;
And He whom most I love to please Doth listen to my song;
He caught and bound my wandering wing
But still he bends to hear me sing."

"As the lily among thorns," she lived in p shut in with her Lord, and since the worl quite shut out, she was in that respect a g

II. But now, secondly, our text is full struction as to

THE RELATIONSHIP OF THE CHURCH TO WORLD.

1. First, then, she has incomparable b As compared and contrasted with all else, as the lily to the thorn, brake. Did not our say of the natural lilies, "Solomon in a glory was not arrayed like one of these?" when I think of Christ's lilies, adorned i own righteousness, and bearing His own i I feel that I may repeat my Master's word say, with emphasis, "Solomon in all his was not arrayed like one of these!"

Though the church may seem to be littl poor and despised, yet is she better than princes and kingdoms and glories of the He means that the true Christians are infi superior to ungodly men. These ungodl may make a fair show of virtue, and the have much prudence and wit, and count selves wise and great, but Jesus calls all u verted ones "thorns," while his own bel one He compares to "lilies." The thorn worthless, they flourish and spread, and c the ground, but they yield no fruit, and grow to be cut down for the oven. Alas is man by nature, at his best!

As for the lily, it is a thing of beauty joy forever; it lives shedding sweet pe and when it is gathered its loveliness ador chamber to which it is taken. So does th bless his generation while here, and whe taken away he is regarded with pleasure Heaven above as one of the flowers of God will ere long be transplanted from amo thorns to the garden inclosed beyond the where the King delights to dwell, for is far too fair to be left forever amid l briars.

and let me say that I am sorry to add, a hristian is as superior even to a professing an as a lily is to thorns. I know churches h there are many who make a profession, me! it is a pity that they should, for ife does not adorn their doctrine, their is not consistent with the indwelling of ly Spirit. They live like worldlings, to money, or to carry on business, or to end eating and drinking, or to dress and go ies; they are as much for this world as were never renewed, and it is to be feared ver were.

not, however, be at all astonished, for it e so; he who is full of the grace of God ways be as the lily among thorns, even in fessing church. May you be distinguishe your fellow-professors, for I fear that it be so your life will be a poor one.

then, is the relationship of the church to ld, and of Christians to the world, that e as much superior to the unregenerate l and spiritual beauty as the lily is to the among which it finds itself.

condly, in the comparison of the saint to we remark that he has, like the lily, a surexcellence. I point not to its beauty just t to its intrinsic excellence. The thorn it of the curse: it springs up because of Thorns also and thistles shall it bring nto thee." Not so the lily: it is a fair the blessing which maketh rich without row of carking care. The thorn is the wrath, and the lily is the symbol of Diovidence. A true believer is a blessing, hose leaves heal and whose fruit feeds. uine Christian is a living gospel, an emt of good-will toward men. Did not covenant blessing run, "In thee and in shall all the nations of the earth be " I cannot refrain from quoting a meditation of one who loved the Song non, and drank into its spirit. He says hurch. She is ant thing, where all is gloomy else, ent, where all else is barrenness;

om in the desert, that proclaims no friendless outcast, hopeless doomed erse scenes of wickedness and grief, grim as he is, has One who plans,
y to protect but cheer his way.
r testifying desert flower,
ding forth the story of God's love, onderful it is that busy throngs ot to look on thee! That few reflect strange fact of thine existence still, mong thorns—a life in death,
t from, yet in contact with the world;
g, yet unconsumed; though cumbered, free lorious liberty!"

church is a blessing, a blessing abiding ttering its delights in the midst of the and each particular believer is in his a blessing too, "as the lily among weet odors of the lily of the valley are own; perhaps no plant has so strong a out it of intense and exquisite sweetness ily of the valley which is found in Palesuch is the sanctified believer. There is something about Him, a hallowed savor oeth out from His life, so that His grais discovered; for grace, like its Lord, be hid."

I was resting in the south I wandered de of a flowing stream, gathering handaiden-hair fern from the verdant bank, walked along I was conscious of a most fragrance all around me. I cast my eye rd and I saw blue eyes looking up from s at my feet. The violets had hidden es from sight, but they had betrayed es by their delicious scent. So doth a n reveal his hidden life; his tone and nd manners bespeak his royal lineage, the spirit of God be in him. Such are le of God; they court no observation, but are like that modest flower of which the poet says:

"She ne'er affects
The public walk, nor gaze of mid-day sun;
She to no state nor dignity aspires,
But silent and alone puts on her suit,
And sheds a lasting perfume, but for which We had not known there was a thing so sweet Hid in the gloomy shade"

I want you, dear Christian people, to be just like this: to have about you a surpassing wealth of blessing, and an unrivalled sweetness of influence by which you shall be known of all men. Is it so with you, or are you as rough and stern and repellant as a thorn-bush? Are you as selfish and as quarrelsome as the unregenerate? Or do you shed yourself away in sweet odors of self-denying kindness in your families and among your neighbors? If you do so, then doth Jesus say of you, "As the lily among thorns, so is my love among the daughters."

3. The last point with regard to our relationship to the world is that the church and many individual Christians are called to endure which make them feel "as the lily among thorns." That lovely flower seems out of place in such company, does it not? Christ said, "Behold, I send you forth as sheep among" sheep—no, no, that is my mistake—"as sheep among wolves."

SINGULAR TRIALS,

It is a very blessed thing to be as sheep among sheep: to lie down with them under the shadow of the great rock, and feed with them in green pastures under the Shepherd's eye. This is our privilege, and we ought to value it greatly, and unite with the church and frequent its ordinances; but even then we shall, some of us, have to go home to an ungodly family, or to go out into the world to win our bread, and then we shall be as sheep among wolves. Grow in the church and you will be lilies in the garden; still, you cannot always live in the Tabernacle, and so you will have to go back to the ungodly world, and there you will be lilies among thorns.

The lily startles you if you find it in such a position. Often you come upon one of God's elect ones in a most unexpected manner, and are as much amazed as if an angel crossed your path. This is the wonder of the lily among thorns. You are making your way over a wild heath and come to a tangled thorn-brake through which you must force your way. As you are driving through the dense mass, rending and tearing your garments, suddenly you stand still as one who has seen a vision of angels, for there among the most rugged brambles a lily lifts its lovely form and smiles upon you.

So have you met in a black slum, where blasphemy abounded, a beauteous child of God, whom all recognized as such, and you have felt amazed. So have you in a wealthy family full of worldliness and vanity come upon a humble man or patient woman living unto Christ, and you have asked, How came this grace to this house? So, too, in a foreign land, where all bowed down to crucifix and image, you have casually met with a confessor who has stood his ground among idolaters, protesting for his God, not by his speech so much as by his holy walk. The surprise has been great. Expect many such surprises. The Lord has a people where you look not for them. Think not that all His lilies are in His garden; there are lilies among thorns, and He knows their whereabouts.

Many saints reside in families where they will never be appreciated any more than the lily is appreciated by the thorns. This is painful, for the sympathy of our fellows is a great comfort. Lilies of the valley love to glow in clusters, and saints love holy company, and yet in some cases it must not be; they must live alone. Nor need we think that this loneliness is unrelieved, for God goeth out of the track of men, and He visits those whom His own servants are passing by. The poet saith,

"Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air."

But the poet forgot that God is in the wilderness and the solitary place, and the sweetness of lonely flowers is His.

The flower which blooms for God alone has a special honor put upon it, and so hath the saint whose quiet life is all for Jesus. If you are unappreciated by those around you, do not therefore be distressed, for you are honorable in the sight of God.

The lily is altogether unassisted too by its surroundings—"the lily among thorns" borrows nothing from the growth which gathers about it. A genuine Christian is quite unhelped by ungodly men; what is worse, he is cumbered by them. Yet through divine grace he lives and grows. You know how the good seed could not grow because of the thorns which sprang up and choked it, but here is a good seed, a choice bulb, which flourishes where you could not have looked for it to do so. God can make His people live and blossom even among the thorns, where the ungodly by their evil influences would choke and destroy it.

We should not do justice to this text if we failed to see in it a reminder of the persecution to which many of the best of God's people are subjected. They live all their lives long like the lily among thorns. Some of you, dear friends, are in this condition. You can hardly speak a word but what it is picked up and made mischief of; you cannot perform an action but what it is twisted, and motives imputed to you which you know not of. Nowadays persecutors cannot drag men to the stake, but the old trial of cruel mockings is still continued; in some cases it rages even more fiercely than ever.

God's people have been a persecuted people in all times, and you only fare as they fare. Bear well the burden common to all the chosen! Make no great wonder of it; this bitter trial has happened to many more before; and you may well rejoice that you are now in fellowship with apostles and prophets and honorable men of all ages. The lily among thorns should rejoice that it is a lily and not a thorn, and when it is wounded it should consider it a matter of course, and bloom on.

But why doth the Lord put His lilies among thorns? It is because He works transformations, singular transformations, by their means. Remember how it is written, "The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose." He can set a Christian in a godless family till first one and then another shall feel the divine power, and shall say, "We will go with you, for we perceive that God is with you."

Such holy work among ungodly people is the truest and best "Flower Mission." They do well who give flowers to cheer the poor in their dreary habitations, but they do better still who are themselves flowers in the places where they live. Be lilies, my dear brethren; preach by your actions, preach by your kindness, and by your love; and I feel quite sure that your influence will be a power for good. If the Holy Spirit helps all of you to stand among your associates as lilies among the thorns, the day will some when thorns will die out, and lilies will spring up on every side: sin will be banished, and grace will abound.

An Australian gentleman told me yesterday that in his colony the arum lily abounds as much as weeds do with us. When will this happen spiritually on our side of the globe? Ah, when! Blessed Lord, when wilt thou remove the curse? When wilt thou bring the better days? These are ill times, wherein the thorns grow thicker and more sharp than ever; protect thy lilies, increase their number, preserve their snowy whiteness, and delight thyself in them; for Jesus' sake. Amen.

[PORTION OF SCRIPTURE READ BEFORE SERMON—Matthew 10.]

THE REV. C. H. SPURGEON'S SERMONS ARE PUBLISHED AND INSERTED IN THIS JOURNAL WITH HIS CONCURRENCE, AND REVISED BY HIMSELF.

A BUSINESS MAN'S TARNISHED CROWN.

By R. T.

Twelve Years of Worldly Lukewarmness—Consumption—Remorseful Reflections—Vivid Realizations of Loss of Degrees of Glory—Startling Announcement of Christ's Speedy Advent—Even the Saved may Lose Degrees of Reward.

A YOUNG man who was very zealous for the honor of God upon earth, and also for the salvation of souls, began, after a time, to allow the interests of his increasing family and his success in the world as a man of business gradually to draw his attention from the things of the Lord to the cares of this life; and often when those with whom he usually met in Christian fellowship were assembled together for worship, and speaking to each other of the things of God, he was to be found at home with his ledger, attending to his accounts, or arranging what must be done on the morrow.

This went on for some twelve years—not, however, without many warnings from the Lord and admonitions from his brethren—till he was nearly forty years of age, when a consumption seized him; still his business absorbed his attention as long as he was able to attend to it.

The time came at last when he was laid aside entirely; then he saw his sin and folly, and more than once in his last hours did he speak in language such as follows:

"Oh, how unwise and wicked I have been to neglect the things of God for the cares of this life, and to prefer too much what I thought was my duty to my family to the society and communion of His people! Although my conduct before men has been blameless, yet the last twelve years of my life are lost. It would have been better for me had they never have been given me, because I have used them for myself and not for the Lord. I have been careful about my own things, and not the things which are Jesus Christ's. I shall blush when I see his face (1 John 2 : 28). I shall hold down my head as I go into His presence, for I have deprived Him of the joy He would have had in saying to me, 'Well done, good and faithful servant;' for how can He do so when I have been so unfaithful?

"I shall see others come forward in that happy day and take their crowns of reward, and their positions in the glory for faithful service done to Him while they were upon earth; but I shall have none to receive, because I have allowed this present world to rob me of them through my unfaithfulness (Rev. 3 : 11; 1 Cor. 3 : 15; 2 John 8).

"Oh, how foolish I have been to make such an exchange, to neglect that which is eternal for the things of this world, which perish with the using, and which I must now leave. How I have dishonored that glorious Lord Jesus who has bought me with His blood; and how unlike in my walk have I been to the apostle Paul, who said, 'Yea, doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ' (Phil. 3 : 7, 8). But how very different to this have I been! and because I have been so unlike Paul in my walk through life, I am unlike him now in my last moments. For I cannot say as he did, when he was about to leave this world, 'I have fought the good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me in that day.'

"But with me it has been just the opposite to this; for instead of my having fought the good fight of faith, I have been gathering of this world's goods, and seeking to enrich my family, and make myself comfortable and at home on this earth, which has crucified my Lord and Master; and therefore, instead of finishing my course with joy, I am cut off in the midst of my days, and am full of sorrow and regret. Neither have I kept the faith, for I have been very unfaithful; hence I know that there is no crown of righteousness laid up for me, as there was for Paul. I have not loved his appearing; and the time for service which was given me is past, it is gone forever. The Lord in His great mercy is now taking me away from the earth, because He knows the longer I am left in it the more I shall be taken up with the things of this world. I own His goodness and love, and bow with thankfulness, because it is His own hand which is doing it.

"Oh, dear friend, let my loss be your gain, and let me entreat you to use faithfully every moment of time which is given you in this world, and everything you possess, for Christ and His saints, and I shall have the delight in seeing you in that day have an 'abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.' You will receive from His hands your crown and place of honor in the glory, while I shall be content with a much lower position, because I have lived to myself and not to Him who died for me and rose again."

But the night in which he died was still more solemn. There were two or three Christians in the room with him, when, a short time before his departure, he raised himself up in bed in the greatest amazement and delight, and, lifting up both his hands, said, "Oh, there is something going to take place. Christ IS JUST ABOUT TO LEAVE HIS FATHER'S THRONE and come into the clouds to call His saints up to meet Him in the air! Don't slumber, nor sleep." He then laid himself back on the pillow and breathed his last without a sigh.

This dying testimony of one who belonged to Christ is very solemn, not only as it regards the near approach of the Lord Jesus to gather up His Church, but also as to our faithfulness to Him during His absence; and it also shows the great desire this dying brother had that we should not do as he had done, but that we should be found watchful and sober; and though I know that this is not the time for human revelations, but rather for believing the inspired written revelation of God, yet many times since, when I have felt my eyes begin to grow drowsy and myself tired of watching, I have remembered these dying words, and it has helped to quicken my steps forward to run with patience the race set before me, looking unto Jesus.

And surely whatever will help to do this in such days as ours is valuable, when everything around is so calculated to make us grow weary and faint in our minds, and hide that day of glory from our view, and when so many whom we believe to have eternal life in Christ yet, like this young man, are allowing themselves to be deceived by present things. Our salvation depends not on our doings, but on what the Son of God has done for us; for there is nothing more clearly revealed in Scripture than that believers are saved by grace, through faith, and that not of themselves; it is the gift of God (Eph. 2 : 8).

But it is also revealed in Scripture, that those who are thus converted and saved may, through carelessness of walk, become blind, and not see afar off, and may forget that they were purged from their old sins (2 Peter 1 : 9); not able to look back to the cross nor on to the glory with clearness and certainty, therefore are not living in the enjoyment of that which is really given them, and are great losers, both here and in the glory hereafter (1 Cor. 3 : 13–15; Phil. 4 : 4). For we are told over and over again in God's Word that the Lord Jesus will in that day give to those who are saved different positions in the kingdom, according to their works (Luke 19 : 12–26; Rev. 2 : 23; 22 : 12).

They who have sown sparingly shall reap also sparingly, and they who have sown bountifully shall reap also bountifully (2 Cor. 9 : 6). We read of some having that which they have been building burnt up, but they themselves saved, yet so as by fire (1 Cor. 3 : 15). Others, again, having an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ (2 Peter 1 : 11). Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord; forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord" (1 Cor. 15 : 58).

TEN SIGNS OF THE APPROACH END.*

By Rev. M. Baxter.

(Continued from page 189.)

Daniel's Image, a Picture History—The Universal Monarchy—The Portion of th ent Period on the Image—The Divisi
Two—The Two Formed into Ten—Th and Iron and their Meaning—The Fou Beasts—Eighteen Kingdoms to be Red Ten—Five Western Kingdoms—Five Kingdoms—All Governments to be Dem Monarchic.

10. OUR manifest nearness to the end iel's symbolic image, which is the great dar of prophecy, and to the final subdivi all Cæsar's Roman Empire into a ten-king confederacy.

In Daniel's second chapter a metallic of a man was seen by Nebuchadnezzar in a and was explained by Daniel to repres history of the Gentile nations, from Neb nezzar's time down to the second con Christ. It was in fact

A PICTURE HISTORY

of the four universally-powerful Gentil pires, which were to be raised up to chas
Jewish nation for their unfaithfulness, become invested with that supreme kingl which the Jews forfeited by their disob (Dan. 2 : 31–45).

This great Image appeared to be of brightness and terrible aspect. Its head gold, its breast of silver, its loins of bra its legs of iron, and its toes partly of partly of iron. At last a stone cut out hands was seen to descend upon the toes Image, and shatter into atoms the whole from its golden scalp to its clay-iron feet the Stone then swole out and expanded, came a great mountain, and filled the earth. This is the Divine Stone, who troy the present national governments earth, and establish His personal milleni over all nations.

And this will be the fifth universal m over "peoples, nations, and tongues," o Christ will be the temporal monarch u earth, as visibly as the four previous u monarchs, Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus, Al
the Great; and Cæsar. (Dan. 14 : 19; 6 :

Daniel distinctly explained first the head of the image to signify the Babylo Chaldean empire, which was then ruled Nebuchadnezzar; second, the silver breas note the subsequent Medo-Persian which afterward conquered and superce Babylonian on the eventful night when the Mede slew Belshazzar and "took t dom" of Babylon, as recorded in Daniel

He thirdly indicated the brazen loins to the Grecian or Macedonian empire, whic ander the Great, at a later period, est upon the ruins of the Medo-Persian ki and this was further prefigured in Dan the Grecian He-goat with a notable hor ander the Great) casting down and treadin foot the Medo-Persian Ram.

Then fourthly, came the Roman empi responding with the iron legs of the Ima which at the time of the birth of our Sav conquered all the territories of the three Empires, viz., of Babylon, Medo and Greece, and was reigning over the world, as in fact we see from the decre Roman emperor, Cæsar Augustus, in Lu that "all the world" was subject to him.

The Roman empire was afterward divi two halves—the Eastern branch and the branch—the dividing line being much t as the present boundary line between and Turkey. Two Roman emperors, Val

---

* Extracted from "Coming Wars," by Baxter, in two pamphlets—five cents each
First pamphlet contains "Ten Signs of the Description of Approaching Events," with t and four large diagrams. Second pamphlet valuable quotations from Forty Expositors
events. Address, 63 Bible House, New Yor

alens, reigned simultaneously over these stinct branches which thus exactly corresnd with the two legs of the image.
upper parts of the prophetic Image have n accomplished in past events, and all that mains to be fulfilled is the lowest part of age. Our present chronological era in eam of Time coincides with the feet of age; and we are soon to enter upon the of the Ten Toes which Daniel interpreted n Ten Kings who are to arise and subdiiong themselves the entire territories of Roman empire, extending from the Eu-in the East to the Scotch Highlands in st. And in conformity with the emblem toes being placed upon each foot, there e five of the future ten kingdoms in the half of the Roman empire, and five in stern half. It is obvious that very mos political changes and revolutions in Asia, and Africa, are inevitable, in o bring to pass this predicted tenfold isi.

THE CLAY AND IRON.

markable circumstance in this Prophecy each of the Ten Toes is to be partly of partly of Iron. What a contrast there een the Image's head of pure gold, sym-the absolute autocratic power of Nebu-zar, derived directly from God, and the clay mixed with iron. Democracy and can power is denoted by the clay—the principle of government, which is exby the maxim, "Vox populi, vox Dei" ice of the people, the voice of God. The of each of the Ten Toes being com-partly of potters' clay, it seems clear that acy will gain increasing power in each of Kingdoms; and already the tendency ocratic governmental principles to hroughout those kingdoms is a marked he times.

FOUR EMPIRES FORESHOWN AS FOUR WILD BEASTS.

carnal imagination of the worldly monebuchadnezzar, the four universal em-Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome ap-nder the aspect of a grand and stately a man; but to the sanctified mind of prophet Daniel they appeared as four destructive wild beasts. Daniel, in his chapter, relates a vision of them rising fter another out of the sea of tumultous as a lion, a bear, a four-headed leopard,
-horned wild beast.
rophecy makes it plain that the ten e ten individual kings, who are not to til the last few years of this Gentile disn, near the time of the Second Advent (see Daniel 7 : 20–27 ; Rev. 17 : 12–14).
only have these ten sovereigns reigning a Cæsar's Roman Empire yet to appear ture, but when they do appear, they must in a confederacy, and agreed in main-ne and the same policy and line of acccordance with the emblem of their besented as ten toes on one body, and ten one head, and therefore all moving to-nd in the same direction.*
present time there are

EIGHTEEN SOVEREIGN POWERS

ingdoms, republics, or states) occupying territories of Cæsar's original Roman viz.: 1. Britain; 2. France; 3. Spain;
5. Austria; 6. Greece; 7. Turkey;
It is most probable that these eight will, with additions or diminutions, of the ten kingdoms of the predicted
, and the Ninth will be Syria separated key; and the Tenth may be the Danu- vinces north of the Balkans, such as Bulgaria, Servia, Roumania, etc., with perhaps part of Hungary, or else Tripoli, with Tunis, may be the Tenth kingdom, if it is not annexed to Italy or some other country.

The remainder and less important of the Eighteen Sovereign Powers now existing within Cæsar's ancient Roman Empire are: 9. Tripoli and Barca; 10. Belgium; 11. Luxemburg and western Holland, on the French side of the Rhine (the King of Holland is the Grand Duke of Luxemburg); 12. Bavaria; 13. Wurtemburg; 14. Baden; 15. Portugal; 16. Tunis, governed by a Bey; 17. Morocco and Fez, governed by the same Sultan; 18. Switzerland.

The last-mentioned nine of these now existent eighteen kingdoms, or states, or republics, within the Roman Empire territory, must soon disappear as separate and independent powers, and become annexed to the first-mentioned nine kingdoms, which, with Syria, will in the main form the ten sovereignties of the Ten Sovereign Horns.

Hence the Ten Prophetic Kingdoms, when completely formed, with five in the Western and five in the Eastern half of the Roman Empire, will probably be found to be in the main as follows:

THE FIVE WESTERN LATIN KINGDOMS.

1. Britain, which however will probably be separated from Ireland, as Ireland was never part of the Roman Empire, and on this account many consider that Ireland cannot possibly form any part of the future ten kingdoms. It is an ominous sign that the majority of the Irish are notoriously disaffected, on religious grounds, toward the British Government; and the Fenian organization, the Home-Rule agitation, and the spread of democratic and republican ideas in that country, indicate that England's difficulty may become Ireland's opportunity.

2. Spain, with Portugal annexed to it. The recent revolutions in Spain, the disturbing influence of Ultramontanism, and also of extreme Communism in it, and its present unstable government, point to further changes in that country.

3. France, extended to the Rhine, as the ancient boundary of Gaul and of the Roman Empire; and, therefore, necessarily including Belgium, part of Holland, Luxemburg, Rhenish Prussia, Alsace and Lorraine; also Switzerland. There will also be part of Baden and part of Bavaria, and Wurtemburg, belonging to the Roman Empire, to be added either to France or Austria. As these changes will unavoidably necessitate the defeat of Germany, and as the German Empire seems now so powerful and irresistible, and France seems comparatively weak and impotent, such an enlargement of France appears, humanly speaking, improbable. Yet assuredly this will happen before long, by some means, such as a fatal internal revolution in Germany, fomented by the Ultramontanes and Radicals, or by a successful alliance of France with other nations, or as the result of a general war in Europe, arising out of the invasion and dismemberment of the Turkish Empire. Germany and Russia, which are outside the Roman Empire, may be expected to stand together in antagonism to Britain, France, Austria, Turkey, and the rest of the ten kingdoms, which will be formed into a triumphant confederacy in opposition to them.

4. Austria, separated from Bohemia and Moravia (which were not part of the Roman Empire), and probably modified otherwise. The Roman wall ran from Ratisbon on the Danube to Bingen on the Rhine. All of Baden and Bavaria, south of that wall, as well as Wurtemburg, will belong either to France or Austria. Hungary may possibly be separated from the rest of Austria.

5. Italy, or else Algeria, if Italy is incorporated with France, as one Franco-Italian kingdom, such as Napoleon I. created. Bonaparte's scheme of conquering Italy and Rome, and annexing them to France, may be repeated by the future revived Napoleon. It is clear that the Great Antichrist must become Master of Rome in order to be Head of the Roman Empire. But on the whole it is more likely that Italy, however much conquered by France, will remain a distinct kingdom.

THE FIVE EASTERN KINGDOMS.

6. Greece, enlarged considerably northward. It is evident from Daniel 8 : 9, 22, 23, that four of these five Eastern kingdoms will be the four ancient Macedonian kingdoms revived and restored to re-existence—viz., Greece, Egypt, Syria, Turkey-without-Syria (ancient Thrace): for they are spoken of as re-existent at the Time of the End. In the latter time of their kingdom, when the transgressors are come to the full, a king of fierce countenance (the final Imperial Antichrist) shall stand up, etc.

7. Egypt, with perhaps the addition of Tripoli and Fez, if Tripoli-with-Tunis does not become the fifth Eastern kingdom.

8. Syria, separated from the Turkish Empire, which must soon be overthrown and dismembered; for this mystic Euphrates must be dried up that the way of the kings from the East (the Jews) may be prepared. The Eastern Question must soon be solved, by Palestine being restored to the Jews. Will this be preceded by Russia attacking Turkey, and by a general war on the Eastern Question, or by the Jews purchasing Jerusalem from the Sultan?

9. Turkey, south of the Balkan Mountains, and separated from Syria.

10. Tripoli with Tunis, or else the Danubian Provinces, Bulgaria, Servia, and perhaps Roumania, and part of Hungary.

These Ten Kingdoms are also foreshown to become—at least, in their latest stage—governmentally

DEMOCRATIC-MONARCHIC,

and ruled by ten kings elected by universal suffrage; for each of the ten toes is compounded partly of clay and partly of iron—clay representing popular democratic power, and iron, monarchic absolutism. Moreover, the whole body of the wild beast in its later form is scarlet, showing that sovereign power, of which scarlet is the emblem, will then be vested in the collective body of peoples composing the empire.

Still further, this scarlet wild beast is itself predicted to become its own last Head; "the wild beast that was and is not, even it is the eighth" (Rev. 17 : 10). Its peoples will elect their last ten kings by universal suffrage, and they will be united under the future Great Napoleon as their Imperial Head, during the final three and a half years.

What is termed the Reconstruction of Nebuchadnezzar's Image will be effected by the Final Great Antichrist, who will mould all the countries belonging to the ancient Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Grecian, and Roman empires into one mighty ten-kingdomed empire, and will reign as Emperor over their Ten Democratic Kings during the final three and a half years, and will thus reorganize in his own person all the power and dominion that once belonged to the golden head, silver breast, brazen loins, and iron legs, and become greater even than Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus, Alexander the Great, or Cæsar.

The earlier confederacy of ten horns, or kings, will precede the rise of the Napoleonic Antichrist, and his seven years' Covenant, and will consist of ten entirely different Sovereigns from the later confederacy of ten horns.

In Daniel 7 : 24, the ten horns are seen at the Time of the End to make their first appearance upon the wild beast or Roman Empire, and then a Little Horn is seen to arise in their midst after them, and to overthrow three of the ten horns, and gradually rises to vast dominion, and at last wear out the saints for three and a half years, and then perish at Christ's descent.

This shows very clearly that the Ten Kingdomed Confederacy of Britain, France enlarged to the Rhine, Spain-with-Portugal, Italy, Austria, Greece, Turkey, Syria, Egypt, Tripoli, will distinctly appear before the Napoleonic Anti-Christ arises at all as a Horn or Sovereign, because he only begins to arise as a Little Horn or Sovereign of some small State, after the Confederacy of Ten Horns has fully appeared, according to Daniel 7 : 8, 20, 24.

---

added in 1879.] Since the above was print-and Bulgaria have attained political inden 1878–9, so that the eighteen sovereignties aps be considered to have become twenty.
rus has been given to England. On the diapoli is marked as the tenth kingdom, which nay be the Danubian Provinces, if Tripoli
l to another country.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 191).

[As some of our readers may not have seen the past chapters of this story, we give the following sketch of the principal events up to the point from which the story continues.

Charles Clifford, the squire of Clifford Grange, who, at an advanced age, had married a young widow, died, leaving a son named after himself, and a stepson, Ernest Wren. The former, who had been thoroughly spoiled, ran away four years before his farher's death, and the old man thereupon disinherited him, and, with the help of his wife's brother, a lawyer named John Wright, made a new will, bequeathing all his property to his stepson, and requiring him to carry on the family name and inheritance. But on his death-bed, old Charles Clifford sent for that will, together with his first will, which had never been destroyed, and in the presence of Ernest, directed his wife to consume it (the second one) in the fire. By his first will the squire left every thing absolutely to his son Charles but by the second he had given his widow £300 a year, with right of residence at Clifford Grange. When the will was opened the day after Charles Clifford's death, it turned out that the old man had, at some time or another, by mistake, exchanged the covers of the two wills; so that when he burned, as he thought, the second will, it was really the first that was in the cover. Ernest had a severe struggle with himself whether to act frankly or to keep his secret to himself and take what seemed the wisest course. Ernest was the vicar of Clifford, on a small stipend, but being an unconverted man, he he had little pleasure and little success in his work. The general feeling was that it would be the saving of the estate if it fell into his hands instead of into those of his wild and reckless half-brother. Finally Ernest decided upon this course: to advertise freely and make every other effort to recall his runaway brother, and, if he failed, to assume the inheritance himself, with the intention of making good provision for his brother should he turn up at any future time. Accordingly he conferred his living upon an old college friend, the Rev. William Britton; and during a solitary walk along the cliffs, he tore to pieces the cover of his father's will which bore a date nearly twenty years earlier than the date of the will it had contained. Ernest was at that time a widower, with a little daughter, Rose. Not far from Clifford lay Rockwood, the half ruined estate of Squire Symons, a dissipated and profligate man, who had been forsaken by all his family except one amiable, accomplished, and beautiful daughter, Ruth, who devotedly remained by her post. This lady and Ernest had known each other from their childhood, and a strong sympathy had grown up between them. On the evening after the will was read, Ernest walked over to Rockwood, and in the course of conversation with Ruth Symons almost involuntarily declared his passion for her, but she firmly declined to abandon her father in his miserable condition.

Ernest had taken the name of Clifford and had proved himself a wise and prudent squire. He had by careful management increased the value of the estate. After some years he took a holiday in London and there had made many friends, among them Sir Robert Fortescue, whose son proposed marriage to Ernest's daughter Rose. On his return from London he found his half-brother had returned to his home during his absence and had been welcomed by his mother. Then the question arose in Earnest's mind of what he ought to do. Should he carry out the last wishes of his step-father or retain the property under the will. Ernest found it difficult to decide. From this point the story proceeds.

Self-Condemned.

ERNEST wished to hold a conversation about the will with his uncle, though he could do nothing toward really helping him to a decision, whilst the fundamental fact was concealed from him. Mr. Wright lost no time in beating about the bush. Both of them were his nephews, and if he liked Charles best, he admired Ernest most. Ernest was a rising man, coming into importance in the county, and incomparably the best master there had ever been at Clifford. Charles was not fit in his uncle eyes to be trusted with either money or influence; yet there was just reason why he should be handsomely provided for by Ernest.

"I hope you are ready to do something handsome for the poor fellow," he said to Ernest.

"What should you call handsome?" he asked.

Mr. Wright paused. He had sounded Mrs. Clifford as to her intentions, and found her obstinately resolved to hold fast her own money. She had been saving the greater portion of her income since her husband's death, and had invested it at a high percentage in Ernest's improvements. The £300 per annum bequeathed by Mr. Clifford's later will had grown into £500. But she was quite determined not to lose any of it.

Mr. Wright had boldly promised to secure £300 a year for Charles; but if his mother would not do any thing, it must all come out of Ernest's pocket. At the very time, too, when Rose was likely to be a much greater expense to her father. He did not know of Sir Robert Fortescue's letter, or he would have felt the difficulty still greater.

"We must take into consideration the poor fellow's extraordinary position," he said; "all the country is talking about it. There is no doubt he has a natural right to every thing; and in many lands he would have the legal right. English law, however, steps in, and says every man may do as he likes with his own, with certain restrictions.

"He may indeed limit his successor to a life interest only in his estate, and entail it upon others. Charlie's ancestors might have done this; and his father could not have disinherited him. But they each left their successor free; and you have reaped the benefit. Still the natural right remains the same. What my father and forefathers gained ought to be mine, not another man's. I considered old Clifford's will unjust, and I did my utmost to get him to alter it. You must take all these circumstances into calm and fair consideration, Ernest."

"Do you think me covetous?" asked Ernest with a half smile.

"No," answered his uncle, in a dubious tone, "but you know the value of money. You only reckon twenty shillings to the pound, while poor Charlie counts five-and-twenty. Covetous? Why, no! Not miserly nor greedy. About as covetous, I suppose, as other men, who have a good snug income in their hands, and are making a good use of it. You were always afraid of being poor, when you were quite a little lad."

"Was I?" he asked sorrowfully.

"Well! You have the eyes of all the country upon you," said Mr. Wright; "there's nothing else talked about at Dartford. I am satisfied you will deal liberally with your brother, whether your love him or not. I always feel sorry for that elder brother in the parable, you know, who stayed at home, and was good to his father; and when young scapegrace turned up again, and all the house went mad over him, I don't wonder he was angry. It was all right for the father to be glad; but brothers are different. I hope he made the best of it, however; and you will do the same, Ernest."

"As soon as I know what is best," answered Ernest.

Though the atmosphere of Clifford was charged with electricity, and every one else was conscious of it, Mr. Britton continued to breathe the calm air of devout abstraction. It had been settled that he should take a brief holiday after Ernest's return from London, and he left home early the next week, surprised and disappointed at his wife's steady refusal to accompany him.

Mrs. Britton could not think of quitting Clifford while a storm was hanging over it which might sweep away her own welfare in its swift career.

From the time that Ernest had given up the living it had been his practice to take his friend's duty in his absence. As soon as the office ceased to be compulsory it became a pleasure to him. He had a sense of solemn enjoyment in standing up among his own people, and leading their prayers, like the princes of old, who were also the priests of their subjects.

The villagers, on their part, liked to look up occasionally to Master Ernest in the though on the whole they were inclin more critical of his sermons than of tl ar's. "Master Britton's head has got thing inside it," they were wont to sa Master Ernest's got fifty. "We canc for as much from him." Ernest knew q their estimate of his ministrations; but also they enjoyed them as much as he d could not be jealous of his friend's super his own ground.

There was a great concourse of curi ple the Sunday of Mr. Britton's absence brought some of them there they could themselves. Mr. Wright had driven o Dartford. Julia Rush had walked al cliffs from Rockwood; and still more Ruth Symons had come, and was seate Rose in the Grange pew.

The crowded congregation, filling eve of the little church, struck Ernest wit usual sense of awe. There was sc strange face among them; but he felt would have been an easy task to fac gers in the stead of these neighbors and ents, looking up at him with their keen a gaze.

Their thoughts had been occupied on topic as his own. They had been try and sitting in judgment upon him; tl yet their verdict was in suspense. It re great effort to steady his voice and reac familiar words.

An ever-growing gloom and heaviness oppressed him. He feared that it mi itself heard in the tones of his voice, ar in the expression of his face. He stri get the mastery over himself, and he p ceeded. But who was he, that he sho thus to stand between God and man should his voice, rather than any other up in the solemn accents of prayer?

All the week he had been in confli battle-field of the world; walking by th light, and reasoning by the world's There was many a man there better fit up his unfettered hands in quiet trust t

Then there rushed through his minc ollection that he had once filled this p quitted it, to go up, as he thought, to He had ceased to be the vicar of C order to become its master. The bro with their promising outlets into wor perity, had seemed better to him, mo of his powers, than the charge of th peasant souls.

It was true he had given to them a b tor than he had been himself. Yet all like the rich man in the parable, his o had been the owning of lands, and the p of influence and reputation, and the go of this life. He had deluded himself fancy that he was serving God. He b been serving Mammon.

How he got through the service, an mon that followed it, he could not tell faces below him blended into a confu as he repeated mechanically the word eye fell upon. He felt glad, when it to take refuge in the vestry and sit blank stupor.

The old sexton came in when the co had dispersed, but he bade him go and key in the church door. Rose tapp window, and his eyes were lifted to face, looking in upon him through panes; but he only shook his head at h tion to walk up the cliff with her and h

How quickly would he cut the kno not untie, but for Ruth and Rose! fully would he go back to his old des of vicar of Clifford, could he but blot last few years.

The bells did not ring for afternoo and the news ran from lip to lip that h nest was not well enough to do the vi again. Such a circumstance had neve before, and it seemed as astonishing a tous as an eclipse of the sun. Moreov remaining alone in the vestry, with the door locked inside.

Mr. Britton was known to indulge in long spells of meditation and prayer inside the church, with the key turned to prevent intrusion. But Master Ernest was altogether a different personage. There must be something amiss.

A large number of strangers had come again for the afternoon prayers; and there was a good deal of visiting of neighbors in consequence. The early tea-tables of the village were crowded. There was much guessing going on, and a fine thrill almost of terror.

Could it be true, as Julia Rush had said, that Master Charles was going to law to turn out his elder brother? And did Master Ernest feel somehow that he was in the wrong? Why could not they share and share alike? If they went to law they would lose all their money, no doubt; and what would become of Clifford then? It was quite clear, in any case, that something must be going to happen.

The day was still warm and bright at seven o'clock, the hour for old Dunnit's meeting. There were more people than usual wending their way along the rocky pathway, for they clearly needed a centre for meeting, and old Dunnit was sure of having some very clear opinions of his own.

Julia Rush had been spending the day with her mother, who made her appearance with her, feeling that once a year it was incumbent upon her to pay her duty to the Almighty, by listening to a few good words; and she preferred old Dunnit's good words to Mr. Britton's more regular and more cultivated ministrations.

Mrs. Dunnit locked up her straying poultry, and went with her husband to the lighthouse. The ancient chapel was as full as it had ever been, in the days when the most popular preaching friar had called his congregation together by the tinkling of the bell in the low, square belfry. Elijah took up his post on the threshold, as being the most convenient spot from which to address his hearers, and from which he commanded a view of the rocky pathway leading up to the lighthouse.

It was a little after seven in the evening when Ernest left the church, and was seen by many inquisitive eyes to saunter down to the beach slowly and languidly. He turned mechanically into the path up the hill. It had been a favorite haunt of his since his early boyhood. The little tongue of rock stretching out into the water was ordinarily quiet and deserted, and from the far end all view of the village was cut off, and there was nothing to be seen except cliff and sea.

Ernest had forgotten it was Sunday evening. He was so absorbed in the conflict still raging within him that he could not give a thought either to the time or place. He was going on, like a man deaf and blind, who is led by some friendly hand which has grown so familiar that he hardly feels its clasp.

It was here he had come the night old Clifford died, and he was coming again, half-unconsciously, to knit up the ravelled memories of the past. But as he came below the lighthouse he was startled out of his reverie by the sound of voices.

Old Dunnit's sunburnt face and silvery head stood out clearly against the gray and weather-stained stones of the ancient porch. There was an expression of placid happiness upon his face. He saw Ernest at the foot of the steep rocky staircase, and he beckoned to him to come up with a gesture of welcome, though he did not pause in giving out the hymn that was about to be sung by the congregation within.

Ernest could distinguish a crowd of men and women in comparative darkness within the lighthouse, swaying to and fro with the energy in which they put their whole strength of voice into the singing. It was the custom still in that remote country place for two lines, or half a verse to be read aloud by the preacher and sung by the people, producing a quaint alternation of full-toned singing and quiet speech.

(To be continued.)

THE POWER OF CHRIST.

S. S. Lesson for April 4th.—Matt. 8 : 18–34. Golden Text, ver. 27. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

IN our last lesson we were considering the Lord Jesus in His office and in His power as the great Physician, to-day we think of Him in His power over the elements of earth and the demons of hell. And let us bear in mind that since He "emptied Himself" (Phil. 2 : 7, see Greek), He wrought His mighty works in "the power of the Spirit" (Luke 4 : 14), and He received that power as Man in order to transmit it to us.

But in order to receive and exercise the power of Jesus we must learn to follow Him. He "saw great multitudes about Him," and instead of being elated with success, "He gave commandment to depart unto the other side." He did not reason with but simply obeyed His Father; "As I hear I judge," He said (John 5 : 30), and He knew with absolute certainty that it was not His Father's will that He should there and then respond to the wants of these great multitudes. There may have been some self-seeking about them which must be kept in check, as in John 6 : 26, 27, "Ye seek Me, not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled."

In any case the Lord Jesus shunned and did not court popularity, and it is an essential requisite to the exercise of God's power that we should shrink from it too. We learn from the scribe who would follow Him whithersoever He should go, that the cost must be counted. "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." Are we willing to take what seems to be the risk of following Him who was a homeless stranger upon the earth He made? Can we leave all anxiety about earthly needs calmly and confidently to Him? If not, we are in no position to exercise God's power upon others. We must be free from ourselves, at liberty from and at rest about ourselves, if we would be blest to Him. From another of His disciples we learn that no other thing must take precedence of the call to follow Him. "Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father" was a plea not strong enough to excuse the follower of Christ. "Follow Me; and let the dead bury their dead," was His answer. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God." If we cannot follow Christ in what appears to us to be our positive duty, that cannot really be our duty in the sight of God.

When Jesus "was entered into a ship, His disciples followed Him. And, behold, there arose a great tempest in the sea, insomuch that the ship was covered with the waves: but He was asleep." While others were awake and in terror, the Lord Jesus slept. The storm without, the tossing of the vessel, did not affect Him; as Man He trusted implicitly in His Father's providence. We have our storms and many times of tossing. Are we as calm in the midst of difficulty and danger as when all seems to go well with us, or are we like the disciples?

The disciples came unto Him and awoke Him. That which the raging of the storm could not do, the need of a disciple accomplished at once. "Lord, save us; we perish," they cried. "And He saith unto them, Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?" The disciples believed they were in danger, and they were not quite sure of the Lord's power and willingness to deliver them. It is probable that they regarded the power which He had displayed over sickness and evil spirits as something exceptional, instead of taking one deliverance as a ground and warrant for expecting His deliverance upon all occasions.

Thus their unbelief grieved Him, and He asked them, "Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? Then He arose and rebuked the winds and the sea; and there was a great calm. But the men marvelled, saying, What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey Him?" Had they understood Him, they would have marvelled if He had not done it. Nothing grieves and dishonors our God so much as unbelief. "If ye had faith as a grain of mustard seed," He says, or "if ye have faith and doubt not," such and such things shall happen (comp. Matt. 17 : 20; 22 : 21; Mark 11 : 23; Luke 17 : 6).

"And when He was come to the other side, there met Him two possessed with devils, coming out of the tombs, exceeding fierce, so that no man might pass by that way. And, behold, they cried out, saying, What have we to do with Thee, Jesus, Thou Son of God?" What a meeting! These wicked lost spirits, not satisfied with their own eternal ruin, but rejoicing in their horrid tyranny over those two souls and bodies which they were making their playthings; so fierce that they were the dread of all men. And they come in contact with Him, who, though God over all, had emptied Himself of His glory, and who was so humble and lowly that no one could be afraid at His presence. And yet the fierce devils tremble before the meek and lowly Jesus, and they recognize sooner than His disciples that He is the Son of God.

But what a question! And yet, more or less, this is the cry of every unconverted soul. An instinct which seems to be part of our very immortality drives us to think of our relations with Him who has created us. But those devils knew not only the power of their Creator, they knew that in the Redeemer there lay vested a power over them which made them tremble. It is no secret in hell that "at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth" (Phil. 2 : 10). "Art Thou come hither to torment us before the time?" they ask. Unhappy creatures, they know that torment awaits them, and their occupation "before the time" is to torment others. It has been said that to make others happy is divine, to make others suffer is devilish. And there are souls, and many of them, who would rather run the risk of spending long ages with such beings as these than to yield themselves now unto God, and giving themselves over as living sacrifices unto Him.

In the Redeemer's presence the devils ceased to have power over the poor victims, and there seems to have been a shrinking on their part from remaining disembodied. "There was a good way off from them an herd of many swine feeding. So the devils besought Him saying, If Thou cast us out, suffer us to go away into the herd of swine. And He permitted them." Why was this? Some unthinking persons say it was wanton destruction on the part of our beloved Lord. Far, far from it. Swine's flesh was forbidden to the Jews, and here, in spite of the law of their God, these children of Israel were openly keeping herds of swine. It was the Lord's love to the souls of the Gadarenes that He would execute judgment upon that which was to them an occasion of sin. And how did they take it? They that kept them fled," etc. "And, behold, the whole city came out to meet Jesus; and when they saw Him they besought Him that He would depart out of their coasts." And he went.

No joy was there because the devils were cast out. They were content to retain the devils if they might have their swine. Poor miserable earthlings! And this is a picture of thousands of immortal souls. Intoxicated with the pleasure of some fleshly gratification, fascinated with some earthly honor, a trivial dignity, some tiny position of power among men, there is no welcome for, or even tolerance of, Jesus in their midst. They have taken their choice, and an awful choice it is, because it involves the great hereafter. And it is a most solemn lesson which we learn here, that Jesus is not besought in vain to let a soul alone. Oh, let men beware how they make such prayers as these. The miserable cry of the devils was not so terrible as this. They say, "What have we to do with Thee?" These Gadarenes say, "We will not have to do with Thee." Jesus made no offer of salvation to the devils; had He done so they might have accepted Him; but the Gadarenes threw away their chance; they might have had the Saviour and the Healer among them, and they would not. God keep any of us from doing likewise.

FOREIGN TOPICS.

The English Electoral Campaign has been vigorously opened. The Liberal party is especially energetic in the canvass. Mr. Gladstone has made several speeches to crowded assemblies, and appears to be very popular in northern districts. So great is the enthusiasm respecting him, and so intense the desire to listen to his orations, that free tickets distributed to electors have been purchased from them for prices as high as thirty dollars each. It is a somewhat embarrassing circumstance to the Liberals that Mr. Gladstone is not the leader of the party, though the most popular man in it. He resigned the leadership after the last general election. The London newspapers say that it is impossible to prognosticate the result of the election.

Apprehensions of Difficulties between France and Russia have been entertained during the past week. The Russian Ambassador at Paris applied to the French Government for the extradition of Hartman, a Nihilist, who had taken refuge on French soil. The French Ministers declined to surrender Hartman on the ground that sufficient evidence of his identity had not been furnished. They also declined to keep him in custody while fresh evidence was sent for, whereupon Hartman, as soon as he was at liberty, fled to London, where he has avowed his complicity in Nihilist plots. The Russian Government is incensed at the conduct of the French authorities, and Count Orloff, the Russian Ambassador at Paris, has resigned. His resignation is assigned to other causes, but the Hartman business is believed to be the real cause, especially as the French Minister at St. Petersburg has applied for leave of absence.

The Anglo-Afghan War.—A Dispatch from Cabul to the London Times says the general aspect of affairs there is hopeful. No hostile gathering is known to exist in any quarter, and the approaching agricultural season is likely to leave the people little leisure for war. The latest accounts from Ghuznee indicate a strong likelihood that Mahomed Jan will submit, and that the puppet, Moosa Khan, will be restored to his mother at Cabul. Abdul-Rahman Khan makes no sign. The troops at Cabul will be reinforced by four regiments of native infantry.

War is Threatened Between Russia and China. The Chinese correspondent of the New York Herald reports that it is scarcely possible to exaggerate the gravity of the situation. A sudden warlike spirit seems to have gained possession of the Chinese people. On all sides there are symptoms of a coming struggle, before which all the wars of the Empire will fade into insignificance. The Green Banner Army is being carefully trained in the principles of European tactics. Their spears and matchlocks are being replaced by rifles. A general inspection has been ordered by the War Minister, the accounts of the war departments overhauled, and the coast defences strengthened. A number of foreign drill-masters have been brought to Tientsin, which is the principal garrison town of the Empire. Preparations are being already made for calling out the irregular volunteers, who are only mustered in the gravest crises of the State. In a word, the Flowery Land is awakened from its torpor, and seems determined to meet the coming crisis with vigor.

An English Officer Captured by Brigands.— Colonel Synge, who was recently despatched by Sir A. H. Layard to distribute relief to the Mussulman refugees in Eastern Roumelia, was proceeding to his destination accompanied by his wife, when he was seized by brigands. Niko, the leader of the band, who made the seizure, demands a ransom of £15,000 ($73,000) and a free pardon. For some time the brigands who have captured Colonel Synge have committed depredations in the neighborhood of Mount Olympus, the sufferers being Turkish subjects. Gradually they approached Caterina, until finally they were attracted by the farm occupied by Colonel Synge, near Salonica. The Colonel made a gallant resistance; several of the brigands were killed, but on the band receiving reinforcements, they laid an ambush, into which the Colonel falling, he was taken prisoner. A long time afterward a letter from Colonel Synge reached Mr. Blunt, the British Consul at Salonica, begging that no troops should be sent in pursuit, as if any were sent the brigands would murder him. The Turkish Government has ordered the governors of Salonica, Monastir, and Kossovo to spare no endeavors to bring about the release of the prisoners. On account, however, of the heavy snows which are blocking up the roads and passes, communication is nearly impossible between the points where there are troops and the mountains to which Colonel and Mrs. Synge have been carried.

A Chinese Ambassador has been Sentenced to death. Chung How, the Chinese Minister at St. Petersburg, who had been sent to adjust the difficulties between Russia and China, is to be beheaded. The Six Boards and the Nine Courts and other judicial bodies at Pekin were instructed to inquire into his conduct while conducting the mission, and particularly into the question whether any part of the 5,000,000 taels, to the payment of which he pledged the Imperial treasury, had found their way into his own pocket. His stipulations were reviewed by the Board, and held by them to be unpatriotic and prejudicial to the dignity of China. Foreigners, and especially Russians, believe that the Emperor thinks that the indemnity is too great, and that the best way to avoid paying it is to withhold his ratification of the treaty, and to make Chung How the scapegoat.

Reformation in Armenia.—Archbishop Mighuditch, of Armenia, now in London, has given an account of the recent reformation in the Church of Asia Minor. Thirteen year's ago when American missionaries had been long at work in the country, he was chosen to combat the views of the strangers and was thus led to study the doctrines of reformed Christianity. He soon learned that his own Church was full of error, and set to work to convince his clergy. Abandoning his ecclesiastical work, he began to teach, and, in spite of the persecution with which he was treated, he succeeded in drawing around him a congregation of some 300 persons, and a firman to build a church was obtained from the Sultan. Between £300 and £400 have been expended upon the edifice, this amount having been principally contributed by the late Bishop Gobat and the late Rev. W. Newton, who through all his difficulties have been his firm friends. The Archbishop has gone to England to ask for support, and to acquire a better acquaintance with the English language.

The Compromise Between the Pope and Prince Bismarck appears to have been finally arranged. The Pope having made the concession that the names of priests appointed to livings are henceforth to be officially submitted by bishops to the secular authorities, peace between Berlin and the Vatican has become possible. About one thousand vacant livings will be refilled, and some clauses of the ecclesiastical laws will be repealed.

A Memorial of the British Officers who Fell at Isandula, in Natal, has been prepared for the Queen, containing a lock of the hair of each within a silver casing. At a religious service held on this scene of disaster to the English troops, the burial office was read and the communion administered by the Bishop, who said he had three objects in holding that service at Isandula: That the bodies of Christian men should not be left without one word of peace and love being said over their graves; that the protecting hand of Providence might be recognized; and that a practical outcome of the work might be the establishment of a mission. It is proposed to erect a church on the spot where the service was held.

A Jaguar Effected the Release of an Englishman from a perilous position recently in Honduras. The London Telegraph relates that Mr. Fowler, the Colonial Secretary of Honduras, while exploring the interior of the colony, was overtaken by a drove of wild pigs who attacked him savagely. He endeavored to drive off, but failed, and finally took refuge i branches of a large tree. Soon the whol were around his hiding-place, gnashing teeth at him, grunting, and sharpening tusks against his tree. These animals a only ferocious but patient, and rather th an object of their anger escape, will wait for days, so that the Secretary feared he s remain in the tree until he fell from exhau
Just as he was giving up hope he noticed of fear in his enemies, and presently they a hastily away. The cause of their flight wa seen in the presence of a large jaguar, the erate foe of the pig, who hotly pursue drove. As soon as the ground was clea Fowler descended, thankful that the enm tween the animals had saved his life. T has sometimes happened in the provide God that the believer has been rescued danger through the quarrels of his assa
"The righteous is delivered out of troubl the wicked cometh in his stead" (Prov. 11

Swallowing a Yard of Land.—In a B address to English workingmen Lord said: "We have heard a great deal re about the peasantry becoming owners o and having gardens, fields, and farms o own. Now an acre of good agricultural l worth, on an average, about £60, or as as possible 3d. for every square yard. I w how many workingmen consider that, whe order threepennys' worth of beer or spirit are swallowing down a square yard of goo cultural land."

The Nihilist who Attempted to Assas
the Russian General Melikoff was a Russi by birth. He has been hanged on the Sen sky Plain, in the presence of 50,000 peopl was dressed in black, with a flat cap on his tied under the chin, and a board on hi bearing his accusation as a State crimina was exhorted by a priest of the Greek C which he once joined, but he manifested indifference, and was with difficulty preva to kiss the crucifix.

The London Standard, in commenting event, says: "It can hardly be denied th Nihilists are, for the moment, masters situation. They have established terror th out Russia, in an empire of seventy mill people, where there have now arisen soc political difficulties the like of which scarcely been paralleled in history. It m be asked by alarmists if the stream of F tion breaks forth, will it be confined to alone? Can we be sure that the rest Continent will escape the flood which threatens to sweep all before it?"

An English Nobleman, Lord Adelbert
the brother of the Marquis of Exeter, ha preaching in Edinburgh. Ten years ago an officer in the Rifle Brigade, he wa known on the St. Lawrence and Ottawa along which he cruised in a boat, with which he pitched at night as his Gospe quarters. He would preach wherever h a few people to form a congregation, a the means of doing much good.

A Fortune Amounting to Two and a Ha lion dollars has just been left Sir H. Hav son of the brave English General whose h during the Indian Mutiny is matter of h
The fortune comes from a cousin of Sir Havelock's father, named Allen. Mr. was one of those gentlemen who are do by earth-hunger. Forty years ago he ca the possession of a small estate on the b the Tees. To this he added land whene portunity offered, till at the period of hi he was proprietor of 6000 acres, yielding nual income of £13,000. Twenty years made his will, leaving this property to h trious cousin. When Sir Henry died h ferred the property to his son, the prese net, but he hampered the bequest with t dition that for twenty-one years the rent estate should, with the exception of some be appropriated to the purchase of fre

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

ublished at 63 Bible House, New York City, and 2 Ivy Lane, London. Edited in London by the Rev. M. Baxter, in New York by Mr. B. Aitken.

Ti Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. AL GE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also occasionally a Sermon by the Rev. W. MORLEY PUNSHON, LL.D., the celebrated Methodist Minister, Rev. W. M. AY ITKEN, or some other Eminent Preacher; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary oi Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

Single Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 1880. 14th Year. No. 14—New Series.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

R AIT OF MAJOR MALAN, and Sketch of his ife.
E ECORATED GRAVE; A New Sermon by Dr. Tal ge.
D PERCIVAL MONTAIGNE. A Thrilling Story by the Author of "Felicia Cuffe." Gsgow Badger and the Salvation Army.
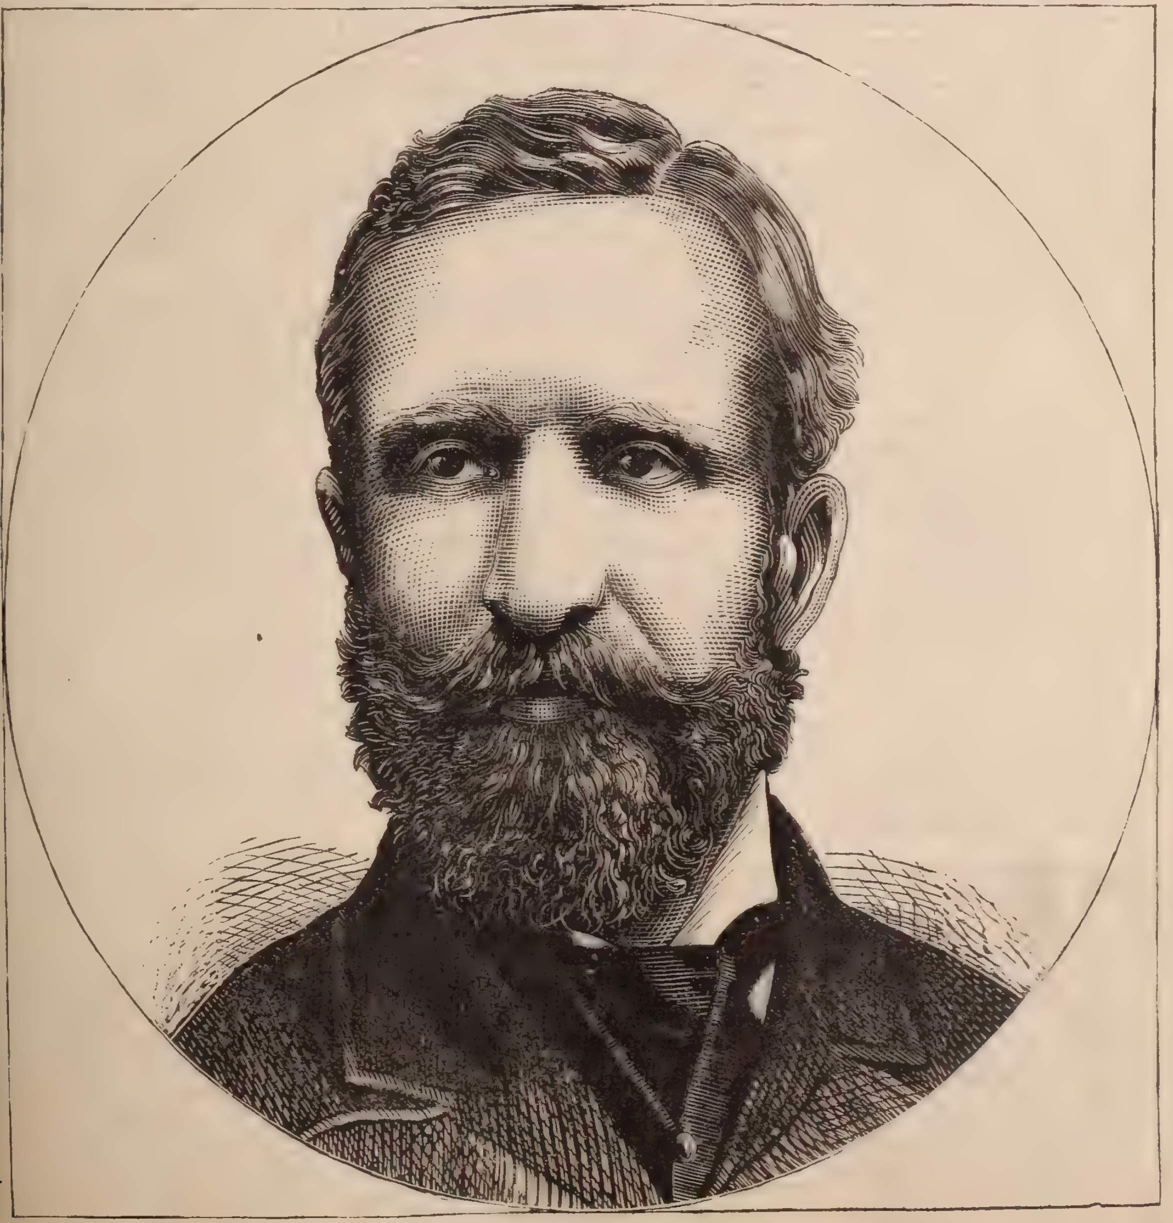
WHAT COMING WARS MAY WE EXPECT? By M. Baxter—A Divorced Wife Reclaimed from the Stage.
CURRENT EVENTS: Congress—The Sailing of the Constellation—Revival in Detroit—George Muller at Milwaukee—A Man Driven Mad by a Puzzle—A Sermon Worth $500, etc.
THE BLOOD OF THE PASSOVER; A Sermon by Rev. W. M. Punshon, LL.D.
THE FAIR PORTRAIT OF A SAINT. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
PORTRAIT OF MISS CHARLOTTE ANGAS SCOTT, and Sketch of her Life.
A WEIGHT OF WEALTH. (Continued.)
The Invitation of Christ. S. S. Lesson by Mrs. M. Baxter—Expedition of Five Missionaries to Africa.
FOREIGN TOPICS: The British Election, etc.



MAJOR MALAN: Author of a "Soldier's Experience" and of "Travels in Africa."

MAJOR MALAN,

The Christian Soldier.

His Christian Relatives—Enters the British Army—At the Attack on the Redan—Wounded and Sent Home—His Marriage—Sickness and Death of Mrs. Malan—His Conversion—Leaves the Army—Missionary Work—Mission to Africa.

THE Recollections of Major Malan, extracts from which have appeared from time to time in the CHRISTIAN HERALD, have excited a general desire to know more of their author. We have this week the pleasure of presenting his portrait to our readers, with a brief sketch of his eventful life.

Cæsar H. Malan is the second son of a clergyman of the Church of England whose sphere of labor is at Broad Windsor, a small town in Dorsetshire. His grandfather was the eminent Cæsar Malan, of Geneva, whose memory is treasured by the churches throughout the continent of Europe. His writings, his labors, and his earnest evangelistic efforts are remembered in Switzerland, France, Belgium, Holland, Scotland, Ireland, and England, and have borne their fruit in ever corner of the globe. His tracts have led more than one officer in the British army to the faith of Christ, and among them that faithful servant of the Lord, the late Captain Trotter.

Major Malan, though brought up surrounded with Christian influences, was at the conclusion of his educational career an unconverted young man. He was the child of many prayers, but when the time came for him to choose a profession he had not given his heart to the Saviour. He decided on being a soldier, and though there have been many eminent Christians who, like Havelock and Hedly, Vicars, have been enabled to serve God faithfully and with a blessing to themselves and others while in the army, it may be doubted whether Major Malan would have made this choice had he at the time been converted to God. He entered the British army in 1854, just at the time that his country was engaged in war with Russia. He was present at the closing scenes of that campaign, and took an active part in them.

Of the terrible scenes of

THE STORMING OF THE REDAN

fort, in which he was wounded, he thus writes: "To my mother's prayers I believe now that I owed my many merciful escapes that day. She left me for the presence of God when I was three years old; but I believe that, in answer to her prayers, His love guarded me then, as it has since drawn me to Himself. 'I shall never forget your mother's prayers,' wrote an old friend to me lately, 'so humble, so spiritual, so fervent.'

"But I fancy I hear some unbelieving heart whisper as it reads this, 'Were there no sons for whom a mother's prayers were offered whose bodies were left before that Redan?' Doubtless many, my friend; but if you are such a mother, I would say, wait until we enter the glory to see whether your prayers were not answered. No one can tell what may pass between a soul and its God in the solemn moment preceding an assault. Remember, it is written, 'Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved.'"

His wounds before Sebastopol were of a severe character; he was brought home in a helpless condition, and took up his abode in a country village until he recovered. Here the etiquette of society and professional fellow-feeling led the lord of the manor, a retired cavalry officer, to call upon the wounded officer. From this initial step sprang a friendship which ripened with time. The visits continued to possess interest for the "young hero," as the villagers were accustomed to call him. In due time an invitation came to the young officer to dine at the manor house; there he met a daughter of his military friend. He had seen her before, when on horseback by the side of her father, when the latter made a short halt to salute his young comrade. He was soon made to feel as one of the family. An order for Lieutenant Malan to return to the Crimea seemed for a time to sever the tie of friendship between him and the occupants of the "great house." But time, which heals all breaches, soon revealed the fact that the young soldier's name was a talisman in that house. Returning to England once more at the close of the war, the friendship was renewed, and matters between himself and the Colonel's daughter made some progress, at least in the young lieutenant's mind.

Soon the Indian Mutiny called him away again. Here he suffered from fever, and after four years' service he returned to pay another visit to the old Elizabethan home, this time as captain, at the age of twenty-one, and was privileged to see again in the flesh her of whom he had so often fondly thought. The tale of love was at last unfolded, to meet a tender, loving response. The lady proved to be a fitting partner for the young officer's consecrated life. They were married in due time.

The marriage was an exceedingly happy one, but after a short time a disease developed in this amiable Christian lady against which medical skill failed to cope. It became evident that she must die, and her husband was plunged in deep grief.

Of this period he writes: "I was obliged to go to the south of France for the health of one dearer to me than myself. From her I was determined I would not part. She was sick, and no one could nurse her better than I could. It was a question where my regiment would be sent on leaving Aldershot, and on this depended my further soldiering. If sent to any station in Ireland or in the north of England, away from her friends, I should leave the service.

"At that time there was one company of infantry quartered in the Weymouth Barracks. Weymouth is about twenty miles from what was then her home. My regiment was moved from Aldershot; and when I returned from France my company was the one in those barracks. I bade my wife good-by, mounted my horse, had a delicious ride across the hills, and on entering the barrack-square at Weymouth found myself surrounded by my men.

"The next day I did my duty and rode home. Thus, day by day, I was able to do my duty and cheer my sick wife, until she was able to join me in Weymouth. Our God, chose the best place for her, and the only quarter where I could have continued to serve in the army. Am I wrong in thus praising His faithfulness?

"One day one of my men came up to me and said, 'I beg your pardon, sir, but how is Mrs. Malan? I have often wished to ask you. We would ask you every day, but we don't like. You cannot think how much the whole company feel for you!'

"These words touched me. My precious one had helped me on two or three happy occasions in trying to give pleasure to my men, and they knew the interest she felt in them. Soldiers are very grateful to ladies who treat them with kindness."

Mrs. Malan's death occurred soon after this, and her husband grieved bitterly, but not as those without hope.

Major Malan's

CONVERSION

took place in India, and at the close of the Indian Mutiny, in 1859, he hesitated as to the course he ought to follow, and which would be likely to be most beneficial to him in the service of Christ he had now resolved to enter. After prayerfully weighing the respective advantages of the life of a country gentleman and that of a soldier he decided to continue in the army. Here another difficulty met him—a difficulty suggested by unbelief. He thought he could serve the Master better in a strange regiment, where he was not known, than among his old comrades.

He traces the means which led up to his conversion very clearly, and narrates them in his work, "A Soldier's Experience of God's Love," for the encouragement of Christian friends at home who have soldier or sailor friends abroad. He lays great stress upon Christian letter-writing as a most useful means. He says, "I was co ted by my mother, before she was calle with the Lord, to the care of a lady, a re who was an earnest Christian. I doubt n her teaching in my early childhood sov grace the seeds of God's truth in my he also met two Christian women whose ki exercised a powerful influence over me ar the temptations of a soldier's life.

"But what first drew my heart towa Lord Jesus was a visit which I paid, one few hours, before going to India, to Beck Rectory, Kent, well known as the house Marsh's son-in-law, the Rev. F. Chalme his dear wife; but, above all, the letters mother's friend, Mrs. Chalmers, written when in India, were most blessed to me told me more of the love of the Lord Jesu
I had ever heard before, and urged me Him and give my heart to Him. These were the only commentary I had for the tures, and with my daily study of God's they were most blessed to me. Various were the means used, but, God be prais result was my salvation. 'He brought m banqueting house, and His banner over LOVE' (Canticles 2 : 4).

"Let my own case, and that of tw officers, encourage the writing of such These two owned the same name, and we ing in the same regiment. A letter wr one was read by the other. There was take, for God meant it. Both were le lieve by the reading of that letter."

He thus relates the culmination of means in the triumph of belief and the i of peace:

"I was riding back from mess one nig my camel, grieving over the uselessnes life for the glory of God and the good when, as a ray from Heaven, there came mind the verse of a chapter I had rea men, 'All we like sheep have gone astray; turned every one to his own way; and hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all' 6). What! THE INIQUITY OF US ALL all MY iniquity—that means all my sins sion as well as commission, all my sins, p ent, and future—all laid BY GOD ON all borne away, all forgiven. Oh, the jo the peace! How I got down from m ran to my room, and falling on my kne God, praised and blessed Him and the sus Christ! I have often since been and distressed by sin, but I have, tha never, never lost that peace—the peace full, and eternal forgiveness of sins th blood of Christ."

He thenceforward devoted his energi well-being of his men, until he received considered was an order from the general of the army restricting him i deavors to do good in his regiment, and fore left the service. He was at this ti tered at King William's Town, in Ka command of a wing of his regiment, w had made tours to the various missio among the neighboring tribes. The awakened by these visits and the need

THE AFRICAN PEOPLE

caused him to feel, when obliged to leav fession, that he had been providential field in which he might be able to help of the Gospel.

He thus writes, with probably the la in mind: "I cannot as an old soldier testimony better than with the pray loyal subject of Queen Elizabeth's, Jewel, 'Thou, O most merciful Fath defence in these dangerous times. Give to—Victoria—Thy servant.' This is from the depth of my heart. O Lord the Queen and country. 'Hallowe name by the preaching of Thy Word an Thy kingdom—even the kingdom of Jesus—come. Thy will be done in ear in heaven. Lead us not into temptat deliver us from evil.'"

He threw himself with all his heart missionary cause. After a short rest in England he went back to Africa, and spent more than two years in visiting the various mission stations in the colony, in Kaffraria, Basutoland, and Natal, and in laboring as an evangelist among the Kaffirs. He built a mission station among the Galeka Kaffirs, which was burnt down in the recent war in that part of the colony.

is experience in Africa led him to the conclusion that it is by native African evangelists that the Gospel must be proclaimed to the tribes in Central Africa. The courage, endurance, and zeal of the native preachers eminently qualify them to do this work in a region and climate most trying to Europeans. To advocate this cause he has recently visited France and this country, urging the churches to send native evangelists from their missions in Southern Africa to the tribes in the interior.

As a result of correspondence with missionaries interested in this system of evangelization, and at their earnest request, Major Malan has been led to propose and establish a "Native African Missions' Aid Association." The Earl of haftesbury, the Earl of Aberdeen, the Marquis of Cholmondeley, Lord Polworth, the Rev. Dr Moffat, and many other well-known Christian men and women are among his most zealous supporters.

Two doors are open in the interior of Africa for native evangelists from the south who understand the languages there spoken. The Scriptures and other needful books are already translated in those languages, and nothing is needed but the funds to send on the laborers. The native missions are led and superintended by experienced European missionaries.

To further this great and important enterprise is now the avowed life-object of the former soldier. It is a glorious warfare, whose aim is peace and salvation. The tribes in the interior of Africa have need that Christians of all nations should send them light, liberty, and life.

Interesting sketches of various important events in Major Malan's life have been published in this journal. The first was "How I Became a Soldier." This sketch appeared in the CHRISTIAN HERALD of May 15th, 1879.

MOMENTOUS EXPEDITION OF FIVE MISSIONARIES FROM ENGLAND TO CENTRAL AFRICA.

FAREWELL meetings have been held at Mr. Guinness's Missionary Institute, and at Mildmay Conference Hall, London, to meet five of his missionaries who were leaving London for Central Africa. They are Messrs. Adam McCall, of Leicester, J. Clarke, Harvey, Lanceley, and Mrs Richards, who went out to her husband, a missionary there.

The Congo, or Livingstone River, as it has been renamed by Mr. H. M. Stanley, runs almost across Central Africa, and is ten miles broad in some parts, and about 2000 miles long. Henry Stanley, the celebrated explorer, spent three years in crossing Africa, chiefly along the route of the Congo River. That part of Africa is thickly populated, and supposed to contain fifty million inhabitants, all sunk in heathenism, and to whom only fourteen missionaries have gone out.

The present expedition consists of Mr. McCall and four Scotch missionaries. The carpenter of the party, Mr. McKergow, has already preceded them. They are going to establish an Industrial Mission Station at Stanley Pool, on the banks of the Congo River, three hundred and fifty miles from where they will land on the African coast.

When arrived at Stanley Pool these missionaries will try to acquire the language of the natives and to reduce it to writing, to teach the people to read in their own tongue, to translate the Bible into it, and also to teach them English. They will be instructed, not only in the law, and in the Gospel of God, but also in the arts of peace, shown the advantages of properly constructed dwellings, and how to build them; shown the wonderful results to be achieved by the use of hammer and nails and other carpenters' and joiners' tools; by the use of simple machinery to save labor, as, for example, the water-wheel, for grinding corn and raising water for purposes of irrigation.

Iron ore abounds in the country. The natives will be taught the use of forge and bellows, improved modes of agriculture, and how to raise the many valuable products their climate is capable of producing—coffee, sugar, cotton, arrowroot, tapioca, maize (two or three crops a year), as well as fruits and vegetables without end. The introduction of the art of shoemaking will be an invaluable benefaction in a country where the unfortunate natives so sadly need protection to their feet from the merciless "jigger" and other noxious insects, while the dispensary and medical mission will perhaps more than any thing else attract native confidence and respect. Mr. McCall has a fair knowledge of the healing art, and will commence this branch of work at once; ultimately, and indeed as soon as possible, it is intended, if the Lord will, to send out a fully qualified doctor.

The vessel in which they have gone out will call at the port of Teneriffe for twenty donkeys and twenty Kroomen to carry their baggage over the three hundred and fifty miles. The cost of taking them to Stanley Pool and establishing their proposed industrial settlement there will be about $6000 for the first twelve months.

MR. ADAM M'CALL, THE LEADER

of this expedition (who, as far as his own expenses are concerned, goes out at his own cost), is the son of Mr. McCall, a gentleman of position in Leicester, and was converted there, about the end of 1878, under the preaching of the eminent minister, the Rev. Newman Hall, at a mission service. He is about thirty years old, and is an architect and surveyor by profession. During the seven years from 1872 to 1878, inclusive, he travelled over between fifteen and twenty thousand miles in South and South Central Africa. He traversed in various directions and repeatedly the Cape Colony, the Orange Free State, Griqua Land West, Natal, the Transvaal, Bechuana Land, the Matabele country, and the Zambesi valley, visiting the celebrated Victoria Falls and the upper waters of the Zambesi, some two thousand miles inland from Cape Town. During two years of his stay in South Africa Mr. McCall was professionally engaged in the Civil Service of the Government, and during the last two years which he spent in the far interior, traversing regions almost untrodden by white men, he was quite cut off from all contact with civilization, and for twelve months did not even receive a letter. He was then hunting elephant, buffalo, and other "big game."

He visited the remote stations of the London Missionary Society among the Matabele, and stations of other societies in Bechuana Land and elsewhere, for, although unconverted himself at the time, he sympathized with such Christian efforts. He met also M. and Madame Coillard, the French Protestant missionaries, during their detention as prisoners by the chief Lobengula.

In 1878, after this considerable experience in African life and travel, Mr. McCall returned to England, intending to go back almost immediately to the Zambesi valley, with a view of exploring the Chôbe River (since descended by Major de Serpa Pinto), and of taking a series of photographic views of the country. He had already partly made his arrangements, when all his desires and feelings about his life were suddenly changed by his conversion to God. Old things passed away; all things became new to him! He could no longer live for mere self-pleasing. His earnest inquiry was, "Lord, what wilt thou have me do?" The answer was quickly and strongly borne in upon his conscience.

He must return to Central Africa, to the "dark continent" he knew so well; not now to amuse himself, but to serve Christ; not to hunt the big game of the interior, but to be "a fisher of men;" not as a mere explorer and traveller, but a missionary of the Gospel. The Master had surely been training him, all unconsciously to himself, for work which He wanted to be done. He had been preparing an instrument for a special service, and now by His spirit He called him to it. Mr. McCall gladly, and with his whole heart, devoted his life to mission work in interior Africa; and when the peculiar claims of the Congo region were pressed on his attention, he decided, after much prayerful consideration, to offer his services to the Livingstone Inland Mission for the purpose of leading this expedition up to Stanley Pool on the Upper Congo.

He rightly felt that, after his long exile in Africa, and in view of his recent conversion, he needed some time for the study of the Scriptures and for the enjoyment of Christian fellowship; and though in certain respects he required no preliminary training, yet he wished to increase his knowledge of medicine by spending the last few months at the London Hospital, and for the last twelve months he has been studying in the East London Institute, where he has won a high place in the esteem and regard of all who knew him. His interest in the Congo Mission has deepened continually, till it has become an intense and consuming zeal.

A DIVORCED WIFE RECLAIMED FROM THE STAGE.

WHILE members of Christian churches are discussing the question whether they can consistently attend the theatre, an incident has occurred in a Western city which throws some light on the influence exerted by the stage on young people. The story is told in The Youth's Companion, and the closing event in the narrative transpired very recently.

A young girl became infatuated with a taste for private theatricals. She married, and years passed, but the passion continued unabated. Neither husband nor child could supply the place of the poor excitement of playing queen or chambermaid in some little parlor comedy.

There were plenty of flattering friends to assure her that she was a Siddons lost to the world. Her home was neglected, her child given over to the care of ignorant servants, while she pored over books of plays, or declaimed before the looking-glass.

At last, half maddened by this excited vanity which she called "genius" and "ambition," she fled from her home and went to a large city. There she procured a divorce from her husband on the ground of incomptibility of temper, and prepared herself for the stage. She made her appearance at last, and it proved an utter failure. Instead of applause she received only indifference and laughter.

She found in the theatre not the fairy scene of triumph she had fancied, but hard drudgery. Her companions were coarse women and coarser men. Shocked, mortified, and wretched, she hid herself in a garret and tried to support herself by sewing; grew poorer week by week, and at last was reduced to utter want.

A friend found her, and sent to her husband, who, unlike most men, came to her at once with all the old love which she had so sorely abused. He found her at the very gates of death, and brought her home. She is now a wife and mother again, made humble and faithful by an experience which has purified her as by fire.

If the foolish girls who envy the painted queens that sweep across the boards of our theatres could know their real lives, the drudgery, the pain, the incessant temptation to evil, which is their daily lot, they would be cured of all wish to share such dangerous and unsavory triumphs.

The Chinese Refugees from San Francisco will, on their arrival at Eastern cities, find a friend in Mrs. Sargent, of California, now staying in New York. She has received many applications for Chinese servants. She is considering proposals to erect an immense Chinese laundry at Saratoga, and other watering-places. It is likely that 5000 Chinamen will be brought East to engage in various labors.

THE DECORATED GRAVE.

A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage, preached on Sunday Morning, March 28th, 1880.

"In the garden a new sepulchre."—JOHN 19 : 41.

The Spirit of the Flowers—The Garden in the Suburbs of Jerusalem—The Sepulchre Prepared by Joseph—The Most Celebrated Tomb of all Ages—The Fight at the Sepulchre Door—I. Post-mortem Honors Contrasted with Ante-mortem Ignominies—Poet's Corner in Westminster Abbey—Less Stone and more Blankets—Horace Greeley's Life and Funeral—II. Floral Decoration Appropriate for the Place of the Dead—Christ Buried in a Garden—What the Flowers on a Grave Say—Turn All the Cemeteries into Gardens—III. The Dignity of Unpretending Obsequies—The Funeral of the King of the Universe—IV. You Cannot Keep the Dead Down—The Glory of the Resurrection Body—Four Gardens—The Good Ship Constellation—The Ship Zion.

LOOKING around the church this morning, seeing flowers in wreaths, and flowers in stars, and flowers in crosses, and flowers in crowns, billows of beauty, conflagration of beauty, I feel as if I stood in a small heaven.

You say these flowers will fade. Yes, but perhaps we may see them again. They may be immortal. The fragrance of the flower may be the spirit of the flower; the body of the flower dying on earth, its spirit may appear in better worlds. I do not say it will be so. I say it may be so. The ancestors of these tuberoses and camelias and japonicas and jasmines and heliotropes were born in Paradise. These apostles of beauty came down in the regular line of apostolic succession. Their ancestors during the flood under ground, afterward appeared.

The world started with Eden, it will end with Eden. Heaven is called a Paradise of God. Paradise means flowers. While theological geniuses in this day are trying to blot out every thing material from their idea of heaven, and, so far as I can tell, their future state is to be a floating around somewhere between the Great Bear and the Dipper, I should not be surprised if at last I can pick up a daisy on the everlasting hills and hear it say, "I am one of the glorified flowers of earth. Don't you remember me? I worshipped with you on Easter morning in 1880."

My text introduces us into

A GARDEN.

It is a manor in the suburbs of Jerusalem, owned by a wealthy gentleman by the name of Joseph. He belonged to the Court of Seventy who had condemned Christ, but he had voted in the negative, or, being a timid man, had absented himself when the vote was to be taken. At great expense he laid out the garden. It being a hot climate, I suppose there were trees broad-branched, and there were paths winding under these trees, and here and there were waters dripping down over the rocks into fish-ponds, and there were vines and flowers blooming from the wall, and all around the beauties of kiosk and arboriculture. After the fatigues of the Jerusalem court-room, how refreshing to come into this suburban retreat, botanical and pomological!

Wandering in the garden I behold some rocks which have on them the mark of the sculptor's chisel. I come nearer, and I find there is a subterranean recess. I come down the marble steps, and I come to a portico, over which there is an architrave, by the chisel cut into representations of fruits and flowers. I enter the portico. On either side there are rooms—two or four or six rooms of rock, the walls of these rooms having niches, each niche large enough to hold a dead body. Here is one room that is especially wealthy of sculpture.

The fact is, that Joseph realizes he cannot always walk this garden, and he has provided this place for his last slumber. Oh! what a beautiful spot in which to wait for the coming of the resurrection! Mark well this tomb, for it is to be

THE MOST CELEBRATED TOMB IN ALL THE AGES.

Catacombs of Egypt, tomb of Napoleon, Mahal Taj of India, nothing compared with it. Christ has just been murdered, and His body will be thrown to the dogs and the ravens, like other crucified bodies, unless there be prompt and efficient hindrance. Joseph, the owner of this mausoleum in the rock, begs for the body of Christ. He washes the poor mutilated frame from the dust and blood, shrouds it and perfumes it.

I think that regular embalmment was omitted. When in olden time a body was to be embalmed, the priest, with some pretension of medical skill, would point out the place between the ribs where the incision must be made; and then the operator, having made the incision, ran lest he be slain for a violation of the dead. Then the other priests would come with salt of nitre and cassia, and wine of palm-tree, and complete the embalmment. But I think this embalmment of the body of Christ was omitted. It would have raised another contention and another riot.

THE FUNERAL

hastens on. Present, I think, Joseph, the owner of the mausoleum; Nicodemus, the wealthy man who had brought the spices; and the two Marys. No organ dirge, no plumes, no catafalque. Heavy burden for two men as they carry Christ's body down the marble stairs and into the portico, and lift the dead weight to the level of the niche in the rock, and push the body of Christ into the only pleasant resting-place it ever had. Coming forth from the portico they close the door of rock against the recess.

The government, afraid that the disciples may steal the body of Christ and play resurrection, order the seal of the Sanhedrim to be put upon the door of the tomb; the violation of that seal, like the violation of the seal of the Government of the United States or Great Britain, to be followed with great punishment. A company of soldiers from the tower of Antonia is detailed to stand guard.

At the door of that mausoleum a fight takes place which decides the question for all graveyards and cemeteries. Sword of lightning against sword of steel. Angel against military. No seal of letter was ever more easily broken than that seal of the Sanhedrim on the door of the tomb. The dead body in the niche in the rock begins to move in its shroud of fine linen, slides down upon the pavement, moves out of the portico, appears in the doorway, advances into the open air, comes up the marble steps. Having left his mortuary attire behind Him, He comes forth in workman's garb, as I take it from the fact that the women mistook Him for the gardener.

That day the grave received such shattering it can never be rebuilt. All the trowels of earthly masonry can never mend it. Forever and forever it is a broken tomb. Death, taking side with the military in that fight, received a terrible cut from the angel's spear of flame, so that he himself shall go down after a while under it. The King of Terrors retiring before the King of Grace. The Lord is risen. Let earth and heaven keep Easter to-day. Hosanna!

I. Some things strike my observation while standing in this garden with a new sepulchre. And first:

POST-MORTEM HONORS IN CONTRAST WITH ANTE-MORTEM IGNOMINIES.

If they could have afforded Christ such a costly sepulchre, why could not they have given Him an earthly residence? Will they give this piece of marble to a dead Christ instead of a soft pillow for the living Jesus? If they had expended half the value of that tomb to make Christ comfortable, it would not have been so sad a story. He asked bread; they gave Him a stone.

Christ, like most of the world's benefactors, was appreciated better after He was dead. Westminster Abbey and monumental Greenwood are the world's attempt to atone by honors for the dead for wrongs to the living. Poet's Corner, in Westminster Abbey, attempts to pay for the sufferings of Grub Street.

Go through that Poet's Corner in Westmin Abbey. There is Handel, the great musician, whose music we hear to-day; but while I at his statue, I cannot help but think of discords with which his fellow-musicians to destroy him. There is the tomb of John den, a beautiful monument; but I cannot but think at seventy years of age he wrote o being oppressed in fortune, and of the con that he had just made for a thousand vers sixpence a line. And there, too, you find monument of Samuel Butler, the autho "Hudibras;" but while I look at his monu in Poet's Corner, I cannot but ask myself w he died? In a garret. There I see the c tablet in the Poet's Corner—the costly tabl one of whom the celebrated Waller wrote, ' old blind schoolmaster, John Milton, has issued a tedious poem on the fall of man. I length of it be no virtue, it has none." The a beautiful monument to Sheridan. Poor S dan, if he could have only discounted that ument for a mutton-chop!

O you unfilial children! do not give your ents so much tombstone, but a few more blar —less funeral and more bedroom. If five cent of the money we now spend on B banquets could have been expended in ma the living Scotch poet comfortable, he w not have been harried with the drudgery exciseman. Horace Greeley, outrageously ab while living, when dead is followed to Greenwood by the President of the U States and the leading men of the Army Navy. Massachusetts tries to atone at the of Charles Sumner for the ignominious re tions with which her Legislature denounce living Senator. Do you think that the tor Springfield can pay for Booth's bullet?

Oh! do justice to the living. All the j you do them, you must do this side the gat the necropolis. They cannot wake up to the number of carriages at the obsequies, notice the polish of the Aberdeen granite, read epitaphal commemoration. Gentler mausoleum in the suburbs of Jerusalem c pay for Bethlehem manger, and Calvarean and Pilate's ruffian judiciary. Post-m honors cannot atone for ante-mortem ignom

II. Again: Standing in this garden of th sepulchre, I am impressed with the fact floral and for the place of the dead. We are glad among flowers and sculptural adornments spent the short time of His inhumation.

ARBORESCENT DECORATIONS ARE APPROP

I cannot understand what I sometimes the newspapers where the obsequies are nounced and the friends say in connection it, "Send no flowers." Rather, if the allow—I say if the means allow—strew the with flowers, the hearse with flowers, the with flowers. Put them on the brow— suggest coronation; in their hand, it will victory.

Christ was buried in a garden. Flowers resurrection. Death is sad enough anyhow conservatory and arboretum contribute to leviation. The harebell will ring the vi The passion-flower will express the sym The daffodil will kindle its lamp and ill the darkness. The cluster of asters will constellation. Your little child loved f when she was living. Put them in her now that she can go forth no more and them for herself. On sunshiny days take a garland and put it over the still heart.

Brooklyn has no grander glory than its wood; nor Boston than its Mount Au nor Philadelphia than its Laurel Hill; no cinnati than its Spring Grove; nor San F co than its Lone Mountain. But what sh say of those country graveyards, with the broken down and the slab aslant, and the caved in, and the grass the pasture-grou the sexton's cattle? Indeed, were your and mother of so little worth that you afford to take care of their ashes? Son turn out all hands, and straighten the sla nk up the mound, and cut away the weeds, d plant the shrubs and flowers.

Some day you will want to lie down to your st slumber. You cannot expect any respect r your bones if you have no deference for the nes of your ancestry. Do you think these lics are of no importance? You will see of w much importance they are in the day when e archangel takes out his trumpet. Turn all ur cemeteries into gardens.

III. Again: Standing in this garden of the w sepulchre, I am impressed with

E DIGNITY OF PRIVATE AND UNPRETENDING OBSEQUIES.

Joseph was mourner, sexton, liveryman, had tire charge of every thing. Only four people the burial of the King of the universe. Oh! let s be consolatory to those who through lack means, or through lack of large acquaintance, ve but little demonstration of grief at the ves of their loved ones. Long line of glitter- equipage, two rows of silver handles, casket richest wood, pall-bearers gloved and scarfed, not necessary. If there be six at the grave, Crist looks down from heaven and remembers t is two more than were at His obsequies.

ot recognizing this idea, how many small perties are scattered, and widowhood and hanage go forth into cold charity. The de- ted left a small property, which would have n enough to keep the family together until y could take care of themselves, but the fu- l expenses absorbed every thing. That went crape which ought to have gone for bread. an of moderate means can hardly afford to in any of our great cities. By all means do or to the departed, but do not consider fu- l pageant as necessary. No one was ever e lovingly and tenderly put away to sepul- than Christ our Lord; but there were only people in the procession.

V. Again: Standing in this garden with a sepulchre, I am impressed with the fact that al of Sanhedrim, regiment of soldiers from tower of Antonia, floor of rock, roof of rock, s of rock, door of rock, cannot keep Christ in crypts. Come out and come up He must. e out and come up He did. Prefiguration. -fruits of them that slept. Just as certainly e come down into the dust, just so certainly ill come up again. Though all the granite e mountains were piled on us we will rise. gh buried amid the corals of the deepest n of the Atlantic Ocean, we will come to urface.

YOU CANNOT KEEP THE DEAD DOWN.

ith these eyes we may not look into the face e noonday sun; but we shall have stronger n, because the tamest thing in the land to h we go will be brighter than the sun. We have bodies with the speed of the light- Our bodies improved, energized, swift- clarified—mortality, immortality. The of the grave taken off its hinges and flung to the dust.

my brethren! death and the grave are not ch as they used to be; for while wandering is garden with the new sepulchre, I find he vines and flowers of the garden have letely covered up the tomb. Instead of arden there are four gardens, opening into other — garden of Eden, garden of the 's sepulchre, garden of the earth's regen- n, garden of heaven. Four gardens. n, O earth! Bloom, O Heaven! O earers, wake up to gladness on this r morning. This day, if I interpret it right, joy—it means peace with Heaven, and it peace with all the world.

---

nected with this day of good-will to men, is something outside the harbor of New which stirs my heart to the last crimson and thrills me so I can hardly speak while k of it. Behold,

E OLD WAR-FRIGATE CONSTELLATION,

ut by the United States Government toward d, armed with bread. Five hundred tons ef. Oh! I do not know whether you have looked at this event as I have. Yesterday morning in the storm I went up on the top of my house to see if I could catch a glimpse of the masts of the Constellation.

What a scene for Easter morning! That means that Christ is risen. Command that ship, O Christ of Gennesaret. Thou who didst break the loaves of bread to the five thousand, break that bread to the fifty thousand. O Thou who holdest the winds in Thy fists, fill her sails with prospering breezes! Would that the men might run up beside the Stars and Stripes the one-starred flag of Bethlehem and the blood-striped flag of the cross.

Wait a little longer, bear up a little longer, O dying men of Ireland! O starving women! O emaciated babes! The Constellation is coming! —the Constellation is coming to stream light into the darkness of your long night of suffering. Once covered with smoke of battle, now covered with the benedictions of Easter morning. Oh! does not it seem as if the millennium was opening? That ship constructed to battle England going forth now over the waters to carry relief to some of her starving subjects. Better than sword into the ploughshare, better than spear into pruning-hook, is that old war-frigate turned into a white-winged angel of resurrection to roll away the stone from the mouth of Ireland's sepulchre. Come forth, Lazarus, come forth!

Oh! bring more flowers. Wealth of flowers here to-day. Bring forth more flowers. Wreathe them around the brazen throat of the cannon; plant them in the desert that it may blossom like the rose; braid them into the main of the returned war-charger. No more red dahlias of human blood. Give us white lilies of peace. All around the earth strew Easter flowers. And soon the rough voyage of the church militant will be ended, and she will sail up the heavenly harbor, scarred with many a conflict, but the flag of triumph floating from her top-gallants. All Heaven will come out to greet her into port, and with long-reverberating shout of welcome will say: "There she comes up the bay, the ship Zion, the glorious old Constellation."

If it were a week-day and I were on that ship's deck, I would shout "Huzza!" but as I am on the deck of the Gospel ship, and on the Lord's day, I will shout "Hosanna!"

A CAMBRIDGE PROFLIGATE SAVED FROM SUICIDE.

The Misfortune of a Rich Legacy—Deserted by Dissipated Friends—Befriended by a Clergyman —Intended Suicide Prevented—Converted, and Ordained a Clergyman.

Albert G. was the son of an English country gentleman of good fortune and social position. The boy was brought up with a view to entering one of the professions, and was sent to Cambridge. Here he showed considerable talent and much industry, and was expected to do well in the final examinations, and to attain, if not a distinguished, at least an honorable position.

Unhappily, at this stage of Albert G.'s career a great misfortune happened to him in the loss of his father, and a greater one still in a legacy —the result of his father's death—of some thousands of pounds. It may seem a strange thing to call this a misfortune, but no one who has had much experience of life can have failed to know of many instances in which the sudden acquisition of property has proved a very serious misfortune indeed.

It was so in this case. The young student cast his books into the fire or sold them to the second-hand booksellers, relinquished all ideas of earning his living, left the University, and plunged at once into that vortex of folly and profligacy which London life offers to such as are unwise enough to be deluded by it.

The natural result of course followed. "Light come, light go," is an old and true proverb. Albert's legacy was a considerable one, but it was not proof against the powers of a lengthened course of extravagance. Albert's money vanished along with his character, his friends, and his happiness. For a while his former companions helped him and stuck close to him, but this sort of help was soon at an end. The young country gentleman, the promising Cambridge student, the fortunate legatee of a comfortable property, became a pauper in the London streets. In this plight the remorse drove the wretched young man to the verge of insanity and the determination to commit suicide.

The circumstances under which this was prevented were somewhat peculiar. By the good providence of God, Albert G. fell at this juncture into the hands of a godly young man, a friend of times gone by, but who had taken the narrow road instead of the broad.

When others deserted he helped and stood by the fallen young man, assisted him as far as his then scanty means allowed, and, above all, spoke to him continually of repentance, amendment, and the freedom and fulness of God's pardoning love in Jesus Christ. But all for some time appeared of no avail, and at last, as the pair were one day passing along the Strand, Albert G. announced his intention of at once throwing himself off Waterloo Bridge and terminating his earthly existence.

The friend remonstrated, pleaded, and struggled with him in vain. The wretched profligate had evidently made up his mind, and determinedly wended his way toward the place he had selected. Arrived there, he shook his friend by the hand, bade him good-by, and then, despite of all the endeavors of his companion to the contrary, actually mounted the balustrade for the purpose of putting his design into execution.

It was evening, and there were few passengers, and none just at hand. Albert's friend knew not what to do. Possibly, up to the actual moment, he had thought it impossible that a man should do such a deed deliberately; and now, if he should leave his friend for the purpose of summoning assistance, he would at once cast himself off, and be inevitably drowned or dashed to pieces. But man's extremity is God's opportunity. Now it was that an apparently trivial and entirely unexpected circumstance occurred.

Poor Albert still retained, as far as he could, the dress of a gentleman, and though destitute of money and friends, had not yet parted with his decent clothes. He now had on a very fairly respectable coat, and on this his friend's eye fell. The glance suggested a method of at least obtaining some delay. "Well," he exclaimed suddenly, "if you must destroy yourself, it is a foolish thing of you at any rate to throw yourself into the water with such a coat as that on. Why not give it to me first; it might serve some other poor fellow."

This may seem a very trivial circumstance, but I relate strict facts, and important facts are often seemingly trivial. This very triviality saved Albert's life. This remark seemed to him a sensible one; he came down from the balustrade, and taking his coat off, gave it to his friend. But by this time some passengers had arrived; his companion appealed to them, and, backed by them, succeeded in persuading Albert to enter a passing vehicle and be driven to his friend's lodgings.

And this, by God's mercy, was the crisis of the young man's life. Once stayed in so singular a manner on the very verge of self-destruction, his mind thenceforward recoiled from the abyss to which he had allowed himself to be conducted. His conscience, once awakened, permitted him no rest until he found pardon and peace at the cross of Christ.

Albert G. is now living—a clergyman of the Church of England. By years of penitence and steady good conduct he regained his character; and finally offering himself as a candidate for holy orders, was accepted, and permitted to declare to others the story of that Divine love of whose efficacy and far-reaching power his own history afforded so conspicuous an example.

His history appears to me to be most instructive on several points, but more especially on this: Be patient. Sow the good seed, and though it may be for many years dormant, yet it may spring up, and bud, and fruit.

ARNOLD PERCIVAL MONTAIGNE;

Or the Heir of a Deferred Inheritance.

A Thrilling Story by Henry Martin, Author of "Felicia Cuffe."

(Continued from page 198.)

Mr. Gogharty again Visits the Superior—The Jesuit's Generosity—A Bargain Struck—Mr. Gogharty Seeks a Loan—The Deeds Returned.

Mr. Gogharty was punctual to the day and hour of his appointment with the Jesuit Superior, and on his arrival was led along the passage, now well known to him, into his presence, where he sat, as before, behind a large table in an inner room. He had no time, however, to indulge himself with thoughts of the past, for the Superior rose to greet him, and, to Mr. Gogharty's satisfaction, seemed more cordial than usual in his manner.

"I have sought the favor of this visit from you, Mr. Gogharty," he said, "that I might have some little further conversation with you respecting those deeds of yours left in my care." Mr. Gogharty remembered that the same Superior had declared to him that he had spoken his final word about these same documents, and that its burden was "No surrender." The lawyer's hopes, therefore, rose amazingly at this offer on the Superior's part of a renewed negotiation. "What new mischief does it mean?" he said within himself. "I'm surprised if it doesn't look something like a capitulation at discretion. I shouldn't at all wonder but that Alick, the scamp, has him somehow on the hip, and that this reverend priest, not liking to yield to him, the youngster, would save his honor by knuckling under to me." Mr. Gogharty's high expectations, however, were very much depressed by the Superior's next words.

"I am sorry, Mr. Gogharty," he said, "that from untoward events you are not in a financial position to meet your engagement in connection with those papers. I am sorry for your sake, Mr. Gogharty, that it is so, and I am sorry for ours. As becometh the servants of the true Church, our community, indeed, is poor, but still, a little of this world's silver and gold, as fairly earned, I think you will acknowledge, my dear sir, would be a boon. I do not wish, however, Mr. Gogharty, to be harsh with you; it would not, you know, be in harmony, my dear sir, with the title of our blessed order, the Society of Jesus, and therefore, to meet your narrow circumstances, I will take upon me to remit half of our righteous claim upon you, and promise to hand you your deeds upon payment to me, or to my banker for me, of 1000*l*. It will be a great sacrifice, Mr. Gogharty—a very great sacrifice, indeed—but for your convenience, sir, and to relieve you of a troublesome difficulty, through my solicitation on your behalf with our society it will be made."

We fear, however, it must be told that this was not the real motive of the Superior's large abatement; doubtless he had the mandamus in mind. Like most of his order, he was a master in casuistry, and could, upon his Jesuit principles, not merely with an easy, but even with an approving conscience, both accept those deeds and force from Mr. Gogharty the money which he would fain demonstrate was due from him; yet it was not at all expedient that Jesuit feats of skill to entrap Protestant wards of Chancery, or that the reception by a Jesuit Superior of deeds placed in his hands, wittingly, in a breach of trust, should be blazoned before the world. He did not, on the other hand, relish the idea of losing all he once made sure to get, and hence his offer to Mr. Gogharty; but, liberal as the proposed compromise seemed to the Superior, it was far beyond the lawyer's means, as reduced by various losses.

"One thousand pounds!" exclaimed Mr. Gogharty, in disappointment and surprise. "Would that I possessed it! But I am, to my sorrow, in no such lucky case. Why, you might as well, Superior, ask me to pay you down a million—and I declare before Heaven I speak the truth—I had hoped from your letter and your fair words, Superior, that, pitying my sad case, you were going to let me off altogether. That would only be the just and handsome thing; and, 'pon my word, it's not right of you, Superior, to disappoint me."

"Your statement, Mr. Gogharty," he said, "seems almost incredible. What! a man in your social position not able to compass 1000*l*.? It is an astonishing statement, but I suppose I am bound, sir, to receive your assertion, since you must know best your own means, and consequently, straining a point, and taking upon me a serious personal responsibility, I promise, sir, that if 500*l*. be paid into the —— Bank, to my credit, by two o'clock the day after to-morrow, I will give into your hands the papers in controversy between us." Mr. Gogharty was about to protest that even this sum was beyond his capacity to meet, but the Superior cut him short by saying, with a wave of his hand, "Any further colloquy, Mr. Gogharty, is utterly useless. Raise this money, sir, last mentioned, how you may, it must be paid or, before Heaven, I shall hold the deeds, and this," he added, clenching his teeth, "though it work us both mischief."

After this stern deliverance again the Superior withdrew from the room through a side door, and Mr. Gogharty, resuming his hat, had to leave.

When he gained the street he walked along the pavement, with slow step and hung-down head, buried in thought, to discover some path from the maze of his difficulties. "There is certainly a slashing difference," he said to himself, "between 2000*l*. and 500*l*.; and the fellow, to use a lawyer's phrase, has taxed his own bill with a vengeance. But I do not see that it makes my case one whit the better; and certainly that, too, is all Alick's fault—the dog!—for were it not for him I should be this minute in a position to be able, if I liked, to buy and sell, bag and baggage, this wretched Jesuit and all his confraternity.

"It is true there is that 300*l*. lying in the bank, rents paid me by Mrs. Weed's tenants, but—bother it!—I'll have to remit it her to the Continent, where she's gone—the quean!—to recruit herself, at the most in three weeks, that is when the Ballymicarry tenants pay their portion of the rents. Widows somehow never can wait for their money, and to put her off would be just impossible; and in any case, even if that could be done—hang it!—what use would it be? for 300*l*. wouldn't meet a demand for 500*l*. And yet," he continued, with a pleasing turn of thought, "if I could manage to get these deeds into my hands wouldn't it be a rare feat? Alick's little game would be spoiled, and a stopper would be put on that Hawke's impertinent nonsense. But, then, can it be done? Let me further turn the matter over."

The more, however, Mr. Gogharty pondered the present problem of his life, the more did it seem insoluble, and he reached his lodgings in as inextricable a "quandary" as ever.

After a time, to divert his thoughts a little, he took up a daily newspaper from his table, and in casting a glance over the advertisement columns one of those well-known offers to supply money to any person upon any terms met his gaze. Mr. Gogharty knew too much of the ways of the world, and especially of the ways of the sharpers of the world, to be caught by the high-sounding phrases of the third-rate money-brokers and bill-discounters in the advertisement before him—words, in fact, implying that the advertisers had in hand quite a superfluity of cash, and only wanted to know some deserving needy man—and every needy man, as a matter of course, thinks he is deserving—who would kindly accept a portion of it. Mr. Goghary, indeed, had had, in days gone by, a case on hand for a client of his against the firm of Kytesbeek & Claus the advertisers before him, because of an extortionate and usurious piece of practice of theirs. But still, when a man's affairs are brought to a dead lock, why, he must do the best he can to extricate himself," Mr. Gogharty reflected, "and at all events postpone, if possible, the evil day; for who can tell," he soliloquized, "what unlook for happy event may turn up to change the pect of things and place on terra firma a p fellow like me floundering in a slough of d pond."

He resolved, therefore, to see on the morr Messrs. Kytesbeek & Claus, and negotiate w them a loan for 200*l*. on his own personal sec ity. Messrs. Kytesbeek & Claus recognized lawyer, and were quite ready for business w Mr. Gogharty honored them with his applicati "They would accomodate him to any amoun they intimated, "upon valid security, and comparative trifle above the market rate of terest, too, just to meet expenses," they sa "but personal security, as it meant more or risk, would of course, Mr. Gogharty would derstand, require them to charge a correspo ing rate of interest." Mr. Gogharty win when he was asked to give a note of hand 300*l*. upon condition of a payment down in c of 200*l*. but after some hesitation and protest consented.

"This, with Mrs. Weed's 300*l*. that I'll d from lodgment will nicely meet, and in g time," he reflected, "the Superior's reduced mand, and sure, I shall not want the wid mite for a little; and who knows where mo meanwhile, may come from? And in any ca he inwardly concluded, "I'll trust Alick hero, to stand by me if the worst comes to worst. Of course, as he can't understand fitness of a dodge—the fool!—I'll not tell the secret of my necessity, and supposing, in absurd simplicity, that it's one come in a reg business way, I know I can depend upon hi help me."

Long before two o'clock, therefore, on the appointed, Mr. Gogharty placed to the perior's credit in the —— Bank the 500*l*. quired, and getting a receipt from the bank this effect, he hastened, with it in his han the Jesuit establishment. Ushered into the perior's presence, he held out to him the voucher, and asked for his deeds. As the J took it from the lawyer's hand a gleam of p ure passed over his face, but the next instant mental sunshine seemed overcast by a c The truth is, the Superior felt for a mom glad surprise at the promptitude of Mr. harty's act, for he had feared that peradven even his last quotation was really beyond lawyer's purse; but now he strongly susp that Mr. Gogharty had been only feigning erty, and that he, the Jesuit, had been dupe triumph of the world over the church—w dreadfully aggravated him.

He saw, however, that it was too late to matters, and that, to maintain his consisten a priest of the true church, he must kee word of promise. Rising from his little on the table, where he had sat, he opened safe, already mentioned, in the room. Mr. harty immediately saw, held in the Super hand, his coveted deeds; not, however, time to tantalize him merely with the sight reaching them forth without a single ren but with a cold, yet courteous bow, he them into the lawyer's possession. Mr. harty, with a lawyer's trained caution, the red tape tied around them, read the and saw that they were the genuine docum Then, in a demonstrative manner, showin exceeding joy, he grasped and held them breast, and with an explosive, "Good day perior!" he took his departure.

(To be Continued.)

Revival in Colorado.—A Correspon dating from Golden, Colorado, writes t most hopeful work of grace is proceeding He says: "The Methodist, Baptist, and P terian ministers have united their efforts i noble work, laboring for eight weeks with derful zeal. Golden was never so spiri blessed, and God's sun seems to crown mountain-tops with a grander halo than ev fore."

WHAT COMING WARS MAY WE EXPECT?*

By Rev. M. Baxter.

(Written in [illegible].)

Wars Caused by the Alliance of the Ten Kingdomed Confederacy.—2. The Extension of France to the Rhine—What a War will that Extension Involve!—France probably Assisted by Great Britain—Another Alliance to Resist Germany and Russia—Rise of a Latin or Roman Emperor.

ONE cause of the coming wars will be the predestined formation of a ten-kingdomed allied confederacy of Britain, France, Spain, Italy, Austria, Greece, Turkey, Syria, Egypt and Tripoli, which can scarcely be brought to pass without some adequate motive, such as a mutual alliance in order to resist some common danger. Nations do not usually ally themselves together except in times of war, and for the purpose of opposing some common foe. Unless these countries are attacked by some external enemy they are not likely to become banded together in a ten-kingdomed coalition.

Hence we must conclude that their alliance will be brought about by some of them being attacked by Russia or Germany (which are outside the Roman Empire), or both those Powers combined. In fact it is difficult to understand how the ten-kingdomed confederacy can result from any other cause. Now it is manifest that if Russia were to invade Turkey and try to seize Constantinople, it would be almost certain to find itself opposed by Britain for the sake of its Indian dependencies, and by Austria, and probably France, which has always objected to Russian possession of Constantinople, as well as Egypt and Turkey, which at present includes Syria.

Here, then, would be six of the predicted ten kingdoms leagued together at once. And the remaining four—viz., Spain, Italy, Greece, and Tripoli—would in due time be brought into the anti-Russian confederacy, although at first Greece, and possibly Italy, might side with Russia, as Greece and Russia have always a religious union in the Greek Church.

Moreover, in presence of such a widespread alliance, Germany could scarcely remain neutral, and if compelled to take sides, would be more likely to side with Russia than with the anti-Russian confederacy. Here, then, at once would be the embryo formation of the ten-kingdomed confederacy.

Another cause of the coming wars will be the predicted

EXTENSION OF FRANCE TO THE RHINE

in order to restore it to its original boundaries of ancient Gaul, and to revive and reconstitute the Roman Empire within its former limits of the Rhine and Danube, which all standard expositors expect to be accomplished in the latter days, in fulfilment of the emblem of the ten-horned wild beast in Daniel 7 and Revelation 13.

The extension of France to the River Rhine will necessarily involve the annexation to French territory of Switzerland and part of Holland, Belgium, Luxemburg, Rhenish Prussia, Alsace and Lorraine, with the fortresses of Metz and Strasburg, at present garrisoned by Germans, and probably part of Baden and Bavaria.

An additional prophetic necessity for the annexation of these countries to France is found in the fact that the whole territorial extent of the Roman Empire contains at present eighteen Kingdoms or States, and cannot therefore attain its predicted form of only ten kingdoms unless some of the smaller ones are annexed to the larger ones, so as to reduce their total number to ten instead of eighteen. But what extraordinary military supremacy and successful wars there must be on the part of France before all this can be accomplished! What frightful conflicts seem to be implied between France and Germany before Germany will submit to be driven across the Rhine, as assuredly must be the case according to prophecy!

In fact this coming war between France and Prussia will be a reversal of the battle of Sedan: and what terrible reverses and disasters are thus inevitably awaiting Prussia! An indemnity equivalent to a thousand million dollars was demanded from France on its defeat by Prussia, but what indemnity will France demand from Prussia when it achieves such marvellous victories as to regain the coveted Rhine frontier! And in connection with all this there will be, sooner or later, the revival of the Napoleonic dynasty and the healing of its Sedan deadly wound. (Rev. 13: 3.)

The following remarks on this point were written by the author three months after the battle of Sedan, and published in a prophetic pamphlet in January, 1871, while the Prussian army was laying siege to Paris:

"It is singular that politicians already expect that in the event of Russia ever attacking Turkey there would be five of the predicted ten nations of the Roman Empire most likely at once allied against the Czar—namely, Britain, France, Austria, Turkey, and Syria (which last named is not yet separated from the Turkish Empire); and three more of the ten nations—namely, Egypt, Greece, and Italy—would be very likely before long to join the alliance of the above-mentioned five. It is also seen to be inevitable that, sooner or later, Germany will side with Russia in such a contest.

"Prophetic students, however, are not left to mere conjecture; for let it be carefully noted that we gather most assuredly from prophecy that within a few years' time a gigantic conflict and stupendous struggle has to be fought out to the death, amid scenes of carnage and bloodshed, far surpassing even the Franco-Prussian war, between the Germanic and Russian nations on the one side, and the above enumerated Roman or Latin nations on the other side, with such decisive result that Germany and Russia will be completely defeated—Russia more entirely vanquished than at the end of the Crimean War—and Germany driven altogether across the Rhine, so that all the left bank of the Rhine, including Belgium, Luxemburg, and the Prussian Rhine provinces will be annexed to France, for the predicted revival of the Roman Empire necessitates the extension of France to the Rhine, as its original frontier.

"But what scenes of slaughter, butchery, and desolation must be witnessed in Europe in order that these predestined events may be all fulfilled! With what desperate fierceness, and unconquerable determination to die rather than surrender, will not the Germans fight before they yield up the impregnable fortresses of Metz, Strasburg, and several other Rhine fortresses, which they have lately gained after protracted sieges!

"We much fear that one of the causes that will lead to this ultimate victory of France will be the assistance of the British army. Every indication of prophecy leads to the conclusion that Britain cannot then avoid being dragged into most desperate and sanguinary wars; her Government, which was recently rejoicing with premature glee over the saving of a few thousand pounds by discharging 20,000 soldiers, will soon be spending tens of millions of pounds over the military estimates, and tens of thousands of her sons will fall slain upon hotly-contested battlefields.

"Another cause that will contribute to French success is the predicted separation of the South German States—Bavaria, Baden, and Wurtemberg—from the North German States, because the former belonged to Cæsar's Roman Empire, and will have to be incorporated with the ten Roman nations. Although they have lately been united with the New German Empire, yet we must expect them to become ere long separated from it, either by voluntary insurrection and revolt, or by being wrested from Germany by the Latin nations.

"The recent creation of a united German Empire, with King William of Prussia as Emperor of twenty-four German kings or princes—all confederated together—is an example which will in due time be followed by the creation of

"A LATIN OR ROMAN EMPEROR

as head of ten Roman kings. The Latin nations will mutually agree that their only chance of successfully resisting the attacks of Russia and the formidable union of German kingdoms will be to organize a similar union of German kingdoms.

"Louis Napoleon's declaration to his soldiers at the outset of the Franco-Prussian war, in September, 1870, that it would be 'a long and serious one,' has been derided because of the sudden rapidity with which the Germans seem to have settled matters in their own favor. But in reality those words will prove true. For although the present war may soon end in a temporary peace, yet it is only the beginning of a great conflict, which is to end in a few years' time in the triumph of the Latin armies over the Teutonic and Sclavonic. Another phase of this inevitable conflict may very likely be an attack of Russia upon Turkey, as this seems a necessary prelude to the restoration of the Jews to Palestine."

Again, in May, 1871, the author published in a periodical these remarks:

"Few things can be more astonishing than that we have every reason to expect, prophetically, that France, which is now considered to be of little account in European politics, and to have sunk into the position of a third-rate European power, will in a few years' time succeed, probably under a Napoleon, in driving the Germans across the Rhine, and becoming the most powerful nation in Europe. That the newly-formed German Empire, composed of twenty-five allied German States and kingdoms, with their invincible armies, should within a few years become so dismembered and crushed as to lose Bavaria, Baden, Wurtemberg, Rhenish Prussia, and Alsace and Lorraine, with Metz and Strasburg, would seem to require almost a miracle to produce such a catastrophe; yet Prophecy appears distinctly to announce such a result."

(To be continued.)

---

* Extracted from "Coming Wars," by Rev. M. Baxter, in two pamphlets—five cents each by mail. First pamphlet contains "Ten Signs of the End, and Description of Approaching Events," with two maps and [illegible] large diagrams. Second pamphlet contains [illegible] quotations from Forty Expositors on these events. Address, 63 Bible House, New York

---

A Collection of Coins.—A Noted Flower-painter, M. Tremblay, has just died in Paris of heart disease, after passing his last years in the greatest wretchedness. As he had not been seen for several days, his landlord caused his room in the Rue la Béotie to be entered by force, when the inmate was found dead in bed. The police-officer, on searching through the deceased's papers, with a view to finding a clew to his relatives, discovered a chest filled to the top with gold coins, most of them belonging to the time of Napoleon I. and Louis XVIII. The old painter had acquired a passion for collecting coins, and his store was rich in rare specimens. Rather than part with any of them, he had for years undergone the greatest privations. How this poor man answers to the description of Ecc. 4: 8, "There is no end of all his labor; neither is his eye satisfied with riches; neither saith he, For whom do I labor and bereave my soul of good?" We do well to search for coins, like the woman who lighted a candle and swept the house and sought diligently till she found the lost coin, which was an emblem of a lost soul (Luke 15). And these spiritual coins, when found and brought to Jesus, can be restamped with the image and superscription of God in the transforming mint of divine grace. "He that winneth souls is wise" (Proverbs 11: 30.)

Turkish Intolerance.—Dr. Jessup, Writing from Beyrout, Syria, says the Government at Constantinople has given notice that hereafter any Moslem who becomes a Christian will be put to death, and that any foreigners subverting Moslemism by teaching Christianity shall be imprisoned without notification to their consuls

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

The aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50 per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to Mr. Benjamin Aitken, 63 Bible House, New York. The paper may also be obtained weekly from all newsdealers in the United States and Canada.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of specimen copies to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

Subscribers frequently write to us for single copies of the Christian Herald. We always endeavor to oblige them, but single and occasional copies can more easily be obtained from a newsdealer. Sometimes we receive complaints that the Christian Herald cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer. Such complaints are promptly attended to, when made to us; but in all cases we desire that our friends will give the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

Last week's edition of the Christian Herald was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, March 24th, at 12.20 P.M., at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Time of the House of Representatives has been taken up to a serious extent during the past week by a question of order. Mr. Richard W. Townshend had introduced a bill containing proposed changes in the Revenue Laws. Under ordinary circumstances the bill would have been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, but as that Committee had intimated that no new bill would be entertained, Mr. Townshend asked to have his bill referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and as its title appeared to indicate that it legitimately belonged to the province of that Committee, permission was given. When it became evident that the revenue was affected by the changes proposed in the bill, an attempt was made to alter the reference. Violent and acrimonious discussion ensued and lasted through three days, in the course of which personal feeling ran so high that violence was only prevented by the intervention of the friends of the principal parties. Eventually it was decided to consign the bill to the charge of the Committee on Ways and Means.

In the Senate the questions arising out of the appropriation of the money awarded to this country by the Geneva arbitration on the Alabama Claims against Great Britain, formed the principal feature of debate. Several Senators protested against the delay that has existed in the settlement of this matter.

A New Treaty with China is in Prospect. President Hayes has appointed a commission to visit China, investigate all commercial questions pending between that country and the United States, and negotiate a treaty in place of that recently submitted by Minister Seward. The head of the commission will be President Angell, of Michigan University. His two colleagues have been chosen for the schools of opinions which they represent, one of them being an exponent of the sentiment of the Pacific coast upon this question, the other a well-known writer on international law, who has had a practical diplomatic experience. It is stated on high authority, that the Chinese Government has offered to withdraw Chinese subjects from America if all citizens of the United States will leave China. Such an arrangement would be very prejudicial to the trade of California and the Western States, between which and China there will probably be a fast-increasing interchange of commodities.

A Suggestion is Made by a Leading Journal of New York to obviate the difficulties of an ex-President's anomalous position as it at present exists under the constitution. As things stand, an ex-President finds it difficult to resume his former occupation on his retirement from office or to hold aloof from politics. The suggestion offered for consideration is that every ex-President shall ipso facto become a member of the United States Senate for life, with a salary of twelve thousand dollars a year, and having a voice and a vote in all the proceedings of that body, like any other senator. Such a senatorship would continue our ex-Presidents in the public service as the representatives of the whole people of the United States, and not of particular States or localities—that is, a national senatorship in its representative character. The people, in electing their President, would at the same time elect a national senator for life, in the event that he should survive his presidential term, or terms, if twice elected.

The Relief Ship for Ireland set Sail for that country on March 27th. The Government had placed the stanch old frigate Constellation at the service of the donors, and the warlike armament having been removed, she was filled with the evidences of peace and good-will. Provisions and clothing were freely contributed, and she started on her mission of charity amid enthusiastic cheers from the crews of the ships in port. It is expected that her voyage will occupy about twenty days, and her destination will be Kingstown or Queenstown, according as the Herald Relief Committee may desire.

The fund started by the New York Herald for the relief of the sufferers by the Irish Famine amounted on March 27th to the magnificent sum of $317,911. This, with the money contributed to the Parnell Fund and the grant of $100,000 from Canada, forms a noble offering from the people on this side the Atlantic to the destitute on the other side.

It is a great relief to learn from a letter by the Duchess of Marlborough, the wife of the Viceroy of Ireland, that the gifts from America and the sums contributed in Great Britain have allayed the apprehensions entertained of the grievous loss of life likely to ensue from want of food. There will be serious distress and widespread destitution, but the funds contributed by the charitable have placed in the hands of the devoted friends of the sufferers the means of coping with the worst phases of the famine.

A Liquor Prohibition Law has Passed both Houses of the Iowa Legislature as a constitutional amendment, which will go to the next Legislature for ratification. It provides that "No person shall manufacture for sale, or sell or keep for sale as a beverage, any intoxicating liquors whatever, including ale, wine, and beer. The General Assembly shall by law prescribe by regulations for the enforcement of the prohibitions, and shall thereby provide suitable penalties for the provisions of the law."

The Death of Big Snake, the Brother of Standing Bear, was thus described by Rev. Joseph Cook in the prelude to his last Boston lecture: "Only of late has Congress been told how the brother of Standing Bear died. Twice he had been arrested, for no adequate cause. A merely technical offence put him in danger of being sent once more to prison. Soldiers were employed, and they tried to seize Big Snake; but he threw them all off. He opened his robes, and showed his assailants that he had no weapon. The officer called for handcuffs and more soldiers; but the Indian threw them all off. Overpowered by numbers the Indian was thrust against a wall, and a soldier put the muzzle of his rifle to the unarmed man's head and shot him through the brain. 'After he was d so says an eye-witness, under oath before gress, 'I examined his clothing, and foun weapon about him.'" Citizens should knov details of crimes committed in their name b Indian officials.

Local Option has Triumphed in Illi where the constitution allows local electio decide whether or not liquor shall be sold i towns. At the late election, of the 832 t voting on the liquor question 645 were ca for "no license." The most vigorous ca sers against the liquor traffic were the lad the State, who worked most enthusiasti against the enemy of domestic peace and h ness.

A Singular Disaster Occurred at Mon March 19th, which was near causing a se loss of life. The remains of the City Rec were laid out for burial in his house, and a ber of lighted tapers were placed arounc coffin. The room was heavily draped with c which was ignited by the tapers, and alth two policemen were in the room at the tim flames baffled their efforts to subdue them the whole interior of the dwelling was compl destroyed. The inmates of the house tool uge on a balcony, from which they were lov by ropes at the imminent risk of their lives

Irish Famine Relief Fund.—Contributio ceived during the week ending Saturday, 27th:

H. Church, South Vineland, N. J.	[illegible]
Sophie Trellin, Pattersonville, La.	[illegible]
B. C. Mooman, Great Forest, Va.	[illegible]
Jas. T. Miller, Kewanee, Ill.	00
Forwarded to N. Y. Herald	00

The Debt on Dr. Talmage's Church.—C butions received during the week ending Sat March 27th.

Chas. Erdman, Nepesta, Col.	00
H. Atherton, " "	00
L. Eaming, Rio Grand, N. J.	00
L. Sloan, Montgomery, Ala.	00
Mrs. R. M. Button, City Point, Wis.	00
Mrs. F. D. Waterman, " "	00
Peter Simons, " "	00
John Sullivan, " "	00
W. H. Smith,	00
Chas. Hingiez,
T. Derini,
R. W. Button,
Mrs. Vanderhoof, New Brunswick, N. J.	00
F. W. Mc Master, Columbia, S. C.	00
T. W. Fain, Dandridge, Tenn.	00
Mrs. L. C. Harward, Jacksonville, Fla.	00
Mrs. Clara Freeman, Jefferson, Ia.	00
Thos. G. Whiskard, London, Canada.	00
Elder J. M. Myers, Carrollton, Texas.	00
Mrs. J. W. Pierce, Boston, Mass.	00
A Friend, Baltimore, Md.	00
Brother and Sister, Baltimore, Md.	00
A. D. Maine, New York.	00
W. H. S., Wacoasta, Mich.	00
Rev. John Branston, Plum Hollow, Ia.	00
A. J. Hutchinson, Providence, R. I.	00
M. McMichael, Rockford, Ill.	00
A. J. Smith, " "	00
Samuel Parkinson, Elimville, Canada.	00
Sarah Lakey, Boston, Mass.	00
Miss Sarah Wiles, Springdale, Wis.	00
Mrs. A. M. Freligh, Watervliet, N. Y.	00
Mrs. L. R. Chapman, Huntington, O.	00
Rev. R. M. Hughes, Lime Springs, Ia.	00
H. Palmer, Bullard, Conn.	00
Robert Armstrong, Elmira, Ill.	00
Adam Armstrong, " "	00
George Armstrong, " "	00
S. F. Simmons, Stockton, Pa.	00
Wm. Muir, Salina, Kan.	00
Adrian Keith, " "	00
Sophia Trellin, Pattersonville, La.	00
Clara Henderson, Springford, Canada.	1 00
Mrs George Eadie, Sherbrooke, Canada.	1 00
Isaiah Hogshaw, Salem Mass.	1 00
C. J. Bergen, Jamaica, N. Y.	1 00
F. H. Viering, Enterprise, Kan.	1 00
Mrs. A. B. Davis, Baltimore, Md.	1 00
Two Scotch Girls, Lawrence, Mass.	2 00
Forwarded to Dr. Talmage	0 00

The Work in Detroit of Messrs Pentecost nd Stebbins was brought to a conclusion March 8th, and the evangelists have now gone to Vaterbury, Conn. Their work in Detroit was ontinued seventy-five days. Two, three, and ften four services were conducted daily, a part f the Saturdays only being excepted. Attracve troupes were at the theatres, Mr. Ingersoll ame and lectured, but day after day a continuus throng pressed to the Bible-readings, the usiness men's meetings, the sermons, and finly to the inquiry and testimonial services. sual church services were continued throught the city, but the interest and power of the ntral meeting kept on increasing to the last. he largest churches and halls were only too rait, and large numbers frequently turned vay. A Detroit pastor says "the churches are ore vigorous, the Bible is better appreciated, stors are more highly honored, and many obcles to vital, practical Christianity in the city e broken. Above 600 persons have given their mes as newly converted or restored."

Mr. George Muller, of the Bristol Orphanages, ile at Milwaukee last week preached twice on nday, and addressed a meeting every evening English or German. He dwelt much on his orite topics, Faith and Prayer. For the comt of a lady who had been ill for some months l who found it difficult to keep her trust in Lord as to her future recovery, Mrs. Müller t this message: "Tell her for her comfort t we have found amid many vicissitudes of and many trials during many years, our atest trials have proved to be our greatest ssings." And Mr. Muller said: "Give her me this passage of Scripture, All things work ether for good to them that love God. This have to be received by faith now, but by by it will be seen. And it is for the glory God that we believe it now because it is His rd."

essrs. Moody and Sankey Close their Servis at St. Louis this week and are going to Tas for a short trip. Mr. Moody's Sundayming labors in the colored churches of the city ha been greatly blessed. The colored people ha been delighted with his preaching, and my conversions among them are reported. M Moody has not suffered from the severity of th climate. Last week Major Whittle, assisted by Ir. and Mrs. McGranahan, began a series of Gbel meetings in Dr. Brookes' church at St. Los. Saturday and Sunday afternoons of the we are devoted to the children.

Man Driven Mad by a Puzzle.—Daniel Conroy of Erie, Penn., has gone raving mad over the 'fifteen puzzle." This puzzle consists of fiftn blocks numbered from one to fifteen plad on a board of sixteen squares, and the difulty consists in placing the blocks in consecive order without lifting them from the boal. Conroy was a strictly temperate man, a deved husband and kind father. For several day he neglected his business and applied himselfonstantly to the game, until his brain gave waynder the attempt to master the 13, 15, 14. Onlonday morning he grew violent, seized his infat child and was placing it on a hot stove wh the neighbors rushed in. He was overpoved and a body of police carried him to jail, whe he now lies, a raving maniac, scratching the ame on the wall and shouting "Fifteen, thiren, fourteen."

A Boston Boy was Trusted by a Bishop, dur the session of the Episcopal Convention, and eturned the compliment by trusting the Bish. The Bishop of Louisiana, in crossing the mmons, met a boy whose face he fancied, and alling to him, asked him if he had any thin to do just then, to which he said no. "A you a good boy?" The little fellow scraed his head and replied: "I am not a very ood boy." That candid answer inspired he shop with confidence, and he then said, after iving his name and address: "I want you o go to a certain place and get a bundle for me and ing it to my hotel. There will be a charge of $ here is the money to pay it, and half a dollar which you will keep for doing the errand." On his return to the hotel, the bishop's friends laughed at him for his credulity, telling him that he would never see the boy or the bundle or the money again; but in half an hour the lad returned, bringing the bundle and a receipted bill for $8.50, the bishop having made a slight mistake as to the amount that was due. "How did you manage to pay the extra half dollar?" he inquired. "I took the money you gave me for the job. I knew that you would make it all right." And "all right" it was made, to the mutual pleasure of bishop and boy who had trusted each other.

A Challenge by a Father was Answered by his son at one of Mr. J. B. Gough's lectures in Pennsylvania. At the close of the lecture a gentleman rose and was announced as Judge of the Quarter Sessions. He said, "Ladies and gentlemen, before the audience is dismissed I wish to say a few words in defence of myself and the class I represent. Now, it is very hard to have it said that I set a bad example. Now, I am a moderate drinker; a respectable moderate drinker. Who dare say any thing against me? Who ever saw me the worse for drink? If young men followed my example they would be as I am, respectable and respected. I challenge the country to say whether my example is a bad one." A man in the audience, evidently under the influence of drink, here made a loud interruption. Some one said, "Put the man out," and a gentleman said, "No, let the man remain; he is the only son of the Judge—his only son has tried to follow his example, and there is the result. He is so drunk that he would disturb a respectable meeting."

A Sermon Worth $500.—A Newly-ordained Episcopal clergyman, not far from Springfield, not long ago read a sermon of Bishop Shelly, announcing the fact that the sermon was not his own. In his congregation there happened to be a native of the place who has prospered in California, and at the close of the service the returned Californian asked if that sermon was his own. The young rector said it was not, and gave the credit to whom it was due, whereupon his questioner said: "As you are about to build a new church I will give $500 towards it. The sermon just read was worth that to me. Here is my note to that amount."

The Telephone has been Introduced in the churches of another Western city. Besides the church in Columbus, Ohio, that has utilized this implement, and one in Illinois, the experiment was tried last Sunday at the Cumberland, Indiana, Presbyterian Church. A microphone was placed on the pulpit and connected by telephones with the houses of a number of infirm and aged members, who were thus enabled to hear distinctly the entire service—organ, choir, and sermon. Many indications point to the probability of the wide adoption of the telephone in churches as one of the essential auxilliaries of the Sunday service.

The Second Volume of the Christian Herald, comprising Nos. 37 to 62, (July to December, 1879), may be had, elegantly bound in cloth, at No. 63 Bible House, New York. Price $1.75.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works.—We have much pleasure in announcing that another large consignment of volumes by this eminent author and preacher has just been received. They are now on sale at the office of the CHRISTIAN HERALD, No. 63 Bible House, New York, and are offered at prices so low as to bring them within the reach of every one. Twelve Sermons on various subjects, with photograph of Mr. Spurgeon, price 35 cents. John Ploughman's Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents; in cloth, 60 cents. The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, a volume of fifty sermons, $2.50. The Treasury of David, a homiletical exposition of the book of Psalms, five vols., as far as Psa. 118, $3 per vol. Spurgeon's Birthday-Book. This popular gift-book contains a suitable passage selected from Mr. Spurgeon's writings for every day in the year, with a blank space opposite for autographs. The signatures of Mr. and Mrs. Spurgeon appear at their respective birthdays. The book is elegantly bound, and the price is 75 cents. Remittances should accompany orders.

THE FAIR PORTRAIT OF A SAINT.

A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"My foot hath held his steps, his way have I kept, and not declined. Neither have I gone back from the commandment of his lips; I have esteemed the words of his mouth more than my necessary food."—JOB 23: 11, 12.

Job's Friends a Warning against Hasty Conclusions—I. Job's Holy Life—1. He Walked after the Divine Rule—2. With Great Carefulness—3. With Great Tenacity—Barefooted Women at Mentone—4. With Promptitude and Speed—What would Jesus do—5. Job did not Decline from God's Way—Neither from it nor in it—Beware of Decline—Some Decline through Poverty—Others through Riches—Others through Fashion—6. Job did not Go back—II. Job's Holy Sustenance—1. God Spoke to Him.—2. He Treasured up God's Words—3. He Lived upon them—4. He Esteemed them more than his Necessary Food—The Words of his Mouth.

THUS Job speaks of himself, not by way of vaunting, but by way of vindication. Eliphaz the Temanite and his two companions had brought distinct charges against Job's character: because they saw him in such utter misery they concluded that his adversity must have been sent as a punishment for his sin, and therefore they judged him to be a hypocrite, who under cover of religion had exercised oppression and tyranny. Zophar had hinted that wickedness was sweet in Job's mouth, and that he hid iniquity under his tongue. Eliphaz charged him with hardness of heart to the poor, and dared to say, "Thou hast taken a pledge from thy brother for naught, and stripped the naked of their clothing." This last from its very impossibility was meant to show the extreme meanness to which he falsely imagined that Job must have descended—how could he strip the naked? He was evidently firing at random.

As neither he nor his companions could discover any palpable plot in Job upon which they could distinctly lay their finger, they bespattered him right and left with their groundless accusations. They made up in venom for the want of evidence to back their charges. They felt sure that there must be some great sin in him to have procured such extraordinary afflictions, and therefore by smiting him all over they hoped to touch the sore place. Let them stand as a warning to us never to judge men by their circumstances, and never to conclude that a man must be wicked because he has fallen from riches to poverty.

Job, however, knew his innocence, and he was determined not to give way to them. He said, "Ye are forgers of lies, physicians of no value. O that ye would altogether hold your peace! and it should be your wisdom." He fought the battle right manfully; not, perhaps, without a little display of temper and self-righteousness, but still with much less of either than any of us would have shown had we been in the same plight, and had we been equally conscious of perfect integrity.

He has in this part of his self-defence sketched a fine picture of a man perfect and upright before God. He has set before us the image to which we should seek to be conformed. Here is the high ideal after which every Christian man should strive; and happy shall he be who shall attain to it. Blessed is he who in the hour of his distress, if he be falsely accused, will be able to say with as much truth as the patriarch could, "My foot hath held His steps, His way have I kept, and not declined. Neither have I gone back from the commandment of His lips; I have esteemed the words of His mouth more than my necessary food."

I ask you, first, to inspect the picture of Job's holy life, that you may make it your model. After we have done this, we will look a little below the surface, asking the question, "How was he enabled to lead such an admirable life as this? Upon what meat did this great patriarch feed that he had grown so eminent?" We shall find the answer in our second head, Job's holy sustenance—"I have esteemed the words of His mouth more than my necessary food." May He, who wrought in Job his patience and integrity, by this our meditation teach us the like virtues by the power of the Holy Ghost.

I. Let us sit down before this sketch of it will well repay a meditative study.

JOB'S HOLY LIFE;

1. Note, first, that Job had been all along a man fearing God and walking after the divine rule. In the words before us he dwells much upon the things of God—"His steps," "His way," "the commandment of His lips," "the words of His mouth." He was pre-eminently one that "feared God and eschewed evil." He knew God to be the Lord, and worthy to be served, and therefore he lived in obedience to His law, which was written upon his instructed conscience. His way was God's way; he chose that course which the Lord commanded. He did not seek his own pleasure, nor the carrying out of his own will; neither did he follow the fashion of the times, nor conform himself to the ruling opinion or custom of the age in which he lived: fashion and custom were nothing to him, he knew no rule but the will of the Almighty.

Whether the way be rough or smooth, up hill or down dale, through green pastures or burning deserts, let God's way be your way. Where the fiery cloudy pillar of His providence leads be sure to follow, and where His holy statutes command, there promptly go. Ask the Lord to let you hear His Spirit speak like a voice behind you saying, "This is the way, walk ye in it." As soon as you see from the Scriptures, or from conscience, or from Providence, what the will of the Lord is, make haste and delay not to keep His commandments.

2. Let us now consider Job's first sentence. He says: "My foot hath held his steps." This expression sets forth great carefulness. He had watched every step of God—that is to say, he had been minute as to particulars, observing each precept, which he looked upon as being a footprint which the Lord had made for him to set his foot in; observing, also, each detail of the great example of his God; for in so far as God is imitable He is the great example of His people, as He saith, "Be ye holy, for I am holy"; and again, "Be ye perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

Job had observed the steps of God's justice, that he might be just; the steps of God's mercy, that he might be pitiful and compassionate; the steps of God's bounty, that he might never be guilty of churlishness or want of liberality; and the steps of God's truth, that he might never deceive. He had watched God's steps of forgiveness, that he might forgive his adversaries; and God's steps of benevolence, that he might also do good and communicate, according to his ability, to all that were in need. In consequence of this he became eyes to the blind and feet to the lame; he delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless and him that had none to help. The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon him, and he caused the widow's heart to sing for joy.

Notice here that the expression has something in it of tenacity; he speaks of taking hold upon God's steps. The idea needs to be lit up by the illustration contained in the original expression. You must go to mountainous regions to understand it. In very rough ways a person may walk all the better for having no shoes to his feet. I sometimes pitied the women of Mentone coming down the rough places of the mountains barefooted, carrying heavy loads upon their heads, but I ceased to pity them when I observed that most of them had a capital pair of shoes in the basket at the top; and I perceived as I watched them that they could stand where I slipped, because their feet took hold upon the rock almost like another pair of hands. Barefooted they could safely stand, and readily climb where feet encased after our fashion would never carry them.

Many Orientals have a power of grasp in their eet which we appear to have lost from want of use. An Arab in taking a determined stand actually seems to grasp the ground with his toes. Roberts tells us in his well-known "Illustrations" that Easterns, instead of stooping to pick up things from the ground with their fingers, will take them up with their toes; and he tells of a criminal condemned to be beheaded who, in order to stand firm when about to die, grasped a shrub with his foot. Job declares that he took hold of God's steps, and thus secured a firm footing. He had a hearty grip of holiness, even as David said, "I have stuck unto Thy testimonies."

That eminent scholar, Dr. Good, renders the passage, "in His steps will I rivet my feet." He would set them as fast in the footprints of truth and righteousness as if they were riveted there, so firm was his grip upon that holy way which his heart had chosen. This is exactly what we need to do with regard to holiness: we must feel about for it with a sensitive conscience, to know where it is, and when we know it we must seize upon it eagerly, and hold to it as for our life. The way of holiness is often craggy, and Satan tries to make it very slippery; and unless we can take hold of God's steps we shall soon slip with our feet, and bring grievous injury upon ourselves, and dishonor to His holy name.

Beloved, to make up a holy character there must be a tenacious adherence to integrity and piety. You must not be one that can be blown off his feet by the hope of little gain, or by the threatening breath of an ungodly man: you must stand fast and stand firm, and against all pressure and blandishment you must seize and grasp the precepts of the Lord, and abide in them, riveted to them. Standfast is one of the best soldiers in the Prince Immanuel's army, and one of the most fit to be trusted with the colors of his regiment. "Having done all, still stand."

4. To make a holy character we must take hold of the steps of God in the sense of promptness and speed. Here again I must take you to the East to get the illustration. They say of a man who closely imitates his religious teacher, "His feet have laid hold of his Master's steps," meaning that he so closely follows his teacher that he seems to take hold of his heels. This is a blessed thing, indeed, when grace enables us to follow our Lord closely. There is His foot, and close behind it is ours; and there again He takes another step, and we plant our feet where He has planted His.

A very beautiful motto is hung up in our infant class-room at the Stockwell Orphanage—

"WHAT WOULD JESUS DO?"

Not only may children take it as their guide, but all of us may do the same, whatever our age. "What would Jesus do?" If you desire to know what you ought to do under any circumstances, imagine Jesus to be in that position, and then think, "What would Jesus do? for what Jesus would do that ought I to do." In following Jesus we are following God, for in Christ Jesus the brightness of the Father's glory is best seen.

Many a sorrow will you avoid if you keep close at your Master's heel. You know what came of Peter's following afar off; try what will come of close walking with Jesus. Abide in Him, and let His words abide in you, so shall you be His disciples. You dare not trust in your works, and will not think of doing so, yet will you bless God that, being saved by His grace, you were enabled to bring forth the fruits of the Spirit, by a close and exact following of the steps of your Lord.

The next sentence runs thus: "His way have I kept;" that is to say, Job had adhered to God's way as the rule of his life. When he knew that such and such a thing was the mind of God, either by his conscience telling him that it was right, or by a divine revelation, then he obeyed the intimation and kept to it. He did not go out of God's way to indulge his own fancies, or to follow some supposed leader: to God's way he kept from his youth, even till the time when the Lord Himself said of him, "Hast thou considered my servant Job a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God and escheweth evil?" The Lord gave him this charact to the devil, who could not deny it, and d not attempt to do so, but only mutter "Doth Job serve God for nought? Hast th not set a hedge about him and all that he hath

When he uttered our text Job could have plied to the malicious accuser that, even wh God had broken down his hedges and laid h waste, he had not sinned nor charged G foolishly. He heeded not his wife's rash co sels to curse God and die, but he still bles the divine name even though every thing taken from him.

5. The third clause is, "And not decline," by which I understand that he had not decli from the way of holiness, nor declined in way. First, he had not declined from it, had not turned to the right hand nor to the l Some turn away from God's way to the ri hand by doing more than God's word has den them do; such as invent religious c monies, and vows, and bonds, and become perstitious, falling under the bondage of pri craft, and being led into will-worship, things that are not Scriptural. This is as t wandering as going out of the road to the would be.

Ah, dear friends, keep to the simplicity of Bible. This is an age in which Holy Scrip is very little accounted of. If a church cho to invent a ceremony, men fall into it, and p tise it as if it were God's ordinance. Aye, a neither church nor law recognize the perf ance, yet if certain self-willed priests choos burn candles, and to wear all sorts of bed ments, and bow, and cringe, and march in cession, there are plenty of simpletons who go whichever way their clergyman cho even if he should lead them into down heathenism. "Follow my leader" is the of the day, but "Follow my God" is the n of a true Christian. Job had not turned t right.

Nor had he turned to the left. He ha been lax in observing God's commandm He had shunned omission as well as commis This is a very heart-searching matter; for many there are whose greatest sins lie in sion. And remember, sins of omission, th they sit very light on many consciences though the bulk of professors do not think them sins, are the very sins for men will be condemned at the last. How prove that? What said the great Judge was an hungered and ye gave me no meat, thirsty and ye gave me no drink, sick prison and ye visited me not." It was they did not do that cursed them more what they did do.

Furthermore, I take it Job means that h not even declined in that way. He did not with running hard and then get out of b and sit by the wayside and say, "Rest thankful," but he kept up the pace and decline. If he was warm and zealous o remained warm and zealous; if he was in gable in service, he did not gradually tone into a sluggard, but he could say, "I ha declined." Whereas we ought to mal vances toward Heaven, there are many wh after twenty years' profession, no forward they were, but perhaps in a worse state.

OH, BEWARE OF A DECLINE?

We were accustomed to use that tern ago to signify the commencement of a co tion, or perhaps the effects of it; and in decline in the soul often leads on to a consumption. In a spiritual consumpti very life of religion seems to ebb out b and little. The man does not die by a that stabs his reputation, but by a secre ness within him, which eats at the vitals liness and leaves the outward surface fair save us from declining.

I am sure, dear friends, we cannot, m us, afford to decline much, for we are n earnest, none too much alive now; but one of the great faults of churches, so m the members are in a decline that the ch comes a hospital instead of a barracks. Many professors are not what they were at first: they were very promising young men, but they are now performing old men. We are pleased to see the flowers on our fruit-trees, but they disappoint us unless they knit into fruit, and we are not satisfied even then unless the fruit ripens to mellow sweetness. We do not make orchards for the sake of blossoms; we want apples. So it is with the garden of grace; our Lord comes seeking fruit, and instead thereof He often finds nothing but leaves.

Some decline because they become poor: they even stay from worship on that account. I hope none of you say, "I do not like to come to the Tabernacle because I have not fit clothes to come in." As I have often said, any clothes are fit for a man to come here in if he has paid for them. Let each come by all manner of means in such garments as he has, and he shall be welcome. But I do know some very poor professors who, in the extremity of their anxiety and trouble, instead of flying to God, fly from Him. This is very sad. The poorer you are the more you want the rich consolations of grace. Do not let this temptation overcome you, but if you are as poor as Job, be as resolved as he to keep to the Lord's way and not decline.

Others fly from their religion because they grow rich. They say that three generations never will come on wheels to a dissenting place of worship, and it has proved to be sadly true in many instances, though I have no cause to complain of you as yet. Some persons when they rise in the world turn up their noses at their poor friends. If any of you do so you will be worthy of pity, if not of contempt. If you forsake the ways of God for the fashion of the world you will be poor gainers by your wealth. The Lord keep you from such a decline.

Many decline because they conform to the fashions of the world, and the way of the world is not the way of God. Doth not James say, Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God." Others wander because they get into ill company among witty people, or clever people, or respectable people, who are not gracious people. Such society is dangerous. People whom we esteem, but whom God does not esteem, are a great snare. It is very perilous to love those who love not God. He shall not be my bosom friend who is not God's friend, for I shall probably do him but little service, and he will do me much harm. May the grace of God prevent your growing cold from any of these causes, and may you be able to say, "I have not declined."

6. One more sentence remains: "Neither have I gone back from the commandment of His lips:"—that is to say, as he had not slackened his pace, so much less had he turned back. May none of you ever go back. This is the most bitter grief of a pastor, that certain persons come among us, and even come to the front, and after a while turn back and walk no more with us. We know, as John says, "They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us; but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us:" yet what anguish it causes when we see apostates among us and know their doom! Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God. Let Lot's wife be a warning. Season your souls with a fragment of salt from that pillar, and it may keep you from corruption. Remember that you can turn back, not only from all the commandments, and so become an utter apostate, but there is such a thing as backing at single commandments. You know the precept to be right, but you cannot face it; you look at it, and look at it, and look at it, and then go back, back, back from it, refusing to obey. Job had never done so. If it was God's command he went forward to perform it. It may be that it seems impossible to go forward in the path of duty, but if you have faith you are to go on whatever the difficulty may be.

The negro was right who said, "Massa, if God say, 'Sam, jump through the wall,'' it is Sam's business to jump, and God's work to make me go through the wall." Leap at it, dear friends, even if it seem to be a wall of granite. God will clear the road. By faith the Israelites went through the Red Sea as on dry land. It is ours to do what God bids us, as He bids us, when He bids us, and no hurt can come of it. Strength equal to our day shall be given, only let us cry "Forward!" and push on.

There is the picture which Job has sketched. Hang it up on the wall of your memory, and God help you to paint after this old master, whose skill is unrivalled.

II. Secondly, let us take a peep behind the wall to see how Job came by this character. Here we note

JOB'S HOLY SUSTENANCE,

"I have esteemed the words of His mouth more than my necessary food."

1. First, then, God spoke to Job. Did God ever speak to you? I do not suppose Job had a single page of inspired writing. Probably he had not even seen the first books of Moses; he may have done so, but probably he had not. God spoke to him. Did He ever speak to you? No man will ever serve God aright unless God has spoken to him. You have the Bible, and God speaks in that book and through it; but mind you, do not rest in the printed letter without discerning its spirit. You must try to hear God's voice in the printed letter.

When the Spirit of God speaks a text right into the soul, when God Himself takes the promise or the precept and sends it with living energy into the heart, this is that which makes a man have a reverence for the word; he feels its awful majesty, its divine supremacy, and while he trembles at it he rejoices, and goes forward to obey because God has spoken to him. Dear friends, when God speaks be sure that you have open ears to hear, for oftentimes He speaketh and men regard him not. In a vision of the night when deep sleep falleth upon men God has spoken to His prophets, but now He speaks by His word, applying it to the heart with power by His Spirit.

If God speaks but little to us it is because we are dull of hearing. Renewed hearts are never long without a whisper from the Lord. He is not a dumb God, nor is He so far away that we cannot hear Him; they that keep His ways and hold His steps, as Job did, shall hear many of His words to their soul's delight and profit. God's having spoken to Job was the secret of his consistently holy life

2. Then note, that what God had spoken to him he treasured up. He says in the Hebrew that he had hid God's word more than ever he had hidden his necessary food. They had to hide grain away in those days to guard it from wandering Arabs. Job had been more careful to store up God's word than to store up his wheat; more anxious to preserve the memory of what God had spoken than to garner his harvests.

3. We learn from our version of the text that he reckoned it to be better to him than his necessary food. He ate it. This is an art which some do not understand—eating the word of the Lord. Some look at the surface of the Scriptures, some pull the Scriptures to pieces without mercy, some cut the heavenly bread into dice pieces and show their cleverness, some pick it over for plums, like children with a cake; but blessed is he that makes it his meat and drink.

JOB LIVED ON GOD'S WORD.

He takes the word of God to be what it is—namely, a word from the mouth of the Eternal, and he says, "God is speaking to me in this, and I will satisfy my soul upon it; I do not want any thing better than this, any thing truer than this, any thing safer than this, but having got this it shall abide in me, in my heart, in the very bowels of my life, it shall be interwoven with the warp and woof of my being.

4. But the text adds that he esteemed it more than his necessary food. Not more than dainties only, for those are superfluities, but more than his necessary food, and you know that a man's necessary food is a thing which he esteems very highly. He must have it. What, take away my bread? says he, as if this could not be borne. To take the bread out of a poor man's mouth is looked upon as the highest kind of villainy; but Job would sooner that they took the bread out of his mouth than the word of God out of his heart. He thought more of it than of his needful food, and I suppose it was because meat would only sustain his body, but the word of God feeds the soul.

The nourishment given by bread is soon gone, but the nourishment given by the word of God abideth in us, and makes us to live forever. The natural life is more than meat, but our spiritual life feeds on meat even nobler than itself, for it feeds on the bread of heaven, the person of the Lord Jesus. Bread is sweet to the hungry man, but we are not always hungry, and sometimes we have no appetite; but the best of God's word is that he who lives near to God has always an appetite for it, and the more he eats of it the more he can eat.

I do confess I have often fed upon God's word when I have had no appetite for it until I have gained an appetite. I have grown hungry in proportion as I have felt satisfied; my emptiness seemed to kill my hunger, but as I have been revived by the word I have longed for more. So it is written, "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness for they shall be filled;" and when they are filled they shall continue to enjoy the benediction, for they shall hunger and thirst still though filled with grace.

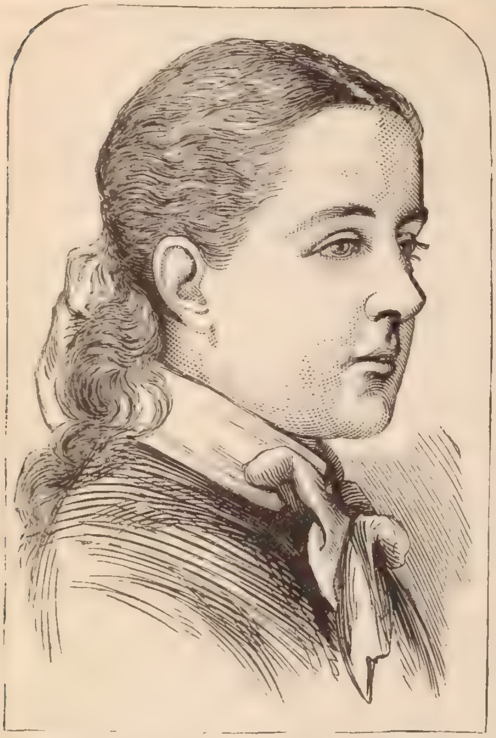
No more, except it be this: you cannot be holy, my brethren, unless you do in secret live upon the blessed word of God, and you will not live on it unless it comes to you as the word of His mouth. It is very sweet to get a letter from home when you are far away: it is like a bunch of fresh flowers in winter time. A letter from the dear one at home is as music heard over the water; but half a dozen words from that dear mouth are better than a score pages of manuscript, for there is a sweetness about the look and the tone which paper cannot carry. Now I want you to get the Bible to be not a book only, but a speaking-trumpet, through which God speaks from afar to you, so that you may catch the very tones of His voice.

You must read the word of God to this end, for it is while reading, meditating, and studying, and seeking to dip yourself into its spirit, that it seems suddenly to change from a written book into a talking book or phonograph; it whispers to you or thunders at you, as though God had hidden Himself among its leaves and spoke to your condition; as though Jesus who feedeth among the lilies had made the chapters to be lily-beds, and had come to feed there.

Ask Jesus to cause His word to come fresh from His own mouth to your soul; and if it be so, and you thus live in daily communion with a personal Christ, my brethren, you will then with your feet take hold upon His steps; then will you keep His way, then will you never decline or go back from His commandments, but you will make good speed in your pilgrim way to the eternal city. May the Holy Ghost daily be with you. May every one of you live under His sacred bedewing, and be fruitful in every good word and work. Amen and amen.

[PORTION OF SCRIPTURE READ BEFORE SERMON—Psalm 119: 9-40.

[The prayers of the readers of this Journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors in America and England, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and for its weekly circulation of more than 175,000 copies to be blessed by the Holy Spirit to the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Mr. Spurgeon and Dr. Talmage especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]



MISS CHARLOTTE ANGAS SCOTT,
Of the University, of Cambridge, England.

A FEW years since the friends of the movement to further the higher education for women established a college at Cambridge, England, for the reception of young women who were emulous of following the same lines of study as the gentlemen in the College Halls of the ancient and world-renowned University.

The movement in its initial state met with considerable opposition, but not nearly so much as had been anticipated by its large-hearted and chivalrous originators. After necessary negotiations suitable premises were secured, which received the name of Girton College, and very speedily a number of valuable scholarships were established, in which provision the wealthy London guilds and companies were conspicuous by their munificent liberality.

The fair subject of our sketch (whose portrait we give), Miss Charlotte Angas Scott, of Girton College, in January last passed an examination which, but for her sex, would have placed her in the position of Eighth Wrangler in the Mathematical Tripos at Cambridge. She is the daughter of the Rev. Principal Scott, B.A., and LL.B. (Lond.), Principal of Lancashire College, Manchester, and is under twenty-two years of age.

The highest honor hitherto won by any lady has been among the senior Optimes, second class. The Times, in a leader on this interesting fact, remarks: "Girton College students have acquitted themselves creditably on former occasions, but last January they outdid all their former achievements. The examiners for the Cambridge Mathematical Tripos have for several years past been in the habit of sending copies of their questions to Girton, and of looking over the answers. Among the Girton candidates this year was Miss Charlotte Angas Scott, and Miss Scott has been ranked among the Wranglers. Cambridge etiquette does not seem to permit the exact place attained to be officially or semi-officially stated. As, however, the competitors are arranged according to marks, of which a fixed number is assigned to each question, the examiners must have held Miss Scott entitled to the honor not only of a Wrangler, but of a specific place among the Wranglers."

Her education, until her entrance at Girton, was carried on almost entirely in her own home. In December, 1872, she first went into the Cambridge Junior Examination, and in the following year to the Oxford Junior, in both cases obtaining first-class honors. She passed in Latin, Greek, pure mathematics, religious knowledge, French, English, and applied mathematics, in the last four of which she was distinguished.

In consequence of this position scholarships at Newnham Hall, Cambridge, and at Bedford College, London, were offered to her; but she elected to compete for an Entrance Scholarship at Girton (preferring that college because it imposes conditions on its students precisely corresponding with those imposed by the university on candidates for degrees), and obtained the Goldsmith Company's Scholarship.

Her tutor while at Girton was Mr. Temperley, of Queen's College, until last summer, when he was appointed Moderator. Mr. Routh, a well-known and highly successful Cambridge tutor, was then applied to; but, on account of his numerous engagements, was unwillingly obliged to decline. For the last three months she has read with Mr. Walker, of Queen's College.

The advocates of the higher education of women will congratulate Miss Scott upon her unexampled success, and themselves upon the fact that, were women not ungenerously excluded from academic honors, three other ladies, Misses Staley, Kerr, and Jackson, would have come out in the third class. It is also worthy of note that some of the female students from Newnham Hall, who were informally examined in the Michaelmas Term last year, were similarly successful.

In this connection it may gratify our numerous lady readers to learn that the names of twenty-nine ladies appeared in the list of candidates who passed the matriculation examination of the London University in January last. Two of them are in the Honors division, and one of these is at the top of the list, but is disqualified by age for the first exhibition. Seventeen ladies also passed in the first division, and five in the second division.

THE GLASGOW "BADGER" AND THE SALVATION ARMY.

The Boy's Promise—Becomes a Gambler—God strikes him Speechless—Brutal Treatment of his Mother—The Saved Dancer—"I'm such a black 'un"—Return Home.

THE dying father laid his hand upon the boy's head and made him promise to meet him in heaven. But bad company led him wrong. He became a gambler, and later still a blasphemer, and then a drunkard. The great city of Glasgow could, perhaps, hardly find a sinner against God and man more deeply sunk in iniquity and more widely known than "The Badger."

Still God watched him. One Sunday he left home early, telling his mother he should go to some mission room, and, wandering to the outskirts of the city, spent the whole day with some mates, gambling in an empty loft; toward evening he ventured and lost the last coin he had; high words followed, and in the dispute he called upon God to strike him dead if the piece of money was not his own. In that moment God did strike him speechless and senseless to the floor, to be carried home by his mates an hour or two later.

But he hardened his heart, and drank more and more. Sometimes found drunk under the tap-room table, the publican would drag him out into the street, and coming to himself, he would find his head bruised and bleeding in the gutter.

One night, infuriated with strong drink, he returned home about midnight and found the door fast. Climbing up to the window, he smashed it, and rushing to his poor old mother's room, dragged her down the stairs, and threw her into the street, heedless of entreaties and tears. Verily he had become a wretch indeed—almost a fiend in human form.

When men are sunk to this depth of brutalization by drink or vice of any sort, what is to be done for them? The sad answer, which facts, alas! only too abundantly supply, is, "Let be left to sink into the grave, godless, hop miserable. Let their homes remain the wasted desolations that violence and d have made them. Let their wives, forgett their hopeless anguish all tenderness and fly to drink as the only possible solace for ceaseless woes, and become wrecks more if not more vile, than their husbands. Se their children go to the board school, and that, instead of becoming intelligent ruffi rogues, they will rise up under the beni fluences brought to bear upon them for half-dozen hours out of the twenty-four, enlightened and useful generation!" Do religious world believe in the existence great Divine power able to cope with, to to change, to purify the vilest of sinne there no balm in Gilead? Is there no ph there? If so, why is not His mighty sa accomplished among the lost everywhe it for want of agents sufficiently devo bring to bear upon those who most need only remedy that can really meet their de case? Or is it because religious society, l religious society of the days of Jesus Ch too respectable to mingle with the de the "sinners" in fact, and compel th come in to sit at the great guest table?

At Bridgeton Cross, with a bitter blea blowing in their teeth, one damp and night, a little band of Salvationists, gath usual in a ring, where singing—

"Oh, you must be a lover of the Lord,
Or you can't go to heaven
When you die."

The Badger, with empty pockets and tered coat, happened to be passing, and to listen. When the singing ceased, h remarked, "what a set of fools!" I Badger made answer, "Be quiet, lad.
summat in it. I'm going in to hear them

That night among the speakers from t form of the crowded building was a m had been a dancer at some low concert-h told how God had saved his soul. " dancer!" said the Badger to himself: " can save a drunkard!"

But deliverance was not yet. Satan and actually got this man, though so convicted, to lead others in making suc labaloo as quite upset the meeting. T night they did the same thing; but th time the Badger came he was smitten Word of the Lord. He says,—

"After the speaking the captain ( came to me, and says, 'Will you be save

"'Me—me? I'm such a black 'un.'

"'But the blood of Jesus can make t est clean.'

"'Well, but I'm such a black 'un. bad.'

"'But Jesus Christ came to save th and the worst.'

"And then I thought of my father's 'Andrew, lad, meet me in heaven; and ber the eyes of the Lord are ever on y
I cried. I never cried before, but it b down, and I fell at the penitent form, night God for Christ's sake forgave my

At home, over the smouldering e what had been a fire, with her gray h aching head bowed in her hands, weary self, the Badger' mother waited for hi
She heard his step, and exclaimed, wit
"Lord help!" But the new-born son with tears in his eyes, laid his trembli upon her shoulder, and said, "Mother, religion, bless the Lord, and there's su it!"

It is not be wondered at that this m to sing in the streets, that he loves th tion Army, that to-day he is one of man
ing under its banners in the city of Gla

The Prophetic News and Israel's W
(monthly) for January and February, 188 had, price six cents each, at 63 Bible Ho York.

HE BLOOD OF THE PASSOVER.

rmon by Rev. W. Morley Punshon, LL.D.

"nd the blood shall be to you for a token upon he uses where ye are: and when I see the blood, wi pass over you."—EXODUS 12 : 13.

The Bondage of the Israelites in Egypt—The Plagues Brought to Bear on Pharaoh—God's Provision for his People—I. Man, like the Israelite is in Circumstances of Sorrow—A Worse Captivity—In Greater Peril—II. A Remedy Provided—The Great Doctrine of Atonement—Christ's Death more than an Example—More than Attestation—Sacrifice Necessary to Salvation—God is not Vindictive—The Sufferings of Christ Spontaneous, not Enforced—What the Blood Means.

IN the design of God to humble the proud onch of Egypt, and to achieve deliverance s captive people, He had brought plague prodigy to bear upon Pharaoh. Blow after ad been struck at the most popular idolad each as it passed was but the omen of creasing disaster. There had been fire, il, and darkness successive swarms of th me and offensive things had subjected the opl to annoyance; the Nile's delicious water en polluted, and had become a very thg; the locusts had blighted the harvest; rain had destroyed the cattle; and sore gevous sickness had wasted the strength me

The monarch's contumely, infidelity, and pride however, proof against combination even of mous miracle; there must be therefore yet re visitations of vengeance. The appeal st made to slain affections as well as to ked fears. The angel was commissioned to iselessly through the land at the hour of ni t, and to breathe upon each Egyptian lli. Alas for the homes upon which that thg passed! In every house the first-born e st beloved was slain. The land was covdenly with terrified and weeping famia each one on whom the stroke had n. llying out to ask his neighbor's symy, et that neighbor speeding on the same nd as himself. But Pharaoh, like too hers, convinced while smarting under t, but hardening himself on its withal efused still to let the people go.

length, however, by the divine power even pri and stubborness were broken down; e God poured out His vengeance upon op essors of His people, He provided for pele with equally signal care. They were o select a lamb—"a lamb for a house" the lamb with certain significant observ sprinkle the blood of the slain lamb sides and upper posts of the door; and was commissioned to pass over the ch thus presented the appointed meal.

E BLOOD WAS TO BE A TOKEN

t house where God's people were; and t angel saw the blood, he relaxed his sheathed his sword, he passed quietly lessly by. They were then to dress lamb, accompanied by further signifiobservances, and they were to shrine the the whole transaction as a precious forever.

erest in this, as in most of the other s of the Levitical economy, consists in tnship to higher institutions and to a wed provision; it consists in the preby them of our Surety and our Saviour, once the Surety and Saviour of uni. We are warranted in making this ou remember, by the expression of e, who tells us that Christ, our passcrificed for us. (1 Cor. 10 : 7.)

ere are just two points of analogy to I ould like just for a few moments to attention to-day. First, we, like the Israel, are in circumstances of *sor*ndly, for us, as for them, there has edy provided.

rve, in the first place, that we, like the children of Israel aforetime, are in circumstances of sorrow. It is not necessary that I should enlarge upon this head. The correspondence is most accurate, and will be very easily discerned. It appears, perhaps, principally in the two great characteristics of bondage and of peril.

Take the first thought:

THEY WERE IN BONDAGE.

A change had passed upon the fortunes of the Hebrew people since the death of Joseph. A king had arisen who had no respect for his memory, and who became inflamed with jealousy by their growing aggrandizement and numbers. They were reduced, therefore, to a state of vassalage, and made to work with rigor at the toil of captives and of slaves. Their oppressions increased with their years, until they groaned by reason of their bondage, and their cry went up unto God.

Now how much worse than the captivity of ancient Israel is the captivity of fallen man! We ourselves are naturally in bondage. In place of submitting to the better will of God, we are naturally lorded over—and it is a fearful tyranny—either by disordered passions or by the demon who wields them at his anarch will. Ever since the Fall, the orderly government of the soul has been disturbed, and the passions, luxuriant of evil, have run riot upon reason's throne.

You remember how Scripture bears out this assertion by the frequent representations it gives of sinners as being themselves subject to bondage. You remember that it is said, "He that committeth sin is the servant of sin." "While they promise them liberty they are themselves the servants of corruption." Know ye not that "of whom a man is overcome, of him also he is brought into bondage." They are "led captive by the devil at his will."

Brethren, think of this matter, I beseech you. There are some of you whom I address to-night—refined, tender, delicate in your sensibilities—whose eyes will be suffused with tears, perhaps, at the recital of fictitious sorrow; it may be that you have grieved oftentimes over the woes of God's ancient people quivering beneath the lash of the taskmaster, goaded by the oppressor's wrong. Pity yourselves, I charge you, for your slavery is worse than theirs.

There are many circumstances which make the bondage that is put upon you—the yoke of intolerable oppression under which you are at this moment writhing—infinitely worse than theirs. They were brought down by superior force; by the strong hand of power their liberties had been disastrously cloven down. Your slavery is self-imposed, is voluntary. Your own will has consented to the bondage. Your own hands have riveted the chains.

The body of the Israelite only was at the mercy of the spoiler: his spirit was free, exulting in a bright republic of his own. Yours is heart-slavery; the iron has entered into your soul. Their oppressor, whatever the degradation attached to his service, was at least a king, and in some sort there was dignity in their bondage; but yours is the very vilest slavery, because you are slaves of a tyrant who is himself a slave, who has felt the bitterness of defeat without its softening, and who in demon revenge for his disgraceful banishment from Heaven will exert the most intolerable oppression upon you.

Above all, their deliverance was accorded to them in token that they were in amity with, rather than opposed to, the God who wrought the deliverance, and by whom all the miracles of power were performed; but you, happy sinner—happy in your miserable bondage—are like prison birds singing songs of freedom amid the bars and gratings of your cage. Listen, I pray you, to the voice, if it pierce through your dungeon walls—listen to the voice which is speaking to you to-day. Christ has come on purpose to give liberty to the captive, and the opening of the prison unto all such as are bound.

Then, if you take the next thought—the thought of peril—you find the analogy to be equally close, and equally wonderful. The Israelites were

IN CIRCUMSTANCES OF PERIL.

The Lord was about to execute in their sight His strange work of judgment. The peril was to come very near. A thousand were to fall at their side, ten thousand at their right hand. They could almost hear the flapping of the angel's wings as from dwelling to dwelling he sped darkly on. The silence of the midnight air was to be broken by the wailing from vacant homes, from which a loved one had suddenly departed; and if any among themselves presumed upon his nationality, and neglected the appointed memorial, his nationality would cease to save him, and he would be involved in the common destruction which had overtaken the rest.

Now, brethren, the transgressions of our race, the depravity which we inherit, the sins which we individually commit, expose us to consequences that are far more imminent and far more terrible. Not alone, as in the great day of Egypt's disaster, will the trouble fall upon the nearest or upon the best beloved of kindred. Ourselves must bear it. Each one of us in the great day of arbitration and of recompense must for himself answer, and in himself bear the penalty; and for each one of us the judgment comes at the hour of our departure from the body. Day after day, month after month, year after year, one, and another, and another are passing from our side to the judgment. We have known them; we have loved them; we have worshipped with them; perhaps we have sinned with them; and they are passing from us to the judgment.

"We are to the margin come,
And we expect to die."

Oh! thanks be to God, there is a sign in Heaven—a sign by which that delegate of the vengeance of an aroused Creator knows when and whom he is to strike, and knows when and whom he is to spare.

(To be concluded in our next issue.)

The Erection of Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Girls' Orphanage is to be commenced soon. Mr. Spurgeon writes: "Having purchased and paid for the ground for the Girls' Orphanage, I am now anxious to proceed with the undertaking. The first block of buildings will consist of the houses for 250 girls, with schools above them. I have not yet obtained a contract, but I have reason to believe that the works with drainage, etc., will cost £8000. Of this I have promises to the amount of £3000. I now commit this new enterprise to the guardian care of the Lord of heaven and earth, hoping that He will so prosper it that the first stone may be laid on my birthday, June 19th."

Two Liquor Dealers were Arrested in New York on Monday for selling liquor the previous day. The information on which they were charged was contained in the pathetic appeal of a wife and mother which she sent to Dr. Crosby, President of the Society for the Prevention of Crime. She said: "I am a broken-hearted wife and mother, all on account of the rum-shops being kept open on Sundays. My husband had $17 last Sunday morning when he left us at nine o'clock. We were nearly famished from cold and hunger, but he took all his dollars to a liquor saloon, and stopped there till noon on Sunday. He then went to another saloon and drank there till four o'clock. He then returned home, and kicked and beat me till I fell nearly dead. Ah! Doctor, save him from hell, and my dear children from ruin! Ah, save him and them and me, Doctor, from the rum-shops!"

Father McNamara, the Converted Roman Catholic priest, still continues to receive the blessing of God on his labors. In this city upward of 2000 have joined the new movement, and it is proposed to build a church. The Rev. J. A. O'Connor, who has left the Roman Catholic Church to assist the reformer, states that since last September, when he entered upon the work, Father McNamara and himself had received over two hundred Romanists into their Church.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 207).

A Pointed Shaft.

As Ernest approached the little meeting in the lighthouse that Sunday evening, Dunnit was reading the lines:

"No foot of land do I possess;
No dwelling in the wilderness;
A poor wayfaring man."

While these lines were being sung, with many an old-fashioned quaver, he offered half his book to Ernest, as he had often done when the master of Clifford had been a boy, before he had gone to college and taken orders.

The memory of those days brought a smile to Ernest's worn face, as he took his place beside old Dunnit. The heart of the old fisherman glowed with delight. Master Ernest was as dear to him as his own son could have been, and he felt no embarrassment at the idea of preaching before him. When Dunnit was preaching, no thought of himself could intrude. He spoke to his little congregation as he would have talked to each man singly, if he had been sitting beside him on the rude bench under the lighthouse wall.

Now, as Ernest sat just within the porch, old Dunnit stood on the threshold, and with his white head thrown back, and his every feature bright with inward gladness, he prepared to address his uneducated audience.

There had been a slight stir and commotion among the people at sight of Ernest, but it quickly subsided into decorous tranquillity, and the pleasant, cheery tones of old Dunnit alone broke the silence.

"'And when Jesus saw that, He was very sorrowful. He said, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God! For it is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God!' (Luke 18:24, 25.)

"Jesus was sad when He saw that! What do you s'pose He saw? The poor widow that had only a mite, all the livin' she had, and she put that into the treasury box? Or the blind beggars, poor men! sittin' by the roadside beggin'? Or that sick woman, which had suffered many things of many physicians, and spent all she had, and was nothin' bettered, but rather grew worse? Or did He look into that bag Judas took care of, which was so often empty? Or was He thinkin' of His own disciples that had neither silver nor brass in their purses?

"P'raps, if we'd been set to guess, we should have guessed any o' these. Or we might have guessed He was thinkin' how lonesome He was, and how far from His Father and His Father's house. Jesus was sorely vexed, but it was for none of these things. He had just seen a rich man!

"Ah! the dear Lord was thinkin' about rich men. A minute before He felt so sorrowful, one o' them had come to Him, very eager to learn how to win eternal life. He was a young man, a ruler, with plenty of power, and I dare say he ruled over his folks quite well and justly; better than most men, p'raps. There's not a word said against him by anybody.

"We know he wasn't too much set up by bein' a ruler; for he comes runnin' to Jesus, and kneelin' down to Him in the way; aye! kneelin' in the sight of all th' crowd and on the dusty road, just like the poor leper that once came to Jesus, beseechin' Him, and kneelin' down to Him, and sayin' unto Him, 'If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean.' No, no; he didn't give himself airs though he was a ruler, and a rich man. He knew Jesus could tell him how to win eternal life; and he was not too grand to kneel down for such a blessin' as that.

"Aye! and Jesus beholdin' him loved him. Loved him; think of that! Jesus loves us, every one, thank God! but maybe there was somethin' very special about this young man that made him very pleasant in the Lord's eyes. We all know what it is to see some kind, sweet face, like our Miss Rose's, God bless her! and we love it all in a moment, without stoppin' to think why. We know Jesus loved His disciple John, and chose him to sit beside Him at supper, and let him rest his head upon His bosom. And He loved this young ruler.

"Poor rich young man! He might have had the Lord Jesus Christ for bosom friend; he might have lived with Him, hearkenin' every day to His blessed words, and lookin' upon His blessed face, and feelin' the clasp of His hand. But he missed it all; poor fellow! poor fellow!

"'What lack I yet?' he asked. He felt he wanted somethin', though he was so rich he had everythin'—save eternal life. That was what he lacked—eternal life. An awful thing to miss that is, either in this world or the world to come. What is eternal life? Why! the Bible tells us plain. 'This is eternal life, to know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent.'

"The poor young man had kept all the commandments, but he did not know God yet, nor Jesus, who had come to make God known. But he felt he was lackin' somethin'. 'Come, know me!' said Jesus. 'Take up thy cross and follow me, for that is the only way to eternal life.

"'You shall live with me, like these poor men, my disciples; and I will teach you about my Father, till you know Him and me. You can only know the Father through me!' What! was there no other way for him to win eternal life? Must he give up his rulership and his possessions?—great possessions they were. Could he have no treasure except treasure in heaven? Then the rich man went away grieved and very sorrowful.

"I don't wonder at the Lord bein' very sorrowful too. Poor folks came and could get all they wanted from Him. Sick folks were healed, and blind folks received their sight. Sad folks were comforted. Even lepers and folks possessed with devils were set free. But when rich folks came the Lord could do nothin' for them. They had got all they wanted, except eternal life. Except eternal life, mark you! and they were too rich to win that in the only way it can be won. He may well be very sorrowful when He looks at rich men.

"'It's easier,' said Jesus, very sorrowfully, 'for a camel to go through a needle's eye than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God.' 'Well! that's impossible!' say the disciples; and they were astonished out of measure. They were never so astonished as at that; they were exceedingly amazed. Even when Jesus told them beforehand of the manner of His death they were not so amazed and astonished out o' measure.

"'Who can be saved if a rich man cannot?' they asked; 'a rich man has everythin' his own way. He's a ruler, and everybody gives way to him. He's plenty of time; there's nothin' to hinder him from keepin' the commandments from his youth up. He can give loads o' money away, and nobody blames him. Who, then, can be saved?' Ah! they never thought the kingdom o' heaven is as men runnin' a race; and who can run well that is laden with thick clay? If a man is passin' over clayey ground, and he clogs his own feet with it, how is he to win a race? He was a young man, and nimble enough to run along the high-road to meet with Jesus; but his soul was heavy laden with the pleasures and the cares o' riches, and could not run up the shinin' road to God.

"Through a needle's eye! Isn't that much the same as enterin' in at the strait gate? The gate's just wide enough to let our souls in, but it can't be stretched to let in one rag of our possessions. If we poor folk love our bits of cottages, or our gardens, or our boats, so as to make us forget God, why we are trying to drive our camel through the needle's eye; and it can't be done. We're what the world calls poor, almost all of us, but we can make Jesus very sorrowful.

"If we were out in a great storm, with darkness comin' on, and rocks, strange rocks, ahead, and us driftin' on them, and we saw a quiet haven close by, only with a channel so na and so low an archway to go under that we lower our masts and see that our tackli all taut and tight, would we go on to the and be lost rather than run into that saf bor? Nay; wouldn't we quit nets, and and all, and escape with our bare lives?
would, you would. Well, then, for your sake get rid of all that keeps you back God; enter in at the strait gate; go th the needle's eye.

"Peter said, 'We have forsaken all a lowed thee; what shall we have there Ah! Peter, are you goin' to make a b with the Lord? But the Lord was not with him. The disciples had done the first; they had done what the rich ma not do. They had forsaken all they h followed him. They had gone throug needle's eye. And what did Jesus p them? Everlasting life! The only thi poor rich young man lacked. Well do ciples! good and faithful servants! y lack nothin'; enter ye into the joy of ou

"The kingdom of God! There are folks or poor folks there; no great small men. 'The rich and the poor gether; the Lord is the maker of them a makes men rich or poor as He sees fit, what is best for every one of us. 'We nothin' into this world,' says Paul to Ti
'and it is certain we can carry nothi
'The love of money is the root of all says again, 'which while some have cov ter, they have erred from the faith, and themselves through with many sorrows.
might well be grieved about the rich man. He went away to pierce himself with many sorrows.

"But I was wishful to say a word about the kingdom of God. Paul was up into the third heaven, and heard u ble things, which it is not lawful for m
ter. That is the grand palace and thro kingdom; but the kingdom of God i this life. Paul says, and he knew bet most men, that its righteousness and pe joy in the Holy Ghost. It's mostly an able thing, but I'll tell you all I can abo

"There's righteousness. You and can live in this world in a way to p righteous God. I know I've my fa failin's; all of us have; but there's thing I do that I can look up to Go and know He is pleased with it. 'I d those things that please Him,' says Jes Lord! Thou wert His only begotten whom He is ever well pleased. But w always do things that please Him; o times, when we are most like little playin' at work, and thinkin' they ar father's boat down into the sea with t hands, while he's pullin' with might a and smiles at them for helpin' him. G down upon us when we think we're hel

"Then after righteousness comes p peace that Jesus left to His disciples.
goin' into glory, and He left His peac
—a peace passin' all understandin'. I tell you what it is like, though it is uns Sometimes I've been far away from la open sea, and there's been nought bu above me, and the blue water all ar
The sky seemed like the sea, and the like the sky; all calm, quietness, pe land there, with its work and worry.
let myself float on it, like a babe ly mother's lap, looking up to the blue s above me.

"That's how my soul is with G restin' upon Him in a great calm There's nought but God above and be all about my soul. When it lifts up it looks around there's nought but G seen; there's no fears, no cares, no rowin' for itself. Above it there i smilin' face of God. This is peace; unspeakable and full of glory is I d yet, but my joy shall be full, and no take it away from me. This is the kingdom of God.

'Rich men that love their riches, and poor men that hate their poverty, cannot enter in, except through the needle's eye. Which of you will pass through this needle's eye?"

Old Dunnit had been standing with his face turned toward the dusky group of listeners, singing silently in the dimly-lighted interior, while Ernest had remained in the corner of the porch, from which he could see the sunlit cliffs. As the old man's voice, growing tremulous as it came near the close, altogether ceased, he moved quietly away, and taking an unfrequented track, was soon beyond the sound of the singing which rose and fell at measured intervals. It was a lovely summer evening, and Ernest sought a quiet, solitary spot on the cliffs, where no eye could see him, and no foot pass by.

He wished to be alone. All day his soul had been dwelling in darkness; and a new light was dawning upon it, solemn and mysterious as the daybreak after a tempestuous night. In his dread of poverty and his desire to be rich he had fallen into his temptation and the snare spread for him, and had erred from the faith. He had shut himself out of the kingdom of God.

Then there came to him one of those strange and mysterious crises in the history of the soul which none know save those who are called to pass through them. A deep awe overwhelmed him and he hid his face even from the dying light of the day. The earthy husk of life was stripped off and shrivelled up in the presence of the mighty influence that swept over him.

His soul was wrestling for a greater blessing than he had ever dreamed of before. Not a word came to his lips, or was fashioned in his brain. He was not conscious of the flight of the solemn hours. The quiet sounds of night did not penetrate his ear, and the soft summer breeze touched his head without arousing him. So motionless was he, he might have been dead.

But when he raised his head and lifted up his pallid, awe-stricken face, there was no more irresolution in his heart. Clifford lay below him in the dusk of the summer's night, with its sleeping cottages and strip of silver-sand, where the white fringed waves were rippling quietly. Above it stood his home, with one light burning still in Rose's window.

The church stood out clearly on its little slope of rising ground. All this was his own no longer. He must go out into the world recognized no more as the prosperous land-owner and popular magistrate. There would be conflicting and false rumors about him, and for a few days he would be the wonder and talk of the county. Then he would be forgotten, and Charles would be Clifford of Clifford.

He had suffered the bitterest pang for his daughter's sake. As yet indeed he did not know what the conflict had cost him, but it was over. There was a great calm in his inmost soul, as of one whose feet feel the steadfast rock beneath them, after long buffeting with mighty waves of the sea. He knew that he had only one Master, and that the yoke of all other servitude was broken from off his neck. The love of the world had been cast into the consuming fire of the love of God, and had been destroyed forever. He had entered into the kingdom of God.

(To be Continued.)

THE INVITATION OF CHRIST.

S. S. Lesson for April 11th, Matt. 11 : 20-30. Golden Text, ver. 28. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

The title of our subject to-day refers only to the verse which is chosen for our golden text. We will begin by seeking to learn its deep lessons. "Come unto me," said our blessed Lord, "all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Shall we ask of Him, "Lord, is there profit in Thy service?" There is a ready answer, "Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward." Without Christ, so much labor and no profit; with Christ, so large a recompense for so little service. "Come unto me," he says—i.e., Come, until you reach me, thyself; don't stop half way; don't be satisfied with my gifts; it is myself you want, and I will give you rest. Labor which brings no return exhausts and depresses, but Jesus, although he calls to service, provides a service which strengthens instead of exhausting, and which is rest in labor.

It matters not in what position we may be—of danger, difficulty, temptation, or sin—this invitation is addressed to us as the only way out of it—i.e., by coming to Jesus. O how many of God's own children labor to conquer temptation instead of coming to Him with it! how many weary themselves in the effort to extricate themselves from danger or difficulty instead of simply applying to Him who has promised to instruct and guide them in the way in which they should go, and guide them with His eye. In the life of most of us it is not the things we have to do lying directly in the way of our duty which weary and perplex us, but the planning, the uncertainty, the after-regrets which belong to a life in which the guidance of God is occasionally but not habitually recognized.

A mother desires to place a boy at school. She is a Christian woman, and of course she prays for guidance, but does not expect it to be so definite and clear that she will only have to act upon it. There is a school perhaps in which there is the best of instruction, the highest class of boys, but no distinctly spiritual influence. She hears of another in which the Christian influence is all that she could wish, but she has heard that the instruction is not of the best order. Now what shall she do? Has she a right to sacrifice the good of her boy's soul to mere human learning? But then has she a right to place her boy at a disadvantage as regards learning, so that he may run the risk of being called a religious ignoramus, and of himself rebelling against the mortification of such a position? From this ferment of debating thoughts the Master calls, "Come unto me; I know what is best for thy boy; deliver over the matter to me with quietness and confidence, and thine ears shall hear a voice behind thee, saying, 'This is the way,'" etc. (Isa. 30 : 19-21).

A Christian falls ill, and then there is the labor of consulting physicians, of entering a very slavery of regimen, of undertaking expensive journeys to seek another atmosphere, sometimes a submitting to dangerous and most painful operations. Jehovah, our Physician (Ex. 15 : 26. Heb.), calls, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Another Christian has some moral weakness, shyness, nervousness, etc., which make things which are simple to others an intolerable burden to him or to her. He meets beforehand the occasions which are likely to try him, he seeks to muster up courage to face them; makes, as it were, a rehearsal, which, alas! only weakenss him where the occasion is really present, and then he is disappointed and heavy laden to find all this labor futile. Jesus calls him away from himself and says, "Come unto me; behold, I make all things new" (Rev. 21 : 5).

Others labor and are heavy laden under the pressure of heavy bereavement, and they seek, by change of scene, by difference of occupation, by cheerful society, etc., to lull the cry of an aching heart, but all in vain. It is the alone office of Jesus "to comfort all that mourn" (Isa. 61 : 2), and He says to every heavy laden mourner, "Come unto me."

But the heaviest load, and the most weary, is the load of sin; the hardest labor is in the service of sin. Place side by side the man and woman who have served sin, the thief, the drunkard, the miser, the profligate, the liar, the prostitute, the fortune-teller, the woman of the world, etc., etc., with ten men and women who really love Christ, and in which rank of the two do we find the weary and the heavy laden? On the faces of which do we see the deeply-traced lines of care and suffering and unrest? Which are they who look old before their time? Such a survey will confirm the words of the wise man, "The way of transgressors is hard" (Prov. 13 : 15). But the call of Jesus knows no exceptions; from sin as well as from all else, from sin whether in the case of the lost sinner or that of the back slider, the Master calls, "Come unto me . . . and I will give you rest."

But relief and rest are not all he offers; he calls us to an education, for Jesus is come to seek souls who shall be "to the praise of the glory of His grace" (Eph. 1 : 6) during an endless eternity, souls which shall "honor Him" (Isa. 58 : 13). Therefore He continues: "Take my yoke upon you and learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly of heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls." Christ has not redeemed us that we may live as masters of our own life, but that we may learn of Him to do the will of God, and in the learning and in the doing "ye shall find rest unto your souls." The first necessity with a scholar is that he should be willing to receive instruction. Here is a teacher who has been a learner upon earth, who is Himself meek and lowly of heart, and who offers to teach us the same blessed virtues. But in order that we may learn we must be under the yoke. Practically we must act as those who are at school, and have faith that all the lessons we receive are the best adapted to insure our progress. Our Teacher has his eye on the great eternity for which He is seeking to fit us, a destiny of which we know nothing as yet; let us have faith in Him, and take His yoke of submission and obedience in every thing upon us, and we shall rest in the blessed confidence that He cannot but succeed to attain His end with us.

He declares, "My yoke is easy and my burden is light." He never says that we shall have no burdens, but it is our own burdens which are the heavy ones, and these He invites us to cast upon Him (1 Peter, 5 : 7; Ps. 55 : 22). He lays His burden upon us, the burden of the Lord, of souls, of the state of His church, etc.; and because it is borne for Him, and every personal care for soul or body has become His concern, His burden becomes one that His true disciples would not dispense with. Other yokes are far from being easy (see Isa. 10 : 27; 14 : 25; 47 : 6; 58 : 6), but His yoke has been made easy because He as man has worn it first, and He as man has practised all the renunciation of Himself to which He calls us. His will is always blessed when we put ourselves out of the question, as in Rom. 12 : 1-3, "Present your bodies a living sacrifice. . . ."

Our Lord had been upbraiding the cities wherein most of His mighty works were done, because they repented not. He showed them they were more guilty and in greater danger than Tyre, Sidon, and Sodom. "I say unto you," he adds, "that it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment than for you." And again, speaking to Capernaum, "It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment than for thee." At that time Jesus answered, "What does this mean?"

"I thank Thee, O Father," He says, "Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so Father; for so it seemed good in Thy sight." It seems in a way to have broken upon Him that God would make known His mind to the very lowly ones, and therefore His call that we should learn of Him who is meek and lowly of heart. "Even so, Father," etc. There was intense joy in the human heart of Jesus to discover His Father's mind. Then, as a preface to His invitation, He says, "All things are delivered unto me of my Father." He calls us to come to One who is potent to help. All things, all circumstances, all powers, are subject to Him. "And no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal Him." Therefore how great is the contempt which those manifest toward Him who refuse His invitation!

FOREIGN TOPICS.

The Exciting Struggle for Political Power in Great Britain is now at its height, and both parties are using all their endeavors to succeed. The uncontested constituencies number less than one hundred. There are 658 seats to be filled, and for these 1091 candidates have offered themselves. Of this number 499 are Liberals, 495 Conservatives, and 97 Home Rulers. Party managers on both sides predict that the contest will be fiercer than any seen during this generation. As yet, there is no ground on which to base any prognostication of the result; but it is a significant fact that at the Carlton Club in London, which is the Conservative headquarters for the kingdom, expectations of an increase in the number of Lord Beaconsfield's supporters are not so sanguine during the last few days.

Mr. Gladstone's indefatigable labors have brought on an illness which has laid him aside for a few days, but he is now reported to be recovering. In the course of a recent speech he used expressions hostile to Austria, which have excited ill-will toward him in Europe. In the same speech he called Russia "the friend of liberty"—an appellation which must have surprised even the Liberal friends of that nation. Foreign readers of the speech consider the idea "so utterly unintelligible as to baffle all attempts at a reasonable explanation."

The Marquis of Hartington, the Nominal leader of the Liberal Party, defined, in an address to his constituents on March 25th, the changes of policy which would ensue if he and his party were in a majority after the election. He said "they would not stake the interest or honor of England on the maintenance of the independence and integrity of an unreformed Turkish Government; they would not treat the relations of the Turkish Government with its Christian subjects as a matter of interest only to Russia and Turkey; they would not try to disturb the concert of Europe; if it was united as to what should be done they would do all in their power to promote that concert."

That definition appears to indicate that the Liberal foreign policy would be to accord with the majority of the European nations, whatever that majority desired. Such a policy is an eminently safe one; but it is doubtful how far it would be satisfactory to a large majority of English citizens, who like to see their country leading rather than following in the councils of Europe.

A God-Dishonoring Policy is the Expressive appellation given by the London Record to the British proceedings in Africa. In its issue of March 12th it says, "We fully sympathize with the indignant complaints which have been made in our columns as to the God-dishonoring course pursued by our officials in South Africa as to Christian missionaries. So long as the whole of South Africa was under the administration of Sir Bartle Frere, there was no room for complaint; but since Sir Garnet Wolseley became Her Majesty's High Commissioner in Zululand, the counsels of Mr. John Dunn seem to be in the ascendant. Almost the first act in Mr. John Dunn's administration as British Resident included an attack on missionaries; and although the remonstrances it occasioned drew out explanatory modifications of his Anglo-Zulu policy, Sir Garnet Wolseley's own words have been justly condemned as unworthy of the representative of a Christian Queen and a great Christian nation."

It is, to say the least of it, singular that in Africa, a continent indebted so heavily to such missionaries as Dr. Robert Moffat and David Livingstone, the presence of missionaries should be so restricted. And it is still more remarkable that England should be the power to impose the restrictions.

The Russian Nihilists are as Active as ever in issuing denunciatory manifestoes, declaring that they will be satisfied with nothing less than a constitution, and the abdication of the Czar, to which the government replies by unlimited arrests and domiciliary visits. According, however, to the latest reports from St. Petersburg, General Melikoff has begun to think that, perhaps, after all, there has been a little too much "repression" of late, and is now constantly closeted with the Czarewitch, with whom he is said to be busily drawing up a scheme of liberal reforms, by the promulgation of which it is hoped that the Nihilist party will be divided, and consequently weakened.

The proposed constitution is said to include comparative liberty of the press, restrictions of the authority of the police, the extension of the prerogatives of the provincial councils, and the free expression of opinion. These reforms are to be intrusted to twenty-six committees, one for each of the governments of Russia. It is expected also that some of the recent sentences of exile will be quashed. It is the general opinion that many innocent persons have been sent to Siberia, and from Odessa alone no fewer than six hundred prisoners have been deported, most of whom in an ordinary trial would not have received such an extreme sentence.

Retrenchment in Turkey appears to have been vigorously commenced. Telegrams from Constantinople state that the economical reforms recently decided upon by the Council of Ministers are of a very extensive character, including reductions in the salaries of many State officials. The Grand Vizier, whose salary was formerly $15,000 per month, will in future receive only $1250, the other Ministers being paid at the rate of $1000 per month. We are also told in the same telegrams that "the Porte proposes to invite the co-operation of foreign capital for carrying out industrial undertakings in Turkey."

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Annual Church Meeting.—The Church at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, has just held its annual meeting, and the statistics showed the increase by baptism during the year as 305; by letter, 100; by profession, 37; by restoration, 3; total, 445. The present numbers are 5290. In the Sunday-school there are 1200 scholars and 105 teachers; 42 scholars have joined the church during the year.

The Centenary of Dr. Chalmers, the Distinguished Presbyterian Free Church minister, fell on March 17th, and the occasion was celebrated at various places in Scotland. Dr. Chalmers was born in 1780, and died in the year 1847. Mr. Gladstone, the famous English statesman, says: "He was indeed one of nature's nobles, and most of the qualities which stamped him with that character were obvious to all who came across his path. I do not mean merely his rich and glowing eloquence, but his warrior grandeur, his unbounded philanthropy, his strength of purpose, his mental integrity, his absorbed and absorbing earnestness." As an instance of his singular simplicity and detachment from the world, he declined the offer of a valuable living, because in the position offered him he would not be so well able to promote the interests of the poor.

One of the Victims of the Tay Bridge Disaster had attended divine service on the day of the calamity. His body has been picked up to the eastward of Tay Bridge. It was identified as that of Mr. David Jobson, oil and color merchant, West Dock Street, Dundee. Mr. Jobson had been to Perth on Sunday, December 28th, assisting at the opening of a mission station, and was returning home when the accident happened. His Bible was found in his pocket, and his gold watch, money, and jewellery.

Lord Radstock, the English Nobleman, whose preaching has been so signally blessed of God, has been the means of the conversion of the Russian General Pashkoff, who is creating (says a London society journal) a sensation on the banks of the Neva by his preaching of the Gospel. The General is one of the wealthiest landowners in Russia, and possesses vast estates in the Ural Mountains, which have only seen his face once, and that several years ago, when he came into possession of the property. On that occasion the General was so mobbed by the peasants, who had a thousand and one complaints to make against his steward, that he vowed he wou never pay them a visit again. General Pashk is doing much good among the leaders and f lowers of Russian society. Let us hope a pray that he will also spread Gospel instructi among the peasants on his estates, in one which alone there are over 10,000 peasants, a not a single school.

A Converted Cab-driver at Hastings, Enland, went to his employer and told him he wou have to leave off Sunday work. His employ said, "Then you are not the man for me." T cab-driver replied, "I am sorry to lose my e ployment, but I am determined to do what right and trust the consequences to God." Th man had four children, and he went home a commended himself to God in prayer. Afte few days a lady he had been in the habit of dr ing out every day told him it had been laid her heart as to how he was getting on. He t her how things had turned out, and she bid h go and buy a horse and cab and she would for it. He was to have the money without terest and to pay it back if he could. A Ch tian friend had occasion, not long ago, to on him, and found that he had not to go int back-yard and up some steps over the stable, went up to the front door of a good house, w bay-windows each side the door, and the had then four horses and cabs of his own. C scientious faithfulness to God often has its ward even in this life.

A Child was Rescued by a Horse fro watery grave recently in France. A Europ newspaper relates a remarkable instance of affection of animals toward those who are k to them. A farmer in one of the southern partments of France had a rough shaggy ho whom no one about the place liked on acco of its stubborn ways and uncertain, intract temper. The farmer would have got rid of brute but for the fondness his little son, a c six years old, had for it. The child could any thing with the horse, and would feed fondle it like a pet. The horse apparently ciprocated the child's affection, and would c like a dog at his call. One day lately the were away at their work and the mother attending to some domestic duty, when the ch playing in the garden, fell into a deep pond would have been drowned had not his f footed friend, loose in the stall, heard the fam voice cry out in fright, and going to the edg the pond, drew him out by his garments.

An Elephant Detective.—In India each phant is attended by a keeper, who has to it its food. A gentleman suspected that on his elephants did not get his due quantity of and one day he charged a keeper with stea the rice which he should have given to the phant. The man began to deny the charge, was declaring his innocence in the most sol way, when the animal, which was standing raised its trunk, lifted the man's turban his head, and shook it, when out fell a quanti rice! The thief, thus convicted, at once down and confessed his crime. He was of co punished, and the elephant always afterw got his proper amount of food. The keeper ably thought that as the dumb animal he wro was the only witness of his crime he woul cape detection, and was doubtless much surp at the decisive proof so unexpectedly furnis A day will come when many crimes the perp tors imagine to be absolutely and finally con ed will be disclosed and a just punishmen flicted.

The New Bishop of Jerusalem Appointe Queen Victoria has arrived in his diocese met with a hearty reception. The party Ramelah at sunrise, says a corresponden east wind prevailing as piercing as any o Norfolk coast in March. After lunche Kirjath-jearim they arrived at Colonia, w they met with warm greetings, the valley crowded with people from Jerusalem. A body of mounted soldiers escorted them Jerusalem, and every community in the City sent a representative.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

ingle Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, APRIL 8, 1880. 14th Year. No. 15—New Series.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

PRTRAIT AND LIFE OF WALTER VENNING, e Prison Philanthropist, with Views of striking ncidents in his History.

TE TEMPEST HUSHED: A New Sermon by Dr. almage—Martha, the Clergyman's Housekeeper.

ANOLD PERCIVAL MONTAIGNE. A Thrilling rial Story by the Author of "Felicia Cuffe."

WHAT COMING WARS MAY WE EXPECT? by Rev. M. Baxter (Continued).

CURRENT EVENTS: The Marshals' Bill Passed—Indian Investigation—Edison's Gold Discovery—A Present from a King—The Virginia Judge and the Ducks—Playing like a Christian, etc.

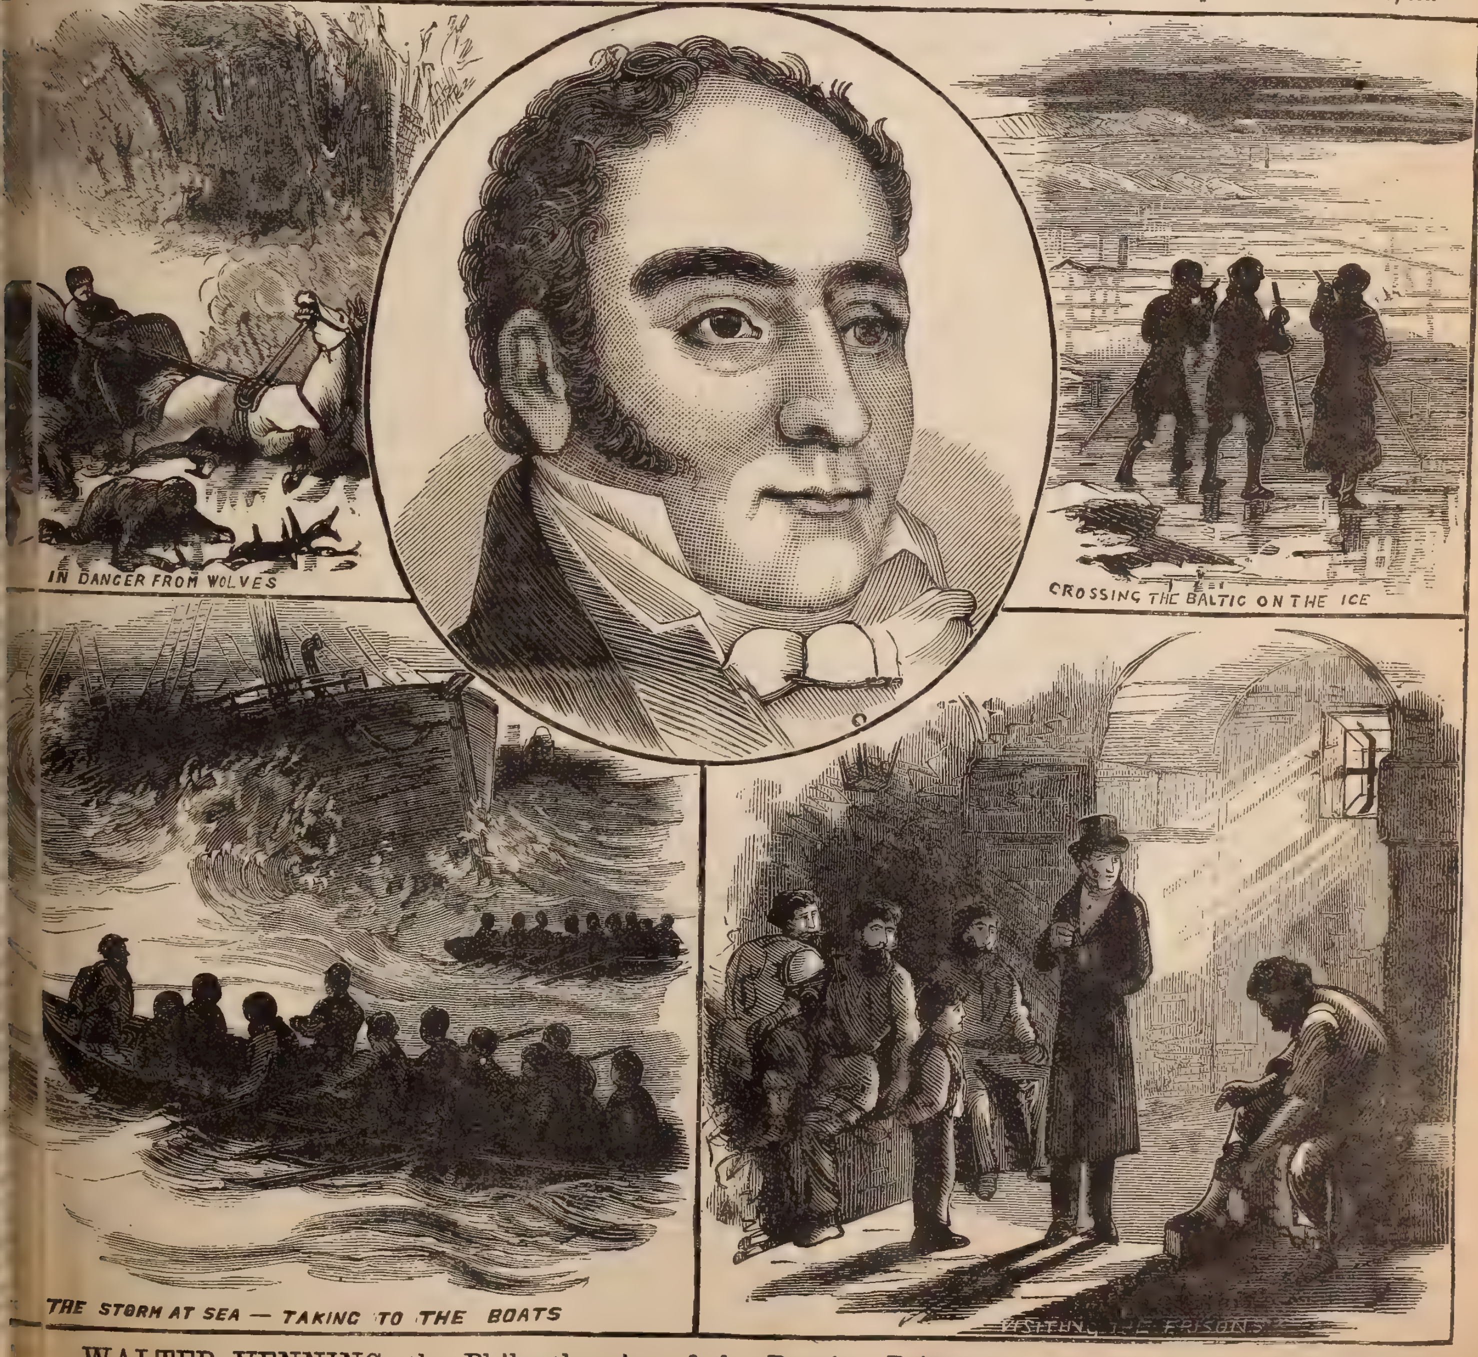
THE BLOOD OF THE PASSOVER; A Sermon by Rev. W. M. Punshon, LL.D. (Concluded).

A PLAIN ANSWER TO AN IMPORTANT INQUIRY: A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH (Continued).

THE WHEAT AND THE TARES; S. S. Lesson by Mrs. M. Baxter—The Cruelties of Hospitality.

FOREIGN TOPICS—Victory of English Liberals—Mr. Parnell Roughly Handled in Ireland—Thousands of Weddings in One Day—Fate of an Actress, etc.



IN DANGER FROM WOLVES

CROSSING THE BALTIC ON THE ICE

THE STORM AT SEA — TAKING TO THE BOATS

VISITING THE PRISONS

WALTER VENNING, the Philanthropist of the Russian Prisons, and Scenes in his Life.

WALTER VENNING,

The Russian Prison Philanthropist.

Early Days—Commercial Training—Starts for St. Petersburg—Reverence for the Lord's Day—Perilous Journey on the Ice—Religious Experience—His Father's Happy Death—An Earnest Prayer—Joins Dr. Winter's Church—Chooses a Sphere of Usefulness—"Prison Discipline Society"—A Contrite Culprit—Friends at Court—Visits Moscow—Distinguished Associates—Saving an English Girl—A Wreck—An Attack of Fever—"Asleep in Jesus"—Eulogy of a Prince—Monument.

WALTER VENNING, the subject of our portrait this week, was born at Totnes, Devonshire, England, on the 15th of November, 1781. In that salubrious and beautiful neighborhood he spent his early days, under the tender care and vigilant superintendence of his pious parents, whose devoted attachment to their youngest son Walter made them ever solicitous to train him up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

His father was engaged in commercial pursuits, and young Walter was carefully educated with a view to the same honorable employment. Before he had attained his sixteenth year he embarked on the ocean of commerce with the fairest prospects, and, removing to London, remained with his elder brother, William, for two years; but with a noble intrepidity, and stimulated by a spirit of legitimate enterprise, he resolved to quit his native shores to augment his fortunes, and starting for St. Petersburg, joined his brother John, who had a large mercantile establishment in that city. Here he remained for a considerable time, and uniformly acted with candor and integrity.

On his arrival in this splendid northern capital he would not join his youthful associates in their jovial festivities on the Lord's day, nor did he ever shake off what is profanely called "the prejudices of education," so as to run the same length of vice which many of his companions did. His principal restraint employed by God's grace was his memory. With the rapidity of lightning and the force of an electric shock memory presented to his mind the holy example and valuable religious instruction of his beloved father. This operated as a constant and powerful check upon him, and by the grace of God the impetuosity of youthful passions was effectually curbed.

CROSSING THE GULF OF FINLAND ON THE ICE.

In October, 1807, he proposed to visit his native country, but the severity of an early winter delayed the execution of his purpose. With his natural ardor, however, and quickened by the desire of reaching England that winter, he hired two men to accompany him in an attempt to cross the gulf on the ice, though it was nearly seven English miles direct to Cronstadt.

In commencing this enterprise they had first to traverse a pathless wood for about two miles before they reached the sea-shore. On their arrival they found the ice was scarcely strong enough to bear their weight. Hoping, however, that it would increase in thickness as they advanced from the shore, they proceeded, as represented in our picture, trying every step with poles, which often penetrated through the slightly formed ice, and betrayed how near they were to a frozen tomb.

As they approached the current of the River Neva they found the water scarcely congealed; to advance in that line was impossible, to return was extremely perilous; and therefore they resolved to prosecute their course by a circuit higher up the gulf. Here they found their path more firm, yet so slippery that they were thrown down every few yards of their progress, which rendered their situation more hazardous, as every fall endangered the breakage of the ice, which would at once have plunged them into the water and entailed certain death.

But the God of his fathers still watched over him, and though cold, bruised, and exhausted, yet he arrived at Cronstadt before nightfall, in perfect safety, to the utter astonishment of his friends who heard of his adventure. From thence he obtained a passage in a small and crazy vessel down the Baltic, amid all the rigorous terrors of a northern winter, and at length arrived safely in England.

HIS CONVERSION IN 1810.

Soon after his arrival at home he became deeply convinced of the necessity of a personal interest in the Divine favor. Hitherto he had been a stranger to those cheering and animating prospects which arise from a participation of the mercy of God, through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Like the ancient inhabitants of Ephesus, he had been living "without hope and without God." Often had he felt the unsatisfying nature of worldly pleasures; their sapless, momentary, evanescent joys could never fill his soul; but happily for him he had returned to the midst of dear Christian friends, who could direct him to the unfailing source of permanent and unutterable bliss.

About this time also his venerable father died, and the sacred tranquillity, the joyful hope, and delightful prospects which he experienced on his dying bed greatly strenghtened Walter's desires after that felicity which flows alone from genuine religion. The dying saint gave valuable testimony to the worth of an unchanging Saviour, and the moment before he closed his eyes in death he exclaimed, "There is light"—the radiance of immortality breaking in upon his happy soul.

These particulars deeply affected the susceptible heart of Mr. Venning. He read and studied the Scriptures with real solicitude. He sought after truth as a man in earnest, and the Father of mercies did not let him seek in vain.

One Lord's day evening, in December, 1810, he was reading the third sermon of Dr. Doddridge, on "Regeneration," when, to use his own language, "I felt my mind overpowered with delight, so that tears of joy ran down my cheeks. I immediately fell on my knees, and never prayed more earnestly than in repeating, 'Lord, take me by the hand!' I never experienced any thing equal to the exquisite delight which I then felt.

HIS ACTIVITY AS A MEMBER OF DR. WINTER'S.

In the beginning of 1811 he was called to Dartmouth, Devon, to attend the funeral of his mother, and during the visit he became acquainted with the Rev. T. Stenner, the official successor of the venerated John Flavel. Mr. Stenner having obtained his confidence, he informed him of his religious experience, and of his wish to join the church at New Court, Carey Street, London, then presided over by the well-known Rev. Dr. Winter. Having been duly proposed as a candidate for fellowship, on the 6th of September, 1811, he became a member of the church.

Several spheres of useful labor were suggested to Mr. Venning by Dr. Winter, and he chose for his department to visit the abodes of sickness and administer relief and comfort to the afflicted and dying. By this means his ear became familiar with the tale of woe; his tenderness and compassion increased, and his visits of mercy were unremitting. The habit of praying and conversing with the poor, the sick, and the dying became the means of strengthening and employing his mind, and no doubt laid the basis of those more extensive exertions of disinterested benevolence which principally characterized the latter years of his life.

In the year 1816 "The Society for the Improvement of Prison Discipline" was formed, and at once enlisted his sympathy. The promoters of this society were men of kindred spirit with himself, and he entered so warmly into their plans that much of his time was spent in visiting the prisons of London, endeavoring to impart religious knowledge to those who were confined in them. A singularly happy instance of the success of his labors greatly encouraged him, of which the following is the substance:

When visiting Coldbath Fields Prison, London, he saw amid the culprits a fine lad of engaging manners and prepossessing countenance. He inquired particularly into his case, and found that he was imprisoned for the first offence. Anxious to snatch this juvenile offender from the jaws of ruin, he gave him much patien struction, watching his conduct and looking marks of contrition. In this he happily succ ed, and the lad was subsequently placed wi tradesman, whom he faithfully served, and Venning felt amply repaid for all the toils he dured in the service of humanity.

This circumstance operated on Mr. Venni mind in the most powerful manner, and so couraged him that when he was once inviti young gentleman to engage in the same mer labors, he said to him, "Only succeed in recl ing one offender and it will make you a p man forever."

HIS PRISON MISSION WORK IN ST. PETERSB

The works of benevolence which now occu the attention of Mr. Venning called forth energies of his character in a manner at on delightful and unexpected that his friends convinced that God was training him for very extended sphere of usefulness. W therefore, they knew that he proposed to St. Petersburg with a view to promote the anthropic plans of the Prison Society, the joiced in the contemplation of the field of C tian labor which was open to him.

The ship in which he embarked left Grave on May 18th, 1817. A pleasant voyage of teen days brought him to Elsinore, a pc which it was customary for vessels to stay t they entered the Baltic. Mr. Venning av himself of the delay to visit Copenhagen, the prison, and thus to commence in the c of Denmark his mission of humanity t north.

A short passage of seven days brought th to St. Petersburg. This was Mr. Venn fourth visit to the Russian metropolis, an years had elapsed since his last departure. only intended a short visit now, but variou cumstances conspired to protract it. One r was, the cordial reception he met with; an the greatly improved state of religious soci the city; a third, the enlarged opening whi saw for all plans of promoting religion th the exertions of the Bible Society; and f the opportunity for his favorite employm visiting the prisons.

Mr. Venning's intelligence and piety m out at once the course he was determin prosecute. He was resolved not to act the lating part of a religious borderer, or to d that debatable land which affords a sa tory abode to many professors of religion withdrew from the ordinary round of g society, and attached himself only to thos like himself, were making "the glory of the chief end of their existence. He wa introduced to several individuals of sp rank and eminent piety in the Court Petersburg, who were anxious to employ talents and their influence for the amelic of human wretchedness.

Having secured the friendship of Prince ander Galitzin, he obtained through him p sion from the Emperor Alexander "to vi Russian prisons at all times," on the cor that he should draw up a report of their s be laid before his Imperial Majesty. He a Prince Galitzin that he should think of n else but prisons; and, consequently, he n declined all commercial business, but a absented himself from the Exchange should be in any way interrupted in his b lent operations.

The abodes of misery of every name Petersburg were now visited by him da day, and many a prisoner, bowed dow affliction and iron, was cheered, instructe saved by his ministration. In January, 1 wrote thus to his sisters: "All my attenti time have been taken up since my arr visiting the prisons, houses of correction houses, hospitals, mad-houses, etc., and just completed my inspection of them, an forwarded the report of my observations to Galitzin, who will lay it before his I Majesty, with a memorial pointing out t ture of prison discipline upon the improve h, with the blessing of that glorious Being hears the groaning of the prisoner and s up the broken-hearted, will, I trust, be uctive of much good."

HIS VISIT TO THE MOSCOW PRISONS.

he Imperial Court removing to Moscow, and ce Galitzin inviting Mr. Venning thither to re the prisons of that city, he rejoiced at so able an opportunity, and in the middle of a ous winter set off, on the 11th of February, He thought nothing of the fatigue of a ey of 520 miles, when he knew that he t obtain additional opportunities of promot- g is philanthropic schemes and securing the of his fellow-creatures.

ring this journey to Moscow an accident red which, but for the interposition of the e hand, might have had a fatal termination. darkness of night coming on before the final of the day's distance was covered, and the road through the forest being longer was anticipated, the travelling party were red by hearing amid the death-like still-same, and the occupants were in danger the predatory and voracious creatures. ever, through the kind providence of an atchful Father, though some of the party uch bruised and all were greatly terrified, was sacrificed.

H DEEP BAYING OF HUNGRY WOLVES, AND THE CARRIAGE WAS OVERTURNED

is city he was honored by an interview with incess Mestchersky, who entered decided- his views, and translated his Memorial Russ. This distinguished lady accom- him in his first visit to the Moscow pris- ; nd so fully were her Christian sympathies orth by the scenes she witnessed that, on nation of the Female Association for Visit- isons in St. Petersburg, she left the mag- e and luxury of the Taurida Palace for the n prison, every day, to read portions of iptures to the female convicts, and to them with work and instruction.

Venning not only visited the prisons, hos- workhouses, and mad-houses of Moscow, o those of Novgorod and Tver. The metropolis, Novgorod, exhibits a most ing object in the cathedral of St. Sophia, ontains pictures painted before the arts ted Italy, and which were most probably from Greece, while the situation of on the lofty banks of the Volga, is very nd imposing. These, however, had no r Mr. Venning. Writing to his sisters return from Moscow, he says: "When u that my sole object was to visit prisons not expect from me airy descriptions of d and Tver."

g other distinguished ladies who united es into a society to promote the benevo- hemes of Mr. Venning was Mrs. Kaza- the widow of the late Minister of State nterior, who was appointed President of s' committee. Mr. Venning, at her own equest, accompanied her in her first visit risons, and very affecting scenes took ween this lady and the female prisoners. them, with tears, that she came to do od. They were astonished, and after and affectionate converse with them, ade them weep, she supplied them with for work. Some whose offences were re recommended to mercy, and her Ex- ent them all a good dinner the next day own kitchen.

nning's benevolence was not absorbed pless criminals he visited. His papers at he constantly had a great variety of distress to relieve which were not be- ublic eye. One day he was found re- an unhappy English girl, who was rom her country and robbed of her vir- heartless betrayer, who left her impover- deserted to die in a foreign land; but ely aids she was delivered and brought t of the Saviour. Another day he was llecting money among his friends for a poor but very respectable widow and her orphan children, for whom he obtained that assistance which saved her from a prison and the children from want.

In August, 1820, he contemplated a visit to Denmark and England, with a view to enlarge his sphere of usefulness; but the Prince of the kings of the earth, who fixes "the bounds of our habitation" and has "a set time for man on the earth," had determined that his career of benevolence should shortly close.

He sailed from Cronstadt, on the 9th of August, in the George, an American vessel, bound to Copenhagen. After having been three days at sea the tempestuous weather drove them upon a reef of rocks in the Gulf of Finland, not one hundred miles from the port which they had left. Here the ship was immovably fixed for fifteen long hours, and during a dark night they were in fearful expectation of being engulfed by the angry waves which beat against them. Part of a valuable cargo was cast into the deep, and at length the captain told Mr. Venning he must abandon the vessel to the destruction which was now inevitable. Mr. Venning encouraged him, and

THEY TOOK TO THE BOATS.

They saw vessels pass, yet they were not discovered; but at length they were seen and rescued from their perilous situation.

On his return to Cronstadt he was congratulated by the officers of the guard frigate upon his having received what, in the idiom of their country, they call "a new life." But he was attacked with serious illness before he could leave that place, doubtless the result of his fatigue, and exposure, and was reduced to such a state of weakness by fever as to prevent his walking. At length he was able to go to his brother's country house, where he was favored with the Christian sympathies of his friend Prince Galitzin.

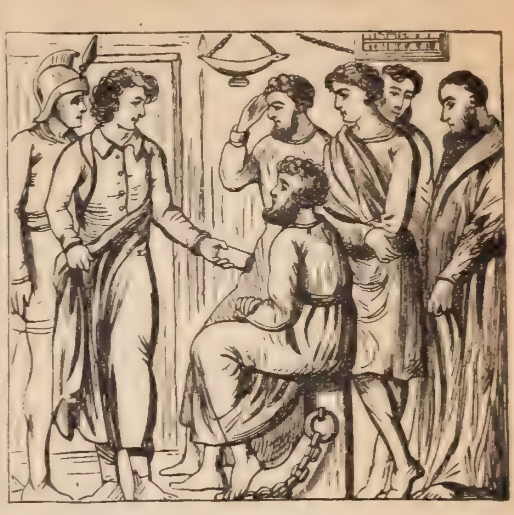
Nothing dismayed by the perils of the sea, he again took passage for Copenhagen, in the ship Alexander, and though his continued indisposition again disappointed, it did not destroy the purpose, the execution of which he felt was uncertain and which he never accomplished.

While he was yet in a delicate state of health he went as usual to the prison. At this time there was a prisoner dangerously ill of typhus fever. Both Mr. Venning and a friend of his who accompanied him received the infection. Mr. Venning's attack assumed the usual symptoms of a cold, and made insidious progress, which for seven days alarmed neither the physician nor himself, till at length decided symptoms of typhus appeared, which continued, with some delusive intervals, for seven days more, when the attack of

TYPHUS FEVER ENDED IN HIS DEATH.

It was on Monday, January 10th, 1821, when the doctor, with Mr. John Venning, entering the room with some other Christian friends, they found him apparently insensible. They, however, kneeled around his bed in prayer, and commended his departing spirit to Jesus, and it took its happy flight to heaven during the same night, in the fortieth year of his age.

A few days after his funeral the annual meeting of the Prison Society was held, when his bereaved friend, Prince Galitzin, pronounced a eulogium which proved alike the affection of the friend and the piety of the Christian. It closed with a proposal to erect a public monument to his memory. "Not splendor, nor vain show, nor empty eulogy," said the Prince, "ought to constitute the symbols of this monument, but a smplicity which shall speak to the heart and excite to pious reflections. While Russia has to show near one frontier the ashes of his countryman, who marked the first traces of amelioration in the condition of prisoners and of the sick and suffering, ler her also show another monument of a second Howard—here, a worthy follower and emulator of the good deeds of the first. The Lord blesseth His work when He bestows the instruments of His grace on earth; the Lord has accomplished His work when He taketh them to Himself in heaven."



FAC-SIMILE OF THE BAS-RELIEF ON THE MONUMENT IN ST. PETERSBURG TO WALTER VENNING, the PHILANTHROPIST.

This has been accomplished. The monument is a square tomb, as shown above, surmounted after the Russian taste, with an irradiated cross. A bas-relief, representing Mr. Venning entering a prison, with a Bible in his hand, occupies the front side, beneath which are inscribed, in Russian and English, the appropriate words, "I WAS SICK AND YE VISITED ME; I WAS IN PRISON AND YE CAME UNTO ME"; and also Revelation 14:13.

On the reverse side is placed an inscription in Russian, of which the following is a translation: "The Society of St. Petersburg for the Improvement of Prisons have raised this monument to the memory of their beloved fellow-laborer, Walter Venning, the countryman of Howard, and founder of the prison institutions of this country. He was born in November, 1781, and died in the Lord Jesus Christ on the 10th of January, 1821."

Thus is the memory of the philanthropist honored by those who witnessed his self-denying labors. But his reward is in heaven and in the witness he had that he pleased God. That reward is more enduring than granite, and it is given to many whom the world knows nothing of, or knowing them, despises as fools and fanatics.

The Fowl's Feathers and Slander.—One Day a lady presented herself to Father Philip Neri, accusing herself of being a slanderer. "Do you frequently fall into this fault?" inquired he. "Yes, father, very often," replied the penitent. "My dear child," said Philip, "your fault is great, but the mercy of God is still greater; for your penance do as follows: Go to the nearest market and purchase a chicken, just killed, and still covered with feathers; then walk a certain distance, plucking the bird as you go along. Your walk finished, return to me." Accordingly, she repaired to the market, bought the fowl, and set out on the journey, plucking it as she went along. In a short time she returned, anxious to tell of her exactness in accomplishing her penance, and desiring to receive some explanation of one so singular. "Ah," said Philip, "you have been very faithful to the first part of my orders; now do the second part and you will be cured. Retrace your steps, pass through all the places you have traversed, and gather up one by one all the feathers that you have scattered." "But, father," exclaimed the poor woman, "I cast the feathers carelessly on every side; the wind carried them in every direction. How can I recover them?" "Well, my child," replied he, "so it is with your words of slander: like the feathers which the wind has scattered, they have been wafted in many directions; call them back now if you can. Go, sin no more."

THE TEMPEST HUSHED.

A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage, preached on Sunday Evening, March 21st, 1880;* and specially reported for the Christian Herald.

"And there were also with Him other little ships, and there arose a great storm of wind. And the wind. ceased and there was a great calm."—MARK 4 : 36-39

A Scene of Beauty—The Embarkation—Jesus Asleep in the Ship—The Storm Rises—Calmed at the Word of the Lord—I. It is Important to have Christ in the Ship—Commercial Enterprise—Financial Storms—II. Voyaging with Christ not always Smooth Sailing—The Christian Martyrs—Suffering for Christ now—III. Good People often Alarmed—Afraid the Church will Founder—Afraid of Revivals—A Foolish Captain—A Minister Sent for to Stop a Revival—His Impressive Illustration—IV. Christ's Divinity and Humanity—V. Christ can Hush all Storms.

TIBERIAS, Galilee, Gennesaret—three names for the same lake. No other gem ever had so beautiful a setting. It lay in a scene of great luxuriance: the surrounding hills high, terraced, sloped, groved, so many hanging gardens of beauty; the waters rumbling down between rocks of gray and red limestone, flashing from the hills, and bounding into the sea. On the shore were castles, armed towers, Roman baths, every thing attractive and beautiful; all styles of vegetation in shorter space than in almost any other space in all the world, from the palm-tree of the forest to the trees of a rigorous climate.

It seemed as if the Lord had launched one wave of beauty on all the scene, and it hung and swung from rock and hill and oleander. Roman gentlemen in pleasure boats sailing the lake, and countrymen in fish-smacks coming down to drop their nets, pass each other with nod and shout and laughter, or swinging idly at their moorings. Oh, what a wonderful, what a beautiful lake!

It seems as if we shall have a quiet night. Not a leaf winked in the air; not a ripple disturbed the face of Gennesaret; but there seems to be a little excitement up the beach, and we hasten to see what it is, and we find it

AN EMBARKATION.

From the western shore a flotilla pushing out: not a squadron, or deadly armament, nor clipper with valuable merchandise, nor piratic vessels ready to destroy every thing they could seize; but a flotilla, bearing messengers of life, and light, and peace. Christ is in the front of the boat. His disciples are in a smaller boat. Jesus, weary with much speaking to large multitudes, is put into somnolence by the rocking of the waves. If there was any motion at all, the ship was easily righted; if the wind passed from one side of the starboard to the larboard, or from the larboard to the starboard, the boat would rock, and by the gentleness of the motion putting the Master asleep. And they extemporized a pillow made out of a fisherman's coat. I think no sooner is Christ prostrate, and His head touched the pillow, than He is sound asleep. The breezes of the lake run their fingers through the locks of the worn sleeper, and the boat rises and falls like a sleeping child on the bosom of a sleeping mother.

Calm night, starry night, beautiful night. Run up all the sails, ply all the oars, and let the large boat and the small boat glide over gentle Gennesaret. But the sailors say there is going to be a change of weather. And even the passengers can hear the moaning of the storm, as it comes on with ready stride, with all the terrors of hurricane and darkness. The large boat trembles like a deer at bay trembling among the clangor of the hounds; great patches of foam are flung into the air; the sails of the vessels loosen, and the sharp winds crack like pistols; the smaller boats like petrels poise on the cliff of the waves and then plunge.

The bell struck two, as with thunder-crash; and overboard go cargo, tackling, and masts, and the drenched disciples rush into the back part of the boat, and lay hold of Christ, and say unto Him: "Master, carest Thou not that we perish?" That great personage lifts His head from the pillow of the fisherman's coat, walks to the front of the vessel, and looks out into the storm. All around Him are the smaller boats, driven in the tempest, and through it comes the cry of drowning men. By the flash of the lightning I see the calm brow of Christ as the spray dropped from His beard. He has one word for the sky, and another word for the waves. Looking upward He cries, "Peace!" Looking downward He says, "Be still."

The waves fall flat on their faces, the foam melts, the extinguished stars re-light their torches. The tempest falls dead, and Christ stands with His foot on the neck of the storm. And while the sailors are bailing out the boats, and while they are trying to untangle the cordage, the disciples stand in amazement, now looking into the calm sea, then into the calm sky, then into the calm of the Saviour's countenance, and they cry out: "What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey Him?"

I. The subject in the first place impresses me with the fact that it is very important to have

CHRIST IN THE SHIP;

for all those boats would have gone to the bottom of Gennesaret if Christ had not been present. Oh, what a lesson for you and for me to learn! We must always have Christ in the ship. Whatever voyage we undertake, into whatever enterprise we start, let us always have Christ in the ship. Many of you in these days of revived commerce are starting out in new financial enterprises. I bid you good cheer. Do all you can do. Do it on as high a plane as possible. You have no right to be a stoker in the ship if you can be an admiral of the navy. You have no right to be a colonel of a regiment if you can command a battalion; you have no right to be engineer of a boat on river-banks, or near the coast, if you can take the ocean steamer from New York to Liverpool. All you can do with utmost tension of body, mind, and soul, you are bound to do; but oh! have Christ in every enterprise, Christ in every voyage, Christ in every ship.

There are men here who ask God to help them at the start of great enterprises. He has been with them in the past; no trouble can overthrow them; the storms might come down from the top of Mount Hermon, and lash Gennesaret into foam and into agony, but it could not hurt them.

But here is another man who starts out in worldly enterprise, and he depends upon the uncertainties of this life. He has no God to help him. After a while the storm comes, and tosses off the masts of the ship; he puts out his life-boat, and the long-boat; the sheriff and the auctioneer try to help him off; they can't help him off: he must go down: no Christ in the ship. Here are young men just starting out in life. Your life will be made up of sunshine and shadow. There may be in it arctic blasts, or tropical tornadoes; I know not what is before you, but I know if you have Christ with you all shall be well.

You may seem to get along without the religion of Christ while everything goes smoothly, but after a while, when sorrow hovers over the soul, when the waves of trial dash forward midship, when by one turn of the wheel you are hurled backward, and the bowsprit is shivered, and the halliards are swept into the sea, and the gangway is crowded with piratical disasters—oh, what would you do then without Christ in the ship? Young man, take God for your portion, God for your guide, God for your help; then all is well; all is well for time, all shall be well forever. Blessed is that man who puts in the Lord his trust. He shall never be confounded.

II. But my subject also impresses me with the fact that when people start to follow Christ

THEY MUST NOT EXPECT SMOOTH SAILING.

These disciples got into the small boats, and I have no doubt they said, "What a beautifu this is! What a smooth sea! What a b sky this is! How delightful is sailing in this b and as for the waves under the keel of the why, they only make the motion of our boat the more delightful." But when the w swept down, and the sea was tossed into w then they found that following Christ was smooth sailing. So you have found it; have found it. Did you ever notice the e
the life of the apostles of Jesus Christ?
would say that if ever men ought to have smooth life, a smooth departure, then those the disciples of Jesus Christ, ought to have such a departure and such a life.

St. James lost his head. St. Philip was to death on a pillar. St. Matthew had hi dashed out with a halbert. St. Mark dragged to death through the streets.
James the Less was beaten to death wi fuller's club. St. Thomas was struck thr with a spear. They did not find following smooth sailing. Oh, how they were all in the tempest! John Huss in the fire; McKail in the hour of martyrdom; the genses, the Waldenses, the Scotch Covena —did they find it smooth sailing.

But why go to history when I can into this audience to-night and find a sc illustrations of the truth of this subject.
young man in the store trying to serve while his employer scoffs at Christianity young men in the same store antagonistic Christian religion, teasing him, tormentin about his religion, trying to get him mad.
succeed in getting him mad, saying, "Yo pretty Christian." Does this young man smooth sailing when he tries to follow C Here is a Christian girl. Her father de the Christian religion; her mother despis Christian religion; her brothers and sister at the Christian religion; she can hardly quiet place in which to say her prayers.
she find it smooth sailing when she tried low Jesus Christ? Oh, no; all who woul
the life of the Christian religion must suff secution; if you do not find it in one wa will get it in another way.

The question was asked, "Who are thos est the throne?" and the answer came "These are they who came up out of great lation;—great flailing, as the original h great flailing, great pounding—" and ha robes washed and made white in the bl the Lamb." Oh, do not be disheartene child of God! take courage. You are in ous companionship. God will see you th all these trials, and He will deliver you.

III. My subject also impresses me wi fact that

GOOD PEOPLE SOMETIMES GET VERY M FRIGHTENED.

In the tones of these disciples as they into the back part of the boat, I find t frightened almost to death. They say: " carest thou not that we perish?" They reason to be frightened, for Christ was boat. I suppose if we had been there we have been just as much affrightened. F more.

In all ages very good people get very affrightened. It is often so in our day, a say, "Why, look at the bad lectures; l the Spiritualistic societies; look at the errors going over the Church of God:
going to founder; the Church is going to she is going to go down." Oh, how man people are affrightened by unbelieving ini our day, and think the Church of Jesu and the cause of righteousness is goin overthrown, and are just as much affrig as the disciples of my text were affrig Don't worry, don't fret, as though iniqui going to triumph over righteousness.

A lion goes into a cavern to sleep.
down, with his shaggy mane covering th
Meanwhile the spiders spin a web acr mouth of the cavern, and say, "We have c him." Gossamer thread after gossamer

---

* Dr. Talmage did not preach at the Tabernacle last Sunday, we therefore publish to-day a Sermon delivered on a previous Sunday evening spun until the whole front of the cavern is covered with the spiders' web, and the spiders say, "The lion is done; the lion is done." After a while the lion has got through sleeping; he rouses himself, he shakes his mane, he walks out into the sunlight; he does not even know the spiders' web is spun, and with his voice he shakes the mountain.

So men come, spinning their sophistries and skepticism about Jesus Christ; He seems to be sleeping. They say, "We have captured the Lord; He will never come forth again upon the nation; Christ is captured, and captured forever. His religion will never make any conquest among men." But after a while the Lion of the tribe of Judah will rouse Himself and come forth to shake mightily the nations. What's a spider's web to the aroused lion? Give truth and error a fair grapple, and truth will come off victor.

But there are a great many good people who get affrightened in other respects; they are affrightened in our day about revivals. They say, "Oh! this is a strong religious gale; we are afraid the Church of God is going to upset, and there are going to be a great many people brought into the Church that are going to be of no use to it;" and they are affrightened whenever they see a revival taking hold of the churches.

As though a ship captain with five thousand bushels of wheat for a cargo should say, some day coming upon deck, "Throw overboard all the cargo;" and the sailors should say, "Why, captain, what do you mean? Throw over all the cargo?" "Oh," says the captain, "we have a peck of chaff that has got into this five thousand bushels of wheat, and the only way to get rid of the chaff is to throw all the wheat overboard." Now that is a great deal wiser than the talk of a great many Christians who want to throw overboard all the thousands and tens of thousands of souls who seem to be tending that way. Throw all overboard because they are brought into the kingdom of God through great revivals, because there is a peck of chaff, a quart of chaff, a pint of chaff! I say, let them stay until the last day; the Lord will divide the chaff from the wheat.

Do not be afraid of a great revival. Oh, I wish they would sweep through our cities to-morrow morning at eleven o'clock. The Lord willing, I will preach in Philadelphia in a great revival started under the ministry of one of our Lay College boys, a young man, who, three years ago, went out from here preaching the Gospel of Christ to twelve hundred souls. That is to be the celebration to-morrow at eleven o'clock—twelve hundred souls brought into the kingdom in this one church through his ministry. O that these gales from heaven might sweep through all our churches! Oh, for such days as Richard Baxter saw in England and Robert McCheyne saw in Dundee! Oh, for such days as Jonathan Edwards saw in Northampton! I have often heard my father tell of the fact that in the early part of this century a revival broke out at Somerville, N. J., and some people were very much agitated about it. They said, "Oh, you are going to bring too many people into the church at once;" and they sent down to New Brunswick to get John Livingston

TO STOP THE REVIVAL.

Well, there was no better soul in all the world than John Livingston. He went up; he looked at the revival; they wanted him to stop it. He stood in the pulpit on the Sabbath, and looked over the solemn auditory, and he said: "This, brethren, is in reality the work of God; beware how you try to stop it." And he was an old man, leaning heavily on his staff—a very old man. And he lifted that staff, and took hold of the small end of the staff, and began to let it fall very slowly through, between the finger and the thumb, and he said: "Oh, thou impenitent, thou art falling now—falling away from life, falling away from peace and heaven, falling as certainly as that cane is falling through my hand—falling certainly, though perhaps falling very slowly." And the cane kept on falling through John Livingston's hand. The religious emotion in the audience was overpowering, and men saw a type of their doom as the cane kept falling and falling until the knob of the cane struck Mr. Livingston's hand, and he clasped it stoutly and said, "But the grace of God can stop you, as I stopped that cane;" and then there was gladness all through the house at the fact of pardon and peace and salvation. "Well," said the people after the service, "I guess you had better send Livingston home; he is making the revival worse." Oh, for the gales from heaven, and Christ on board the ship. The danger of the Church of God is not in revivals.

IV. Again my subject impresses me with the fact that Jesus was God and man in the same being. Here He is in the back part of the boat. Oh, how tired He looks, what sad dreams He must have! Look at His countenance; He must be thinking of the cross to come. Look at Him, He is a man—bone of our bone, flesh of our flesh. Tired, He falls asleep; He is a man. But then I find Christ at the prow of the boat: I hear Him say, "Peace, be still;" and I see the storm kneeling at His feet, and the tempests folding their wings in His presence; He is a God.

If I have sorrow and trouble, and want sympathy, I go and kneel down at the back part of the boat, and say, "O, Christ! weary one of Gennesaret, sympathize with all my sorrows, man of Nazareth, man of the cross." A man, a man. But if I want to conquer my spiritual foes, if I want to get the victory over sin, death, and hell, I come to the front of the boat, and I kneel down, and I say, "O Lord Jesus Christ, Thou who dost hush the tempest, hush all my grief; hush all my temptation, hush all my sin." A man, a man; a God, a God.

V. I learn once more from this subject that CHRIST CAN HUSH A TEMPEST.

It did seem as if everything must go to ruin. The disciples had given up the idea of managing the ship; the crew were entirely demoralized, yet Christ rises, and He puts His foot on the storm, and it crouches at His feet. Oh, yes! Christ can hush the tempest.

You have had trouble. Perhaps it was the little child taken away from you—the sweetest child of the household, the one who asked the most curious questions, and stood around you with the greatest fondness, and the spade cut down through your bleeding heart. Perhaps it was an only son, and your heart has ever since been like a desolated castle, the owls of the night hooting among the falling rafters and the crumbling stairways.

Perhaps it was an aged mother. You always went to her with your troubles. She was in your home to welcome your children into life, and when they died she was there to pity you; that old hand will do you no more kindness; that white lock of hair you put away in the casket, or in the locket, didn't look as well as it usually did when she brushed it away from her wrinkled brow in the home circle or in the country church. Or your property gone, you said, "I have so much bank stock, I have so many government securities, I have so many houses, I have so many farms"—all gone, all gone.

Why, sir, all the storms that ever trampled their thunders, all the shipwrecks, have not been worse than this to you. Yet you have not been completely overthrown. Why? Christ hushed the tempest. Your little one was taken away. Christ says, "I have that little one; I have captured him. I can care for him as well as you can, better than you can, O bereaved mother!" Hushing the tempest. When your property went away, God said, "There are treasures in heaven, in banks that never break." So you will find Jesus hushing the tempest.

There is one storm into which we will all have to run, the moment when we let go of this life, and try to take hold of the next, when we will want all the grace we can have—we will want it all. Yonder I see a Christian soul rocking on the surges of death: all the powers of darkness seem let out against that soul—the swirling wave, the thunder of the sky, the screaming wind, all seem to unite together; but that soul is not troubled; there is no sighing, there are no tears; plenty of tears in the room at the departure, but he weeps no tears, calm, satisfied, peaceful; all is well.

Jesus hushing the tempest. "By the flash of the storm you see the harbor just ahead, and you are making for that harbor. All shall be well, all shall be well. Hushing the tempest. Hushing the tempest. Strike eight bells. All is well.

"Into the harbor of heaven now we glide;
We're home at last, home at last.
Softly we drift on its bright, silv'ry tide,
We're home at last, home at last.
Glory to God, all our dangers are o'er,
We stand secure on the glorified shore;
Glory to God, we will shout evermore,
We're home at last, home at last."

THE DOOR IN THE WALL AND HIDDEN TREASURE.

In the city of Lyons, in France, was a poor and childless widow, into whose desolate garret Want had entered as an armed man. She was not entirely without some feeling of dependence upon the God of the fatherless and the widow, but she was a misguided Romanist, and knew much more about saints and guardian angels than of Jesus Christ and what He has done for us.

One day, as she was sitting alone in her comfortless, half-empty room, it struck her that there was a singular outline on the beams of the wall. The walls had been whitewashed, but she thought it looked as if there had been a square opening in one of them which had been carefully closed with a kind of door. She examined it more closely, and the thought occurred to her, "Perhaps there is some treasure hidden there," for she remembered, as a child, the fearful days of the Revolution, when no property was safe from the men of "liberty and equality." Perhaps some rich man had concealed his treasure there from their rapacity, who had himself fallen a victim to the Revolution before he had time to remove it. And perhaps one of the saints, to whom she daily prayed, had preserved it there for her, to sweeten the evening of her days.

She tapped with her fingers, and the boards returned a hollow sound. With beating heart she tried to remove the square door, and presently succeeded, with some difficulty; but alas! instead of the gold and silver she hoped to see she beheld a damp, dirty, mouldy old book!

In her disappointment she was about to restore the boards again and leave the book behind them to mould and crumble away; but a secret induced her to take it out and see if there were any bank-notes or valuable papers in it; but no, it is nothing but a book—a mouldy volume!

When she had recovered from her vexation she began to wonder what book it could be that some one had hidden away so carefully. It must surely be something extraordinary. So she wiped it clean, and set herself to read. Her eyes fell upon the words, "Therefore, I say unto you, take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on." Fascinated by the strange tidings, she continued to read on. And the words that she read appeared to her so sweet and precious that she read on during the whole day and far into the night, almost forgetting to eat or sleep.

The next morning she sat down again to the damp old book, the words of which made an ever-deepening impression on her soul. She began to see that she had indeed found a treasure, and an invaluable one. Her little chamber no longer looked so desolate; her food, which had so often seemed to her as the bread of tears, now appeared to her more like bread from heaven; and her solitude was relieved by the presence of the great King, from whose book of gracious words streams of unimagined blessedness flowed. She had the book cleaned, and it was to her as meat and drink by day and by night, until in a few years she was permitted to close her eyes and enter into the joy of her Lord.

ARNOLD PERCIVAL MONTAIGNE;

Or the Heir of a Deferred Inheritance.

A Thrilling Story by Henry Martin, Author of "Felicia Cuffe."

(Continued from page 214.)

Alick's Announcement—Mr. Gogharty Surprises his Son—Gripper and Tipper—The Jesuit's Arrest—A Faithful Flock—The Bailiff is Unexpectedly Blessed.

WITH the documents in his possession Mr. Gogharty reached his home early next day, and found that Alick was there, who told him, after the usual filial greeting, that he desired a little conversation with him, and both retired to Mr. Gogharty's private room.

"I wish to prepare you, father," said Alick, "for what will prove a very distressful business to us all. Mr. Hawke, as he said he would, has taken out a writ to attach that Jesuit superior in —— for receiving those deeds from you, father, knowing that they were another's property, and also for retaining them in spite of the mandamus of the Court. Of course, father, you also cannot hope to escape; for, oh, father—and forgive me for saying it!—you, as you well know, are at the root of this whole bad affair, and it breaks my very heart to be obliged to say it." And poor Alick's eyes, filling with tears as he spoke, proved how true was his statement.

"A writ, consequently, will likewise be issued against you, father, since you have not given up—as indeed you could not—these deeds to the new heir's solicitor. Do not be surprised, therefore, father, if in a day or two you are under arrest. And would to God, father, that such a measure could be called unjust and unmerited! But, father"—and here Alick utterly broke down and cried aloud in his grief—"but, father, you know that, with all my partiality as a son, to my shame, I could not say so."

Mr. Gogharty at first was a little touched by the spectacle of his son's sorrow; but, with the parchments in question now safe and sound in his hands, he felt he was master of the situation, and could snap his fingers in the face of Mr. Hawke and his bailiff. "You may dry up those crocodile's tears, Alick, as soon as you like," he said, "and have done with this 'boo-hooing.' You know in your heart of hearts that any trouble that has come to me of late has no one but you to answer for it. Bless me, what an envious position this hour might have been mine were it not for you and your nonsense! Hang it! if the very thought of it isn't enough to drive one crazy; and, on my word, you are a pretty fellow, to be sure, to lecture even your father!

"What right have you, sir, to charge me, I want to now, with breach of trust; or that good man, the Jesuit Superior you have talked of, with receiving embezzled property?" And then, ignorant of much that had transpired between his son and the Superior, and forgetful at the moment of what he himself had told Alick, Mr. Gogharty dared an interpretation of the matter which he felt would exonerate himself and cover Alick with confusion. "Now listen to me," he said; "my placing those deeds, sir," and the word sir was fiercely spoken, "was no breach of trust. Getting, in the way of business, to know this Jesuit Superior, who, though you will not admit it, is a very religious man, and knowing that his safe was far more secure than mine, I asked him, as a favor, to keep secure for me those parchments until I should need them—a request which he kindly granted, and a trust, sir, which he has duly honored and fulfilled—the proof of which see, to your shame and utter confusion, thou mischief-making and undutiful son. Here are the deeds you have made such a fuss about, and surrendered upon my demand;" and taking them from his lock-up place, he held them in triumph before the astonished gaze of Alick. "You and that Hawke," added Mr. Gogharty, "had better take care what you are about. I am ready any moment to hand him the new heir's deeds, and a fig for him and his tipstaves"—and Mr. Gogharty, as he said this, snapped his fingers in Alick's face.

The lawyer's representation was, we are aware, an utter perversion of the facts of the case. He was perfectly conscious of this, and so was Alick; yet what opening was there on the instant for the unravelling of his lie? there were the deeds. Alick knew the emptiness of his father's pocket, and therefore if the Jesuit Superior had not surrendered them "without money and without price," as was said, how else could his father have obtained them?

The secret of the method came out in two or three months' time, when Alick, to save his father from a jail, had to meet his note of hand in Kytesbeek & Claus's hold; but, in the present hour, the £500 consideration all unknown, Alick had to give the Superior credit for a wise if not a high-minded generosity. "I am afraid I have too harshly judged that man," he said within himself. "At all events, the writ, it is plain, cannot be served against him now—it would be most unjust and indeed would place both Hawke and myself in a rather awkward fix, for a suit-at-law for an unlawful arrest would gain, from a Roman Catholic jury, rather smart damages.

"Father," said Alick, "I am delighted you have come by those parchments. Thank God, father, who has in some marvellous way moved the heart of that Jesuit to pity, and, scot free, to save you. Surely, father, remembering the avarice of these men, well may we sing,

> "'God moves in a mysterious way
> His wonders to perform.'"

Mr. Gogharty, keenly bearing in mind the pitiless hand that screwed £500 from him in his poverty, could not by any means enter into Alick's ascription of praise for a miracle wrought upon Jesuit hearts; he, however, kept his own counsel, and not until forced by coming eventualities did he attempt to correct Alick's interpretation of the ways of Providence.

"I had intended," continued Alick, "to remain at home for some time to comfort my mother under the trial which threatened her—you borne to a prison from us, father, as I feared. But now, thank heaven, that dark cloud has passed away, and I am free to return to Dublin, which I must do at once, for that writ against the Superior must immediately be quashed." And to carry out this measure, with a light-hearted adieu to his mother, Alick, by the next train, returned to the city.

When he arrived at Mr. Hawke's Dublin agent's office in —— Street, he found, however, that in all likelihood he was too late. The writ for the Superior's arrest had been put in the hands of two bailiffs, Gripper and Tipper, in the morning, and they had declared they would intercept the Superior on his return from celebrating mass in a Roman Catholic church near the Jesuit establishment where he often officiated. It was therefore to be feared that they either had the Superior already in hold, or would have him under arrest before any messenger now could prevent it. Upon Alick's tidings of his father's statement, and that the deeds in question were recovered, no time was lost, however, in seeking to prevent, if possible, awkward complications. And Alick was so anxious in the matter that he accompanied the clerk who was sent by Messrs. —— to keep the bailiffs from committing both themselves and their employers.

As they entered the street where the bailiffs lived they observed several persons not far from Gripper's door, talking earnestly and a good deal excited, and they opined at once that their evil anticipation was realized. Yes, the Superior was in custody; and, at his request, had been taken, not direct to prison, but, for a money consideration, to Gripper's dwelling, as being what is termed a "spunge house"—a place where debtors, upon bribing their captors, are kept in private hold for a little season, until, peradventure, by the interference of friends or otherwise, their creditors may be satisfied, and they themselves spared the ignominy of a jail.

The Superior's object in getting himself taken to Gripper's house was of the same kind. He wished, for strong reasons already stated, to avoid a commotion and a bruit in connection with Mr. Gogharty and the Percival affair. If were taken to the public jail the whole c from newspaper report, would be full of the n next morning, and ten thousand tongues wo fashion into as many shapes the nature grounds of his arrest; while if taken to G per's for a time it was likely he could manag quietly compromise matters, or, if not, th were several of his wealthy coreligionists in city who, if asked, would bail him to any amo and get him free.

His appearance, however, was known to ev one in this part of the city; and, unfortuna for his present purpose, so was Gripper's. Wh therefore, the Superior and Gripper were s moving along the pathway side by side, i manner to suggest closer relationship than of casual occupants of the same thoroughfar was not long before it was settled in the mi of the lookers-on that a foul sacrilege had b committed, and that a vile "body-snatcher" dared to touch one of "the Lord's anointed.

To the Superior's deep annoyance, his pa sans, male and female, lost no time in medita reprisal, and in arousing themselves for a l of holy war. Women flung themselves u their knees on the pavement—some to ent the Superior's blessing as he passed, and ot to heap curses on poor Gripper's head. larger number of the fair sex, more violent practical, summoned their lords to a "resc or hounded on younger and less bearded he to "punch," as they cried out, the bailiff's h The call to a "shindy," especially when sou out from female tongues, is one that seldor never goes unanswered in the land of Erin. a running of feet and a clamor of angry sh were heard up and down the thoroughfare, a passionate and vociferous crowd gath around the priest and his arrester.

We fear it would have fared badly with Gri—that he would have been torn in pieces not "for love," but for hate, would have knocked down and trampled in the dust by s of infuriated fellow-countrymen—had not Superior—not, we fear, in mercy, but from diency—interfered on his behalf. "My frien he said, "I thank you for your loving zeal I command you, one and all, not to injure man. He that lays a finger on him I shall c my enemy. I am going to his house at my desire—I have official business there" (this haps, was straining a point, but, as the s shows, it gained its end); "and as Mr. Grip presence," he added, "is necessary, he ac panies me. Now, good people, all return q to your homes, and God bless you."

The priest's words, like oil upon the tro waters, quelled the tumult in a moment. " the blessin' o' the Vargin and of all the sai glory, Mr. Gripper, be on you and yours may the Lord spare you the darlint wan at He's laid His han's on!" was one of the dictions pronounced now upon Gripper; one Amazon, who had been foremost in th set, was overheard saying to her neigh "Musha and entroth, I always thought Gr was a dacent man, and I say it, and will st it, that anny wan with half an eye might Shure, he has the looks of a saint, dear wan that's good to thim at home, runnin' f priest. Yees'd have committed a morthal lay a finger on 'im, and so I towld ye."

Gripper for a moment or two could sc realize the happy and marvellous revolutio had been effected in his circumstances—s of rage exchanged for whispers of peace; b Superior called him to his senses by sayi an undertone and rapidly, "Mr. Gripper, be moving at once, and use this lull for rea your dwelling, without molestation." Th monished, Gripper, followed by the Superi commenced his movement toward his doo was reached, and as it was open, since his disturbed by the outside commotion, had to look out, he had no need to knock. and bailiff therefore were soon out of sig in safety.

(To be Concluded.)

WAT COMING WARS MAY WE EXPECT?*

By Rev. M. Baxter.

(Continued from page 215.)

. General Disruption and Military Struggle to Fcede the Reduction of the Eighteen Kingdns to Ten—4. An Ultramontane Crusade wl Stir up War—Present Influence of the Fmish Priesthood—Wanted, a Leader—Brita's Destiny—Will She Lose Ireland?—The Fgress of Sedition in Ireland—England's Ext nity Ireland's Opportunity.

3 The inevitable change of eighteen kingdoms ates into only ten kingdoms within the Roman im re territories will be the cause of other wa and revolutions. We have already seen ow this will necessitate the absorption and me ng of Belgium, Luxemburg, Switzerland, tc. nto France; and it must further be noticed ha Portugal will have to be annexed to Spain, whi can scarcely be effected without some war r revolution on that Peninsula; also Bohem, Moravia, and Gallicia, which were outside e Roman Empire, will have to be separat- d om Austria, and there may be other on lerable changes in the condition of the res t Austro-Hungarian Empire. Greece will av o be enlarged northward, so as to include he aly, and thus regain its ancient limits. anc Syria will have to be separated from ur y, which presupposes some great blows b struck at Turkey before it will consent to uch loss of territory.

4. nother cause of the coming wars will be e 'tramontane Crusade which is now being ep ed by the Jesuits throughout Europe for st ng the Pope's temporal sovereignty over on of which the Italian Government de- iv him in 1870. The Jesuits are plotting to eta the South German Catholic States from rot tant North Germany, and it will proba- v their success in this direction that will or te the predestined victory of France over er ny, which will in fact be a victory of the om h Church, and will probably sooner or ter e followed by the restoration of the Pope's emp al power over Rome, so that he may be- om eated on the Seven Hills.

In e time the Catholic Church will become m unistic, and a coalition be formed between er lism and Communism, as is plainly pre- icte by the Red-Republican uncrowned ten- ng med confederacy carrying on its back the car Woman of Rome just before the final ree nd a half years. (Rev. 17:9).

Th approaching Crusade to restore the ope temporal sovereignty was foreseen by the ev. R. A. Purdon, in his monthly periodical La Vials," on July 1st, 1871. He said:

" ophecy tells us that

"THE SCARLET WOMAN

all ontinue and shall be seen riding upon the n-h ned wild beast, in Rev. 17, just before e fal three and a half years. She may in- eed e reduced to great extremities for a time, ut s will revive, and revive again, until she ov thrown by the personal Antichrist and s te kings.

"e recent dethronement of the Pope, in- ead of destroying Popery, as some persons ave nagined, has only confirmed the influence the Roman Pontiff. His real power is not in s sovereignty, but in his sway over the minds d gination of his subjects. As a Sovereign rinc his subjects were few, but as Ruler of the ind of Romanists, he is monarch over mil- ons. All the Roman Priesthood through the orld re now plotting to revive the Papal sov- eig .

" ew Crusade is at the point of beginning th nineteenth century. Almost 600 years o w fought the Last and Eighth Crusade of Christendom against Islamism. A new or Ninth Crusade seems about to begin, not of Christendom against Islam, but to enthrone the Pope on the Seven Hills. The terrified Priesthood is collecting all its forces for one Ninth and final Crusade. What a strange event!—the Middle Ages revived in the nineteenth century—a Crusade of Christendom against Christendom.

"The Roman question will soon become the question of the day, and expand into a new Crusade. Austria, Ireland, Belgium, Spain, Portugal, and Switzerland will contribute their contingents, and AMERICA will probably not be wanting with its contingent. Peter the Hermit scarcely led a more numerous host to Palestine in the First Crusade than the Hermits of the nineteenth century will lead to Rome in the Last.

"URBAN gave his blessing to the First Crusade, and PIUS, or his successor, will give a threefold blessing to the Last. All that will be required will be a fit man to take the lead—a second Godfrey of Bouillon, destined to become, not King of Jerusalem, but Emperor of Rome! What mighty events may spring from this Roman question—a Crusade, a conquest, and an empire—great in themselves, but doubly great as leading on to the prophetic scenes of the Last days.

"WANTED, A LEADER

for the Ninth Crusade—a new Godfrey of Bouillon." No leader presents himself to our mind as prophetically suitable unless he bears the name of NAPOLEON. We cannot disregard the mystery of that name—its peculiar and prophetic import. 'The Lion of the Thicket,' 'The Lion of Jeremiah,' (4:7), its containing the number 666—its imposing sound, as if it were created to impress the imagination—its undying fame and marvellous vitality, surviving defeat and captivity, and taking its captors captive—raising Napoleon III., in 1848, when almost unknown, to an imperial height, and influencing the mind after half a century sevenfold more than the name of any conqueror of this day.

"The place of the Scarlet Woman is on the Seven Hills, according to Rev. 17, therefore she cannot quit them. She is to ride upon the Wild Beast,—i.e. the Latin nations, under the leadership of the subsequent Personal Antichrist; therefore it is Antichrist himself, and no other, who is to be her champion toward the End. She must regain her sovereign power as a queen, dependent upon them, and her connection with the Seven Hills cannot be broken off until the final three and a half years." (Rev. 17).

BRITAIN'S DESTINY—WILL SHE BE SEPARATED FROM IRELAND?

Prophetic expositors have long maintained that in the latter-day revival of Cæsar's Roman Empire in the form of a ten-kingdomed confederacy all the countries inside the Roman Empire must become separated from the countries outside the Roman Empire, and it will thus become exactly reconstituted within its ancient boundaries of the Rhine and Danube and Euphrates.

Britain was undoubtedly part of Cæsar's Roman Empire for 400 years, from A.D. 45 until A.D. 436, when the Romans finally withdrew from it, as stated by Gibbon (ch. 1) and other historians. But Ireland was never part of the Roman Empire, and for this reason many prophetic students expect that it must be at least legislatively separated from Britain before the ten-kingdomed confederacy can be formed.

For instance, an eminent expositor, B. W. Newton, wrote in his Prospects of the Ten Kingdoms, twenty-five years ago, in 1849.

"In cases where a country external to the Roman Empire is subjected to a country within the Roman Empire—the countries thus circumstanced being Ireland in its relation to England, and also the colonies of England, etc.—there can be little doubt but that the union between such countries will be dissolved; if not fully, yet to the extent of distinct and independent legislatures being granted, as indeed is already done in the leading colonies of England."

Here was a plain prediction twenty-five years ago, founded upon intelligible reasons, and it is wonderful how the march of events during the past twenty-five years points to the probability of its fulfilment. If, on taking a survey of Ireland, we found it, like Scotland, consisting of a Protestant population without any thought of separation from England, then we might regard such a prophecy as a long distance from fulfilment. But what is the real state of the case? It is a startling fact that of about six million inhabitants of Ireland fully five million are Roman Catholics who, as a general rule, secretly hate British Protestantism, and would be glad to see any Roman Catholic power like France subjugate Protestant England. In addition to this religious antipathy, there is the political hatred borne by the Hibernian Celtic race toward the Anglo-Saxon race as their conquerors.

This chronic Irish disaffection has assumed a dangerous organized form in Fenianism ever since 1864. The discontented portion of the population are only waiting for England to be engaged in some foreign war to show their power to create trouble and mischief. The old maxim is not forgotten by them, "England's difficulty is Ireland's opportunity." There is real and serious ground of alarm in the fact that nearly one third of the British regular army consists of Irish Roman Catholics; and there are 100,000 Irish Romanists in each of the cities of Liverpool, Manchester, and Glasgow, and great numbers of them in Leeds, Edinburgh, and other towns, and two or three hundred thousand of them in London. They are chiefly the lowest class, who have nothing to lose, and who may therefore think they are likely to gain by a democratic revolution.

The incendiary conflagrations by which the desperate Communist Republicans reduced part of Paris to ashes in 1871 showed the reckless fierceness of revolutionary Red-Republicanism. The desperado ferocity of Parisian Communism and of Irish Fenianism is precisely identical. Indeed the same man has been a leader in each movement. The Communist General Cluseret, who is said to have set fire to the Tuileries with his own hands, resided in London in 1867 as the military Fenian head-centre, and is supposed to have planned the Clerkenwell nitro-glycerine explosion, and the attempted attack on Chester Castle. In that year large buildings in London, Liverpool, and Manchester were vigilantly watched all night by special constables in consequence of secret information that the Fenians intended to fire them, as a revenge for the hanging of the five Fenians at Manchester. We now see the solid ground that existed for those apprehensions, and it gives some idea of future dangers, when terrible scenes will be witnessed in English cities in riots and uprisings.

Still further, in 1871 the revived Irish agitation assumed an additional form in the Home Rule movement, which has well been called Rome Rule. Who would have believed twenty-five years ago that there would have been in 1876 about fifty Home Rulers, Irish members of Parliament, in the British House of Commons, pledged to try and obtain an independent Legislature for Ireland—clamoring for an Irish Parliament to sit in Dublin, the same as England's colonies, Australia, Canada, and New Zealand have Parliaments of their own. Surely all this is a considerable preparation for the fulfilment of the prophetic expectation of Mr. Newton and other expositors—that Ireland will be separated from England, at least to the extent of having a separate Legislature.

Great Britain must soon be involved in terrible European wars, and be dragged into the predestined ten-kingdomed confederacy, although she would earnestly desire to stand free from entangling and hazardous alliances. Yet she will not be able to stand aloof from European conflicts; and then the Home Rulers and Fenians will press their advantage to the utmost, and it remains to be seen whether they will not succeed in practically effecting a repeal of the union between Ireland and England.

(To be continued.)

---

* Eracted from "Coming Wars," by Rev. M. axte n two pamphlets—five cents each by mail. irst nphlet contains "Ten Signs of the End, and escriion of Approaching Events," with two maps d fo large diagrams. Second pamphlet contains at quotations from Forty Expositors on these ents Address, 63 Bible House, New York.

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

THE aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50 per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to MR. BENJAMIN AITKEN, 63 Bible House, New York. The paper may also be obtained weekly from all newsdealers in the United States and Canada.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of specimen copies to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

SUBSCRIBERS frequently write to us for single copies of the CHRISTIAN HERALD. We always endeavor to oblige them, but single and occasional copies can more easily be obtained from a newsdealer. Sometimes we receive complaints that the CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer. Such complaints are promptly attended to, when made to us; but in all cases we desire that our friends will give the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

LAST week's edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, March 31st, at 2.10 P.M., at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Immediate Deficiency Bill Providing for payment of the Deputy Marshals was passed in the Senate on Thursday, by a strictly party vote. The issue of this hotly contested question now turns upon the light in which the President may view the compromise effected. It will be remembered that he said, when the question was under discussion last session, that he would approve a fair and reasonable measure on the subject of the Federal elections, presented in such a way that he might deal with it on its merits, and not complicated with the moral obligation to sign a general appropriation bill. But opinion is divided on the question whether he will consider the bill, as it stands, "a fair and reasonable measure."

Considerable dissatisfaction prevails on the subject of the settlement of the Ute Question, and it is considered probable that after all the proposals of Mr. Schurz will be rejected by Congress.

The Removal of the Cheyennes, their Escape from the Indian Territory in 1878, and the Camp Robinson massacre, have formed the subject of an investigation by a select committee of the Senate, and some startling facts have been revealed. Broken treaties, culpable negligence, and gross inhumanity are charged against the Indian Bureau. The Committee has visited Lawrence, Kansas, where several of the Cheyennes were imprisoned, and subsequently took testimony at the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Agency and Fort Reno, in the Indian Territory. During the present session it has also listened to the evidence of officers of the Indian Bureau.

As to the Poncas, the only defence made by the Government is that the commissioner "made a mistake." This mistake has already caused the loss of over 300 lives, and is likely to cause the loss of many more, for the district to which they have been removed is described as utterly unfit for habitation. White Eagle has lost his wife and children by malarial fever, and though he was a fine specimen of athletic manhood, is now a mere wreck, not likely to live through the summer. All the Poncas ask is, that they may be allowed to return to land, theirs by inheritance for three centuries, to the houses they built and the farms they tilled. Such a demand cannot righteously be refused on any grounds yet brought forward.

A Gratifying Fact with an Ominous Drawback is contained in the National Balance Sheet for last month. During the month of March the National Debt has been reduced $14,719,000; that being the largest reduction made in one month since April, 1872. The principal contributors to this satisfactory result are the customs receipts and the Internal Revenue, which indicate a decided advance in the financial prosperity of citizens. It is, however, a lamentable fact, that the figures indicate an alarming increase in the consumption of liquor and tobacco; from which fact we are reluctantly compelled to draw the inference, that the moral and temperate habits of the community have not improved in the same ratio as business profits. God is giving this country abundant pecuniary prosperity; it will be a grievous thing if it is received without a sense of responsibility, and expended in sinful pleasure and indulgence.

Sunday-school Teachers, and all those who are interested in Sunday-school work in New York and the vicinity, will welcome the announcement that the New York Sunday-school Association will hold a meeting at the Broadway Tabernacle, at the corner of Thirty-fourth Street, on Monday evening, April 12th, at which the conductor, Mr. C. R. Blackall, will deliver an address on the classification of pupils. Rev. Thomas K. Beecher, of Elmira, New York, will also speak; his subject is "What we can and what we cannot teach in Sunday-school."

Edison's New Discovery seems likely to surpass all his preceding discoveries in its pecuniary results. The search to which the ancient alchemists devoted their lives has apparently approached nearer to success in Edison's hands than in any hitherto recorded. By electricity and chemistry he is able to produce from certain clays large quantities of gold, after the microscope and the ordinary mercurial applications have failed to indicate its presence. The discovery, Edison states, was purely accidental. He needed considerable quantities of platinum for his electric light, and in experimenting on clays which he thought would contain it, he found, not the platinum he expected, but gold which he did not expect. From some kinds of clay he can produce out of one ton, at a cost of five dollars, gold of the value of $1400.

An Invitation to Church.—The First Baptist Church of Indianapolis on Sunday mornings sends a messenger to the city hotels with small printed cards of invitation to the church services, which are distributed to the guests. After the invitation the cards have these words: "If tempted, or in trouble, or neglected, or a stranger, the pastor may have a word for you."

A Lion Caused a Panic in a Theatre at Philadelphia on March 29th. Nero had been introduced on the stage and had been loudly applauded by the audience. The curtain had gone down and the stage was crowded with actors and actresses. Nero was led quietly to his cage, some ten feet behind, by the keeper who had him in charge during the day. Just at this moment a large and rather ferocious-looking dog approached the lion's cage. Just as soon as Nero beheld the dog, he rose to his feet, and with a roar which startled all bit at one of the iron bars, which parted as though it had been made of wood. In a twinkling another bar was snapped by his vigorous jaws. Before, however, Nero had had time to snap the third bar, which would have given him liberty, the keeper secured the chain which was fastened around the animal's neck.

Had the animal become excited when out of his cage it is horrible to think what might have occurred. The craving for the element of danger in public amusements is an evidence how utterly those amusements in their simple form fail to afford satisfaction to those who frequent th
The fact has been noticed both in Great Bri and in this country, that no performances ar popular as those in which the performers ex their lives to imminent danger. The asse is not incredible, that many theatre-goers of day would enjoy the spectacle of a Spanish fight.

Homes for Worn-out Ministers.—At the York Conference of the Methodist Episc Church on April 1st, it was announced the Hon. Thomas H. Suckley had given Conference a five thousand-dollar farm of acres, at Rhinebeck, N. Y., upon which to homes for the worn-out preachers of the Co ence. To build these houses $1600 had subscribed by various laymen, but $1000 was needed. Within fifteen minutes this was raised among the pastors of the Confer

The Cotton Mills of Georgia and South lina promise to be the source of a conside increase of wealth to those States, and th ample thus set will doubtless be followe other Southern States. Hitherto the raw rial has been exported at a return of abou cents a pound, and has been bought back in a manufactured form at high rates. Th sult of the establishment of the mills has that the article has been exported at tw three cents a pound in its manufactured thus keeping in the States several millio lars which would otherwise have gone to ou manufacturers, besides giving employme several thousands of operatives.

Irish Famine Relief Fund.—Contribu received during the week ending Saturday, Apr

Jas. B. Monlin, Glasgow, Ky
Mrs. H. Trigg, " "
Mrs. Kilgore, " "
Mrs. L. Delvaux, " "
Mrs. L. M. Landrum, Glasgow, Ky
Mr. Warder, " "
Friends, " "
Kennie McBradley, " "
Mrs. C. L. Johnson, Saybrook, O
S. N. Dix, Montgomery Centre, Vt
J. L. Dean, M.D., Spring Hill, Tex
W. M. Hering, " "
J. R. Herring, " "
H. L. B. Fullerton, " "
T. J. Harrison, " "
J. H. Galbreath, " "
J. H. Johnson, " "
R. B. Marsh, " "
J. C. Hague, Thorntown, Ind

Forwarded to N. Y. Herald

The Debt on Dr. Talmage's Church.- tributions received during the week ending day, April 3d:

Mrs. C. L. Johnson, Saybrook, O
J. Kethel, Verona, Wis
W. P. Sloan, Golconda, Ill
F. W. Merrick, Steuben, N. Y
Wm. P. Chandler, Boise City, Idaho
S. B. Erwin, Des Arc, Ark
Mrs. W. C. Dodge, Oakland, Cal
C. F. Youberg, Chicago, Ill
Wm. Youberg, " "
M. DeGroot, Janesville, Wis
Mr. R. Alvarado, Tex
Jas. H. Shawgo, Baltimore, Md
Mrs. Alice E. Benson, Hartwell, Ga
S. Lindsley, Isle St. George, O
Rev. T. D. Gester, Glen Riddle, Pa
Mrs. Jno. Mellon, Glen Mills, Pa
D. Ginter, Sunbury, Pa
S. N. Dix, Montgomery Centre, Vt
A Friend, Greenwich, Conn
Miss Esther A. Oliver, Elmira, Ill
A Friend, Toronto, Ont
C. T. Hurlbut, Toronto, Ca
Mrs. T. Mills, St. Louis, Mo
Mrs. Robt. Hall, Westford, N. Y
Rev. C. C. Kimball, Kansas City, Mo
A Friend, New York City
Mr. Jno. Williams, Williamsburgh, Tex
Jas. Brandon, " "
Jno. Williams, " "
Jno. Williams, Rockland, Mich
Reader of C. Herald, Fairmount, W. Va

Forwarded to Dr. Talmage

The Conversion of a Thousand Sinners is the ful event over which the M. E. Church at harton Street, Philadelphia, has just held thanksgiving services. The Rev. Thomas Harrison commenced his labors there last September and the result has been that one thousand persons have come forward to confess Christ and seek an entrance into His visible Church. As is usual in similar cases, objections are taken to Mr. Harrison's method of conducting services, and many sincere Christians have held aloof in consequence. But according to the reports, remarkable and unquestionable conversions have certainly occurred, and when sinners are turned from the error of their ways and are found sitting at the feet of Jesus clothed and in their right mind, all who love the Lord Jesus Christ will surely rejoice over such a harvest of souls as this Philadelphian church has garnered. Mr. Harrison was a student at Brooklyn Lay College.

Warning to Drunkards was given in New York recently by Judge Cowing. In response to the plea of a prisoner charged with stabbing a man, that he was drunk when he committed the crime, the Judge said that this was not an excuse for the offence, but an aggravation of it, and that in future he should add to the penalty when the crime was committed under the influence of liquor. Considering how many crimes are due "to the influence of liquor," such a determination on the part of Judge Cowing is justified by circumstances, and it is hoped will do much to check the brawls now so frequent in the saloons of the metropolis.

"From the Skies" is the Remarkable Name given to the grandson of the late Rev. Dr. Armstrong, one of the first missionaries of the American Board to the Sandwich Islands, who was baptised recently at Saybrook, Conn. The name bestowed on the infant was "Kulani," a name signifying "From the skies," and was chosen by King Kalakaua I., who was a playmate of the father of the child. The king had no doubt reason for tracing the mission of the child's ancestor to the skies, and desired to express his conviction in that way. But all parents should regard their children as from the skies in another sense—a trust from God for which they are responsible to Him.

A Present from a King.—Alphonso, King of Spain, has sent a photograph of himself, beautifully framed, in Spanish enamel of gold and silver on steel, to the Historical Society of Missouri. The picture bears the King's autograph, and is a token of approval of the Society's intended celebration of the anniversary of the first Mississippi exploration. This gift from royalty will no doubt be highly prized by the Society; but what royal gifts can compare with the gift of the King of kings, which, though infinitely transcending them in value, is not appreciated by the world? (2 Cor. 9 : 15.)

The Virginia Judge and the Ducks.—"I read once of a judge," said Mr. Moody in a recent sermon, "who was all the time talking to an old slave about religion, and one day he says to his slave 'Now,' says he, 'Sambo, how is it that you are all the time talking about the conflicts that you have with the devil? I don't have any, and think my life is better than yours, because I am at peace with myself; I don't have any trouble or any conflicts, but you are all the time talking about conflicts; sometimes you say that you have to ask the Lord to forgive you, and you pray to get strength for victory the next time. Now' says he, 'I don't know any thing about that and I get on.' Well, the poor man couldn't answer the judge. They went on for some discussion and the judge who was very fond of hunting always carried his gun with him, and he came to a pond of water and saw some ducks, and he got out his gun and he blazed away and killed one duck and wounded another. He didn't say any thing about the dead duck, but he says to the slave, 'Jump into the water and get the wounded duck, and don't let it get away.' So the slave rushed into the water and got the wounded duck and brought it out, and after he got the wounded duck, 'now,' says the judge, 'go and get the dead one.' So they put the two ducks in the wagon and started on, and after going a while, the colored man says: 'Judge, I think I can answer your question now;' 'I think I understand it.' Says he, 'Do you remember when you killed that duck you didn't send me after the dead one first?' The judge says, 'No; because you could get that out any time; it was dead, and couldn't get away, but the wounded one is the one you want to secure. 'Well,' said the slave, 'that's just the difference; you are dead in sin, and the devil has got you and lets you alone; he don't trouble you, but I am trying to get away from him, and that's why I have these battles.'"

"Playing Like a Christian" was the description given by a little boy of the influence of religion on one of his playmates lately. "I know she is a Christian now," said the boy, "you may take every thing she has away from her, and do what you like to vex her. but she never gets angry. When we used to play at first, if she did not have every thing her own way, she would say, 'You are a nasty, ugly boy, and I won't play with you.' But she never gets like that now." Even in her play this child was obeying the Master's injunction, "So let your light shine" (Matt. 5 : 16). How often is it possible thus to preach practical—the best of all—sermons!

In Memory of Robert Raikes.—On Sunday, May 30th, services commemorative of Robert Raikes, the originator of Sunday-schools, will be held in all the Sunday-schools of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The American Bible Society.—At a Meeting of the Board of Managers, at the Bible House, on March 4th, the financial statement was presented, showing the receipts for February to have been $40,208.19, and the disbursements $43,618.46. The Committee on Publication reported that a third edition of 3000 copies of the New Testament in the dialect of the Gilbert Islands had been printed.

A Whole Town has been Built in Five months in Missouri. "The place now called Stanberry," says a writer in the Chicago Interior, "was five months ago an open field with not a house in sight. To-day it is a town of 900 people, and a railroad town at that, with the office of division superintendent, railroad houses, workshops, etc. But this is only half the story. A number of the people who went there did not leave their religion behind. They thought not only of their own houses, but the house of God. Consequently, last Thursday evening, March 18th, Drs. Allen, Strange, and Luther had the pleasure of organizing a very promising Presbyterian church.

An Extraordinary Railroad Accident Occurred at Annville, Pa., on March 17th. A train had been switched on to a siding to allow of an express train passing, and the passengers had alighted for a little exercise. They were with a singular lack of caution allowed to walk on the very track over which the express was travelling. Suddenly the express was seen approaching, and before they could escape it dashed into the panic-stricken group, killing one man instantly and fatally injuring several others.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works.—We have much pleasure in announcing that another large consignment of volumes by this eminent author and preacher has been received. They are now on sale at the office of the CHRISTIAN HERALD, No. 63 Bible House, New York, and are offered at prices so low as to bring them within the reach of every one. Twelve Sermons on various subjects, with photograph of Mr. Spurgeon, price 35 cents. John Ploughman's Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents; in cloth, 60 cents. The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, a volume of fifty sermons, $2.50. The Treasury of David, a homiletical exposition of the book of Psalms, five vols., as far as Psa. 118, $3 per vol. Spurgeon's Birthday-Book. This popular gift-book contains a suitable passage selected from Mr. Spurgeon's writings for every day in the year, with a blank space opposite for autographs. The signatures of Mr. and Mrs. Spurgeon appear at their respective birthdays. The book is elegantly bound, and the price is 75 cents. Remittances should accompany orders.

A PLAIN ANSWER TO AN IMPORTANT INQUIRY.

A Short Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"Jesus answered and said unto them, This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent."—JOHN 6 : 29.

The Labor of God—What must we Do?—Faith the Most Pleasing Work to God that Man can do—I. It is a Comprehensive Summary of all True Work—It Produces Holiness—All Graces Come from it—II. Faith Pleasing to God in Itself—1. It is the Creature Acknowledging its God—2. It Accepts God's Way of Reconciliation—3. It Puts Honor on Jesus—4. It Places the Believer in a Position of Childlike Rest—III. It is the Test of Working for God—Without it the Spirit of Work Wrong—Motive for Work Fails—IV. The Seal of All Other Blessings—Election—Effectual Calling—Final Perseverance—Resurrection.

NOTICE the connection, or you will miss the meaning of the words; for at first sight it looks as if our Saviour taught us that it is the work of God for us to believe on Him. Now that would be quite true; and it is very plainly taught in other parts of Scripture that faith is the work of God; but that is not the teaching in this particular instance, as will be very plain if you look at the context.

First, our Saviour said to the people, "See how you labor after the bread of your bodies. You have been running all round the coast to find me in order that I might feed you again with loaves and fishes. Now," says he, "let your labor run after something better. Labor not for the meat that perisheth, but for that which endureth to life eternal." He gently rebukes them, "Do not spend all your strength in seeking after temporal good, but think about your immortal natures. Satisfy the hunger of your spirits, the better part of you."

They immediately answered, "You tell us to labor after the bread that does not perish. What shall we do that we might work the work of God and so obtain it?" Our translation fails to let us see that they used precisely the same word as the Saviour had done. He said "labor," and they said, "What shall we do that we may labor this labor of God? What is it?" They took him at his word, and they put a question in accordance therewith.

When men begin to be aroused about spiritual things, they naturally cry, "What must we do to be saved? What must we do that we may work the work of God?" It is a faulty question, it is a question very much shaped by their ignorance and error. They suppose that there are works to be done, and merit to be earned, by doing and obeying a law, and so they put it in that shape—"What shall we do? What shall we work that we may work the work of God?"

The Saviour did not chide them for the shape of the question. It was not the time to expect accuracy, but he gave them such truth as they could understand, and he replied, "You want to know what work you must do that shall be 'the work of God,' or a work pleasing to God. This then is 'the work of God'—the work most pleasing to God of all the works that can be done by man—that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent."

Does any man object to faith being called the work of man? If he does, I ask him wherefore he objects. It is true that faith is the gift of God, but this does not militate for a moment with the other truth that faith is the work of man: for it is and must be the act of man. No one in his senses can deny that. Will you venture to say that man does not believe? Then I venture to tell you that he who does not personally believe in Jesus is a lost man; and if there be such a thing as a faith which is not a man's own act and deed it will not save him.

The man must himself believe or perish: this is the plain doctrine of Scripture. Repentance is wrought in us by the Holy Ghost, but we must ourselves repent, or we never shall be saved. Faith is wrought in us by the Holy Ghost, but the Holy Ghost does not believe, or repent: these are a man's own acts. With our hearts we believe unto righteousness. If we do not believe then we are not partakers of the promise which is given to those who do believe. Faith is, therefore, the work of man; and it is the chief of works, the work most pleasing to God, the most godlike work, or, as the text puts it, "This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent."

To open up this one thought I pray for help from on high: it is just this, that faith is the most pleasing of all the works that man can do. It is here called "the work," but not strictly and properly, for it can never be ranged with the works of the law, from which it essentially differs; but the Saviour took up the word which they used, and spoke to their ignorance that He might instruct them.

I. Regarding it as a work, faith is most pleasing to God; for, first, it is of all true work. There lies within the loins of faith every possible form of holiness. As a forest may lie asleep within an acorn, so within the bounds of faith, little though it be, every virtue lies hidden. It may be microscopic in form, but it is certainly there, and only needs development. Repentance dwells in faith, for he that believes in Jesus Christ unto salvation knows that he is a sinner, and he must have some hatred of sin, or else he would not have taken Christ to deliver him from his sin. Love to God is there, for, most assuredly, when I trust a man—completely trust him—it would be impossible for me to do so unless I felt some leaning of my spirit toward him; and the complete trusting of the soul to Christ, which is faith, has had in it no small measure of love to Christ.

THE COMPREHENSIVE SUMMARY

I know what some of you have said—"Is that all that I am to do in order to be saved? Am I simply and alone to believe in Christ—that is, trust myself with him?" Yes, that is all, and it is so small an act that the most uneducated heart can perform it, but yet within it there are inconceivable mysteries of goodness.

What is more, all the graces come out of faith in due time, for faith sums up the whole of a Christian's life. Now, my brethren, I challenge you to read the eleventh chapter to the Hebrews, and see if you can think of any thing noble, brave, glorious, which has not its counterpart in that chapter. But recollect, it is a description of the heroism—not of this virtue or of that, but of faith. In the long list, beginning with Abel and going down to the last, faith wrought all.

From faith comes the power that stops the mouths of lions, quenches the violence of flames; out of weakness becomes strong. It is faith that tramples on temptation, it is faith that overcomes the world. It is faith that attains to holiness. Within the compass of that little babe whom you hold in your hand, a slender weight that you can scarcely feel, there are all the elements of yonder man of six feet, who leads the van in the royal host, and so the true Christian man in the perfection of the stature of Christ is all within the babe in grace who cries, "Lord, I believe; help Thou mine unbelief."

I can well understand why our Saviour should say, "If you wish to work the work of God, you must believe in Jesus Christ whom He hath sent," for in that act lie all the virtues, and out of that act will grow all the virtues in due time.

II. But now, secondly, this simple matter of trusting Jesus Christ, which is called

FAITH, IS, IN ITSELF, MOST PLEASING TO GOD.

1. First, it is the creature acknowledging its God. While a man says "I do not care about my soul," he lives in atheism, disowning God, living as if there were no God. When a man says "I need no saving," that is contradicting God's testimony, wherein he declares that we are all gone out of the way and have altogether become abominable. When a man says "I may be wrong, but I can get right of myself. My own good deeds will save me," he is setting himself up in independence of his God, in fact, making himself his own God, and so, practically, setting up another God.

But when the man cries, "I have sinned," there is an acknowledgment that the law is good and holy and just. When he then adds, "I have so sinned that I deserve punishment, and I submit myself to it," there is a recognition of the court of heaven, and an admission of the righteousness of its sentences. The rebellious heart submits itself to the authority of God. When he further says, "But I have heard, great God, that Thou hast given Thy Son to bleed and die for sinners, and that He is able to save to the uttermost them that trust Him, and I do trust Him," the submission of the man to God is complete.

Before, he said, "I do not believe it. It does not stand to reason," that is proud reason still a rebel. Or he said, "It may or may not be so, but I do not see the peculiar beauty of an atoning sacrifice." There again is the proud heart kicking against God. But the man comes into his right place when he believes. When he believes in Jesus Christ and accepts mercy through the great sacrifice, God is well pleased because his poor erring creature has come into its right place, and God sees in the act of faith the restitution of rectitude.

2. Again, God is pleased with faith because it accepts God's way of reconciliation. God has given Christ that He might reconcile us to Himself by Him. When a man says, "I take Christ to be my Saviour," he accepts God's way of reconciliation, and then God must be reconciled, for He has promised so to be. As He longs to be reconciled, and willeth not that any should perish, but that they should come to repentance, so does He rejoice when they are willing to make peace with Him in His own appointed way. It shows a deference to His wisdom, a confidence in His love, a yielding to His divine will, and that is what He seeks after. All this, I say, is included in faith, and makes it well-pleasing to God.

3. Perhaps the most acceptable element in faith to the eye of God is the fact that it puts honor upon Jesus Christ, for He dearly loves His Son. We cannot tell how deep is the love of the Father toward His only begotten Son. That which dishonors Jesus must be very obnoxious to the Father, and your self-confidence, my friend, is a dishonor to the merit and salvation of Christ, and God abhors it; but when you fling that all away, and have no hope but in the great atonement which He has made, then, I say, because your faith honors Jesus, therefore God delights in it, and He will honor your faith.

4. Faith restores us by putting us into a place of childlike rest. If a son has fallen into the hands of a malicious individual, who has whispered into his ear that his father hates him—that he is doing all he possibly can to ruin him—at first the youth will not believe the accusation, but perhaps after a while he begins to think it true. From that time forward every action that his father does, will be interpreted the wrong way; and if there be any thing in the father's life which is more kind than usual, it is highly probable that this poor misled boy will see a deeper subtlety of malice in it than in his father's ordinary actions. The lad will break his father's commands, and vex and anger his father. What is the first thing to be done to set that youth right? You may make him dread his father, and then he will behave properly in his outward actions, but he will only be waiting his time to break loose. Suppose it to be possible to make him believe in his father, and to be assured that his father loved him, and had all along been the kindest man on earth, he would run into his father's arms. He will be willing enough to obey a parent whom he trusts: it will be his delight to do so.

You have won his confidence, and every thing is right now. This is what faith does to us. The devil and our own corrupt nature say, "God is unkind, for He has made an awful hell," and so on. Faith interposes and cries, "He has put away His wrath. He has made full atonement for sin. He is willing to rece us." Then faith says, "Trust Him; trust H implicitly;" and when the soul has done th then faith testifies, "He has loved you with everlasting love. Jesus died for you, and has provided a heaven for you." Let this known and felt, and what a change takes pla Oh, then, you hate your sin! Oh, then, y are ready to say, "How could I play the f against one so kind, so good, so right?" Un this impulse you will serve Him, and live for H

III. And now a third reason why faith is great a thing is this—that faith in Jesus is for God, for all the works that ever were, w out faith in Jesus Christ, are not works for at all.

THE TEST OF WORKING

Let me explain and prove my point. Supp that a person should say, "But I mean to for the great God, and work for Him." W out faith the spirit of work is wrong. My fri suppose you said to me, "I will live for and spend my life in your service, but I am going to believe what you say"? There w be a point of disagreement between us w would render it impossible for you to be of service to me, or for any thing that you did t of any value to me. You call me a liar to b with, and then say you serve me.

Many of you that have heard the Gospel perhaps think that you are serving God, th you have never believed in Christ: but, I you, your best actions are nothing but w washed sins. All that you do must be dest of real excellence, because you begin by ma God a liar. It is a hard word, say you. I not help it; it is the word of John, the gentle spirit among all biblical charac John says, "He that believeth not hath God a liar, because he hath not believed o Son of God." If you begin by calling G liar I do not care much what you do after I would a great deal rather you should be r than immoral, and sober than drunken; after all, you will be lost in either case i persevere in calling God a liar. All your ness will be a sham if you will not beli Jesus.

Without faith the motive of work

"But," cries another person, "I believe I deserved well of God; I have kept myself right, and I have performed many good de What have you done them all for? "I been working for my salvation," says on other words, you have been working for yo Pay yourself then! Self is first, and last; works are selfishness from top to bottom. have been trying to be good to get to h by it.

It is a mean, beggarly life that begin ends with self! Your Maker, whom you bound to love with all your heart, you hav loved at all, except that you have mean tended to love Him in order to save yo You had a kind of cupboard love to Him as an ass or an ox might have to a corn- a stall, but no real affection. How can yo form a virtuous act while self is your lord?

Suppose that one of your family will what you tell him. He brazens you ou says he will have his own way; and then h into the garden and he plucks you a flow he expects that the gift will please you. Brought in a rebellious hand! While he wilful state and boiling over with bad te Does he think to please you by such a You say, "No, my child, that cannot be must first bow before your father and ac edge that you have done wrong." He ma his lips, and say he will never obey yo then ask to kiss you. Will he have hi Assuredly not till first of all he will s That is just the condition of many a seek God. He has a wicked pride in his hea a rebellious will, and if he will believe in will be a proof that his pride and rebell given up; but if he will not yield and neither can he expect that God will save

IV. I would say, in the fourth place, that ith in God is a most blessed and acceptable ng, because it is

THE SEAL OF ALL OTHER BLESSINGS.

Notice that faith in God is the seal—first, of r election. Read the thirty-seventh verse, "All that the Father giveth Me shall come to Me." Now, if you come to Christ, dear friend, you are one that his Father gave Him. You are e of His elect. Oh, what a blessing this is! The doctrine of election is full of rich comfort to all who are interested in it, and election itself is the greatest of all favors. "But how am I to know that I am one of God's elect?" By this testimony, "All that the Father giveth Me shall come to Me."

n the next place, faith seals our effectual calling. If you look a little farther down you will see, "No man can come unto Me except the Father which hath sent Me draw him; and I will raise him up at the last day." These are the express words of Christ, and they show that every man that comes to Christ must have been drawn by the Father; that is to say, that effectual calling has exerted its divine power upon him. No man need say, "Am I drawn of the Father?" after he is once sure that he has faith in Jesus Christ; for you never could have believed in Jesus Christ except this had been given you from heaven.

he next thing that faith assures us of is final perseverance. Read the forty-seventh verse—"He that believeth on Me hath everlasting life." You need not raise the question, "Have I received everlasting life?" Raise this question first: "Have I believed in Jesus Christ? If so, I have everlasting life." Not a life, mark you, that will last you up to the end of the quarter, when you take a new ticket—nor a life that will preserve you to old age, and then leave you to temptation and death. No, "he that believeth on Him hath everlasting life," and it is not everlasting life if it does not last forever. Herein he that believes has the guarantee of final perseverance. Did not Jesus say, "I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of My hand"?

his is a great deal for faith to bring to us, but it is not all, for two or three times over we are told here that whosoever believeth in Christ shall be raised up again at the last day: so that faith secures resurrection. Read the thirty-ninth verse and then the forty-ninth verse: "This is the will of Him that sent Me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on Him, may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day." How do I know that I shall have a blessed resurrection? How can I be certain that though the worms devour this body, yet when Christ shall stand in the latter day upon the earth, in my flesh I shall see God? I may be sure of it, because I believe in Jesus Christ whom He has sent.

"Alas!" you say, "I do not feel right." Never mind your feelings; trust in Christ. "Oh, but I am such a sinner!" "Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners." "Alas! but I have tried before." Away with all your trying before. Have done with trying, and accept the finished work. Trust Jesus now. "Do you mean that if I now do trust myself with Christ I shall be saved while sitting in the pew?" I mean even so. Be thou whosoever thou mayest be, this night look to Jesus and be saved.

Thou wilt have done with thyself, and will commit thy soul in the hand of Jesus, who has power to save those that rest themselves upon him thou art saved. Oh, that those who have heard this Gospel many times would now for the first time really understand it, and say, "Is this, after all, the greatest of all works—that I do believe in Jesus Christ whom He hath sent? Lord, I believe: help thou mine unbelief, and save me now." O God, help many to breathe the prayer of faith at this moment, for Jesus' sake. Amen.

Portion of Scripture read before Sermon. John 6 : 25–65.]

MARTHA, THE CLERGYMAN'S HOUSEKEEPER.

By Rev. W. E. Littlewood, M.A., Vicar of St. James's, Bath.

Many years ago, before I was married, it was necessary that I should set up housekeeping and have a housekeeper. The sort of housekeeper that I wanted was of a very humble kind—not a lady-housekeeper, who should see that others did the work, but rather a respectable woman, who might be trusted with money and marketing, and who would do much of the domestic work herself.

I had numerous applicants for the post, and my choice finally rested on Martha ——. She was a hard-featured, large-boned woman. If she had ever been good-looking the good looks had long faded out of her somewhat stern visage, and her voice was rough and grating. My pupils—for in those days I had boys living in my house—were in no small awe of her. Her demands on them as regards silence, feet-wiping, clothes-tidying, and so on, were far too extensive for the boyish mind.

However, we very soon found that our housekeeper, beneath this rough and gaunt outside, was a truly Christian woman. I had had reason to think so—in fact, that was one of the points which decided me—at the very outset of her engagement, for she had made it a matter of express stipulation that she should be permitted to attend her place of worship twice on Sunday, and once in the week. But when the woman came under closer observation, then we found that her religion was not one of mere ceremony and outward attendance upon forms, but of true and hearty devotion.

She was not clever by any means; nor had she much to say for herself; nor fair to outward view, as has been already stated; but she was not "slothful in business;" she was "fervent in spirit," and she "served the Lord." In her simple way, she tried to teach the rough and ignorant girl that helped her; she nursed a sick boy, not only as to the body, but as to the soul, and took the most diligent care of my interests.

I have described her excellencies; now let me go on to point out what at first I presumed to be her faults. These were that she never seemed to have any money, and that she habitually wore dresses which my lady friends informed me were scarcely good enough for her position.

When this was pointed out to me I could not but observe that Martha's garments were decidedly shabby, and unbefitting her position as housekeeper. The other matter struck me more. To my certain knowledge she had no poor relations, and yet it was evident that she had never laid by a penny. She was now in receipt of good wages, and certainly did not spend her money upon fine clothes. Yet the woman never seemed to have change even for a five-shilling piece.

How was this? Where did her money go to? What secret way of pauperizing herself had this apparently good woman got? Surely she did not spend it in intoxicating drinks, or any thing of that kind? I was fairly puzzled. I carefully observed her, but could discover nothing. How was it?

At last I thought I would ask Martha herself. And how unfortunate it is that we do not oftener take this simple and most effective way of dispelling our unworthy suspicions about each other! "Go and tell thy brother alone." It requires courage, I know; but there is One who gives counsel and strength to those that ask Him.

Well, Martha soon made the matter as clear to me as it was to herself. What did she do with her money? Why, she spent a certain sum on her clothes. Then she paid so much to her place of worship, and then she subscribed all the rest to the Foreign Missionary Society. She was in fact doing far more for her Master's cause than I was. What I gave, I gave, so to speak, of my abundance; but this poor woman cast in all her living.

When I came to examine Martha I found that the principle of this conduct was one of simple faith. She read in her Bible, "The Lord will provide," and she believed it. She believed that faith in the Lord Jesus Christ was the one way of salvation for all men, and therefore she was quite willing to make any sacrifice in her power in order that this one Saviour might be preached to the heathen in all the world. As for her own future, she left that to her God. She believed in His promise never to forsake those who trusted in Him.

And did her God forsake Martha? By no means. I watched this woman's after course, as may be imagined, with the greatest interest. Circumstances altered with me, and she took a situation elsewhere. Sickness afterward came upon her, and premature old age, but friends arose, as if by magic, from unthought-of quarters. Yet it was no magic—it was the providence of her heavenly Father. She lived for some years after she left me, but she was always provided for; and, I believe, always able even to the last to contribute something toward the cause she had most at heart—the preaching of the Gospel among the heathen. She died in peace, and now her soul dwells with her Saviour.

Would that every one gave in proportion as much as she did to Missionary Societies to send the Gospel to the heathen.

THE CRUELTIES OF HOSPITALITY.

By Mrs. G. S. Reaney,

Author of "Life Scenes and Life Stories," "Friendly Words on Every-day Life," etc.

A City Clerk's First Glass at the Sunday Dinner of Christian Friends—His Consequent Declension into Drinking and Smoking and Recklessly Fast Life—Mr. T.'s Fall Through a Christian Lady's Claret—An Evangelist Made a Drunkard by a Christian Colonel's Porter.

Either through ignorance or thoughtlessness even the most kind-hearted people may perpetrate cruelties a knowledge of the full extent of which would burden them with lifelong sorrow. Reflection in many cases would prevent well-disposed men and women from bringing on themselves the responsibility of putting a stumbling-block in the way of a brother for whom Christ died.

G. S—— leaves his happy country home for life in London as a city clerk. Trained by both parents to habits of sobriety, he goes into the world of London life a total abstainer. He has been prepared for the possible laughs and taunts of his brother clerks. He fights the battle manfully when the attack commences. He has, like Daniel, purposed in his heart "not to defile himself," and mocking laugh or taunting jest cannot move him.

His mother has written to some Christian friends in London, pleading with all the eloquence of a mother's love, "Please look after my boy." The first Sunday finds him their guest for the day. At dinner it is proposed to take him to a neighboring Sunday-school, of which his host is superintendent.

"You had better fortify yourself with a glass of wine," the host says good-temperedly, helping himself to port; "the locality is low, and the children are not of the cleanest. I always fortify myself. You can't do better than follow my example!"

G. S—— has met the taunts of brother clerks, he has faced the sneers of young companions, but this is a new way of putting matters. He hesitates to declare himself an abstainer; and his host, out of most kindly-intentioned hospitality—so at least he calls it—fills the young man's glass, and talks fluently of Sunday-school work, its privileges and its responsibilities.

G. S—— is soon known in the office to have given up his practice of "total abstinence from intoxicating drinks." The young clerks who had voted him "slow," and "a country fellow whose acquaintance was not worth cultivating," are not so careful to keep aloof from him now that they know he "takes his drink like a sensible chap." That fact removes untold objections to the thought of making a friend of him. The same fact surrounds G. S—— with numberless temptations from which as a total abstainer he was more or less free.

"A fellow who can drink his glass of wine can surely smoke a cigar." Well, having given in in one thing since he left the country, why not in two? No one will deny the fact it is only manly to be able to smoke a manilla without feeling seedy. G. S—— resists feebly, but remembers that his kind host of Sunday smoked his pipe after the evening service while sauntering round his garden and discussing what more could be done to reach the masses than the Christian Church had already attempted. He remembers this, and—yields.

"To be able to smoke and drink, and not play billiards! Why, of course a country fellow is not supposed to know every thing, but—well, he appears a little soft to those who do know!" G. S—— hears the words tremblingly. He has promised his mother never to go to a public billiard-table. Yes; but he also promised her to keep his pledge. Surely he was not to blame in growing—manly?

"Well, what can be the harm in going to a theatre or music-hall? You smoke and take your glass, and play billiards like an adept. Where can you find harm in simple amusements such as the stage affords?" Once more G. S—— resists, and once more—yields. And while the fond mother's heart is resting in the thought of her boy's safety in the "City of Temptation," because his Sundays are, for the most part, spent with her Christian friends, those Christian friends have (unconsciously, we admit) with their own hands led G. S—— beyond the line of security. As a teetotaler he stood aloof from companions likely to lead him astray. As one who could take his glass, he was at once on the same platform with certain young men, to be intimate with whom was to be enticed into mischief.

To-day the door of those "Christian friends" is closed to G. S—— because of his reckless habits and sadly-stained life, though they still offer the wine to their young guests, and by life and word uphold its good to "fortify" for work in the vineyard of Him who hath said, "It is impossible but that offences will come; but woe unto him through whom they come."

MR. T.'S RELAPSE INTO DRUNKENNESS THROUGH THE CLARET OF THE KIND-HEARTED STOCKBROKER'S WIFE.

Mrs. W—— is known far and wide as a Lady Bountiful. It is a refreshing sight to see the children of some London court gathered in the field which borders the lawn of her pretty suburban home, once, and sometimes oftener, during the summer of each year. Among these children Mrs. W—— moves with queenly grace and courtly speech. A select number of guests assemble on the lawn, and from time to time are taken into the dining-room, the windows of which open down to the sloping grass, for such refreshment as Mrs. W——'s hospitality affords.

Mr. T—— is present; a stranger brought there by a friend. To him Mrs. W—— offers wine, as she has done to every other guest. He refuses with heightened color. She has the decanter with its sparkling contents within her hand. She holds it up, and says with a winning smile, "Not one glass?" and passes on to another guest. The politeness which has led her to offer the wine forbids her to press it. Mrs. W—— is a born lady, and as such her influence is the weightier. But the question and the tempting sight of well-filled decanters present a special trial to Mr. T——, who is hot and thirsty. He asks to be excused if he "changes his mind," and helps himself to claret—"only a light wine; claret can hurt nobody!"

That night Mrs. W—— is chatting over the events of the day with her husband, who came home late from the Stock Exchange. She has been giving detailed accounts of the city children's undisguised delight, the pleasure of friends, and the kindly way in which every thing appeared to go. "And now, dear," she concludes, "I am just getting my bit of joy out of it all in feeling how many lives may have been helped to better thoughts and purposes, for true enjoyment must uplift and refine. How very thankful we should be for the power given us of helping other lives!" and good Mrs. W—— wipes away some gently-shed tears.

Mr. T—— had for five years fought a weary battle with a deadly appetite—the love of drink. A brave young wife had stood beside him, urging him to perseverance and heroic effort "for the children's sake." That morning Mr. T—— left home for a two days' visit to a friend. Life seemed very bright to him as he kissed his wife and children, and prayed, "God bless and keep you all!" and his heart beat high with joy as his baby son—just recovered from an illness—softly stroked his cheek, and answered, lispingly, "And God bless papa!"

Ten hours later and, broken-hearted and crushed to the earth with the sense of failure, Mr. T—— finds his way into a low public house, to drink yet another glass to quench the thirst which has possessed him like a demon ever since the first draught of simple claret from Mrs. W——'s hospitable table had passed his lips a few short hours before. He has no glad memories of the morning's adieu at home now; no yearning for the morrow when he should return; no fondly-cherished thoughts of baby's kiss and prayer. He is a madman—possessed by a deadly thirst, a horrible craving! What matters it to him that he has shocked his friend by his lack of courtesy in preferring to spend his evenings at low public houses instead of returning with him to his villa by the Thames? What does he care what becomes of the morrow? He has only to do with the present; and now he has but one thought, one desire, one purpose in life—and that to drink, drink, drink, till he has done with thoughts, done with desires, done with purposes!

Alas for the hospitality which hath power, though it be but once in a thousand times, to turn a man into a fiend!

Mrs. W—— always considers her "outing for the London children" a great success, and congratulates herself that, while her husband earns the means, she can scatter broadcast the bounties of hospitality. Would Mrs. W—— take any exception to the success of that day could she know the story of Mr. T——'s fall?

A PREACHER MADE A DRUNKARD BY A CHRISTIAN COLONEL.

Colonel G. has for many years been the main supporter of the Gospel Mission Hall in the town of ——. To this house the evangelist, whether working man or gentleman, finds hearty welcome; indeed he always says, and means it too, that he himself is the honored one in being privileged to be the host of any of the Master's servants. So Sabbath by Sabbath (when not in the Highlands at his shooting-box) the Colonel "entertains" the Gospel Hall preacher. He is free in manner, and kindly in speech. He soon wins the heart of his guest by speaking of his own conversion, and before the "Good-night" is said on Saturday evening the Colonel is high in the respect and esteem of his visitor.

"You must take a little stout to strengthen your chest," says the good-natured Colonel, well frothing a glass he pours out, and offering to his guest. His guest is on principle a "total abstainer," but he has owned to a weak chest in talking with the Colonel, and feels a little awkward in now declining his proffered hospitality. "I think I am as well without it," he begins to falter timidly.

"Nonsense," says the Colonel, smiling; "you do not know until you have tried."

The evangelist feels weary, sinking, yearns for success in that day's meeting, and—drinks the stout.

Years afterward a drunken, dissolute man, who carries about the most woful memory a man can have—that of a life once devoted to God's service, and now given up to the devil's—says, with all the bitterness of soul possible to his lost position,

"I am what I am to-day through the hospitality of a Christian man! He urged me to t for my health that which once had nearly t death to my soul. Of course he didn't know how was he likely to? But he, and he alon responsible for my utter, utter ruin of to-day have lived to hold as my direst punishment memory of having once preached the Nam now blaspheme! Alas! alas! my case is singular. Hundreds, like myself, meet t death-blow through the hospitality of Chris people. It is because they are Christians death comes the more stealthily. One is one's guard as to the devil's wiles when sits as an honored guest at the table of Lord's people! Woe is me, my ruin nigh makes me mad! I want to repent turn to the Lord, as I have by my preachin years gone by led many, many others to do, b cannot repent. I have fallen where I cannot feel sorrow for sin. Oh, that first glass of st Oh, that Christian gentleman who murdere soul to save my body!"

"The language of a madman!" True, even a madman's talk may have germs of t in it. Oh, reader, think! It is the Christ privilege to "use hospitality one to anoth as it is also his duty; but surely, oh, surely, day like this the hospitality should be su shall not poison the lives it seeks to nourish

---

THE BLOOD OF THE PASSOVER

A Sermon by Rev. W. Morley Punshon, LL

(Continued from page 221.)

"And the blood shall be to you for a token the houses where ye are: and when I see the b I will pass over you."—Exodus 12 : 13.

II. I observe, secondly, for us, as for the dren of Israel of old, there is a remedy prov

THE GREAT DOCTRINE OF ATONEMEN is of course here of necessity brought out b us. That is, in fact, the gist and the burd the text. For us, as for the children of Is there is a remedy provided. You reme what that remedy was. They were to sla lamb; they were to sprinkle the blood o lamb upon the side and upper posts of the the angel was to see the blood; and whe angel saw the blood he suspended the veng and passed harmlessly away. And as b blood of the victim sprinkled upon the posts, seen by the destroying angel, wrat averted from them and deliverance secur by the blood, of Jesus, seen by divine ju sprinkled upon our hearts, wrath is ward from us and everlasting salvation is sec You remember that the apostle in the Epis the Hebrews calls this the "sacrifice of the ver."

Now, observe here, that, as in all cases of cal prefiguration there is an exactitude o filment between the type and the antity in all cases of typical prefiguration the an is vastly superior to the type. It is so The deliverance before us, great and merci it undoubtedly was, was from temporal only. The salvation of Christ rescues from interminable danger—a world from lasting ruin. The numbers benefited b type, large as they were to them, were up whole limited and scanty. The second ment, finding in all men the relationshi common need, uplifts all men into a co and into a ransomed brotherhood.

Now you will not fail to perceive ho analogy that is before us disposes of t cinian hypothesis, that Christ died only ample's sake—merely to give us an exam the highest type of embodied humanity— that other hypothesis—that His death w attesting seal of the validity of His tea The lamb certainly did not die either ample's sake or for attestation's sake. offered in sacrifice. To preserve the an Christ, its antitype, must be offered in sa too.

It would seem, then—and this brings the heart of the matter—it would seem that fice is essential to salvation—that Christ es have suffered—that without the shedding f ood there could be no remission of sin. Go requires blood, it would appear, ere He can passionate and forgive ; and in that require- e He is righteous and holy. How stands the as?

I will be acknowledged at once that He who man had an indisputable right to govern in The provisions of that government, more- ve will be embodied in a law distinct and in- ellible in its enactments and provisions. Ob ience to that law will issue in an increasing ue of glory. Disobedience, as its last pen- lty will entail eternal death. Now you re- ber that there have never been more than ovenants between God and man—the cove- of works and the covenant of grace.

hat I have just stated was the essence of the ant of works under which man was placed len, "Do this : live. Disobey this : die." Ada's was a covenant of works, for if lapse nade—if loss was incurred—in that cove- here was no provision at all for recovery. The fe of the transgressor was unconditionally ed, and was at God's disposal. God was by that covenant to sustain those who mmaculate, and to punish those who were il. He would have been unrighteous if He unished the innocent : He would have equally unrighteous if He had cleared the il. When man fell, therefore, his life was tely, unconditionally forfeited. He was G's disposal, and he might at God's pleas- ve been at once annihilated, or have been nned to a blasted immortality.

B here

MERCY COMES IN—

nan another chance—proffers the welcome ition, not that sin shall be unpunished, at the sinner shall be saved, that the sin be branded, but that the individual shall hat humanity, disrobed of its lordliness ethroned from its elevation, should wan- ith the curse of Cain upon its brow—a you remember, which, while it brands the protects the criminal against the conse- s which otherwise would inevitably fol- w.

other chance was in the proposition that hould be found a substitute ; and in that moment, when there was silence on earth, en there was silence in Heaven, the voice from the midst of the throne, "Here am me. Lo, I come—in the volume of the t is written of me—to do Thy will, O "It became Him by whom are all to make the captain of our salvation per- ough suffering."

you, God's name must be glorified : that first essential of creation. It ought to en glorified by the unswerving obedience creature ; it might have been glorified e creature had sinned by His terrible nent : it must be glorified—glorified with onor—by the vicarious death of the Re- em.

some will say, as they have said, of the ent, "Your God must be vindictive : st have an abstract delight in suffering ; y an everlasting punishment for the of a brief earthly lifetime ?" How ready y,

IF GOD HAD BEEN VINDICTIVE

ht have abided by the covenant, and sim- ied out the provisions of that covenant. had been a perpetuation of the race at by one we should have lain down and But how different the method of His ontaneously projecting the Atonement ; His best to render it universally availa- d when to rescue man from the ocean of which threatened to engulf him, there a sacrifice of infinite value, "He spared own Son, but freely offered Him up for all.

till they say, shifting the ground of the n, "He must be vindictive ; else why the Son of His love before His wrath sin should be appeased ?" How it might set this objection at rest if you remember that it was a spontaneous, not an enforced, offering. Our Saviour seems to have had that sort of objection in His mind when He vindicated His own volition—the freedom with which He had offered Himself upon the cross. "No man taketh my life from me ; I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again."

And besides this thought, which at once vindicates the offering from the suspicion of injustice, you remember that it was an offering undertaken for the sake of an equivalent recompense, and that "for the joy that was set before Him" He "endured the cross" and "despised the shame ;" and while God, in fidelity to His covenant engagements delivered Him up for man, in fidelity to His covenant engagements also He sustained Him under the suffering, and He exalted Him because of the suffering to an honor and a royalty grander than could ever have accrued from creative wisdom or from the demonstration of His governing power.

"But why," they say still—

"WHY SEE THE BLOOD?

Why insist so much about the sight of the blood?" Why? Because blood is the sign of life taken, and life taken is the execution of the sentence, "Thou shalt surely die!" Why? In order to vindicate the equity of God's procedure and the perfection of God's character to other intelligences and to other worlds. Why? That pardon might be seen to be not a yielding of claim, not a weak and capricious and infirm indulgence, but a pardon for a reason—a reason divinely impressive, a reason universally acceptable.

Why see the blood? Why, that the Pharisee and the hypocrite and the self-righteous man might be awed by the remembrance that He is a just God, and that the poor penitent of trembling heart, of anguished eye, and remorseful self-upbraiding, might exult in the consciousness that the just God is still a Saviour. "Behold, therefore"—for nowhere but here can it be so well distinguished—"behold, therefore, the goodness and severity of God."

Now you see, brethren, what is the meeting-place of God's mercy for the sinner. It is just the cross ; and it is just the cross because upon that cross the sacrifice was offered—because upon that cross all things have been purged with blood, and "without the shedding of blood there can be no remission of sin." You find it in all dispensations ever since the Fall.

Look at Abel's firstling offered upon the altar and accepted, whle the whirlwind scattered the deistical offering of fruits and flowers. Look at the savor of the sacrifice of Noah : it rose accepted unto Heaven from the summit of Ararat ; and the genial springtime ever recurring in its beauty, and the luxuriance of golden grain, are attestations of that sacrifice still. Take the Jewish tabernacles at the time of their great public festivals, when the hearts of the people were throbbing, and their eager feet were speeding toward Jerusalem. Listen to their song as they set out on pilgrimage, "How amiable are Thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts ;" and then as companies of pilgrims join them, all intent upon one shrine, you hear the song intensified and becoming louder—"my soul longeth, yea, even fainteth, for the courts of the Lord ;" and then, as the valley of Baca is gained and passed, and the turrets of the city appear full in view, the chorus swells—"my heart and my flesh cry out for the living God?" What is the meaning of all this? Why this longing, and intense, and vehement desire?

Because in front of that tabernacle is an altar, and there is blood upon that altar. Its horns, its side, the priest's hands as he stands to minister the basins and vessels of sacrifice, are all red with blood ; and that blood tells of God pacified ; and that blood tells, in type, in symbol, of man even to the uttermost forgiven. This is the meeting-place, again I say, between God's mercy and the sinner.

Wherever the cross is uplifted, there any poor sinner that is anxious to be delivered from sin may come, and be sure of meeting God—be sure of meeting God.

Down through the ages there has been the same manifestation, and at last, in the fulness of time, in the midst of the ages, when tradition had given place to history—when the latest bright-browed prophet had uttered forth his burden—Christ died, "the just for the unjust," manifesting Himself upon the world's broad platform, and in the sight of the sun, just in order that on the widest, amplest, broadest, grandest, most magnificent scale God might see the blood.

And it is so yet. Depend upon it, there is no change in this matter,

THE ONLY PLACE OF MEETING

between God and the sinner is the cross of Jesus. The only place where God can receive an offering that shall be acceptable in His sight is the place where the sinner recognizes the Atonement, and trusts upon that Atonement alone.

Oh! it is because of that Atonement that you and I have any hope about us at all. It is because of that Atonement that saints in all ages—some before Christ looking forward to it in faith—multitudes since Christ looking back upon it in faith—have been able to "rejoice in Christ Jesus, and to have no confidence in the flesh." God always sees the blood.

Under the Christian dispensation it is impossible for you to come wrongly to the altar, because God always sees the blood. He sees the blood, and the tears of the Magdalen are dried. He sees the blood, and Simon is triumphant in Satan's sifting time, and walks the yielding sea with faith unfailing. He sees the blood, and Paul triumphs in the refiner's fire, and bears the thorn in the flesh without murmuring, and feels that his keenest agony is his best earnest of Heaven. He sees the blood, and John, wrapped round as with an asbestos garment, comes out of the boiling oil unhurt and glad. He sees the blood and the martyr Stephen breaks away from his murderers to pillow his bleeding head upon his Lord's breast. He sees the blood, and the dying thief from the jaws of enfolding damnation leaps up to a harp and a crown.

Yes, God sees the blood, and the sigh of the thoughtful and of the contrite is registered, and the prayer of the penitent is heard ; and the painstaking endeavor is recorded, and the faith is counted for righteousness, and the struggle after purity is marked, and the affliction is sanctified, and there is light at eventide ; and death, the last enemy, is destroyed, and the trumpet sounds, and the graves open, and the angels welcome and eternity unfolds through its everlasting years the grandeur of its beatific vision ; and all this because this moment, and every moment, God looks and sees the blood.

Brethren, it is because of that blood, and because of the sight of that blood in Heaven that we are at this moment out of hell. Oh! many a time, many a time, think you not that from the scenes of impurity and from the scenes of oppression, from the place where the demon of war sits and howls, from all the places of demoniacal oppression and wrong, from the place where theft and lust and murder prowl and prey—think you not that a cry has gone up many a time—a cry loud and strong—for vengeance against the oppressor?

Aye, and the eye of the Judge, it may be, bright and piercing and quick, has had the sword in hand, and the sword has been brandished for destruction ; and then He has glanced at the Man at His right hand and the bared and brandished weapon has gone back again to its scabbard, and the sinner has been spared.

But for those whose hearts have not been sprinkled with that blood, what can He see but the pollution of sin—sin that demands a fiercer punishment because of the salvation despised and rejected? For them there remaineth nothing but a fearful looking for of judgment. How is it with you? How is it with you?

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 223).

Ernest's Decision.

It was more than ten years since Ernest had turned aside into that way which had seemed good in his eyes, but he had held the estates against the silent protest of his conscience no longer than eight days. He had been fully persuaded, possibly because he wished it, that his step-brother was dead, and that Clifford was fairly and justly his own.

Even during these eight days the conflict had been more on behalf of his daughter than for himself. But now he was resolved to face the reality, to be true. What he could do to shield Rose from suffering he would do; for himself he was almost ready to welcome it.

But the path was no easy one to pursue, though the inward barriers were cast down. It was a solemn night for Ernest, as he deliberated over his immediate action. Charles must be reinstated in the house of his ancestors, while he must turn out into the world, with a shadow attending him which would cling to his name and dim the fair reputation he had won.

He was utterly stripped of all, even of his name, for he would no longer be Clifford of Clifford. Now that the question was settled, he could see his position with great clearness; he must become an almost penniless man, with a suspicion dogging him like his shadow. For how would the world understand what he had done? What would those nearest to him think of it? How would Ruth, how would Rose bear it?

He came down late in the morning and inquired for Charles, who was gone into the village, the servant told him. Charles had not been present in the church the day before, in spite of Rose's entreaties that he would go with her to hear her father preach. The irritation of the continual sight of his elder brother occupying the position that was his by birthright was working within his shallow nature as much deep hatred as he was capable of feeling.

He had met with Ruth as she came out of church, and walked with her over the cliffs to Rockwood, where he stayed the rest of the day, and late on into the night. Julia Rush had found him there on her return from her uncle Dunnit's preaching, and as soon as Miss Ruth left her father and his guest she relaxed her stringent rule, and indulged her patient and Master Charley with something very nearly approaching the carousals so strictly forbidden by Dr. Welsh. Squire Symon's glass she watched over herself, but Charles was at liberty to drink as much as he pleased.

The consequence of this was that Charles was feeling dull and in low spirits this morning. Whenever his spirits sank there was a lurking imp of self-reproach ready to lift up its head and torment him with vexing thoughts of his old father dying, without recalling the curses he had invoked upon him. At these seasons Charles felt himself accursed. He was superstitious; the old stories told him in his earliest years, by the credulous and ignorant fishermen of a former generation, had struck deep roots in his ill-informed and untrained mind.

He had a fixed, unshaken faith in the power of a curse, and of the sheer impossibility of escaping from its malign influence. His father's malediction hung over him like an eternal threat, never to be repealed. This morning he had awoke from a hateful dream, in which he had seen vividly his father's withered face, and heard his broken voice muttering curses against him.

He was making up his mind that he must quit Clifford, where every spot recalled his father, and seek some stirring scene where he might stifle such memories. He strayed absently through the church-yard, and into the church, the door of which was open. The walls of the old chancel were covered with marble tablets to the memory of past Cliffords of Clifford and Symons of Rockwood.

His father's monumental stone was there, containing simply his name and the dates of his birth and death. There was no epitaph, no panegyric on his virtues—"Aged 83." Those were the last characters. All the other Cliffords had records of their having been good fathers, good husbands, and good friends. But no praise had been accorded to this last old man. He had lived and died—that was all. Charles stood gazing at it with maudlin tears in his eyes.

"Father," he muttered, "if you'd forgiven me I'd have given you a better stone than that."

He turned round hastily, hearing a footstep in the aisle. It was Ernest coming up to him. There had been no interview yet between the brothers without a feeling of chilly reserve, and almost a sense of animosity between them. But at this moment Charles was soft-hearted. His thoughts had been dwelling on the past, and he could remember how proud he used to be of his big brother, when he was yet a young boy, not old enough to rush into sin. How good Ernest had been to him when he came home for his holidays! He had indulged him with all the sympathetic kindness a big boy sometimes shows toward a little one.

Charles could recollect riding aloft on his shoulders over the fields, and swimming out with him toward the white-crested waves which tossed and played with him safely while his brother's arm was about him. He could not forget how earnestly Ernest had striven to turn him aside from his mad career of folly and disobedience, nor how he had pleaded with him never to carry out his threat of running away from home. The hardship of seeing Ernest made the head of the family consisted in the fact that he was not really his own elder brother and heir to the estate. It would have been no grievance if Ernest had been born a Clifford.

These thoughts hurried through Charles's mind as Ernest came deliberately up the aisle, and he held out his hand in silence and grasped Ernest's hand warmly. Ernest was startled and touched to the quick. There had been no sign of sensibility or of penitence before in the returned prodigal, yet here he was standing before his father's monument with tears in his eyes. The old love for his younger brother, so soon smothered by the fatal indulgence that had ruined him, sprang afresh into Ernest's heart. He clasped Charles's hand with a hearty pressure.

"Ernest," he said, after a long pause, and speaking in broken accents, "it's an awful thing to have your own father's curse hanging over you! It can never be unsaid now, you know, and it's always working against me. How can a fellow repent and grow better when his father's curse is on him? I'm like Cain; I'm doomed to be a vagabond on the earth as long as I live." Ernest was grasping his hand still, and looking into his face with a grave and steady regard. He could love his prodigal brother now, and feel a keen and deep desire for his welfare. But Charley's words stung him. Was it true that he had been binding his brother's soul to sin during all these years?

"Would you have repented if your father had forgiven you?" he asked.

"How can I tell?" replied Charles almost petulantly. "He died cursing me; he cut me off, his only son."

"He forgave you before he died," answered Ernest; "he forgave you fully, and he restored your birthright to you, as he thought. He gave our mother the will which disinherited you, as he believed, and bade her burn it."

"By George!" exclaimed Charles, turning very pale.

"It was almost the last thing he said in his life," continued Ernest, "at the last hour. Till then he held fast by his resentment, and nobody knew he had forgiven you but me. But at the last he intended to make you amends. There is no curse upon you. Charley, my poor fellow, if that has kept you back from repentance and a better life, I shall rejoice forever in what I am about to do this day."

"My old father forgave me!" he muttered

"Fully," answered Ernest; "he intended destroy his last will, which disinherited y He always meant to destroy it the day you ca home again, and he had it burned, as thought, and as I thought too, on his dea bed. But he had made a mistake; he had the wrong will into the wrong cover. He g my mother the will he wished kept, and k the one he wished destroyed—the one that m me his heir. It was a fatal mistake for me."

"More fatal for me," said Charles with a f sneer. The suspicions that had been awake by Julia Rush came back upon his mind w fresh force. A sudden low suspicion was m fest in his tone and manner which made Er wince.

"It was a mistake full of harm for us bot he said. "It would have been best for me have made the truth known at once; but sev considerations weighed strongly with me. made every possible inquiry after you; I ad tised in every colonial paper, and in the c American papers, begging of you to return.'

"Ah! I saw some," interrupted Char "but I'd heard the old man had cut me off a shilling, and I did not choose to come h to eat humble pie from a half-brother that no right to the property or the name. George! it's a queer story; it'll take a g deal of looking into, this will."

"If you had come home," said Ernest qui "as soon as you saw my advertisement, I sh have reinstated you. I took neither name property till I felt almost satisfied you dead. You have been at home eight or days, and I am ready to relinquish all to you

"Make me master of Clifford?" exclai Charles in intense surprise.

"I have already sent for Uncle Wright,' continued, "to advise us. He will satisfy that I am acting in perfect fairness. There be some little delay, but from this time you the sole owner of the estates in my Charles, let this be the turning-point in life. You are not a foolish, headstrong lad listen to reason. You will step at once in good position, with a fair income—larger any of your forefathers had, and sufficient the life of a country gentleman who looks his own lands and manages his own af You will have considerable power and influ for which you must one day give accoun God.

"If you have been troubled by the tho of your father's anger and curse, how more you should be afraid of God's! I plore you, make this the point at which will turn away from your follies and sins seek God's forgiveness. You would have so your father's forgiveness if you had come before he had died. Remember you have si against God as well as against him."

"I have, Ernest, I have!" sobbed Ch overcome for the moment, but for the mo only, by conflicting feelings. It was charac tic of him that he gave no thought to E and the change in his circumstances. Th lurking terror of his father's curse was forever. He had been forgiven and reins by the poor old man, whom he had deserted whom he could now afford to forget. H no longer the penniless, dependent brothe ble to be cut adrift at any time, and sent into the cold, inhospitable world.

He was the real master and owner of Cli and Ernest the supplanter was giving u birthright to him. It was his own place; else could have any claim to it? He must g know all the ins and outs of this extraord story. Why had he been left wandering a in poverty and loneliness, while there was a estate waiting for him? He should like to a clear understanding about it.

"Not here," said Ernest, when he gave ance to this wish. "Your uncle Wright aged all your father's affairs, and as soon comes I will go through it all. I wish to nothing, nor to keep any thing back. I wi for my own soul, and I pray God yours may be delivered also."

"I wonder how long he will be?" rejoined Charles impatiently. "You're a parson, Ernest, and bound to talk good, you know; but I can't think of any thing else till I know all. I'm glad enough to know the old man forgave me," he added in a lower voice.

"He forgave you fully," Ernest reiterated with the greater emphasis, as he saw that his father's pardon had taken hold on his shallow nature.

"And I'll promise to forgive you fully," said Charles, once more holding out his hand to his brother; "yes, I'll forgive you beforehand, though I don't clearly understand it all. You need not be afraid of me, Ernest."

He spoke in a tone of superiority, such as Ernest had heard often in the later years of his brother's boyhood, when they had half angered and half amused him. He could not feel either anger or amusement at this moment. With a foreboding heart he looked earnestly into his handsome face, with its voluptuous, vacillating expression. Was he called upon to relinquish all the goodly work of his life into grasping, selfish hands like these, and trust all his generous schemes to a self-indulgent, worthless nature like this?

But Ernest could no longer do evil that good might come. He had entered into the kingdom of realities, where perfect integrity was essential, at whatever sacrifice. He must go straight onward, and trust all results to God.

"I'll go and meet Uncle Wright," said Charles.

For a short time Ernest remained alone in the church, pacing up and down the sunlit aisle. He almost marvelled at himself that he could ever run into such a snare as to give up his station for the possession of his stepfather's lands. What would he not have given to be merely the vicar of Clifford once again, with no aspirations after a wider sphere!

Charles hurried away to the stables—his own ls now—and ordered the groom to saddle Ernest's horse for him. The man demurred, and said his master might want to ride himself, whereupon Charles struck him sharply across the shoulders, quite after the manner of old times. He felt himself the master again.

He did not spare the horse as he galloped on the highway to Dartford, for he was impatient to see his uncle and pour out the whole r as far as he knew it, to him. He overshot his mark in his eagerness, and missed his uncle, who had taken another road to Clifford.

(To be continued.)

THE WHEAT AND THE TARES.

S.S. Lesson for April 18, Matt. 13 : 24–30, 37–43. Golden Text, ver. 39. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

The subject of our lesson for to-day is the second of seven parables which illustrate the dispensation under which we are living. It is worthy of note that while the last six of these are likened to the kingdom of heaven, the Sower and the Seed, which is the introductory parable, is not. There is a reason for this, because it illustrates not the kingdom, the Church, but the preparation for the kingdom—i.e., the preaching of the Gospel.

But when the Lord begins to speak of the kingdom of heaven, His Church on earth, He first shows us in the Wheat and the Tares, the Mustard Seed and the Leaven, the outward aspect of the professing Church, and then alone with His disciples He explains the Wheat and the Tares, and proceeds to enter upon the inward aspect of His Church in the parables of the Treasure hid in the field and the Merchantman seeking goodly Pearls. It then concludes with another parable teaching the same lesson as the Wheat and the Tares, for the mixture of converted and unconverted is typified as much by the net which gathered of every kind as the sowing of tares by the enemy in the field where the owner had sown good seed. And this last parable may represent the widespread preaching of the Gospel in our own day where so many are gathered into the outward profession of Christianity waiting for the sifting-time which will surely come.

"The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed good seed in his field: but while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way" (vers. 24, 25). What a lesson we have here! While men sleep the enemy of souls is awake and busy, and it is just when the children of God are inactive, quietly reposing in security, that the enemy does the most damage. Let a congregation become satisfied with their religious life and walk and flatter themselves that all is well with them, and say, "I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing" (Rev. 3 : 17), and they may be sure that the sower of tares is at hand. "When the blade was sprung up and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares also." Only when the wheat was in ear could the difference be perceived. There was life in the tares as well as the wheat, but the fruit was altogether lacking. "Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them" (Matt. 7 : 20).

In our Lord's explanation of the parable to the disciples He declares, "He that soweth the good seed is the Son of Man: the field is the world: the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one: the enemy that sowed them is the devil." It is Jesus Himself who sows His own children in the world—a strange field, one would think, for the development of that which is divine, and yet all things are possible to God. And as Jesus the Son of God lived a life which was divine in its every thought and word and work, in our nature, in our world, and in our circumstances, so has He made it possible for us also to live such a life on earth. Let us never forget that "we walk by faith not by sight" (2 Cor. 5 : 7). According to all appearances it would seem that to plant a child of God in the midst of a worldly family, with all kinds of temptations to seek the honor, pleasure, and riches of the world, which are exactly adapted to allure his natural heart, would be ruin to all that was spiritual in him. And yet under the ordering of God it answered with Joseph in Egypt, with Daniel in Babylon, etc., etc.

God has not set His children in the world without giving them influences counter to those of the world, and much more powerful. "Greater is he that is in you than he that is in the world" (1 John 4 : 4). And thus we find not only such as Joseph and Moses standing before the kings of Egypt, Elijah and Elisha before the wicked kings of Israel, and Judah, Ezra, Nehemiah, and Daniel before the kings of Babylon and Persia, but also the little captive maid (2 Kings 5) in her humble sphere could flourish in the unlikely atmosphere of Naaman's house in Syria. "If God be for us, who can be against us?" (Rom. 8 : 31).

The servants of the householder drew his attention to the tares, and said, "Wilt thou then that we go and gather them up? But he said, Nay, lest while ye gather up the tares ye root up also the wheat with them. Let both grow together until the harvest," etc. Oh, how little have we learned this lesson! What a darling idea it has been of almost all earnest souls to weed out the unspiritual from their congregations and retain only the children of the kingdom, or to separate and form churches of such? And yet what has it come to? Where do we find that man's separation has produced a church full of love, of power, of holiness, etc.? Alas! too often the divisive spirit, which is contrary to love, has been fostered by the very zeal and jealousy for God which led to a separation, and a spirit of judgment which is the exact contrary of the spirit of Christ has been produced. Perhaps the deep humiliation of being linked in our church life with those who are unconverted may prove the most blessed, although painful discipline for the true Christian who understands the personal danger of such, and feels also the detriment done to the cause of the Master by the presence of these tares in the professing church.

The mustard seed and the leaven are also types of the mixed condition of the outward Church. One grain of mustard seed only was sown—a seed which is called the least of all seeds; but when it is grown it is the greatest among herbs, and becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof. Whatever the mustard seed may designate, it is meant to convey to us that of which the Lord makes the least, and of which man makes the most. The Apostle Peter warns the "elders" against being lords over God's heritage, teaching them rather to be ensamples to the flock (1 Pet. 5 : 3); and the Lord Himself said, when His disciples had been disputing which among them should be the greatest, "If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all and servant of all" (Mark 9 : 35). Had the pastors of the Church from the beginning been rather servants of all than lords over God's heritage, "the birds of the air," the unclean spirits, could not so readily have found their place among the branches. The leaven again leavens the whole lump, but what is this leaven? Not certainly Christ, but the powerless God dishonoring religion of our day, the name to live, the having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof (Rev. 3 : 1; 2 Tim. 3 : 5).

We turn from these parables of the external thing which is called the Church of Christ, and which extends over all countries so-called Christian, which includes all state churches and all nonconformist churches, for we are all too sadly alike in our declension to attempt making distinctions among us, and we read, "The kingdom of heaven is like unto treasure hid in a field; the which when a man hath found, he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field" (ver. 44). Here we have, not the proclamation of salvation, for that is by no means hidden, and can never be bought. That is "without money and without price" (Isa. 55 : 1). That is commissioned to be preached to all the world, to every creature (Mark 16 : 15). But the hidden treasure when it is found is hidden, not proclaimed, and for joy thereof the finder goeth and selleth all that he hath and buyeth that field.

Now there are thousands of souls who have rejoiced in God's pardoning love through Christ, and who can yet live very comfortably without losing their value for the things of this world. Many converted men are as keen in the way of business as unconverted men, many are as sensitive about the world's opinions. But such souls have never discovered the treasure. Union with Christ as the Spouse of their souls has never become the one all-absorbing passion of their lives. He has not as yet so shone into their souls that every other light has grown dim in such a radiance. The ennobling call to be partakers of the divine nature having escaped the corruption which is in the world through lust (2 Pet. 1 : 4), has not dazzled the holy ambition of the eternal life which is in them. Once that Christ is known as the hidden treasure, there is no more restless dissatisfaction if our motives are misinterpreted; He knows, and that is enough.

But in order to possess this treasure he who finds it goes and sells all that he has. He is called to so great a partnership—"joint heirs with Christ"—that all which is not of eternal value is regarded as worthless; he sells it that he may buy the other. Oh! if we had only eyes to see how great is the vocation to which we are called, to stand on God's side of every question, the side of right, the side of power, the side of holiness; that we are called to think, speak, and act divinely, because the spirit of God dwells in us, surely the littleness which makes us cling to our petty rights, our unsatisfying pleasures, our mistaken and near-sighted will, must give way, and we should seek God's treasure at any cost. The seeker for the treasure must buy not the treasure only, but the field which contained it; and the child of God who finds it as the hidden treasure and the pearl learns to take the world upon his heart; he becomes large-hearted, because the narrowing principle of self has ceased to act.

FOREIGN TOPICS.

The British Parliamentary Elections, so far as their results have been declared, give a decided gain to the Liberal party. Three hundred and eighty-eight of the 650 members of Parliament have been chosen. Of these 235 are classed as Liberals, 137 as Conservatives, and 16 as Home Rulers. The same constituencies returned at the last election, in 1874, 179 Liberals, 193 Conservatives, and 16 Home Rulers. There are still 262 members to be elected, and should these be of the same party as those chosen at the last election, the Liberals will have a majority of 12 in the new House of Commons. It is probable, however, that the reaction which has reversed the position of parties in the constituencies already heard from, will operate in the others, and if so the Liberals will have a good working majority in the House. We are sorry to notice among the list of new members elected the name of Charles Bradlaugh, the notorious infidel, who is elected by the town of Northampton.

Speculations are already rife as to who will be the new Premier, for it is generally expected that Lord Beaconsfield will accept the verdict of the constituencies as a condemnation of his government, and resign before Parliament meets. Mr. Gladstone is unquestionably the most popular man in the party, but as he resigned the leadership in 1874, it is expected that some other member of the party—possibly Lord Granville—will be invited to form a ministry. The duty of indicating a successor devolves on Lord Beaconsfield, who, as adviser of the Queen, will recommend her to summon the statesman he considers best fitted for the post. The success of the Liberals has caused considerable rejoicing in Russia, but other European governments are said to regret the result of the election. There is no doubt that the foreign policy of England under a Liberal government will be radically different from that of the last six years.

Mr. Parnell has met with a Rebuff at an Election in Ireland. Since he returned he has assumed a position many leaders of political opinion have considered somewhat dictatorial. At a meeting held at Enniscorthy, on March 28th, to select a candidate for Parliamentary election, Mr. Parnell endeavored to get a friend of his own nominated; but the meeting was so decidedly opposed to Mr. Parnell and his friend, that they were not allowed to speak. Mr. Parnell was pelted with rotten eggs, his clothing torn, and his hat smashed. It was only by the intervention of the police armed with rifles that he was rescued and conveyed in safety to the railroad station.

In Roscommon a large and influential meeting also protested against Mr. Parnell's dictation; and at Cork, where he has caused himself to be nominated, he has been denounced by the Bishop and other influential citizens. He was invited to contest Sligo County, but as he desired to represent Cork, he nominated his secretary to run in his place. The act was deemed so insulting to the constituency, that the nomination was withdrawn.

The French Government gives Evidence of its determination to rid the country of the Jesuits. The laws under which the expulsion is based are the subject of much debate throughout France; the Jesuits and their friends the Legitimists denouncing them as obsolete, while Bonapartists and the majority of the Republicans assert their validity. The Jesuits have announced their intention of contesting the question in the courts of law, and the Bishop of Angers says that the whole Roman Catholic Episcopate is ready to rise in defence of the Jesuits. The government says that the struggle is one for sovereignty, and that there will be no peace or permanence for the Republic so long as the Jesuits are allowed to control and direct the education of the rising generation.

A New Object of Idolatrous Worship has been set up in Russia. Its claims have been established in the eyes of the ignorant and superstitious people by the late explosion. In the guard-room of the Winter Palace, the scene of the late terrible explosion, there was a picture of the Virgin Mary. The explosion having destroyed the frame but left the picture intact, the latter is credited with the miraculous preservation of the Emperor, and has become an object of the deepest veneration.

Thirty-three Years' Waiting for a Teacher has been the experience of some islanders near the coast of China. In 1835, Dr. Meadows, in making a journey along the coast of China, called for a few hours at a small island, where he distributed some tracts and small religious books. The island remained unvisited by any European for thirty-three years, when a missionary went thither and began to preach the Gospel. To his astonishment, one of his hearers said, "We know that doctrine;" and on being asked whence they had obtained their knowledge, the man replied, "Many years ago a foreigner came here and left some little books and other writings, which contained that doctrine which you preach. He gave them to my father, who charged me when dying to read them, and keep them carefully, and perhaps some day God would send some one who would teach us the doctrine more fully." The result of the seed sown by Dr. Meadows, thirty-three years before, was the formation of a church which speedily numbered sixty members, and is now in a healthy and thriving state.

The Wedding Present to Dr. Fraser, the Bishop of Manchester, England, will take the form of a public benefit. The committee in charge of the funds have decided to devote the whole of the money to the foundation of a scholarship at Owen's College, to be called the Bishop Fraser Scholarship. This scheme has the decided approval of the bishop, who expressed his preference when the idea was first broached that it might issue in a public rather than a personal profit.

English Bishops for China.—The London Standard says: "An anonymous donor has given to the treasurers of the Colonial Bishoprics Fund 10.000*l.* for the endowment of a missionary bishopric in North China. The donor has stipulated that the selection of the bishop shall be vested absolutely in the Archbishop of Canterbury for the time being; and that all existing missions of the Church of England shall be under the bishop about to be appointed. These are at present two in number—one at Chefoo, maintained by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, the other at Pekin, supported by the Church Missionary Society. The Colonial Bishoprics Fund has added 1000*l.* to the endowment, and the Christian Knowledge Society is about to vote another 1000*l.*"

The Light in a Clergyman's Window in the early morning hours was the first link in a chain that ultimately ended by God's blessing in the conversion of an English workman. During a recent mission a poor man was asked to attend one of the services. At first he refused, but afterwards said, "I will go to hear that parson who has the light in his window." On being asked to explain himself, he said that no matter however early he went to his work, he always saw a light in the window of a clergyman's study which he passed every day, and he thought that preaching must be the best worth hearing that had so much preparation beforehand. He went accordingly, and the sermon was blest to his conversion. Diligence in the service of the Master made an impression on the workman's mind more distinct than that produced even by direct appeals.

Thousands of Weddings in one Day.—The marriage season next May, at Guzerat, in the Punjaub—where certain caste, the cultivators, or Kudwa Kunbis, marry only once in twelve years—will, says the London Graphic, be unusually gay this year, for some thousands of weddings will take place owing to the cheapness of food. As no one can be married in the interval, the merest children are often amongst the brides and bridegrooms. There are but two marriage days, which the Times of India tells us are chosen in the following curious mann Representatives from twelve villages assem in the temple of their tutelary goddess M Different dates are written on small pieces paper, which are rolled into pills, and a yo girl is chosen to pick up any two of the pell These are opened, and the two dates named the paper are announced to the caste throu out the district. There will be a general fe val and great rejoicing, in which the whole p ulation will participate. The festival is sug tive, though different in all other ways, of universal rejoicing of God's people when Redeemed of the Lord will sit down at Marriage Supper of the Lamb.

Brigands in Sicily.—Brigands Recently ried away a son from his father at Valle Vita, promising to restore him on paymer £6000. The father gave information to the lice, and by their activity the brigands were covered, and a cave near Caltabellotta named as the place where the boy was t found. The father and the soldiers, on ente the cave, found the bones of the boy lying at the flesh having been eaten away by dogs vultures. The boy had been murdered by brigands in revenge for the supposed treac of the father in giving information to the pc

The Fever Epidemic in Dr. Barnardo's H in England has abated. There have been fresh seizures, and those who have been atta were, by the latest accounts, recovering. Barnardo is now endeavoring to secure fr charge, or at a low rental, some large hou the seaside, where the convalescent may r health and strength. One hundred and six the inmates have been prostrated by the dis

Mrs. M. Baxter, whose Expositions of Sunday-school lessons appear every week in journal, has been lately preaching near D dorf, in Germany. She has for some time su greatly from neuralgia, but is looking sol the Lord and not to human remedies for Prayer is asked on her behalf for patience faith and deliverance in God's time. She remarkably healed by faith a year ago strengthened, though she had been forme invalid. But healing by faith does not those who are the subjects of it exemption all future attacks of illness, which are perm by God in order to call faith and trust into cise, and for spiritual teaching.

Fate of an Actress.—An Actress, who often played her part before applauding ences, and had seen many strange vicissitu life, was recently found at Newcastle, Eng in a coal-hole, drunk, with a bottle of whis her side. Some of the friends connected the Salvation Army invited her to a me She attended, signed the pledge, and has been converted. That woman's home, if i be so called, was one of worst dens in New She was got out of the place, and a room for two shillings a week. The first art furniture she purchased was a bucket; sh it would do to fetch water in, and when upside down would do to sit on. She ha an actress, and had two husbands killed same profession—one by falling from a tr but she had been discarded by all when fo the Hallelujah Army. Some of the lady e lists attended to her wants, and she is now well.

Perils in Palestine.—The Rev. T. F. W writes from Jerusalem: "Quite lately I Jaffa. During the journey down I expe a signal instance of God's protecting ca was dark, when we suddenly came upo bodies of two murdered men lying acro road. The horses shied, and we had a escape from being thrown over the bank. at that part of the road is very steep murdered men were a rich Jew from Jer and a peasant from a neighboring village murder could not have taken place muc than half an hour before we arrived on th and the robbers must have been hidden where in the neighborhood when we but God protected us from harm."

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

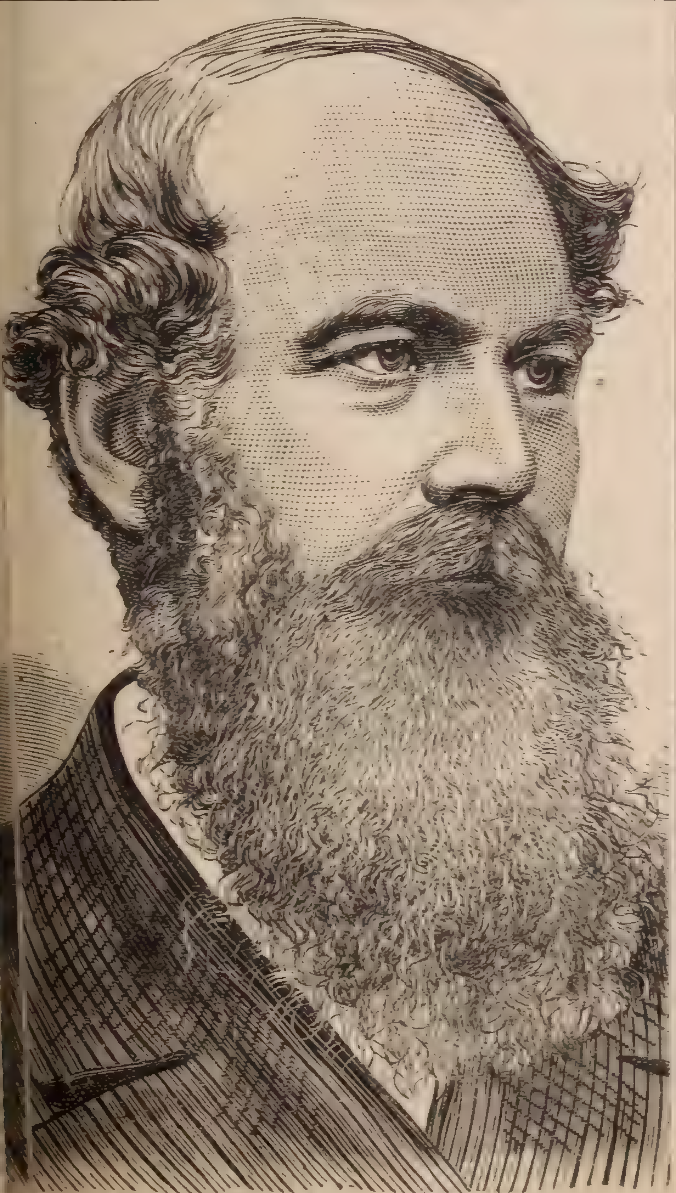
ublished at 63 Bible House, New York City, and 2 Ivy Lane, London. Edited in London by the Rev. M. Baxter, in New York by Mr. B. Aitken.

This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. ALMAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also occasionally a Sermon by the Rev. W. MORLEY PUNSHON, LL.D., the celebrated Methodist Minister, Rev. W. M· AY AITKEN, or some other Eminent Preacher; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

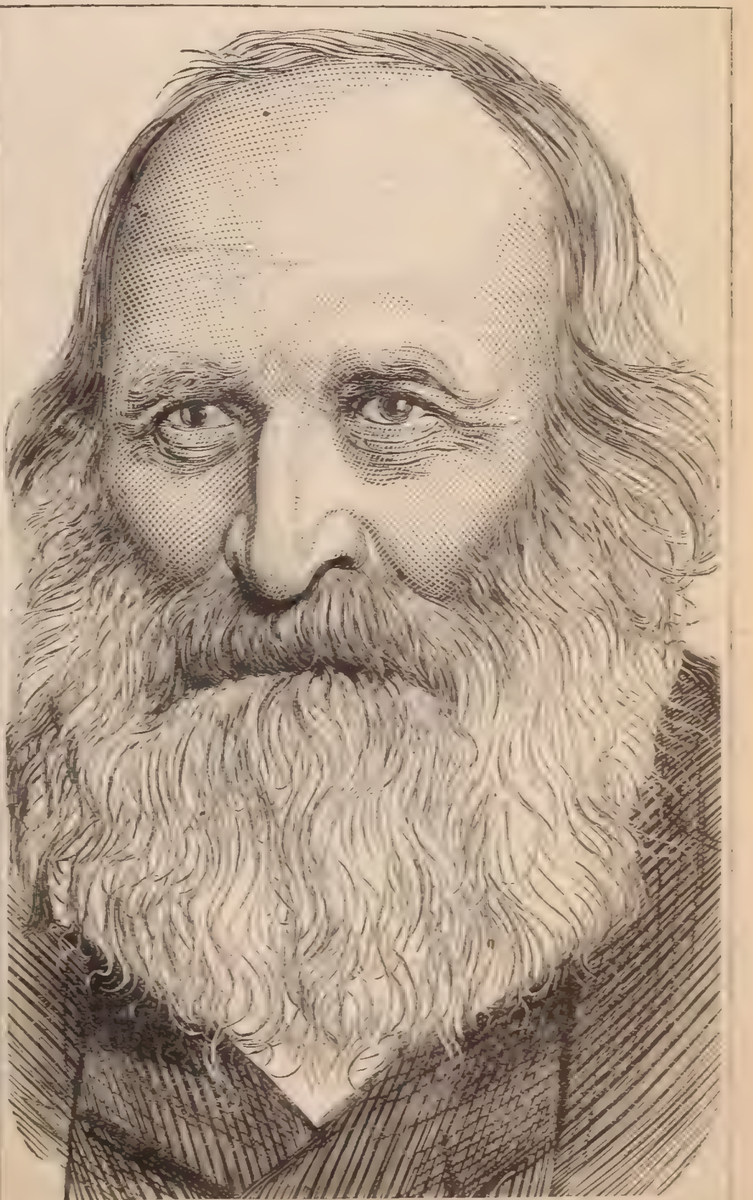
Single Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, APRIL 22, 1880. 14th Year. No. 17—New Series.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

RTRAITS OF REV. J. C. RYLE, M.A., and the late REV. ALEXANDER KEITH, D.D., with Sketches of their Lives.
ISTAKES ABOUT THE SOUTH CORRECTED; A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage.
E LAST OF THE O'G.'s. A Short Serial Story y the Author of "Arnold Percival Montaigne."
E SALVATION ARMY: Progress of the Work.
WHAT COMING WARS MAY WE EXPECT? by Rev. M. Baxter (Continued).
CURRENT EVENTS: Congress—The Republican State Conventions—Two Prominent Ministers Dead—List of May Meetings—A Credulous Planter Swindled by Gypsies—$10.000 for a Drink of Water—Fifteen Thousand Children Fed, etc.
A Chicago Man's Lease of Life, an Incident Related by Mr. Moody—An Awkward Mistake.
A POWERFUL REASON FOR COMING TO CHRIST; A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
A WEIGHT OF WEALTH (Continued).
The Transfiguration; S. S. Lesson by Mrs. M. Baxter.
FOREIGN TOPICS—The English Ministry—Execution of the Spanish Attempted Regicide—A Man Entombed in a Tree—Anxiety about a British Ship—The Ordeal of a Hindoo Priest—What Whiskey is Good For—A New Implement of War, etc.



REV. J. C. RYLE,
The Eminent Evangelical Writer.



REV. DR. A. KEITH,
The Celebrated Author of "Evidence of Prophecy," &c.

THE REV. J. C. RYLE, M.A.,

Author of Evangelical Tracts.
Appointed first Bishop of Liverpool.

School Life and Companionship—University Career—His Love of Athletics—The Commercial Crisis of 1841—Becomes a Clergyman—Scenes of Labor—Effect of Mr. Ryle's Preaching—Becomes Vicar of Stradbroke—Reputation and Success as a Tract-writer—His Picture of Old English Churches—Torpor—His various Useful Publications.

Among the evangelical clergymen of the Church of England at the present time, Canon Ryle is distinguished as a bold and unflinching opponent of the Ritualistic movement in that Church, and as a prolific and successful writer of popular religious tracts. Some account of a clergyman whose life has been one of incessant activity, and whose numerous and widely diffused publications have done so much for the cause of Christian truth in this country as well as in England, and who has now been appointed to a bishopric, will no doubt be acceptable to our readers.

The eldest son of John Ryle, Esq., first M.P. for Macclesfield in the Reformed House of Commons, John Charles Ryle was born at Park House, near Macclesfield, on the 10th of May, 1816. At Eton, where he was first educated, he was a pupil of Dr. Hawtrey, and there he associated with the late Vice-Chancellor Wickens, Lord Lyttelton, Canon Lonsdale, the present Lord Kinnaird, and others who have attained to eminence or usefulness in the present day. From Eton he went to Oxford University, and studied first under Dr. Short, afterward Bishop of Adelaide, Australia, and then under Dean Liddell, the well-known head of Christ Church. At Oxford he was a contemporary of such men as Stanley, Jowett, Rawlinson, and Waldegrave; and was first-class in classics in 1837. His name will be found in the same first-class with that of Dean Stanley. Notwithstanding his honors, it, however, requires to be said that both at school and college Mr. Ryle was better known as a cricketer than as a scholar. He was successively captain of the Eton and the Oxford Elevens. Indeed, he has been known to regret that he gave so much time to cricket, and has expressly said that it would have been better had he devoted himself more to literary work and less to athletic amusements.

Mr. Ryle was not originally intended for the ministry. His father was a banker both at Manchester and Macclesfield. Till the age of twenty-five his eldest son looked forward to entering the House of Commons as member for his native town of Macclesfield. The overruling hand of God's Providence, however, disarranged this plan. In the commercial crisis of 1841 both Mr. Ryle's banks were obliged to stop payment, and the banker himself was completely ruined. In that year his eldest son left his native county with nothing but his University degree to help him on in the world, not knowing what was before him. After a short interval of doubt and hesitation as to his future course, and after declining the situation of private secretary to a well-known statesman, Mr. Ryle finally decided on entering the ministry. He was accordingly ordained deacon in 1841, and priest in 1842, by Dr. Sumner, Bishop of Winchester.

Entering on

MINISTERIAL WORK,

Mr. Ryle was first curate of Exbury, in the parish of Fawley, in the New Forest, near Southampton. In 1844 he was appointed rector of Helmingham, in Suffolk, by Lord Lyndhurst, at that time Lord Chancellor. Helmingham is a small agricultural parish, with a population of three hundred souls, without a village or even a shop or public-house, lying nine miles north of Ipswich. Helmingham Church, though small, has a high square tower, and occupies a beautifully retired spot. It is full of ancient monuments of the Tollemache family, to whom the parish almost entirely belongs. Like almost all Suffolk churches, it is built of flint, with stone groins and window mouldings. In the quiet and rural retirement of Helmingham, Mr. Ryle continued for seventeen years. The smallness of his charge enabled him to write much, and to do good service in various ways as a speaker and preacher, both at Ipswich and in other parts of Suffolk.

Mr. Ryle's preaching was, from the first, pointed, vigorous, and searching. The parishioners of Helmingham were fortunate in acquiring and retaining so long a pastor of such evangelical fervor and earnestness. At the age of twenty-eight he preached to them his first sermon, the substance of which, under the title, "I have something to say to thee," was printed and privately circulated among his people. It has since had a wider circulation, and was, perhaps, the first of that numerous series of tracts, the product of his busy pen, so widely and so largely read in this and other lands.

In 1861 Mr. Ryle was presented to the Vicarage of Stradbroke, by the present Bishop of Norwich. Stradbroke is a large, isolated, rural parish, of about thirteen hundred and fifty people, halfway between Norwich and Ipswich, and seven miles from any railway station. It is the principal village of the Hoxne Hundreds, which contain twenty-four parishes. Strange as it may appear, there is neither a mile of railway nor a resident lawyer in the whole Hundreds; nor, until after Mr. Ryle's appointment to Stradbroke, was there even a money-order office or a telegraph wire.

The quiet parishes of Stradbroke and Helmingham will, however, be remembered in aftertime as associated with the active efforts of the subject of our notice, who has striven so hard to maintain the pure Protestant character of the Church of England, and to commend to all classes the vital doctrines of evangelical Christianity.

Mr. Ryle has published more than two hundred and fifty tracts, varying in size from a handbill of one page to forty-eight pages; and these tracts have obtained an aggregate circulation of more than two millions in Great Britain and Ireland. Many of them have been translated into the French, German, Portuguese, Italian, and other continental languages, as well as into Welsh and Gaelic.

The success of Mr. Ryle as

A TRACT WRITER

is owing, first, to his own vivid apprehension of what are known as the distinctive doctrines of the Pauline theology; and, secondly, to his hearty and home-going style of writing—a style which at once arrests and commands the reader's attention. But while, by his evangelical writings, Mr. Ryle has done his utmost to commend the doctrines of free grace, and to lead sinful men to the Saviour, he has also striven, by earnest advocacy, to remove the evils which cling to the Church of England, and to make it a more efficient exponent of its own doctrinal standards, and the trustworthy guide and instructor of the English people. By various oral addresses, and by repeated publications, he has sought to influence and direct the opinions of Churchmen.

The period between 1730 and 1830 Mr. Ryle showed was specially instructive, as a period of remarkable revival from abounding religious declension and spiritual deadness. The following is his picture of the under Whitefield and Wesley: "The Church of England existed in those days with her admirable Articles, her time-honored liturgy, her parochial system, her Sunday services, and her ten thousand clergy. The Nonconformist body existed with its hardly-won liberty and its free pulpit. But one account, unhappily, may be given of both parties. They existed, but they could hardly be said to have lived. They did nothing; they were sound asleep. The curse of the Uniformity Act seemed to rest on the Church of England; the blight of ease and freedom from persecution seemed to rest on Dissenters. Natural theology, without a single distinguishing doctrine of Christianity, cold morality, or barren orthodoxy, formed the staple teaching, bot in church and chapel. Sermons everywhe were little better than miserable moral essay utterly devoid of any thing likely to awake convert, or save souls. Both parties seemed last agreed on one point, and that was, to l the devil alone, and to do nothing for hearts ar souls. And as for the weighty truths for whic Hooper and Latimer had gone to the stake, ar Baxter and scores of Puritans had gone to gac they seemed clean forgotten, and laid on tl shelf."

STATE OF THE ENGLISH CHURCHES PRIOR TO THE GREAT AWAKENING

Mr. Ryle lamented that the men who accor plished this great work are not enough known ai not enough valued; and he has himself done b best from time to time to call attention to the merits and labors. His most systematic effort this direction was the preparation of a series papers for a popular periodical, and which, co lected and republished in 1869, form his inte esting and instructive volume, "The Christi Leaders of Last Century." His object in tl publication, he informs us, was to bring befo English Churchmen and the Christian public a comprehensive form the lives, characters, a work of such men as Whitefield, Wesley, R maine, Rowlands, Grimshaw, Berridge, Ver Toplady, Hervey, Walker, and Fletcher. believe," he says, "that, excepting Luther a his Continental contemporaries, and our o martyred reformers, the world has seen no su men since the days of the apostles.

It was not by dint of mere earnestness, or negative teaching, as Mr. Ryle shows, that results achieved by Whitefield and his conte poraries were brought about, but by a style preaching at once thoroughly doctrinal, positi dogmatical, and distinct. The subject-mat of that preaching was the sufficiency and supre acy of Holy Scripture, the total corruption human nature, the death of Christ as the c satisfaction for man's sin, justification by fa the universal necessity of heart-conversion a new creation by the Holy Spirit, the insep ble connection between true faith and perso holiness, together with God's eternal hatred sin and love toward the sinner. Such ind are the themes which form the pith and esse of Mr. Ryle's own pulpit discourses and pra cal writings. The burden of his preachin one word, is Christ, the refuge and rest of si men.

As a means of promoting the evangelical and fervor of the Church, Mr. Ryle has iss several collections of hymns. His "Spiri Songs," first and second series, were follo by his "Hymns for the Church on Earth;" recently he has published a new collection, ui the title of "The Additional Hymn-book." the preface to this volume, he says that hymns which are plain, simple, and manly those which the people learn to love most remember best. And so as to tunes. Mr. is satisfied that the hymn-tunes that are r popular draw out a burst of singing, and cor a distinct, clearly-marked air, and have an i scribable swing, life, and decision about t from beginning to end.

With a man of Mr. Ryle's earnestness deep convictions, and at a time when car principles are at stake, it was inevitable many of his writings should take a disti controversial form. He sees clearly that is a Romeward movement, leading to Po and he has in very various ways done his be resist it. "For peace's sake," he excla "let us be ready to concede much. In ind ent matters let us allow the utmost liber men's consciences. But we must never gi Christ's truth. If any persons want to hav sacrament of the Lord's Supper formally clared to be a sacrifice, or want a sacrificial to be formally legalized at the communion- of the Church of England, let us resolve fi that we will never consent.

RITUALISM

Low Churchman and Evangelical as he would be a mistake to suppose that Mr. wishes to compress English Churchmanship roove of his own party. In what is meant a comprehensive church, he sees that there be room for the different schools of opin- n but "when the Reformed Church of Eng- renounces her Protestant principles, and back to Popery," then, he says, "her life lory will have clean departed, and she will worth preserving. She will be an offence od, and not a resting-place for any true ian."

T most laborious of all Mr. Ryle's numerous y undertakings is his "Commentary on ew Testament." This work entitles him e a place among the most able and pious mentators of the present day.

r. Ryle," says a writer, "is one of the ngers of the good news sent to the fallen of mankind, and he simply applies himself work of his commission. In this work he ng and eloquent. To this he devotes him- solutely. He meddles with nothing else. s great gifts for the task. He is known ery Low Church congregation, and on Evangelical platform in England. His verywhere revives the flagging attention. is a healthy force about the man that people up, and his power is greater than e words would seem to imply."

Mr Ryle was appointed rural dean of the Hundreds in 1869, and afterward honor- on of Norwich. He was then presented deanery of Salisbury, and has now been ishop of the new and important diocese rpool where we trust he may prove in- gly useful, and the divine blessing may a ndantly upon him.

ATE REV. ALEXANDER KEITH, D.D.

-Education—Choice of Profession—His Book—Occasion of its Publication—Sub- it Works on Prophecy—Visit to the -Conversion of a Consul—Establishment Jewish Mission—Interesting Episode— ation of Ministerial Work—His Last at Buxton.

KEITH, whose portrait appears on our ge, has been widely known for many the author of several valuable books on . He was born at Keithall, Aberdeen- otland, in the year 1791, and died on ight, February 15th, at Buxton, Derby- the advanced age of eighty-nine. He son of a highly respected clergyman, ived his education at Marischal College, n.

ing his father's profession, he was set- Cyrus, Kincardineshire, as a minister stablished Presbyterian Church of Scot- the year 1816. In 1823 he appeared be- world as an author, and published the ion of his book entitled "Evidence of h of the Christian Religion from the it of Prophecy," which has since passed upward of forty editions, and has been into various languages.

iblication of this book arose from a cir- e in his ministerial experience. A lady of his congregation requested him to er husband and persuade him to ac- her to church. He did so, but found and of the lady very sceptical as to the he Bible, and the divine origin of Chris- With this gentleman Dr. Keith had cussions, in which he presented and n his attention many proofs that the he word of God. Among others Dr. uced the present condition of the Jews and unanswerable witness to the truth anity. His thoughts were awakened ore ample investigation of the subject, ork, since widely known as Dr. Keith's mediate result.

EVIDENCE OF PROPHECY,"

s intrinsic merit and the literary ex- this his maiden literary production, ation of its writer's reputation as a was established. A number of other works on cognate subjects followed at intervals, including "The Signs of the Times," published in 1831; "Demonstration of the Truth of the Christian Religion," in 1838; "The Land of Israel," in 1843; "The Harmony of Prophecy," in 1851; and "The History and Destiny of the World and of the Church according to Scripture," in 1861. He also published some controversial papers in reply to the Rev. E. B. Elliot's "Horæ Apocalypticæ," and to Dean Stanley's "Sinai and Palestine."

In 1839 Dr. Keith was one of a deputation—the other members of which were the Rev. Dr. Andrew Bonar, the Rev. R. M'Cheyne, and the Rev. Dr. Black, of Aberdeen—sent by the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland to Palestine and other Eastern countries, with the laudable purpose in view of founding a mission to God's ancient and scattered people Israel.

During this visit to the scenes of Scripture history he gathered, with his accustomed sagacity and assiduity, a vast amount of information, which he subsequently published under the title of "A Narrative of the Mission of the Jews," and which, with characteristic skill and manifest appropriateness, he also turned to account in the later editions of his principal works, in the way of supporting the positions therein maintained.

The Rev. R. Rowton, of Buxton, says: "I inquired of him the result of the of M'Cheyne and A. Bonar, Black and himself, as a deputation from the Church of Scotland, in 1859, with reference to a Jewish missionary effort there, and he replied that there was then no opening there, but that, returning homeward through Hungary, he was the instrument of conversion, apparently, to the then Archduchess of Austria; and with the promise of her protection during her life, he was able, on his return home, to recommend Pesth as the centre of a Scottish mission to the Jews, that Dr. Duncan was selected as first missionary, and the Rev. Adolphe Saphir (the well-known Presbyterian minister of London), and his father as the first-fruits of the Mission."

MISSION TO PALESTINE

The Free Church of Scotland Monthly Record for April says: "It was through an Arabic translation of one of his books ('Demonstration of the Truth of the Christian Religion') that Dr. Meshâkah, of Damascus, more than thirty years ago was converted to the faith of Evangelical Christianity. Dr. Meshakah was consul for the United States in Damascus; and his writings have been more influential on the side of Protestant Evangelical Christianity in Syria since 1848, and in Arabic-speaking countries generally, than those of any other writer. Meshâkah was a man of some authority in the Greek Catholic Church, and his conversion made a great stir; his books are still regarded in the East as standard works in the controversy between the Oriental and the Evangelical Churches."

In 1840, owing to precarious health, Dr. Keith had to relinquish the active duties of his ministerial charge, and his son, the Rev. Alexander Keith, M.A., author of a "Commentary on Isaiah," became his colleague. At the Disruption, in 1843, Dr. Keith conscientiously joined the Free Church, and was for some years the convener of its Jewish Mission Committee. He might doubtless have held higher office had he so chosen, but the state of his health rendered the acceptance of any overture of that description impossible.

About six years ago the Doctor visited Buxton for hydropathic treatment, and finding the climate most favorable to his health, he became attached to the place and to friends who had gathered round him, and there he remained till the close of his life, generally spending some part of the summer in the salubrious locality of the Bridge of Allan. He was, however, for some years almost absolutely confined to his bed by an affection of the heart, leading to dizziness whenever he lifted his head from his pillow; but his intellect remained clear and vigorous, as his hope maintained an unclouded brightness to the last. He seemed always cheerful, calm, and composed, simply, and without doubt or question, awaiting the Master's call. Up to the last he had Mr. Spurgeon's sermon read to him every Sunday.

His wife was Miss Jane Blaikie, who came of a well-known Aberdeen family, two sons of which, Mr. James Blaikie and Sir Thomas Blaikie, were Lord Provosts of the city of Aberdeen. Two sons of the deceased divine, besides the Rev. A. Keith, already referred to, are Dr. G. S. Keith and Dr. Thomas Keith, Edinburgh.

Dr. Alexander Keith was a man of a singularly amiable and affectionate nature—a devout Christian gentleman of a catholic type. He took a vivid interest in current events, especially in all missionary affairs, as heralding and preparing for the coming of the Lord, and was always ready for conversation on subjects of prophetical inquiry. He was an enthusiast in and his first work—which, like all those which followed, insisted strongly on a literal interpretation of prophecy—was long esteemed one of the best of its kind on the subject which it treated.

PROPHETIC STUDY;

During his last days he adverted with gleaming eye to the present influx of Jews to Palestine as an earnest, he believed, of their national return thither, and reminded his friends of Ezekiel's vision, chap. 37, remarking that the scattered bones drew together to form the national skeleton before the Spirit of life had entered into them.

In his "History and Destiny of the Church and of the World,' he expounded Revelation 17 very clearly, showing that the Napoleon dynasty is the seventh governmental headship of the seven-headed wild beast which represents the nations of the Roman Empire, and is the headship which "was, and is not, and yet shall be" (Rev. 17:8); in other words, it is to be revived ultimately to more extensive dominion than in the first Napoleon's days. This belief he continued to cherish to the last, not being staggered by the marvellous overthrow of the Napoleon dynasty at Sedan on September 2d, 1870, but maintaining that a Napoleon will yet become the head of France and Europe, defeating Germany, and extending the limits of France to the Rhine.

It is singular that the late Emperor Louis Napoleon, during his exile in England in 1872, inquired for and obtained a copy of this book at a bookseller's in Torquay, and presumably read the prophecies in Revelation 17 about his own dynasty. This is somewhat analogous to Alexander the Great having the career of his empire—the he-goat—explained to him from Daniel 8 by the high priest in Jerusalem.

The Bible was to the venerable Dr. Keith literally the Word of God. He took the promises just as he found them in the sacred page. He gave to them the affiance of a nature in which the instinct of reverent obedience was strong. He exercised a faith that was without a murmur and without a doubt. Only they who waited in his sick-chamber knew how patient he was. Singularly averse from giving trouble, and grateful for even the smallest attention, he always thought more of others than of himself. One of the last inquiries which he made was whether there were any poor whom he could relieve, or any sick and afflicted to whom he could minister. And this thoughtfulness for others was partly the secret of his uncomplaining endurance. Never was the shadow of impatience seen to flit across his face. Those who watched him as he slept in the quiet of death saw in it the emblem both of the tranquil faith and patience of his latest years, and of the rest into which he has now entered. His work was done.

There are certain lives so early cut off and lifted up that in our poor, limited vision we pronounce them to be incomplete, unfinished. This could not be said of Dr. Keith. He did a long day's work, and he has now received the reward which is all of grace.

MISTAKES ABOUT THE SOUTH CORRECTED.

A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage, Preached on Sunday Morning, April 18, 1880.

"Give me a blessing: for thou hast given me a south land; give me also springs of water."—JUDGES I: 15.

The South Needs an Irrigation of Divine Mercy—An Honored Grave—Rottenness of Politics—The South Seriously Misrepresented—I. The South does not desire to have Slavery Reinstated—North and South of One Mind on the Subject—Reformation Needed at Home—II. There is no Antagonism to Settlers from the North—The Men who will not be Welcomed there—The Burial of a Northerner in Charleston—Advantages Offered by the South—The Region for European Immigrants—The best Way of Settling the great National Difficulty—III. The South is Loyal—A Stupendous Sight—Those sad Four Years—The two Rows of Graves—A bright Vision of the Future.

CALEB'S daughter had been married to General Othniel, and she had received from her father as a wedding-gift a farm at the south, in a sunshiny and warm region. She asked the further gift of some springs of water near by, so that her farm might be properly irrigated, the water brought down through tunnels and aqueducts: "Give me a blessing; for thou hast given me a south land; give me also sprirgs of water."

This nation can say that God has given us a south land, and it is a magnificent reach of country; but it especially needs to be irrigated from the fountains of divine mercy, and this nation ought to offer the prayer most devoutly, "Give us a blessing, for Thou hast given us a south land; give us also springs of water."

To meet engagements in nine of the Southern States, and to catch a glimpse of the Southern springtime, and to see how those regions are recovering from the desolations of war, I started a few weeks ago southward, equipped with my mind full of questions, and hungry for information on all social and political, moral and religious subjects.

Among other things, I had a grave in Georgia to visit—the grave of my uncle, Rev. Dr. Samuel K. Talmage, for twenty years the President of Ogelthorpe University. After walking among the ruins of that institution, from which many men went forth to bless the earth, which institution was slain by the war, I went to see his last resting-place. When the war opened, his heart broke, and he lay down to rest near by the scene of his eminent usefulness, his grave covered with a monument adorned by his own name and the suggestive Scripture passage, "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace." He was one of those contemporary ministers of the South who, after eloquent words for God and earnest service, are resting from their labors. Dr. James H. Thornwell, his biography by Dr. Palmer a holy enchantment, and Dr. Smythe, and Dr. Duncan, and Dr. Pearce, and many others.

But my mission was not with the dead, but with the living. I went southward with no partisan predilections. I had no prejudices. I was resolved on coming back to report what I saw, whether it might meet with general favor or the condemnation of one or both sections. I had no political record to guard or look after, since most of my ministry has been passed since the war closed.

My admiration for the Democratic and Republican parties, as mere parties, is so small, that it would take M'Allister's most powerful magnifying glass to see any thing! American politics are rotten, and that party steals the most which has the most chance!

At the South all the doors of information seemed to be open. I talked with high and low—with governors of States and water-carriers, lawyers, clergymen, doctors, judges of courts—and I found that there had been a persistent and in some cases most outrageous, misrepresentation of the feeling at the South by the correspondents of some of our Northern secular and religious newspapers, and by overbearing and dishonest men who, going from the North to the South, behaved there in a way that excited no friendliness.

I found out that if a man behaves well at the South he will be treated well. There is no more need of severe governmental espionage in Charleston and Atlanta and Augusta than in New York and Brooklyn. The feeling at the South to-day has been so misrepresented, that I shall devote this morning's sermon to the correction of the misapprehensions, and to the overthrow, so far as I may be able, of some of the slanders.

THE SOUTH DOES NOT DESIRE THE RESTORATION OF SLAVERY.

I. The first misrepresentation in regard to the South that I wish to correct is, that the Southern people want to get back and have reinstated negro slavery. Why, all the people are glad to get rid of it.

The planters told me that they could cultivate their land now at less expense under the new system of labor than under the old. A planter, who had a hundred and twenty slaves before the war, said that there was so much care necessary in looking after so many slaves, and in looking after the aged who could not work, and helpless colored childhood, that there was constant anxiety and vast expense and exhaustion. Now they have nothing to do but pay the wages when they are due, and each family looks after its own invalids and minors.

Submit to the ballot-box of the Southern people to-day, the question, "Shall slavery be reinstated?" and all the wards, and all the cities, and all the counties, and all the States would give thundering negative. They fought for the institution eighteen years ago, but now they congratulate themselves at the overthrow of the institution.

God be thanked that, North and South, at last we have one sentiment on that subject; and those Northern politicians who keep the subject of American slavery rolling on and rolling on are doing a thing as useless and inapt as it would be to make the Dorr Rebellion of Rhode Island or Aaron Burr's attempt at the overthrow of the United States Government a test for our fall elections. The whole subject of American slavery is dead and d——d.

I said to the planters: "How do these men work now under the new system?" and they replied, "They work well; we have no trouble. There was a good deal of trouble just after the war closed, and a demoralization and disorganization consequent upon a change of things; but now they work most admirably, and they work far better than the Northern men who come here and work, because the climate seems better adapted to the colored people, who will on a summer day, at their nooning, go out and lie down to enjoy the sun." My friends, all this talk about the dragging of the rivers and the lakes of the South to haul ashore negroes murdered and flung in, while it may be believed by many at the North, is a falsehood so absurd it is hardly fit to mention in a religious assemblage.

The white people of the South feel their dependence on the dark people for the culture of their lands; the dark people feel their dependence on the white people for the payment of their wages. From what I have seen of the oppression of female clerks in some of the dry-goods stores at the North, and from what I have seen of the oppression of some young men at the North on small salaries which they must take or get nothing at all, I have come to the conclusion that there is more consideration and sympathy for colored labor at the South to-day, than there are consideration and sympathy for some of the employés in some of the dry-goods stores on Fulton Avenue, Brooklyn; Broadway, New York; Washington Street, Boston; Chestnut Street, Philadelphia. In all the land and in all the earth there are tyrannical employers, and their maltreatment of subordinates, white or black, deserves execration. But in the work of reformation let us begin at home.

NORTHERN SETTLERS WELL TREATE

II. Another impression in regard to the that I wish to correct—and that is, that th antagonistic to having Northerners come there and settle. The whole impression here at the North has been, that if Northern down South, they are Ku-Kluxed, kept society, or, getting into society, throw again, and in every way made uncomfortal

From the States where I visited the cry and I bring it to-day in their name, "Sen your capitalists, send down your Northern ing machines, come and buy our plant open stores, build cotton-factories and ric —come by the hundreds, by the thousar the millions, and come right away." I here that that is the sentiment of the Sou

Of course there is no more admiration
South for Northern fools and Northern bra than there is here. If a man going Sout put his valise at the depot, then go up nearest plantation, and say by his manne words: "We have come down here to sho Southern people how to farm; we whipp in the war, now we are going to whip agriculture. I am from Boston, I am; the 'Hub.' How much you look like a shot at South Mountain! I believe it wa brother. I marched right through here 14th Regiment of volunteers; I killed an tered a heifer on your front stoop. What miserable race of people you Southerne Didn't we give it to you? ha! ha!"—such as that, to say the least, will not make a ble impression! And he will not be ve elected as elder of one of their churches.
he should open a store he would not ge customers, and if such a man as that sho a free and rapid ride on that part of which is most easily removed, and be se without much reference to the desirab the landing-place, you and I would not b estants.

If a moral man go South, and he e just ordinary common-sense, he will come, he will be made at home, and comi Brooklyn, he will be just as well tre though he came from Mobile. A Southe tleman (in the audience) nods his head a as to say, "That's so."

AN ILLUSTRATION.

I could give many illustrations. I gi
There went from this church seven years ago a member, to reside in Cha South Carolina. He took no fortune. cantile assiduity he toiled on, up. Was ceived well? Was he treated well? Ju yourselves when I tell you that a few da when his lifeless body was carried into th copal church of Charleston, where he wa tryman, the members of the Board of T sembled in the church, the children a patrons of the Orphan Asylum of which director, and a great throng of the best amid a wealth of floral and musical trib the Charleston Courier describes as ma occasion almost unparalleled in the hi private obsequies.

Why, this side of heaven there is not hospitable people than the people of the and I bring you from those States whi the pleasure of visiting, I bring you t invitation for immigration that way. Th is to rival the West as an opening American enterprise. Horace Greeley' of "Go West" is to have its addenda South."

The first avalanche of population t will make their fortunes. It is a national ity that such a large proportion of th of the South at great expense should North, in order to be transferred into us ric. The few factories at the South are neers of innumerable spindles which are begin the hum of the grand march on th of the Savannah and the Appalachicola Tombigbee.

There is Georgia with its 58,000 squar
there is Alabama with its 50,722 squar

re is South Carolina with its 34,000 square es, there is North Carolina with its 50,704 are miles, and other States, not ten per cent heir resources yet developed. When will our crowded populations in these Northern cities a the wings of the morning and fly to those ons where they may have room to turn nd and plenty place to take a full breath, n expand, and be masters of their own cornies, their own rice swamps, their own cotton tations, their own lumber forests ?

nd to be had there from $1 to $20 an acre. Tr el from here to that region $15, if you are not particular about the way you go. Afraid of h eat ? Why, the thermomenter in New York summer rises to a higher point than in gia or North Carolina, although in those s the heat is more protracted. Afraid of ever ? The death-rate in Georgia just equals eath-rate in Michigan. The death-rate in gia, according to the number of the population is less than the death-rate in Connecticut Maine. Going either West or South you robably have one acclimating attack. It nly be a different style of shake!

re is no more need that England, Ireland, cotland want room or want bread. I rethat there is such a vast population coming foreign lands here ; twenty-one thousand ndred and sixty-eight people arriving in York last month, March, to make their resi- in this country. And let me tell you, of them the very best people of Europe. do I mean by " best "? I mean industrious oral.

thousand people last Tuesday, in and Castle Garden, waiting for transporta- While you put on extra trains to carry vest over the Pennsylvania and the Erie e New York Central, put on extra trains Baltimore and Ohio, and all the great to Charleston and Atlanta and Chatta- that they may go South. Vast opportu- pening.

cursing the South, and stop lying about uth, and go South and test the cordiality welcome and their resources of mine and ion and forest. Why, my friends, that is this national difficulty is to be settled. thousands of young men from the North, young men, intelligent young men from th, are to go South and make their resi- here, and they will invite the daughters outh to help them build houses amid the ias and the orange-groves, and their chil- ill be half North and half South—half arolina and half Vermont, half Georgia New York ; and then to divide the country will have to divide the children with some ord as Solomon sarcastically proposed division of a contested child, and the n father will say to the Southern mother, , my dear, let us put our political feud to this cradle!"

tatements so long rampant at the North thern people do not want moral and in- s people to come from the North to the I brand that statement as a falsehood, p and kept up for base political purposes.

LOYAL TO THE GOVERNMENT.

II. nother wrong impression in regard to th that I want to correct is, that the there are antagonistic to the United overnment. These people submitted to ement of the sword certain questions, they are submissive to the decision. no fight in them.

k about the fire-eaters of the South. If fire, they have a private platter of coals ate room. I sat at many of their tables w no such style of diet. Neither could poon or a fork or a knife that seemed been used in eating fire! Why, sirs, the most placid people you ever saw. them, their property all gone, at forty years of age starting life, with one e foot, and one eye, the missing mem- ficed in battle. It is simply miraculous, vork of the Lord Almighty, that those people are as amiable and as cheerful as they are, and it is dastardly mean in us to keep speaking of them as waspish and acrid, and saturnine and malevolent.

I have travelled as much as most people have in this and other lands, and I am yet to find a more affable, more delicately sympathetic, more whole-souled people than the people of the South.

The people of the South are loyal to-day, and if a foreign foe should try to set its foot on this country by way of intimidation or conquest, I believe the forces of McClellan and Beauregard, Bragg and Geary, Grant and Lee, would come shoulder to shoulder, the blue and the gray, and the guns of Forts Hamilton and Pickens and Sumter would join in one great chorus of thunder and flame.

The fact is, that in this country we have had a big family fight, and if a neighbor should come in and try to interfere, you know what the result would be. Husband and wife in contest, the one with a cane and the other with a broomstick—let an intermeddler come in and he gets all the advantage of both cane and broomstick! I have sometimes thought that the North and the South will never understand each other until the approach of a common enemy makes us a common cause. God forbid that that day should come. But if foreign despotisms think there is in our government no cohesion, no centripetal force, they have only to test it.

Instead of thirteen original colonies, we own from ocean to ocean ; but that is no sign of lack of governmental grip. By steam and by electricity the government is under more speedy and easy control now than it was at the start. At the foundation of the government it took an official document two weeks to cross the country ; now, it takes two minutes. San Francisco and Galveston and Des Moines are to-day nearer Washington than Richmond was then. There never has been a day of more thorough consolidation and unity than now. Would that the people all appreciated it.

You see

THE WHOLE IMPRESSION OF MY SOUTHERN JOURNEY

was one of encouragement. The great masses of the people are right. If half a dozen politicians at the North and half a dozen politicians at the South would only consent to die, there would be no more sectional acrimony. You see it is a mere case for undertakers! If they will bury out of sight these few demagogues, we will pay all the expense of catafalque and epitaph, and of a brass band to play the "Rogues' March!"

In time, under God, this will all be settled. The generation that follows us will not share in the antipathies and the bellicose spirit of their ancestors, and they will stand in amazement at the state of things which made the national cemeteries at Murfreesboro and Gettysburg and Richmond an awful possibility.

Week before last, I took a carriage and wound up Lookout Mountain. Up, up, up. Standing there on the tip-top rock I saw five States of the Union. Scene stupendous and overwhelming. One almost is disposed to take off his hat in the presence of what seems to be the grandest prospect on this continent.

There is Missionary Ridge, the beach against which the red billows of Federal and Confederate courage surged and broke. There are the Blue Mountains of North and South Carolina. With strain of vision, there is Kentucky, there is Virginia. At our feet, Chattanooga and Chickamauga, the pronunciation of which proper names will thrill ages to come with thoughts of valor and desperation and agony. Looking each way, and any way from the top of that mountain, earthworks, earthworks—the beautiful Tennessee winding through the valley, curling and coiling around, after letter "S," as if that letter stood for shame, that brothers should have gone into massacre with each other, while God and nations looked on. I have stood on Mount Washington, and on the Sierra Nevadas, and on the Alps; but I never saw so far as from the top of Lookout Mountain.

MAKING LETTER "S."

Why, sirs, I looked back seventeen years, and I saw rolling up the side of that mountain the smoke of Hooker's storming party while the foundations of eternal rock quaked with the cannonade. Four years of internecine strife seemed to come back, and without any chronological order I saw the events: Norfolk Navy Yard on fire; Fort Sumter on fire; Charleston on fire; Chambersburg on fire; Columbia, South Carolina, on fire; Richmond on fire. And I saw Ellsworth fall, and Lyon fall, and M'Pherson fall, and Bishop Polk fall, and Stonewall Jackson fall.

And I saw hundreds of grave trenches afterward cut into two great gashes across the land, the one for the dead men of the North, the other for the dead men of the South. And my ear as well as my eye was quickened, and I heard the tramp, tramp of enlisting armies, and I heard the explosion of mines and gunpowder magazines, and the crash of fortification walls, and the "swamp angel," and the groan of dying hosts falling across the pulseless heart of other dying hosts.

And I saw still farther out, and I saw on the banks of the Penobscot and the Oregon and the Ohio and the Hudson and the Roanoke and the Yazoo and the Alabama, widowhood and orphanage and childlessness—some exhausted in grief and others stark mad, and I said, "Enough, enough have I seen into the past from the top of Lookout Mountain. O God!

SHOW ME THE FUTURE."

And standing there, it was revealed to me. And I looked out and I saw great populations from the North moving South, and great populations from the South moving North, and I found that their footsteps obliterated the hoof-mark of the war chargers. And I saw the Angel of the Lord of hosts standing in the national cemeteries, trumpet in hand, as much as to say, "I will wake these soldiers from their long encampment."

And I looked and I saw such snowy harvests of cotton and such golden harvests of corn as I had never imagined, and I found that the earthworks were down, and the gun-carriages down, and the war barracks were all down, and I saw the rivers winding through the valley, making letter "S" after letter "S"—no more "S" for shame, but "S" for salvation.

And as I saw that all the weapons of war were turned into agricultural implements I was alarmed, and I said, "Is this safe?" And standing there on the tip-top rock of Lookout Mountain, I was so near heaven that I heard two voices which some way slipped from the gate, and they sang, "Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." And I recognized the two voices. They were the voices of two Christian soldiers who fell at Shiloh; the one a Federal, the other a Confederate. And they were brothers!

[The prayers of the readers of this Journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors in America and England, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and for its weekly circulation of more than 175,000 copies to be blessed by the Holy Spirit to the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Mr. Spurgeon and Dr. Talmage especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

TO THE READERS OF THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

DEAR FRIENDS: I thank all who have contributed toward the liquidation of the Tabernacle debt. I have acknowledged, together with the treasurer, the receipt of all moneys accompanied by the address, but as many have sent without giving their names, I take this mode of expressing my warmest gratitude.

T. DE WITT TALMAGE,
Pastor of Brooklyn Tabernacle.

APRIL 19, 1880.

THE LAST OF THE O'G.s; OR, THE LOST INHERITANCE RESTORED.

By Mr. Henry Martin, author of "Felicia Cuffe," "Arnold Percival Montaigne," etc.

The Stagnant Country Town—The Cathedral-like Avenue—The O'G.s' Ancient Castle—Its Confiscation after Earl Desmond's Rebellion—Its Restoration and Second Confiscation after James II.'s Rebellion—The Disinherited O'G.s Annual Act of cutting a Green Sod—My Interview with her in the Park, etc.

K—— is a quiet, dull, uninviting town in the county of Cork, Ireland—half a century behind the age—a place which, standing apart from the main line of traffic, has not wakened up to the life and stir of the nineteenth century. The only houses of the least pretension, along its principal street, are the Griffin Arms Hotel, the lawyer's dwelling, and the doctor's, the clergyman's, and the priest's; while the market-house and the National School, the Protestant church and the Roman Catholic chapel, comprise the whole number of its public buildings, none of which can boast of any architectural beauty.

It is, we believe, considered that the place of one's abode has a powerful influence upon the general disposition and character. K—— would furnish an excellent illustration of this doctrine; for "Like town like people" is the adage which, we fear, rises spontaneously to the mind of most strangers upon coming into contact with the good folk of K——. "Talk of the exile and self-sacrifice of a missionary in India," said a laborer fresh from the mission-field to me one day, as we walked up the main street of the prosaic little town; "it is my belief that lifelong Christian work in such a place as this is accompanied with tenfold greater self-denial than in India."

Not far from K——, however, there is a fine demesne within which is the splendid residence of Lord N——. From the handsome entrance, the long avenue right up the whole way to the mansion is lined on either side with some of the noblest trees, the growth of centuries, in the South of Ireland. With outspread roots, for long distances only half buried in the soil—and from great living pillars, gnarled, many-grooved, and bark-furrowed—elms and oaks send aloft ten thousand massive boughs, whose smaller branches, meeting and interweaving overhead, afford "when summer is green" a cool and solemn shade, grateful to mind and body, and which form a colonnade of height and breadth and grandeur such as cannot be vied with by any cathedral in the world.

At a short distance from Lord N——'s superb modern abode are the remains of another lordly habitation. The ruins of an ancient castle, its limestone walls are of unusual thickness and height, are battlemented at the top, and pierced here and there with very narrow openings. The entrance of the castle is now almost concealed by ivy, which, though of vigorous growth, has only been able to scale, half way, the great walls it clings to. The watch-towers, far above them, rise at each angle of the lofty rectangular building. This castle in the reign of Queen Elizabeth was the residence and stronghold of the O'G.s—one of the most powerful of the Irish chieftains, who acknowledged a kind of fealty to the great Earl of Desmond, whose estates and authority extended in that day over the greater part of the province of Munster.

When Earl Desmond, instigated by the Spanish Government, rebelled against the English queen, and was crushed beyond the power of further resistance by the Lord Deputy, he was placed under ban as "the Irish enemy," and the whole of his lands were confiscated, as were also the estates of every dependent chieftain who, in loyalty to the claims of feudal obedience, had followed him to the field. Under this ban and forfeiture, the O'G.s were included. In the depth of winter the chieftain and his wife and sons and daughters were driven from their castle abode, and forced to seek food and shelter from their followers, who almost to a man remained faithful to the ancient house, and concealed and protected the chieftain and his household in the fastnesses of the neighboring mountains.

After the lapse of a few years, however, in the shifting politics of the times (for, strange to tell, within fifty years, at that period, no less than three confiscations and partial restorations were known in Ireland), the O'G.s recovered their patrimony, and lived again in the old castle, ruling their sept, as in the days before the Desmond rebellion.

For a considerable time, with not more than the usual anxieties and changes of human life, affairs went on pretty tranquilly with the O'G.s, until, to their bane and sorrow, as well as to his own, James II. landed at Kinsale, to do battle in Ireland with his son-in-law, Prince William of Orange, for the English throne. The O'G.s, at the news of his landing, could not resist the temptation to join their forces to his, and to cast in their lot with a king whom they unfortunately regarded as their lawful sovereign, and who also in addition was, like them, a Roman Catholic.

It would take too long to recite the fortunes, or rather misfortunes, of the struggle. History has recorded them at length. Suffice it to say, that at the capitulation of Limerick the chief O'G. and his sons were among the number of those who, after a long defence, under the skilful Sarsfield, were compelled by disease and famine to surrender to the generals of William. The terms granted to the conquered were life, and unmolested quiet, under surveillance, in their own country, or a free passage to France, there to enter, if they pleased, the service of Louis XIV., "the Grand Monarque."

Half of the O'G. family accepted life in their native land, and half of them chose perpetual exile, and helped to form the Irish Brigade, whose feats of arms on many a battle-field in the cause of France forced an English king, in after years, to bemoan the fate that had robbed him of such splendid soldiers.

The members of the O'G. household who had elected to remain in the land of their birth had chosen a lot of hardship, contempt, and poverty. The English Government could not reinstate a family which had so often proved fickle in their loyalty; they were therefore stripped of every possession and reduced to utter indigence, while their lands and fine old stronghold near K—— were transferred to one of William of Orange's adherents, whose descendant, Lord N——, holds them at the present hour.

The O'G. family, however, never in heart consented to the forfeiture. The descendants of those who had chosen to remain in Ireland lived in the district for generations, and, in each, cherished in their bosoms a burning sense of wrong. Never did they give up faith in the coming of a day when "they should have their own again." It was indeed their conviction that in all the past they never had been really evicted from their inheritance, but were its true and virtual owners still; and this conviction was based upon an act which every year, upon a certain day, without a single omission, had been performed, from that time in which, as they alleged, "might had conquered right."

The act—a curious and interesting one—was this: to cut a green sod from some part of their former demesne, and to store it in a recess of the humble cottage which for long years they had been forced to rest content with as their dwelling. Since the day this practice was begun, scores of such "cuttings from the soil" had been laid by and piled up carefully by hands which now lie mouldering in the grave.

A few years ago, when on a visit to K——, I heard of what may be called this annual ceremonial of the family of the O'G.s. Upon inquiry I learned that at that time only one representative of the family remained—a lady—and I was told that on the morrow would be the day for her cutting from the demesne the customary portion which it was imagined would perpetuate her family's original ownership of the property.

"Does Lord N——," I asked, "put no hindrance to the act?"

"Oh, no," was the reply. "He says it g fies the respectable old folk the O'G.s, never has, and never will, do him or his harm; and his directions to his dependants to take no notice, and to offer no molestati

I resolved that I would be in the demes the morrow, and would get, if possible, into versation with this relic of an old Irish fam

On the following day I saw Mrs. O'G. i park, half-way down the glorious corrid trees which has been mentioned, and a sma of service, which I was fortunate enough to der, gave me a favorable introduction to he dog of Lord N——'s, which happened to large, fiercely attacked her, and with some culty I drove the furious animal away.

(To be Continued.)

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Progress of the Work.

THE services carried on by the Army in York have already been blessed by the Lo the salvation of many who were but a few ago far away from Him.

"WHAT FUN IT WOULD BE," said a father to his daughter as they walk the Mission Hall, "if we were to get conv before we come away!" Little did he thin this was just what God was about to a plish. But before they left the place enough both father and daughter fell at th of Jesus, and found peace through believ Him.

Two sisters from amongst those who ha blessed in these meetings have given them up to go forth in the Lord's name to others, and many more are eager to follo example.

The Grand Union Hall, in Seventh A New York, where for years evangelistic s have been carried on in connection wit Tyng's church, has now been secured f use of the Army in New York permanentl though the rental ($1000) is a heavy cha an organization so young to undertake, sisters have no anxiety, their confidence Lord being increased by all that they hav already.

IN NEWARK

the same wonder-working power has also b perienced, some of the readiest speakers day being the scoffers of yesterday. In s all its discomforts, the Odeon Theatre, was taken for the services, has been fille all sorts and conditions of men, and not more desired by many of those who h entered a church for years than to be here daily, noon and night, taking part services.

Arrangements are being made for the nent occupancy of this or another buil the town.

IN PHILADELPHIA,

where the Lord has already raised up fo self hundreds of witnesses, in connection w two corps formed by the Shirley famil emigrated last year from England, a thir ing, the Music Hall, Frankford, has ju opened, the first officer raised from am ranks of the American converts assist English sister in holding the services. of the most abandoned sort have been g both in the open air and in the Music H there is every prospect of a glorious worl

More than a score of those converted i adelphia have offered to leave all and g the strength of God to rescue others, as soon as suitable openings can be fo means provided, it is the intention of th missioner to extend the sphere of operat

Headquarters have been established in 4 3d Street, Philadelphia, where any propo extension will be welcomed, and furthe mation can be obtained.

As several of the converts are German, tended, as soon as possible, to hold ser some districts for the special purpose c ing those from the Vaterland who have all regard for religion.

AN AWKWARD MISTAKE.

A Temperance Story.

reat Preparations—An Unwelcome Visitor—Waking Up—A Startling Spectacle—"Run for the Police"—Forgiven and Dismissed—Obliterating the Marks—Renovation and Reconciliation.

MRS. BURTON was the widow of a respectable adesman, who had left her a comfortable inome. She was nearly sixty years of age, a earty Christian and of great good nature. If ere was any one of her worldly possessions which she felt she might justly take pride, it as in her best bedroom. It was the largest om in the house, and the best furnished.

Mrs. Burton's youngest daughter—her moth's darling, and who was happily married—had nt word that she was coming to spend a short ne with her, and would arrive the next day. onsequently, one of Mrs. Burton's first conrns was to set about a complete "cleaning wn," as she called it, of the bedroom.

Martha, the servant, put on a clean apron, and r mistress stood over her as she brushed the pet and attended to various other little duties, It Mrs. Burton would not trust her to do any the dusting. With her own hands she oothed the drapery of the bed upon which r daughter was to sleep. She brought two iminated texts, which she had not long since ught at a bazaar, and hung them up, the one er the looking-glass—which she had festooned h muslin and lace—and the other over the mney-piece.

n hanging the latter, her eye rested upon the ntel-shelf and detected several spots upon its ite surface. She could not make up her mind pass them over, and she dispatched Martha the nearest painter's for his pot of white nt, and then with great care gave the shelf of chimney-piece a new coat. It was getting r tea-time before it was completed, and the lady was growing tired with her busy day's k; so with a sigh of content and a last look of gled satisfaction and pride round her best room, she left it, giving strict orders to Mar- not to think of entering it again that even-

Irs. Burton's house stood in a private street o the outskirts of the town, and it was consided so secure and respectable a neighborhood if Martha went on an errand she generally the door just ajar, if she was going to be y only a few minutes.

happened that evening, soon after night- she ran out to return the paint-pot to its er; and not a minute afterward a man, ed Marshall, staggering along the street in elplessly drunken fashion, laid his shaking d upon the handle, found the door open, ped in, and, by one of those unaccountable ks of drunkenness, walked straight upstairs, out making himself seen or heard, and, open- the first door, stumbled into the best bedn. He flung his old battered hat upon the ly-painted chimney-piece, and, steadying self by it, drew off his heavy boots, and, with is soiled and dirty clothing upon him, crept etween the lavender-scented, blanched, milke sheets and pillows of Mrs. Burton's best was no doubt a happy circumstance that old lady was far too tired at bed-time to care to ake a look at her best bedroom. She coned herself with locking the door and carryway the key, resolved to see how the paint drying the first thing in the morning. Be- long she and Martha, with their unknown t, were all soundly sleeping under one roof.

was early in the morning when the drunk- slumber was broken by some unaccustomed d without. He opened his eyes and ched himself drowsily, but the next instant as wide awake, and his outstretched arms ined outstretched in utter astonishment.

herever could he be? He raised himself to take a survey, and his eyes fastened the illuminated text over the fireplace. ad been brought up as an ornamental signpainter, and the fanciful letters did not puzzle him. The words did not remove his bewilderment, but they turned his thoughts into another direction.

"Thou, God, seest me!" he read half aloud. "Thou, God, seest me!" he repeated. What! did God see him at that moment? He could see himself in the large looking-glass, and he could not turn away his gaze from it. There was he, in the midst of the sweetness and cleanliness and purity, a wretched, begrimed, vile object, not fit for his own eyes to look upon. Wherever his hand fell there was a stain upon the whiteness. The pillow upon which his head had rested—how different it was to the other pillow which he had not touched! He was disgusting, even to himself. He wished he could not see his own face and form in that dainty room. And was it true that God saw him—just as he was, degraded below the beasts?

Just then he lifted his eyes to the wall above the glass. There hung the second text. "God is love!" he read aloud. "What!" he cried; "love! Is God love? Does He love me? Oh, no; that would be impossible. I hate myself; the children hate me; Jenny hates me. And they may well hate me. If God sees me He cannot love me. Oh, if He would but love me, or turn away His eyes from me that He may not see me! I cannot bear to think that He sees me. 'Thou, God, seest me!' 'God is love!'"

The poor fellow was half distracted with the multitude of his thoughts, and the idea of getting up and making his escape did not once cross his mind. He could not have done it, for the key of the door lay at the bottom of Mrs. Burton's pocket. She was dressing by this time, anxious to see how her painting of the last day was drying; and as soon as she was ready she hastened to her best bedroom, opened the door solemnly, and entered with a careful step.

It would be impossible to describe Mrs. Burton's first emotions. She saw the intruder slowly drag himself out of the white bed-linen and stand trembling before her, the most abject, wretched creature she ever remembered to have seen.

"I don't know how ever I came to be here," he said; "I know no more than this bed-post; but I'm an honest man, missis; I am, for certain! I don't mean no harm!"

"Harm!" gasped Mrs. Burton, who had not yet recovered her speech.

"I wish I wasn't here, I do," he continued. "I didn't mean to do it, I'm sure. Please to forgive me, missis, and I'll never do it again as long as I live."

"Why!" cried Mrs. Burton, "when did you get in here?"

"I was very drunk last night," he stammered, "and I must have turned in unknownst to myself."

"Drunk!" she exclaimed; "a drunken vagabond in my best bed! Whatever shall I do? I shall never fancy it again. But you shall go to jail for this, I promise you. Martha, Martha! run for the police."

"Oh, no, no!" cried Marshall; "forgive me this once. I've a poor wife and family at home. If you send me to jail they must go into the poor-house, and we shall all be ruined."

"I can't forgive you," said Mrs. Burton, with tears in her eyes; "you've ruined my best room. I shall never have any more pleasure in it. You must go to jail for it, or I shan't have a moment's peace. No, no! Don't speak, you drunken brute you! Whatever can I do? whatever can I do?"

"Well," he answered, despairingly, "if I go to jail for it I suppose God'll see me there too."

The heart of Mrs. Burton always echoed to that name, and her conscience smote her. She looked steadily at her strange guest, and followed the direction of his eyes, which were turned upon the text on the wall. "Thou, God, seest me!" she said, half aloud and involuntarily.

"Is that true?" asked the man.

"Yes," she answered, and her conscience reproached her again.

"Is the other true?" he asked, pointing to the second text.

"Oh, yes, that is true," she said warmly.

"I wish I could believe them," cried Marshall. "Are they both true for me?"

"Yes, yes," she exclaimed. "'God is love!' He sees and loves us all. Yes; He sees and loves me, and He sees and loves you. Yes, yes; I was forgetting that. It's very hard, very hard indeed, for me to see my best room like that. Yes, it is. He knows it's very hard. I shall never fancy it again. But I won't send for the police. You may go away now."

With a very abject look Marshall slunk downstairs and out into the streets. He could not get his adventure out of his head. He felt a desire to creep away from the miserable, grimy creature he had become. To think that God's eye dwelt upon him was almost insupportable; but whenever this thought grew too terrible to him, the other words came back to his mind.

It was soon after midday that Marshall presented himself at Mrs. Burton's door, with a paint-pot in his hand. Martha answered his hesitating knock, and opened the door wider for him to enter.

"You're the painter, I suppose," she said.

"Ay!" he replied.

"And sadly you're wanted," she continued. "There's finger-marks everywhere—door-posts, chimney-piece, and lots of places. To think of such a thing! Missis is almost crazy."

Marshall said nothing, but, taking off his boots at the foot of the stairs, followed Martha meekly. Mrs. Burton sat in the middle of the room, a picture of dismay and grief. She uttered a little scream when she saw him enter.

"Please, ma'am," he said, "I'm a painter by trade, and I'll do my very utmost to make it all sweet and clean again. I'm very miserable, ma'am. I'd do anything to make you amends."

"You cannot make me amends," answered Mrs. Burton.

"But you'll forgive me, won't you, ma'am? And you'll let me paint out my marks?" said Marshall, in an earnest tone.

"I can hardly forgive you," she answered; "but I suppose I must. Yes; I know I must. 'Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive them that trespass against us.' Yes; I must. Man, I forgive you."

"And you'll let me paint out my marks?" he asked.

Mrs. Burton only nodded her head in answer; and Marshall proceeded with a most careful touch to efface all the marks of his grimy fingers. He felt very sad and humbled, and he often looked up to the texts upon the wall.

"I've finished, ma'am," he said at last; "but I shall never forget this job. And I shall never forget those words, 'Thou, God, seest me!' 'God is love!'"

He went home, but the words went with him, in his heart and in his mind. He did not try to shake off the impression, but took every means in his power to deepen it. Poor Mrs. Burton, as soon as she could recover from her vexation, sought out him and his family, and became their friend and teacher, striving her best to bring them to realize more strongly than she had done herself that God both saw and loved them.

Some few years after this Marshall invited Mrs. Burton to take tea with him and his family, on the occasion of entering into a new house. It was not so large as her own, but it was as exquisitely clean, and Marshall himself was a man who would no longer shock her fastidious neatness. In the sitting-room, where the family usually assembled, he had painted upon the walls, in letters of many colors, his two favorite texts, "Thou, God, seest me!" and "God is love!"

"Ah!" he said, "I never knew those words till that morning I saw them first in your best bedroom."

"Yes," answered Mrs. Burton; "and I never understood them so well before that time as I do now. Yes, yes; God sees us all, and God loves us all."

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

THE aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50 per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to MR. BENJAMIN AITKEN, 63 Bible House, New York. The paper may also be obtained weekly from all newsdealers in the United States and Canada.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of specimen copies to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

SUBSCRIBERS frequently write to us for single copies of the CHRISTIAN HERALD. We always endeavor to oblige them, but single and occasional copies can more easily be obtained from a newsdealer. Sometimes we receive complaints that the CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer. Such complaints are promptly attended to, when made to us; but in all cases we desire that our friends will give the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

LAST week's edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, April 14th, at 12.20 P.M., at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Senate has passed the Bill to carry out the provisions of the agreement as to the Ute Indians. Almost at the close of the debate an amendment was adopted without debate, providing that if the Utes do not ratify the agreement within four months, then the army of the United States shall protect them in the peaceable possession of their entire present reservation.

The Army Appropriation Bill, with the rider attached prohibiting the employment of troops at the polls, was passed by the House on April 13th by a vote of 118 to 95. The Republicans all voted in the negative.

There appears to be a unanimous desire among the Republicans that the President shall veto this bill if the Senate should send it to him in its present form. Some of the Republicans express the belief that he will do so.

The Democratic Members of the Senate Committees have been considering the subject of the mode of counting electoral votes. They have decided to recommend that Congress shall adopt a new rule, providing that in case only one certificate of the electoral vote of a State be presented to Congress, it shall not be rejected except by the affirmative vote of both Houses, and that in case of dual returns, neither shall be counted unless the two Houses agree that one of them is the true and valid return.

The Republican Conventions of the States of Iowa, Kentucky, Missouri, and Massachusetts have been held during the past week. In Iowa, the delegates elected to attend the National Republican Convention at Chicago are solid for Blaine, and they were instructed to vote as a unit. In Kentucky, the delegates were instructed for General Grant, but a resolution was passed pledging all delegates to vote for the nominee chosen at Chicago. In Missouri, delegates pledged to vote for General Grant were elected, and instructed to vote as a unit. The Massachusetts Convention assembled at Worcester April 15th, and elected the Edmunds ticket for delegates-at-large by a considerable majority. Ex-Governor Boutwell made a vigorous speech in favor of General Grant. He was followed by Rev. James Freeman Clark, who strongly opposed the previous speaker. He referred to President Hayes as "one who had done his work nobly and well"—an expression of opinion which elicited enthusiastic cheers.

Temperance Legislation in Michigan is the subject of agitation in that State. A convention is to be held on June 8th to secure an amendment of the State Constitution, by which it shall be enacted that "the manufacture and sale of spirituous, malt, and vinous liquors in this State, except for medicinal, mechanical and sacramental purposes, is prohibited, and there shall exist no property right in such spirituous, malt, and vinous liquors, except such right to manufacture and sell for medicinal, mechanical, and sacramental purposes, and no other, as may be directly conferred by law."

A Strange Case of Personal Violence has occurred among the cadets at West Point. A colored cadet named Whittaker was found on the morning of April 6th in his room, bound hand and foot to his bedstead, with his ears slit and his hair cropped; he was apparently unconscious, and the pillow under his head was saturated with blood. He asserted that he had been attacked in the night by three men, who had brutally ill-treated him and left him as he was found. He also said that he had been warned in anonymous letters that such an outrage would be committed on him, and that he had been subjected to contumely and isolation on account of his color while he had been at West Point. A searching investigation is being prosecuted respecting the affair. Suspicion exists that the cadet's injuries were self-inflicted in order to escape an examination in which he feared he would fail. But the motive appears inadequate to account for such an act.

Anniversary Week.—As far as is arranged, the great missionary and philanthropic societies which have their centres in New York City will hold their annual meetings this year in the Broadway Tabernacle, and in the following order:

Sun., May	9.	Am. Home Missionary Society,	7:30 P.M.
Mon., "	10.	Women's Union Miss. Society,	3 "
" "	10.	Am. Seamen's Friend Society,	7:30 "
Tues., "	11.	N. Y. Sunday-school Assoc'on,	3:30 "
" "	11.	Am. Sunday-school Union,	7:30 "
Wed., "	12.	Am. Tract Soc'y, Bus. Meeting,	10 A.M.
" "	12.	Am. Female Guardian Society,	3 P.M.
" "	12.	Am. Tract Society, Addresses,	7:30 "
" "	12.	N. Y. Instit. for Deaf and Dumb,	3:30 "
Thurs., "	13.	New York City Mission,	3:30 "
" "	13.	Women's Nat. Christ. Tem. U.,	10:30 A.M.
" "	13.	Young Ladies' Christ. Tem. U.,	1:30 P.M.
" "	13.	N. Y. Soc. for Suppr'n of Crime,	4 "
Fri., "	14.	National Temperance Society,	7:30 "
Sun., "	16.	Am. Board Com. Foreign Miss.,	7:30 "

The Robert Raikes Centennial will be celebrated, under the auspices of the Foreign Sunday-school Association, in the Madison Square Presbyterian Church, Wednesday, May 5th, at 10:30 A. M. The session will be continued in the afternoon and evening.

It is hoped that friends of these societies will arrange their plans to visit New York during Anniversary Week.

Two Prominent Ministers of the Gospel in New York have passed away during the past week. Dr. M. S. Hutton, for nearly forty years pastor of the Reformed Dutch Church, died suddenly on the morning of April 11th. He had risen at his customary hour and in his usual health, and had entered his study, when his family heard a heavy fall, and on going to ascertain the cause found him lifeless on the floor. Death had resulted from disease of the heart. Dr. Hutton was born in 1803, and had spent his long life in earnest and zealous service for Christ. He occupied several positions of influence, indicating the high esteem in which he was held by his Christian friends. He was a director of the American Bible Society, a Councillor of New York University, and of other religious and philanthropic institutions.

Dr. Samuel Osgood, of the Episcopal Church, died April 14th. His death was caused by congestion of the lungs and heart-disease. He was descended from an old family originally fro Hampshire, England. He was born in 1812, an his first ministerial work was in the Unitaria Church, but in 1869 he paid a visit to Europ where he came in contact with brethren of eva gelical denominations. On his return he toc orders in the Episcopal Church, to which durir the remainder of his life he was an earnest ar faithful minister. He was well known and muc respected in literary circles, and he was tl author of many theological works.

A Double Service was held at St. Ann Church, Brooklyn, on April 11th. A number deaf-mutes occupied front seats, and many frien of the work among deaf-mutes, including clerg men and churchmen generally, were presen The service was read orally by the rector, Re Dr. Schenck, and interpreted concurrently into t sign language by the Rev. Dr. Gallaudet, rect of St. Ann's Church, who afterward made address in relation to the work.

One Beneficial Result of Messrs. Moody a Sankey's work in St. Louis was the raising $40,000 for the purchase of headquarters for Young Men's Christian Association in that cit Mr. Moody was thoroughly in earnest in his solve to raise this sum, and in his appeal we from man to man, from office to office, fr house to house. Mr. S. M. Edgell, of I Goodell's church, said to him, "Put me do for $5000 and draw on me for another $5000 it is needed." It was soon needed; and so wi this princely gift Mr. Moody pressed forwa and raised the whole amount necessary to pu chase the building. Mr. Moody was zealou assisted by the Christian ministers of all deno inations.

Graves are being Protected from Robbers some parts of the country by a new kind of t pedo. The numerous cases which have occur since the Stewart outrage, of graves being de crated has led to the invention of a torpe which will explode if any person other than ce etery officials, who know its position, disturb coffin. At the funeral recently of the venera Prof. Dascomb, of Oberlin, one of the new plosive machines was placed in the earth so as protect his corpse.

A Dead Man Preaching a Sermon.—A gen man speaking at a religious service in New Y last week attributed his conversion, under blessing of God, to the sermon preached to h by the sight of a corpse. The speaker was th a slave of drink. Wandering through the stre he came to a place that he afterward lear was Bellevue Hospital. He entered the Morg and there saw the body of one who had j died, slain by rum. "If you do not stop y evil course," something said to him, "in a hours, in a few days at the most, you will li that man now does among the unknown dea He saw the madness of his sin, and cried to (for mercy. He determined that his future should be spent in the fear of God.

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchm (London) for April may be obtained at the of of the CHRISTIAN HERALD at six cents a co Back numbers may be had.

Irish Famine Relief Fund.—Contributi received during the week ending Saturday, A 17th: Mrs. A. Miner, Huntington, O., $1; Mrs. I R. Chapman, Huntington, O., $1; Two Frie Middleborough, Mass., $2. Total forwarded to Y. Herald, $4.

The Debt on Dr. Talmage's Church.—(tributions received during the week ending Sa day, April 17th: H. H. Barlow, Enfield, Mass., Reader of CHRISTIAN HERALD, Enfield, Mass., A Friend, Enfield, Mass., $1; Miss Maria Cas Enfield, Mass., $1; C. W. Switzer, Meadowvale, $1; G. D., Johnstons, S. C., $4; Mrs. C. S. Bu Jamestown, N. Y., $1; Mrs. F. E. Miner, Hun ton, O., $1; Jno. W. Bowers, Mt. Sterling, Ill., Mrs. A. Armstrong, Elmira, Ill., $1; A Friend, ville, Conn., $1; A Scotch Widow, Indianap Ind., $1; Wm. Griffith, Paris, Wis., $1; C. B Baltimore, Md., $1; L. A. C., Baltimore, Md. J. H. C., Charleston, S. C., $1; Eliza C. Harr Warrensville, O., $1. Total forwarded to Dr. mage, $20.

Brutal Prize Fight Took Place by Arrange- mt near Philadelphia, on Sunday, April 4th, be een two men known as Bruiser Callahan and Br ser McGuire. The match had been talked of n sporting circles for some time; but the po e did not interfere to prevent it, and the me fought twenty-three rounds, in the presence of oo people, without any interruption. McG e was so badly hurt that he is thought to be n condition of great danger, and his opponent a led from the city. So disgraceful a spectacle ould have been shameful on any day, and it s ubly shocking to think it took place on a Su ay.

Credulous Planter in Virginia has been willed by gypsies. He received a letter signed D Worton," stating that there was a silver min on his plantation. Later Mrs. Worton all on him, and said that there was a charm po the silver mine, which could not be removed wit ut the presence of a package containing ro o. The planter procured the money, and he rapped the bills in brown paper and prayed ve hem. This performance was repeated several mes. Finally she went away, and her dupe u that she had taken the bills and left pieces p er in their place. Men will fall into almost ay ap of which the bait is a large fortune, but e ernal riches of God's grace which are fe to all who seek, are too often neglected d spised (1 Timothy 6 : 9–11).

Te Thousand Dollars for a Drink of Water.— ur g the civil war a Federal officer fell wounded i ront of the Confederate lines in Virginia. s lay there in agony he cried aloud for a in of water. It was a dangerous service, for lle were flying around the spot; but a av Confederate soldier named Moore, unable se even an enemy suffering unaided, jumped er e breastwork and gave the officer his can- f water. Deeply grateful, the wounded m ked the name of the brave fellow who had ke his life to give him water. They did not e h other again, but The Home Journal says oore has recently received a communica- om the Federal officer, announcing that will be paid him in acknowledgment of p of cold water given him in his extrem- ven in this life the brave soldier has ex- ed the faithfulness of the Saviour's prom- (Mtt. 10 : 42).

he afe Kind of Wine.—An Amusing Inci- s related by Dr. Carroll, of Newburgh, in co rse of a temperance lecture recently. He t Mr. J. B. Gough went to Oxford, Eng- lecture on temperance, and the college er aduates sent one of their number to the fo to argue the question. He, with much co idence, made a finished argument for or rinking, based on Christ's changing the to wine at the wedding-feast. His com- eered him to the echo, and thought his t unanswerable, and Gough was twitted efeat. "Young men," said he solemn- dmit that your champion has forestalled has said for me just what I came here e you to do. Drink all the wine you can is made entirely out of water!"

man was kept from Suicide in a Re- manner recently. A city missionary e incident at a daily prayer-meeting on , as having happened within his per- owledge. The woman was so oppressed stic trouble and want of food, that she home with the purpose of committing But while on her way she thought she rn back home to pray first, for though backslider, she had once been the sub- eligious impressions. She returned to e, and as she prayed and read her Bible, faith and peace came to her heart. She arose, resolved to live, and r Christ. But present necessities had ught of, and she made up her mind to arity. Going again to the street, she out six blocks, when she was impressed at a house she passed. She had never fore, but she would beg now if need be. nothing, however, to mark this house as the place where help was to be found. But to the door she went, and soon learned that the occupant was a Christian gentleman, who never turned any such applicants away without hearing the story of their distress. He heard and helped, and now husband and wife thank God for the tribulation that brought signal blessings to their home.

Fifteen Thousand Children are fed Daily by the New York Herald Irish Famine Relief Committee. Dr. George H. Hepworth, the Congregational minister formerly of New York, who is an energetic member of the committee, writes: "You can judge of the work which has been done by your committee and of its urgent need when I tell you that one thousand little ones who were fed at the beginning of last week had grown into more than eight thousand by Saturday, and will be increased to fourteen thousand in the course of three or four days. Very many schools had become almost empty, because the children were so constantly hungry and so nearly naked that attendance was an impossibility." Subsequently another member of the committee adds, "During the week we have added, under the committee's direction, seventy-nine schools and 6396 children, as you will see by the lists inclosed. The committee is now providing daily with a full, wholesome meal, 15,345 children."

A Blind Preacher named Wells has Received sight through a successful operation in the Missouri State Institute. By the operation, a cataract was removed from one of his eyes. Mr. Wells states that he resided in South-west Missouri, and gained his livelihood by preaching. He was connected with the Methodist Protestant Church. He was born in North Carolina—born blind. His father and mother were blind, and their parents were blind. He could not trace the disease farther back in the family. He was 36 years of age, and had never, until after the operation, been able to see in any respect. Besides his parents and grandparents being blind, three of Mr. Wells's children are blind, and are at present inmates of an educational establishment, and two have their sight.

The Cost of a Bad Book.—A Gentleman saw recently a copy of Voltaire lying on the centre-table in Mr. Robert C. Ingersoll's parlor in Washington. "How much did this book cost you?" inquired the gentleman. "The Governorship of Illinois," was Ingersoll's laconic reply. It is to be feared that unless the Spirit of God should bring about a spirit of repentance and faith in the soul of this reader of Voltaire, the Governorship of Illinois is but a small instalment of the cost he will have to pay.

A Faithful Attendant.—A little girl seven years old, left locked up in a room with her baby sister by its mother, in Cincinnati, a few days ago, while she went out to her work, set her clothes on fire by accident. When the poor mother returned the child was able to speak, and said she had not called for help because she was "afraid of waking the baby." In a few minutes she was dead.

The Second Volume of the Christian Herald, comprising Nos. 37 to 62 (July to Dec. 1879), may be had, elegantly bound in cloth, at No. 63 Bible House, New York. Price $1.75.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works.—We have much pleasure in announcing that another large consignment of volumes by this eminent author and preacher has been received. They are now on sale at the office of the CHRISTIAN HERALD, No. 63 Bible House, New York, and are offered at prices so low as to bring them within the reach of every one. Twelve Sermons on various subjects, with photograph of Mr. Spurgeon, price 35 cents. John Ploughman's Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents; in cloth, 60 cents. The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, a volume of fifty sermons, $2.50. The Treasury of David, a homiletical exposition of the book of Psalms, five vols., as far as Psa. 118, $3 per vol. Spurgeon's Birthday-Book. This popular gift-book contains a suitable passage selected from Mr. Spurgeon's writings for every day in the year, with a blank space opposite for autographs. The signatures of Mr. and Mrs. Spurgeon appear at their respective birthdays. The book is elegantly bound, and the price is 75 cents. Remittances should accompany orders.

A POWERFUL REASON FOR COMING TO CHRIST.

A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"A great multitude, when they had heard what great things He did, came unto Him."—MARK 3 : 8.

Opposition did not prevent Multitudes coming to Christ—I. The Attraction—1. They believed what they had heard of Jesus—2. The Report caused them to Hope—3. Urged to come by their Sad Condition—II. The Gathering—1. Hearing did not Content them—2. They did not wait for Jesus to come to them—A Scotchman and his Pastor—3. They did not Stop at the Disciples—4. They must have left their Business—5. Many came from a great Distance—A borrowed Bible—6. They came with their Ailments about them—III. The Result—Not one Repulsed—All were healed—The Attraction Grew—Reasons for coming to Christ—An Incident in Mr. Spurgeon's Home.

THE opposition of the great ones of the earth did not, after all, hinder the cause of Christ. The Pharisees, who were the leaders of religious thought, combined with the Herodians, who were the court party, to destroy Jesus; but at the very moment when their wrath had reached its highest pitch the crowd about the Saviour's person was greater than ever. Let us not, therefore, dear friends, be at all dismayed if great men and learned men, and nominally religious men, should oppose the simple Gospel of Christ.

Those who came to Christ in such great multitudes did not all come from right motives, and I shall not assume that they did. Some came from idle curiosity, no doubt; others came to listen to what He had to say, but were not prepared to believe in Him. We know that many came to be fed with loaves and fishes, swayed by the most mercenary motives. Still, in the case now under notice, large numbers came to Jesus because they had heard of the great things which He did, hoping that He would do something of the same kind for them; for multitudes of those who came were sick folk, plague-smitten, stricken with disease, and they came that by touching Him they might be delivered from all their sufferings. This boon they gained, and glorified the name of the Lord.

For our present purpose only we shall just now view those who literally came to Christ as the types of those who come spiritually. Many, I trust, who are present at this time will come to Jesus for the same reason that these people came, namely, because they have heard of the great things which have been done by Him.

Three things are before us. The first is the attraction,—"They had heard what great things He did:" secondly, the gathering—"They came unto Him;" and, thirdly, the context furnishes us with this, the result of the attraction and the gathering. We find it written "He had healed many; insomuch that they pressed upon Him for to touch Him, as many as had plagues."

I. THE ATTRACTION—

"they had heard what great things He did." My dear hearers, the case of these people is parallel with your own. There must be very few of you here but what have heard of the great things which Jesus Christ has done.

1. Let us note, first, that these people had heard with somewhat of a believing ear. Stories floated about concerning one who had healed blindness, palsy, leprosy; and they accepted the statements as facts. A lame man told how he had been made to leap like a hart, and a blind man declared that his eyes had been opened, and as these wonders passed from mouth to mouth these people believed them to be true.

I know that even those of you who are not converted yet believe what is recorded in these four Gospels concerning the miracles that Jesus wrought. You believe that Jesus Christ has done great spiritual wonders for multitudes. You have been told of great sinners whose hard hearts have been softened, whose characters have been changed, whose lives have been renewed, whose sins have been forgiven. You have met with such, have you not? You do not think that conversion is all a delusion; you have not reached that degree of unbelief. Indeed, instead of unbelief, you are filled with ardent admiration and feel a measure of desire to be yourself saved; and while sitting in this house you have often said, "Yes, I believe it is so. Oh that the mighty grace of God would renew me, and that I could touch the hem of the Saviour's garment that He might save even me."

Believing so much as you do, you ought in all reason to believe more. I mean you should go on to trust Him who has wrought these great things, and place your own case in His hands and leave it there. This is the legitimate course to pursue. Yet it grieves me that so many of you do not proceed to this saving point, but linger on the borders of faith. You see the river of the water of life, and wish to drink, for you are sure that it would quench your thirst, and yet you are in danger of perishing in sight of the flowing stream. O Holy Spirit! remove the madness of sin, and teach men true wisdom.

2. The many who came to Jesus felt themselves drawn because they had heard of the great things which He had done, and believed them; they proceeded, however, to the second step which I have already indicated, for they drew from what they had heard an argument of hope. They said, "Has He done these great things to others? Why should He not work the same gracious miracles upon us?" The palsied man said, "He that was sick as I am has been recovered; surely, if I could get near to Jesus, and could catch His eye, He would restore me."

Oh that my unconverted hearers would act reasonably at this time, and draw a like conclusion! Oh that your hearts would say—Jesus Christ has wrought great deeds of grace; He is evidently willing to work more; let me, then, come to Him and trust myself in His hands. If this be a time of cool, collected thought, and the Holy Spirit work in us wisdom, it will again happen that "A great multitude, when they had heard of the great things which Jesus did, came unto Him."

3. One more step should be mentioned. No doubt these persons were partly urged to come to Him by their own sad condition. Some of them were full of pain through bodily plagues, and others suffered poverty and wretchedness through being blind, halt, lame, or withered, and they were anxious to be delivered from their infirmity and the poverty which came of it. Being convinced that their cases were similar to those which had been healed by Christ, they felt an eager desire to see what He could do for them.

But, recollect, these people did not only come because they were sick or because they felt they were sick, for they had long known and felt their sicknesses, and had remained at home, or had resorted to other physicians, or to Bethesda's pool, or to some other famous fount. They came to Jesus, because, knowing and feeling their need, they also perceived that Jesus was able to meet their case.

Come, then, to Christ, O my sin-stricken hearer! because, be your condition what it may, He can meet it. Are you troubled with hardness of heart? By His Spirit He can take away the heart of stone, and give you a heart of flesh. Is your difficulty unbelief? You cannot see the truth, but the Lord Jesus can open the eyes of him that was born blind. Is it a case of want of power? Is your hand withered? The Lord can bid the withered hand be stretched out and it shall be done. It is not possible that there should be any moral or spiritual disease about any one of you that will baffle the power of my great Lord and Master.

II. Secondly, I shall ask you to think of

THE GATHERING.

We have seen the attraction, now let us see what it drew together. "They came unto Him."

1. Observe, then, that hearing did not content them. I wish I could say this of all my hearers. These people heard the story of what Christ had done, and I should not wonder but what they said, "It is good news; rehearse it in our ears a second time." They were told that He had opened the eyes of a blind man, and a blind man who heard it cried out, "Gladsome tidings: tell me that again." I should not wonder if that blind man went many times to the house of the person who reported the cure, and said, "Tell me again of this matter." The woman, too, who was sick with internal disease, said, "You told us of one that was healed; tell us of that marvel again."

Yes, but what would you have thought if they had kept on week after week, saying, "Tell us that story! tell us that story!" and then had gone home and said, "We feel so much better: we feel comforted by hearing this good news"? What fools they would have been to have been satisfied with a mere report of other people's cures, without going to the great Physician to obtain healing for themselves. Did you not sing the other day,

> "Tell me the story often,
> For I forget so soon,
> The early dew of morning
> Has passed away at noon"?

Why should you be told that tale so often? Will you never draw the inference that Jesus is able to save you, and will you never go to Him for yourselves? I am afraid that some of you are getting satisfied with coming to the Tabernacle, and that you are beginning to think, "There is hope for me; I always hear the Word of God; I am a regular hearer of the Gospel of Jesus." Yes, but that is not it. Those who are hearers only are not blessed in the deed.

Oh that this fooling would come to an end! Think me not harsh, I am but honest; it is fooling, and nothing better, to go on hearing the word and refusing to obey its call. May God's grace lead you to come to Jesus at once. Oh, do not be hearers only! Turn your faces Christward, and accept His great salvation.

2. Observe next, that these people did not wait until Jesus came to them. That we are to wait till Jesus comes to us is a common error: a sort of orthodox wickedness, a rebellious unbelief dressed out as humble submissiveness. I have known this preached—that we are to wait at the pool of the ordinances, in the hope that one of these days the angel may trouble the pool and we shall step in. These who talk so are not as a rule the most successful of soul-winners, and that fact reminds me of who had attended the ministry of an episcopal personage for some years. At last Donald forsook the Episcopal church, and when he was missed the pastor came to him. "Why don't you come to the church, Donald?" "Because I want to be saved; and I get no good with you." "Ah!" said the bishop, "you should wait at the pool." "I have been waiting at the pool a long time," said Donald, "a very long while, and no good has come of it." "But, Donald, you know the man who waited was healed at last." "Ah, well, sir, but he had some encouragement, for he saw some step in before him, but all these years that I have waited at your pool I have never seen one step in yet, and therefore I will wait no longer."

A STORY OF A SCOTCHMAN

Donald was right; no man can afford to run so terrible a risk as to remain in disobedience in the bare hope of some unpromised salvation. The Gospel narrative does not teach us to wait at the pool. I want to call particular attention to that fact. See you the crowd lying round the pool of Bethesda? What did Jesus do when He came walking along that morning through the five porches? Listen, ye sick folk, waiting still at the pool. Does He say, "Wait patiently"? Not a word of it; but, singling out a man who was among the most despairing, he said, "Rise, take up thy bed and walk." That is the Gospel. It is a divine command to believe and live.

3. Note again that these people did not stop at His disciples. Satan tries to keep men from Christ by pointing them to ministers, evangelists, or other eminent believers. Persons are impressed under a sermon, and they say, "I should like to speak with some Christian man." That is very good, but after all it i the thing which is commanded by the G You are to believe in the Master, and it wi suffice to speak to the servants. "But I like to go into the inquiry-room," says Very well, I do not condemn that action the best inquiry-room for a seeking sinner own bed-chamber, where he seeks the L once, with no one between him and hi deemer.

Why, if you could pick out the most e and thoughtful divines that ever lived, an could have twelve of them locked up at ho that you might go and talk to them all d all night long, it would not be worth o farthing to you, and it might even be an to you, if it kept you from going straight sus Christ. There is no salvation in me ministers must not be mistaken for prie shake off the thought of being a priest a shook off the viper from his hand. I hav said I would sooner be called devil "priest" if by that word is meant that any priesthood beyond that which belong my fellow-Christians, or any power to sin, or to impart grace.

My ministry is for the extolling of Jes not for the magnifying of myself and my ren. I dare not say, "Behold the pries Behold the church! Behold the sacram My one business is to cry, "Behold the L God!" I point you away from all minis Jesus Christ, the minister of the new co who alone can save your souls.

4. Observe again that these people wh to Jesus in such crowds must have le business. I do not know what became farms, their olive gardens, their cattl shops, but they certainly left them to jou Jesus. We do not commend any man f lecting his business and daily calling; will say this, that when a man's soul saved he cannot be blamed if he neglec thing till it is.

That woman who came out in the r with her water-pot to draw water from was doing a very useful and proper actic dare say those at home needed water tc but after she had heard Christ speak, it ten, "The woman left her water-pot." of those at home may have said, "Whe water, mistress?" But she would re have not thought of the poor water-pot. see a man that told me all things tha did; is not this the Christ?" Ah! if leave your water-pots to find Christ very well be excused.

Elections occupy men's thoughts ju but what are all these compared with your calling and election sure? You a dates for heaven, and there is more im in eternal election than in all other under heaven, for when every thing have passed away this must endure. S one thing needful, with Mary, even if y a while neglect what Martha thinks t urgent demands of the household.

5. Many of these people, too, came fro distance. Some came from the sou Judea; others came from the north, fr and Sidon; some from across the r dan; others from the hills of Edom. roads and deep rivers could not keep th who resolved to come to Christ.

I delight to see the holy ingenuity of minds when they are eager to find the they will do any thing to obtain salvatic member that years ago, when Bibles we common as they are now,

A VERY, VERY POOR MAN, who was impressed with his need o longed to read the Word of God, and he went to a shop to ask the price of hand Bible—the cheapest, the oldest on hand. "Ah!" said he, as he shook "I have not money enough to buy it, take great care of it if you will lend from Saturday night till Monday you won't miss the sale of it, and I m art of it." As soon as he gained the friendly an he gave himself up to the precious book till e moment he had to return it, and so sought find Christ.

Ah! you have Bibles, some of you half a dozen them, but you never look at them; the dust the unread books condemns you; you take trouble to reach the Saviour. God save you om this carelessness, and may you resolve to me to Jesus whoever may oppose. Be eager listen to His Gospel, though you may have r to go to hear it, and may have roughly ueezed in the crowd. When you hear the Gosl, cry to the Lord God for His blessing upon ; though dark thoughts may gather, and tan may try to thrust you back, be not reoved from your purpose. Make a push for aven and holiness. Never does the Lord rk in any man a firm resolution to find the viour and yet allow him to perish.

5. One thing I want to call very particular attion to; it is this: these poor people came Jesus with all their ailments about them. I ow they did, because we read that they pressed on Him to touch Him, and He made them ole. Now, suppose they had said, "We will come till we are recovered," then, of course, y needed not to come at all, and our Lord uld have been a superfluity to them. But he that was blind came blind, he who was le hobbled as best he could, and he who was sied came shaking and trembling; but they come.

he poor people who had all sorts of dire plaints, even those who had devils in them, e just as they were. That is the point to ch I would bring every man here who has not e to Christ: you are to come just as you Are you a drunkard? You have to give he drink, but you must come to Him as you to help you to give it up. Have you lived ncleanness of life? Come and trust in Christ, unclean as you are; trust Him to make pure. Have you been dishonest? Come to Him as dishonest, that He may make you st. Do not attempt to make yourself fit salvation, for it is clear that no one is so fit aving as the lost, no one so fit for washing e foul, no one so fit for healing as the sick. me to the Saviour; come just as you are. h the spirit of the hymn—> ne needy and guilty, come loathsome and bare; > can't come too filthy; come just as you are."

u think that it is needful to begin the work self, what is that but to insinuate that the Lo Jesus cannot do any thing till you have ed the work? Would you have it to be osed that He is not quite up to the mark, needs help from you? Is He so poor a Sa- that He is nothing till you enable Him to ? Think not so, but come along. You heard what great things He has done; come, to Him, even now, that the same great s may be wrought in you.

I will not say much upon the third point, is all that came to our Lord, multitudes h they were, not one was ever repulsed: no, ne. Since the world began, has one soul driven away from the Saviour's door? ll ye it in Gath, publish it in the streets elon, if ever Christ shall be found casting sinner, for then may the adversary justly over the defeat of the Gospel. I chal- all time; I challenge heaven, and earth, ell, to bring a case in which my Lord and r ever cast out a soul that put its trust in It cannot be.

THE RESULT.

A none were repulsed, so all were healed: ven so all who now believe in Christ are of sin and its plagues. "Ah," say ob- "you preach faith as the way of salva- We confess the charge; and glory in it, it is most true that it does save men. you ought to bid people do good works in to salvation." See here, good sir; if the who believe in Jesus do not perform works, and if this faith does not make them moral, honest, sober, holy people, then we grant your point; but who shall assert that the doctrine of faith is other than purifying and sanctifying when we can bring multitudes of proofs that this very preaching up of faith and not of works is the most effective cause of virtue and holiness?

Those who cry "Works, works, works," have generally but a scant supply of such wares. Remember the age of Laud and his popish preaching. Who were the followers of that theology but the libidinous cavaliers? Those who preached salvation by grace—pray, who were they but the godliest men in the nation, the Puritans, against whom no man could bring any charge save that they were too sternly good, and kept the Sabbath too precisely, and walked before God with too much gravity? I wish the same fault could be found with us all. If that be vile, we purpose to be viler still.

> "Talk we of morals, oh! Thou bleeding Lamb;
> The grand morality is love of Thee."

How can this divine morality of love be wrought in us unless the Lord Jesus by His Holy Spirit bestows upon us a heart to trust Him, and to take Him and Him alone to be our salvation?

One thing I cannot help mentioning, and that is, as every one that came to Christ was healed, it followed that the attraction grew. Say there had been five hundred healed; then when the people came, and a hundred more were benefited, there were six hundred to draw; and the next day, if there were a hundred more healed, there were seven hundred to attract others. Now, there never was a time since the world began when there were so many reasons for a sinner's coming to Christ as there are this morning. Just think of it. Every soul whom the Lord has saved is another argument that He is able to save me.

I desire now to spend a few minutes in real, hard, earnest work, in which may God the Holy Spirit help me, while I plead with those who have never come to Jesus, that they should come to Him at once. My dear hearer, if you have often heard about what Christ has done, and yet have never come to Him yourself, that He might work a similar work of love in you, I pray you be not hindered any longer.

First, come because His very name invites you—Jesus, a Saviour. You are sinful; but He has forgiveness. Come to Him. You will be well met—a sinner and a Saviour. Can two more congruous things come together? His name is Christ, too; that is, Anointed. Now, God has anointed Him with power to save, and commissioned Him to save, and He must and will discharge His high office by saving those who come to Him.

Our Lord's power should also encourage you to come to Him. Of that I have already spoken. Nothing has ever baffled Him yet. Stormy winds and raging waves obey Him; the very devils flee before Him. Come along with you. He is mighty to save; therefore come and hang the whole weight of your souls upon Him.

Next, let His character allure you. There was never such a mass of love as Jesus is; He speaks no harsh word to coming sinners: he giveth them mercy liberally, and upbraideth not. Hath He not said, "I will receive them graciously and love them freely"? Oh, come to Jesus.

Come to Jesus because God has made it His glory to pardon sinners. Constantine had a son whom he much loved, and he wished the nation to honor him; and so while his son was yet a child he caused him to sign pardons and charters, so that all gracious acts of the king bore the prince's signature. The Prince Emmanuel signs and seals divine pardons for the chief of sinners; and the great God in heaven loves that His Son should give pardon to sinners, for it endears Him to men and brings Him honor. Since it will honor Him to save you, come to Him, and be not afraid.

Again, let me remind you of the preparations that are made for saving sinners. Christ has died to save them, He shed His blood to save them, and do you think He will have these preparations wasted? I smiled last night at in my own home. Three of our friends had been writing hard for me all day, and my wife expecting them to tea had spread the table bountifully, and adorned it with choice flowers.

A LITTLE INCIDENT

I came into the room and said, "They cannot stop to tea, for there is a meeting at the Orphanage, and they say they must hurry off." I confess I felt sorry as I looked at the table and all its adornments. My own good wife replied, "No, no; they cannot go; they must have their tea. I cannot spread a table like this and nobody to come and eat. Go out and fetch in those highwaymen who want to run off: compel them to come in." I fetched them in, and they were by no means loth to sit down and partake. It would have been a great disappointment to the kind hostess if no one had eaten what she had provided. This is a homely story, but it sets forth the need there is that our Lord's provisions of grace should be used.

One thing more I have to say. I cannot tell if it will have power with anybody present, but I hope it may. I wish you would come to Jesus even for His servant's sake. If I were a sculptor fashioning a statue, I should feel that every stroke I took made a permanent impression, so that if I only wrought a little upon the hard stone I should make some progress, and my work would remain. Alas! my labor is not thus abiding in reference to some of you. I do my best each Sunday, but I am not much the forwarder, for you seem to be statues of ice, and the six week-days melt away my one day's work. It is weary work thus to labor in vain.

A painter takes his brush, and though he may be executing a very difficult portrait, yet every stroke tells, each tint and touch of color denotes progress. Alas! I seem as if I wrote on the sand with some of you; the week's tide obliterates the Sabbath's marks.

I read the other day of an old minister who had been some twenty years without a conversion, as far as he knew, and yet he was a really earnest man. At last, having much prayed over it, he announced that he should preach no more in that place, but resign his charge, and the reason he gave them, with many tears, was, "I am doing no good among you, there are no souls saved, and perhaps if another minister filled my place you might listen to his appeals. At any rate, I will not stand in the way of one who might be more useful, and so I bid you farewell."

As he went out an old woman named Sarah said, "Oh, sir, you cannot go, for you were the means of leading me to Christ some three or four years ago." "You," he said, "Sarah, I thought you were one who did not care for my ministry." "Oh, sir," said she, "it has been my meat and my drink." "Woman," said he, "why did you not tell me as much before? My heart has been breaking for you."

In the course of the week twenty or thirty came in to testify that they had sought and found the Saviour through his ministry. All he could do was to say, "Bless the Lord, I'll not leave my post; but why did you not tell me of it before? Oh the sleepless nights I might have missed if you had but told me!" Some of you may have been saved, and yet you have never confessed the blessed fact, and I put it to you, whether you do well and kindly by His servant thus to rob him of his wages, and keep back comforting news from his burdened heart.

However, that may pass. You who have not sought and have not found my Lord, what message shall I take home this morning to my Master when I go upstairs to speak with Him alone? Shall I tell Him you will not believe on Him? I set Him before you once again as able to save you; will you again refuse Him? Or shall the message be that you will trust in Him for salvation? God grant that you may give a wise reply for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

[Portion of Scripture read before Sermon, Mark 3.]

A CHICAGO MAN'S LEASE OF LIFE.

In the course of one of his recent sermons at St. Louis, Mr. Moody related the following incident:

I remember a few years ago I was closing a meeting in Chicago, and I invited all that were anxious for their souls to rise for prayers. There was a man in that congregation whose children had been in my Sabbath-school for some time, and I had got very much interested in him and also in his wife. That man rose for prayers.

I was so rejoiced that I went right to him and got hold of his hands, and I said: "You are coming out now for Christ, aren't you?" The man was trembling, and the tears ran down his cheeks, and, like Agrippa, he was almost persuaded. He said: "But there is one thing that keeps me from coming." "What is that?" I said. He said: "The fact is, I lack the moral courage." Naming a friend of his—"if he had been here to-night I should not have risen; and I am afraid when he hears that I have risen for prayers, he will begin to make sport of me, and I won't have the courage just to own up that I want to be a Christian. But I know if I want to be a Christian that I have got to confess Christ openly. I have got to come out and confess Christ."

I said: "You are right in that, but if heaven is what it is represented to be in the Bible, it is worth coming out and taking a stand for and being laughed at for a little while." He believed that. I just explained to him the best I could the way of life, and I got down and prayed with him. I thought surely he would come that night, or that he would be back the next night and accept Christ.

The next night he came back, and I found him in the same state of mind. I urged him again; I pressed upon him the claims of Christ, and I prayed with him, and he came back the next night; he came night after night. It seemed as if he came to the very threshold of heaven, and one step more would have taken him in. John Bunyan describes a to the pit from the very gates of heaven; and it seems as if he took that side-way, and, as he came to the very threshold of heaven, he turned away. Then he fell off from the meetings, and the Spirit that had been striving so mightily with him left him.

A SIDE-WAY DOWN

At last the man got so that if he met me on the street he would dodge me, and he would go to the other side of the street or would go off some side street—didn't like to see me. Six months or so passed away, and I got a message from him stating that he was sick and he wanted me to come and see him. I went to his house, and he was on what he thought was his dying bed, and he said: "Do you think there is hope for me now at the eleventh hour?" I said: "I believe there is hope for any man that wants to be saved." I took my Bible and I read to him and quoted promise after promise, and I got down and prayed with him.

Day after day passed, and, contrary to all the expectations of all his friends and physicians, that man got off his sick bed. I went one day down to see him. He was well enough to get out of the house. It was a beautiful sunny day, and he was sitting in front of his house. I took my seat by his side, and said: "Well, now, you will be well enough to come up to the church soon, and when you are, you are going to confess Christ, are you not? You are going to let all your associates know that you are on the Lord's side, are you not?"

"Well," says he, "Mr. Moody, I have made up my mind to be a Christian, but I am not going to be one just now. Next spring I am going over Lake Michigan, and I am going to buy me a farm and I am going to settle down, and then I am going to be a Christian; but I can't be a Christian in Chicago. I have got so many associates, and there are so many temptations, that there is no use in my trying;

I CAN'T BE A CHRISTIAN HERE."

"Well," I said, "if God hasn't got grace enough to keep you in Chicago He will not have it to keep you in Michigan. It isn't change of circumstances you want: it is a new heart. If you have Christ in your heart, you can serve Him here as well as anywhere."

I pressed upon him the claims of Christ, and finally he said: "I have made up my mind that I am not going to be a Christian now; next spring I will settle this question."

"Well," I said, "you don't know that you are going to live till spring; and I remember—I always shall remember—the laugh—it was a sort of forced laugh, a hypocritical laugh—with which he answered. "Why," he said, "I have got a fresh lease of life; I expect to live twenty years longer; I am getting well; I am well now, only I am weak; I shall get my strength back in a few days, and then I will be all right, and I am going to settle this question when I get into Michigan; then I will be a Christian.'

I said, "How dare you say that? You have no lease of life."

Says he, "I will take the risk;

I'LL RISK IT."

When I pressed him harder, he got angry, and he said: "Well, Mr. Moody, you needn't trouble yourself any more about my soul; you attend to your business and I will attend to mine."

I saw that it would do no good to talk to him any more, and I left him. I left him with a very sad heart and a very slow step. It was Thursday, about noon; I remember the day of the week and I remember the hour that I left that man. Just one week from that day a message came from his wife urging me to come at once in great haste. I went to his house and I met his wife at the door weeping.

I said: "What is the trouble?"

"Why," she says, "my husband has had a relapse; he has been taken down again, and I have just had a council of physicians here, and they have all given him up to die."

I said, "Does he want to see me?" Knowing how he felt the week before, I thought it strange that I should be sent for. She says, "No, he don't want to see you." "Well," I said, "why did you send for me, then?" "Why," she says, "I can't bear to see him die in this terrible state of mind." I said, "What is his state of mind?" She says, "He thinks his doom is sealed, and he will be in hell in a little while." She was not a professing Christian. I went to his room. When he heard the door open he turned his eyes toward the door, and when he saw who it was he turned his face away from me.

I went up to the bed and spoke his name and said, "How is it with you?" It was as silent as death in that chamber; not a word came from him. He was speechless. I went around to the foot of the bed where I could look him in the face, and I spoke again, and I said, "I want you to speak to me." He looked up at me, and he says, "It is too late, sir. You need not talk to me any more about my soul. There is no hope for me. I shall be in hell in a little while. My damnation is sealed."

I tried to tell him the way of life again, and to convince him of the truth of the promises; and when he saw me getting down on my knees he says, "You need not pray for me, Mr. Moody; you can pray for my wife; she will soon be left a widow; you can pray for my fatherless children; they will need your prayers; but you need not spend your time in praying for me." I tried to pray, but it seemed as if my prayers didn't go out of that room; it seemed as if the heavens above me were brass; it seemed as if my voice hadn't any power with God in prayer, and after prayer I got up and took that hand, and the cold, clammy sweat of death was upon it, and death was then feeling for the cords of life, and I bade farewell to that friend, and I never expected to see him in time or eternity. It was one of the saddest partings of my life.

This was about noon. He lingered until the sun went down behind those western prairies, and the next day his wife told me that from the time I left the house till he died all he said was, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and I a not saved." Just as he was expiring his w noticed that his lips were quivering, and that was whispering something, and as she leaned ov him, all she could hear was the faint whisp "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, a I am not saved."

Dear friends, how dark is a Christless life a a Christless death; a Christless grave and Christless eternity! How dark! How dar How sad! Don't let the harvest pass, don't the summer end, and you not be saved. D friends, be wise to-day. Your sins may blotted out if you will; let God have mercy up you. Don't be discussing this little thing a longer, but just come out boldly and take yo stand for Jesus Christ. It will be the best day your life if you do it.

WHAT COMING WARS MAY WE E PECT.*

By Rev. M. Baxter.

(Continued from page 253.)

Events Preceding the Three and a Half Years Ten Red Republics to become Ten Democra Monarchies—Power Given to Antichrist—I Image Set Up—The Sign Borne by his S vants—Alliance of Infidelity with Superstiti

To the proceeding of Antichrist a nat prophetically described as Sheba, and Ded and the merchants of Tarshish, with all young lions thereof, and which is underst to signify the maritime, commercial, and colo ing nation of Great Britain, will demur and monstrate with the great Antichrist in depr tion of his projected expedition. The expost tion is, however, tacitly predicted to pr unavailing, and the remonstrating nation m itself at that period, in common with the res the civilized world, speedily fall under Antichristian despot, because there is give him (as the Roman Empire's seventh h healed of its Waterloo and Sedan deadly wou "power over all nations" during the subseq final forty-two months or three and a half yea (Rev. 13 : 3, 5, 7; Dan. 7 : 25; Ezek. 38.)

During several months, however, before commencement of the final three and a years, and while the period of universal warf represented by the red horse of the Sec Seal, is being fulfilled, and while the great A christ is preparing and carrying into effect great invasion of Palestine with a vast federacy of the leading armies of Christend there will be various wonderful events acc plished.‡

---

* Extracted from "Coming Wars," by Rev. Baxter, in two pamphlets—five cents each by First pamphlet contains "Ten Signs of the End, Description of Approaching Events," with two and four large diagrams. Second pamphlet con valuable quotations from Forty Expositors on events. Address, 63 Bible House, New York.

† If England is the prophetic Tarshish, her ca ties are thereby additionally foretold. "For th of the Lord of hosts shall be upon every one t proud and lofty, and upon every one that is lifte and he shall be brought low, and upon all the of Tarshish" (Isa. 2 : 12–16), "Howl, ye shi Tarshish, for your strength is laid waste. Pass to Tarshish. Howl, ye inhabitants of the Isle" 32 : 1–14). The ultimate ruin of the navy of shish is apparently to be caused chiefly by fu gales and storms. "Thou breakest the ships of shish with an east wind" (Psalm 48 : 7). It s from Isa. 18 : 1, 2, that the prophetic Tarshi modern maritime nation is probably to help to back some Jews to Palestine at their partial re tion by the great Antichrist at the commencem the seven years of the covenant week; and also at their complete millennial restoration by (Isa. 60 : 9), after Antichrist's destruction a close of that seven years, when England and nations will be delivered from Antichrist's thre a half years' despotic rule.

‡ It is important to observe the distinction be the great Antichrist's two separate expeditions a Jerusalem—the one just before, and the other after his final three and a half years of uni

Satan, who is now the prince of the power of the air, will then, with all his angels, be driven down entirely to the earth; and their demonizing power and raging among mankind being thereby extraordinarily increased, will be the prime cause of the subsequent great persecution during the final three and a half years. An immense number of Christians, however, will at this time be supernaturally removed to a wilderness, and miraculously fed there by God during those final three and a half years. (Rev. 12 : 6 7; Eph. 2 : 2; 6 : 12.)

The first four literal day trumpets will also be introduced by terrific thunder and lightning, and an earthquake, and will startle the world by bringing down hail and fire, mingled wth blood, and burning up all green grass, and turning a third part of the sea into blood, and making poisonously bitter a third part of the freshwaters, and darkening a third part of the sun, moon, and stars. (Rev. 8; Luke 21 : 25; Joel 2 : 30; 1 9.) Furthermore, the great Antichrist, who as yet will only be a republican ruler, having previously introduced his troops into Egypt and Syria (the kings of the south and of the north), will overcome all their opposition, and will by that time be gaining power over all the other ten-horn kingdoms.* (Dan. 11 : 23-43; 8 : 22-23

Britain, another of the ten-horn kingdoms, lying inside the boundaries of the Roman Empire, will now, if not three or four years earlier, most probably have become governmentally separate from Ireland, which is outside the boundaries of the Roman Empire; and through the subtle conspiracies of Romanists and democratic revolutionists, if not by foreign aggression, will be falling under the great Antichrist and the Romish power. For power is to be given to the ten-horned and two-horned persecuting powers, in Rev. 13, over all nations. All the nations lying within the limits of Cæsar's original Roman Empire having been cast into the crucible of revolutionary disorganization, will now emerge in the form of a confederacy of TEN ULTRAMONTANE RED REPUBLICS controlled by the Papacy, which then, for a brief period, will be re-established in temporal power at Rome. This Confederacy is represented by the uncrowned scarlet ten-horned wild beast carrying the Scarlet Woman on its back in Rev. 17.

A few months later this confederacy of Ten Red Republics will be changed into a confederacy of Ten Democratic Monarchies as represented by the crowned ten-horned wild beast in Rev. 13, and ten new kings will be elected † by universal suffrage or plebiscites to reign over them during the ensuing final three and a half years, commencing in the midst of the seven years of the Jewish covenant week. (Dan. 9 : 27.) The Papacy will then be no longer like a queen riding on the ten-horned wild beast, but will be degraded into the position of a submissive two-horned satellite, stripped of all temporal power.

These ten kings will unanimously give their power and strength to the great Antichrist, as their imperial head, constituting him, in fact, a modern Roman emperor, and thus elevating him to a height of power greater than that of Cæsar, Charlemagne, or the first Bonaparte. And they will at last make war with the Lamb at Armageddon, and there perish together with Antichrist.* (Rev. 17 : 12, 13; 13 : 1; Dan. 2 : 42.)

The great tribulation during THE FINAL THREE AND A HALF YEARS. will then commence.

By this time the midst of the seven years of the Napoleonic-Judaic Covenant Week will be reached, and the great Antichrist, like another Nebuchadnezzar, having encompassed Jerusalem with his armies, will capture that city, and, notwithstanding his previous seven years' covenant with the Jews, will cause their sacrifices to cease, and lead forth many of them into captivity among the nations, and place his image, the abomination of desolation, in their temple, and even himself proceed to sit there, as the predicted Man of Sin, "showing Himself that he is God" (Dan. 9 : 27; 11 : 31, 40, 41; 12 : 7-12. Matt. 24 : 15-22. Mark 13 : 14-22. Luke 21 : 20-25. 2 Thess. 2 : 3-10. Ezek. 38 : 15, 16. Zech. 14 : 1, 2).

It appears also that a similar imperial image will be commanded to be set up in almost every town, city, and village throughout the above-mentioned ten kingdoms of the Roman-Empire countries, comprising, of course, England, and probably also in other parts of professing Christendom, including America, especially wherever there are many Romanists, Spiritualists, or Communists. Liberty of commerce will be granted to none but such as have imprinted on their forehead or right hand one or more of the personal proper names of the Great Antichrist, or the mystic number 666, which his names, singly or conjointly, will contain, as the sum total of their letters in the Greek language. The thirteenth chapter of Revelation fully describes this.

A remarkable event will precede, and greatly promote the erection and adoration of Antichrist's image, viz., "the healing of his deadly dynastic wound," and this has long been understood by many learned expositors to denote the future complete revival over Europe of the Napoleon dynasty, the seventh dynastic head of the wild beast or Roman Empire.

Bands of furious zealots, instigated by demon influence, will be commanded to search out and bring to the test every individual, both small and great, and to put to death those who will not worship the image, or receive the mark, of the latter-day Mahomet. It is probable that the superhuman satanic power and skill, which is to be permitted to be exercised in his behalf, may find one form of its development in the invention and construction of such inconceivably destructive missiles and engines of warfare as to make resistance to his armed hosts almost hopeless. He is also to "think to change times and laws" by establishing a universal Napoleonic code, and perhaps a new currency and a new calendar, dating from some epoch in his career, instead of from the birth of Christ, just as Mahomet did (Daniel 7 : 25).

The consequent reign of infidelity, linked with despotism, will be far more widespread and desolating than the Reign of Terror in France in 1793;* and will be characterized by far more daring avowals of impiety and blasphemy than were ever reached in the days of Voltaire and Robespierre. Their atheism stopped short at the national rejection of the worship of God, but the atheism that will signalize the period of the three and a half years' latter-day persecution will proceed to the assertion and establishment of the worship of man in the person of the Franco-Roman Emperor, the Napoleonic Cæsar of the last days, especially on the ground of "the deadly wound being healed," which his dynasty received at Waterloo and Sedan (Rev. 13 : 3-15; 2 Thess. 2; Dan. 11 : 36, 37, etc.). This will most likely first be commenced by some of the Jews beginning to hail him as their Messiah.†

When the Christian witnesses are then martyred for three and a half years, the imperial Herod of infidelity and the ecclesiastical Pilate of superstition will be made friends, although they may previously at times have been at enmity between themselves, and the latter will command persons to exclaim, regarding the former, "It is the voice of a god, and not of a man." The imperial Jehu, driving furiously in the chariot of universal subjugation, will, indeed, destroy the temporal power of the ecclesiastical Jezebel, and strip her of her costly trappings and accumulated riches; yet there will remain the skeleton framework consisting of the Romish ecclesiastics, headed by the Pontiff, and constituting a Jesuit association of powerful influence, to compel mankind to worship the Bonapartean Baal.

It will then be found that the Balaam of the Vatican will become a potent ally of the democratic-despotic Balak, the Franco-Roman Cæsar, who will be the Emperor of the ten kings ruling over the Roman world. Not only will the Great Emperor—represented by the ten-horned wild beast—be a Napoleon, but it need occasion no surprise if the Pope of that period—represented by the two-horned wild beast—is a Bonaparte; and perhaps some, or all, of the ten kings may be Bonapartes.

(To be continued.)

Driving Faith.—Archbishop Whateley says that many a Christian professes perfect readiness to follow the will of God, when really he only follows it as a driver does his horse—drawn by it indeed, but holding the reins tightly in his own hands all the time, and compelling it to go in his own way. One person proposes to believe on Christ, but not to confess Him, since in his opinion circumstances impose secrecy on his discipleship, for the present at least, in spite of the explicit words, "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and believe in thy heart" (Rom. 10 : 9). Another stands aloof from ordinances of God's Church, which he admits are plainly enjoined, because forsooth having rendered a spiritual obedience, forms are counted needless. "I had rather obey," said Martin Luther, "than to work miracles."

A Legacy has been left to Rev. W. M. Punshon, LL.D., the distinguished Wesleyan minister, of some thousands of pounds sterling, bequeathed by his uncle, Sir Isaac Morley, of Doncaster, England.

---

and persecution. His first expedition will be for plunder and depredation, "to take a great spoil" (Ezek. 38 : 1-16; Luke 21 : 20-24; Dan. 11 : 40-43,) while the people are living in prosperity, peace, and plenty, just previous to the three and a half years of great tribulation in which they are afterwards to be led into captivity and made desolate, and the abomination set up in their temple (Dan. 12 : 11; Rev. 11 : 2; Matt. 24 : 15-21); the second expedition for revenge and murderous extermination, "to destroy and utterly to make away many" (Dan. 11 : 45; Psalm 83 : 4; Ezek. 38 : 18-23), when he is smarting under the six literal vial-plagues at the end of the three and a half years' tribulation, and, therefore, gathers all his armies to Armageddon (Rev. 16 : 14-16). There is an implied, though not expressed, interval of three and a half years between verses 17 and 18 of Ezek. 38 (just like the eighteen centuries between verses 9 and 10 in Zech. 9).

The ten-kingdomed Confederacy seems to be to a certain extent broken up when Antichrist first arises as a little horn and subdues three of the ten horns; and he does not seem to gain power over all the ten horns until two or three years after his conquest of the three horns and his seven years' covenant.

It is not improbable that the actual appointed term for which the ten kings will be elected to reign may be a semi-septennate of three and a half years, as the French President, Marshal Mac Mahon, was elected for seven years, and the President of the United States for four years.

* A clear distinction must be noticed as to Daniel's ten confederated horns or kings who arise before Antichrist arises, as a little horn or sovereign, and then he subdues three of them, and so that ten-kingdomed Confedracy seems then to be broken up. (Dan. 7 : 24). Antichrist will make his seven years' covenant about that time, and about two or three years afterwards will gain power over all the ten-horn kingdoms, and will get ten new democratic kings elected over them. Perhaps some of them will be Bonapartes, just as Napleon I. made five of his relations European monarchs.

* In the year-day fulfilment of Revelation the French Revolution of 1793 is only called "a great earthquake" (or agitation, Greek seismos); but the world-wide Revolution of the seventh year-day vial during the final four or five years is called "an earthquake such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake and so great" (Rev. 11 : 13; 16 : 18).

† In Dan. 11 : 36, 37, the desire of women means the same as the desire of nations—namely, Christ the promised Messiah, to give birth to whom was the earnest desire of Jewish women.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 255).

"Through Much Suffering."

THERE was a pathetic patience and tenderness in Ernest's tone as little by little he unfolded to Rose the story of the past, and the crisis of the present. Rose's blue eyes seemed to grow darker and deeper as she listened.

"Who are you then, father?" she asked, "if you are not my grandfather's own son—not Clifford of Clifford?"

"I am nobody!" he answered.

"And I am nobody's daughter," she exclaimed; "I am not even Rose Clifford!"

She dropped his hand, and left her seat beside him, flitting away to the oriel window, where she stood looking out, with her back toward him. He could see only her slim, erect figure, and her bright head bent down a little. Her brain seemed in a whirl. Had she really heard her father say that he had no right to this pleasant home of theirs? That he had already given it up to its legal owner? That he had not even a right to the very name they bore?

If all this was to be swept away, her own identity must be swept away with it. She had never lived anywhere alse but at Clifford; she knew no other people. At this moment she forgot even her love for Robert Fortescue. If there was no Rose Clifford, what miserably deluded girl was she?

"It was cruel of him!" her heart cried in intense bitterness. Until this hour she had felt a passionate admiration of her father; a perfect, unquestioning faith in him. Rose had never yet suffered from being tempted; and it is hard for a young, innocent creature to make allowance for either folly or crime.

That her father should have been guilty of anything approaching to a deviation from the strict path of rectitude; that there should be even the appearance of evil in his conduct, was unutterably intolerable to her. This was why he could not rejoice when his younger brother came home. Oh, if she could but reinstate her father in his grand pre-eminence over other men! But that could never be. He was not the heroic, princely, sublime personage her fancy had delighted to portray him. He had fallen; and the deadly wretchedness of disappointment had taken possession of her heart.

"Am I to lose you also, Rose?" he asked, after a long silence.

The words, and still more the tone in which he spoke, touched her to the quick. She was all that was left to him, that was clear. Since the morning he had given up lands, and friends, and fame, his name almost, in obedience to the demands of his conscience, he had nothing belonging to him but his little daughter. If she stood aloof from him he would be altogether forlorn and deserted.

Rose uttered a low cry, and clasped her hands together. She understood now why Ruth Symons still clung to her father. Nothing could set aside that relationship. Whatever he might become, or wherever he might go, he would be her father. With a second low cry, Rose flew across the room, and flung herself into his arms.

"Then I have my little girl still!" he said in an agitated voice.

"Oh, yes! yes!" she cried, clinging to him with all her might; "but it will make all the difference in the world to us."

"It will," he answered sadly.

"We shall be quite poor, you and me?" she said.

"Quite poor!" he repeated. "We must leave Clifford."

Leave Clifford! She had not had time to think of that. Leave the place that belonged to all her past life; the old familiar fields, the cliffs, the sea! Leave all the people whose faces she knew and loved, and who had cared for her longer than she could remember! She could quit the house, which was no longer her home, which had never rightly been her home; but how could she leave Clifford? Yet the sudden recollection that for the last few days she had admitted to herself the possibility of living elsewhere flashed across her mind.

"Father," she said softly, "of course you will come and live with me when I am married? Robert will wish it, I know. He thinks there is nobody in the world like you. Oh, father, may I not write and ask him to come over and hear all these things from you? I could never make him understand all in a letter. I must tell him how poor we are now. But none of us will mind about being poor."

For a minute or two Ernest did not answer, reluctant as he was to dissipate his daughter's unworldly ignorance. It was possible, certainly, that young Fortescue might remain true to Rose. Ernest's own disposition toward women was of a chivalrous and romantic turn. But he knew very well that Sir Robert Fortescue would set his face as a flint against the marriage of his son with a penniless girl. It would be best to prepare Rose for the trial lying before her, with regard to this young and innocent love of hers.

"My dear child," he said after a pause that had seemed intolerably long to her, "do you imagine his father will consent to his son being poor? What do you think Sir Robert Fortescue will say of me? He will call me an impostor, and a knave, or a fool. He might have been my friend, possibly, if it had not been for this love between you and his son; but now he must blacken my character to save his own."

"Father!" ejaculated Rose, looking at him in terror.

"My darling," he went on, "if Robert Fortescue is worthy of you he will be true to you; and though you may have long and many troubles before you, you will be happy at last; all the happier for the trouble beforehand. You may write to him, Rose, if you wish it. Only remember, love, remember, you have no mother to read your letter before it goes."

"I shall remember," replied Rose.

Ernest stooped his head to kiss her fair, simple, young face. He would have purchased her happiness by a life of wretchedness for himself. But it was not possible to separate their lots. If any stigma rested upon him, it must rest also on her. His poverty was hers; his exile from Clifford swept her from this peaceful home into the wide world, where he must seek his fortune. "The sins of the fathers are visited upon the children." There was no evading that law.

There was unbounded excitement in Clifford and the neighborhood when it was known that Ernest was about to relinquish the estate to his younger brother, the rightful heir. Julia Rush was satisfied that her discovery of the torn paper was at the bottom of it, and she told her story triumphantly about the village. His enemies, of whom he had a few, as every man has, asserted that he had forged old Clifford's will, and that, though he was a clergyman and a magistrate, he had often passed sentence upon offenders against the law much less guilty than himself.

Charles Clifford kept silent, and so did Mrs. Clifford. Gradually it had dawned upon them that no power outside himself could have forced Ernest into giving up the possessions he held. They saw that he had done a deed of which they felt themselves incapable. Mr. Wright was continually either praising Ernest's nobility, or blaming his want of common prudence in not securing terms for himself; and by degrees the idea took root in their minds that on the whole Ernest had done a great deal more than could have been expected of him. So they held their tongues, and spoke neither good nor evil.

But there was one person in Clifford whose inmost heart quailed when the news reached her. Mr. Britton was not at home yet, but he was coming at the end of the week; and his wife knew his first impulse and his fixed determination would be to resign his living in Ernest's favor. There was little in common between Mr. and Mrs. Britton. She was an unconverted woman, and understood nothing of the inner life her husband lived. So, in the present emergency, her whole thoughts we those in this life.

It would never do to lose Clifford Vicarag Suppose dear Jenny became mistress of Cliffo Grange, how sweet it would be to live close b side her! Mrs. Britton put on her bonnet a hurried away to see Ernest, and make sure the was no feebleness in him which would acce her husband's sacrifice.

Ernest was busy in the library, surrounded papers and letters, which had been the accum lation of years, but which must now necessar be sorted out, and the greater part of them stroyed. "He looks fully his age," thoug Mrs. Britton, with some satisfaction; though Ernest was only four years younger th her husband, he had always looked ten ye younger, and she had grudged him this triv advantage.

He met her with a friendly smile as she enter the room with a timid aspect and walked acr the carpeted floor, as if it had been paved w egg-shells. For Rose's and Ruth's sake, Ern was favorably inclined toward all their sex; a Mrs. Britton was the wife of his dearest frie so he gave her a cordial reception.

"My dear Mr. Clifford," she said in her hu blest tone, "surely, surely, this terrible ne cannot, cannot be true! You are not going give up Clifford to your brother Charles, as p ple say?"

"I have given it up," he replied; "the d of gift is being prepared by our lawyer."

"Oh, dear, dear!" she cried, clasping hands; "what a terrible trial! What a trial us all—to you, and our sweet Rose, and my p William! William is bound up in his char his very heart and soul are in it. It would br his heart to leave his poor dear people, who so attached to him. He thinks of his pa night and day—more than he does of me, own wife, and seven children. Seven child Mr. Clifford! And there is no chance of bishop doing any thing for William. He has influential friend in the world; and he ne seeks a favor from any one."

"I hardly understand you," said Ernest.

"Why, of course, if you give up Clif Grange, William will feel bound to give up vicarage to you," she answered; "it will be first act; I know it will. He never minds w he goes, or what he wears, or eats and dri so that he is at his work. He hardly think the children, except their souls. Someb must think of these things; and, oh! Mr. ford, remember there are seven of them, and have only Rose. I ought to have sent Je away from home as a governess, but your kind mother is so fond of having here here, she is hardly nineteen yet. I know we ough give up our home and all we have to you, b can't see what will become of us all."

Her voice faltered, and she hid her face in handkerchief. Mrs. Britton was not abl weep easily; and, though she was in real al and terror at this moment, not a tear-drop tened in her eyes. But hiding her face had the same effect upon Ernest.

"My dear Mrs. Britton," he said earne "this is quite a mistake of yours. Such an as taking William's living from him crossed my mind, or any one else's except y I'm quite sure. No, be comforted. I'd so beg my bread than take his post from him."

"But William will be all on fire to do know he will," continued Mrs. Britton; " lieve he'd like to live in a wilderness, and b with manna rained down from heaven on pose for him. He was quite content with hundred and twenty pounds a year, and di care how brown and frayed his clothes wer whether he had meat for dinner or not. been so happy and comfortable here on hundred pounds a year, and so many little from our good neighbors, it made me wretched to think of going away to only racy again. If you would only give me a so promise that you would not let William up the living?"

ow solemn a promise do you want?" he e with a half smile. "I assure you nothing th would prevail on me to take William's Besides, neither my brother nor I would Charles could not like to see me still in ace, and he would not give the living to u may depend upon it. Send William to soon as he reaches home, and I will make ar reason."

Britton went away greatly comforted. and special consolation in the idea that would never appoint his brother vicar of pish; and if so, her husband's living was d she was secure in the comfortable rnest had given to them. She encoun- harles and congratulated him with effu- t might have been the dearest wish of rt to see him reinstated in his right.

nean little humbug!" said Charles to for he had no high opinion of women, Ernest had. He did not trouble himself ery courteous to her; but she did not is lack of courtesy. She was accustomed of herself as a poor vicar's wife, and it ectly easy to her to bow down to wealth er, which at this moment were repre- her by Charles Clifford, from whom she ite humbly pocket any impertinence.

Britton reached home on Saturday and as soon as he heard the start- he rushed off to seek his friend. He ely, he said, with an eager light shining e. to strike his tent and go out again, he knew not, under the same guidance hich had brought him to Clifford.

reminded him of his wife and children. he innocently declared, was of the d as himself, and his children were but to whom every change was a pleasure, did not find decent poverty a hardship. hould any Christian deem poverty a ?" he asked with a kindling face. Was laster poor? A carpenter working for bread? And should the servant be master, the disciple above his Lord? ly when Ernest urged upon him that it utely impossible for himself to remain d after all that had taken place, and other vicar, more to Charles's mind, appointed in his place, that William consented, with tears, to retain the e his friend had given to him.

hall at least be a hundred a year poor- id, in a slight accent as of triumph; brother continues to grant us that dred, you will accept it from me, Er- u will pledge yourself to that?"

k I may pledge myself to that," an- nest, smiling at his friend's enthusiasm ance of human nature—of Charles's particular. But this was hardly fair Britton, who had had little opportu- owing Charles, and whose faith in his tures was only a little less than his od.

s Ernest quite fair to his younger The two tall, stalwart men were often is time, passing from field to field to- parently on good terms, while Ernest to the new proprietor what he had e past, and what he had meant to do re.

vas gloomy and sometimes surly, but to Ernest's plans with close atten- lling all the time that he should re- ich interest in them now they con- no longer.

(To be continued.)

HE TRANSFIGURATION.

son for May 2d.—Matt. 17 : 1–13.
xt, John 1 : 14. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

verse of the chapter preceding that our subject is chosen reads thus: ay unto you, There be some standing shall not taste of death, till they see man coming in His kingdom." No had reference to that which follows: six days Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into a high mountain apart, and was transfigured before them; and His face did shine as the sun, and His raiment was white as the light."

Peter, who had confessed Him to be the Christ, the Son of the living God. And although he had failed to understand the mind of his Master, and had savored, not the things which be of God, but those which be of men, the Lord had no grudge against him, and the very next thing we read of Peter is, that he was still one of the chosen three, a witness of Christ's glory. If the disciples had only the suffering, humiliation, and death of their Lord to which to look forward, they might easily fall into discouragement, understanding as little as they did of the resurrection. And thus Jesus, in His wondrous love and tenderness, gives them a glimpse of His glory which should be enough to confirm their faith in Him, and to banish forever, or at least, render inexcusable, any doubt.

He "was transfigured before them;" "the form of a servant" (Phil. 2 : 7) was changed into the glory of the Lord; the face which was to be "marred more than any man" (Isa. 52 : 14) "did shine as the sun," for it was the same light that shall make the sun needless in the city which is "the bride, the Lamb's wife" (Rev. 21 : 9). For "the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof" (Rev. 21 : 23). His raiment was white as the light. In Ezekiel 1 : 26–28, where the prophet sees the vision of Christ in glory, he says, "From the appearance of His loins even upward, and from the appearance of His loins even downward, I saw as it were the appearance of fire, and it had brightness round about."

Let us not forget that whatever our beloved Lord received as man, He received for us, as though to pass it on to us. "We know that when He shall appear," said one of this very three, who were at this time privileged to see His glory, "we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is" (1 John 3 : 2). And Paul says, "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory" (Col. 3 : 4). Here is our glorious hope. "As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."

But transfigured bodies must possess transfigured souls. The body always follows the soul. It is not in the first moments of spiritual life that the likeness of Christ is so wonderfully manifest in the features of some of His children; when we see it we know the soul has been long in communion with Him. It is not the first downward steps which print upon the drunkard and the impure of both sexes the grievous stamp of degradation. The first steps upward and the first steps downward are in the soul, and the body follows.

"I beseech you, therefore, brethren," says the apostle Paul, "by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed" (the same word in the Greek as transfigured) "by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God" (Rom. 12 : 1, 2). If our souls, our minds, our wills and affections are transfigured from earthly to heavenly, from self life to Christ life, then they demand, as a natural consequence, bodies which are "fashioned like unto His glorious body, according to the working whereby He is able even to subdue all things unto Himself" (Phil. 3 : 21). And this work is the work of the Holy Ghost, who utilizes all circumstances which are arranged by our heavenly Father to carry on His work in us.

Returning to our blessed Lord's transfiguration, we read (ver. 3), "And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with Him." Blessed company! Two transfigured ones, one of whom had died and the other was translated without dying! just like that company who shall meet Christ in the air at His coming to take away His people (1 Thess. 4 : 14, 17). We learn from Luke 9 : 31 that Moses and Elias "appeared in glory," i.e., with transfigured bodies, "and spoke of his decease which He should accomplish at Jerusalem." What an insight this gives us into the fact that the death of Jesus is the central point of all things for saints in glory as well as to the church militant on earth.

Peter was entranced; he had believed, now he saw, that Jesus was "the Christ, the Son of the living God," and he never wanted to go back to earth again. The same spirit which would have spared Jesus suffering, "Pity Thyself," would now rest upon the mountain, and leave a world of lost souls to perish. "Lord, it is good for us to be here," he says: "let us make here three tabernacles; one for Thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias;" "not knowing what he said," is added in Luke 9 : 33. And truly Peter knew not how little he understood Christ's redemption and His heart of love to all sinners. He thought only of what was good for him. And there are thousands of believers in the present day, who spend their time in going to meetings, or hearing sermons which are good for them, they think, and who forget the command of the Master to "go into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature" (Mark 16 : 15).

"While He yet spake, behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them; and behold a voice out of the cloud, which said, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye Him." The Father would draw all attention off the two glorified saints and fix it on Jesus alone, and then He said, "Hear Him." Instead of having your own ideas as to what is good, instead of giving your own opinion, "Hear Him." "When the disciples heard it, they were sore afraid. And Jesus came and touched them, and said, Arise, and be not afraid. And when they had lifted up their eyes, they saw no man, save Jesus only." And with Jesus only they must come down from the mount of glory to meet with sin and sinners and with all the power of the enemy, but it was enough. The radiance was gone, the exultation, the marvellous atmosphere of heaven up there was no more around them, the holy men whom they had seen were no longer visible, but enough, Jesus was with them.

"And as they came down from the mountain, Jesus charged them, saying, Tell the vision to no man, until the Son of Man be risen again from the dead." The Jews of His time had the Scriptures read in the synagogue every Sabbath day. They must often have heard the words of Isa. 35 : 4–6, "Behold, your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense; He will come and save you. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped: then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing," etc. The fulfilment of these words was so evident in the daily doings of the Lord Jesus, that He could appeal to it (Matt. 11 : 5) as a proof of His identity, and the Lord seems only to have allowed those who had previously believed to receive confirmation from heaven during the time of His life on earth, as in the cases of John the Baptist when Jesus was baptized, and the disciples on the mount of transfiguration.

The disciples then asked, not in a captious, but an inquiring spirit, "Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come? And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things. But I say unto you, That Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. . . . Then the disciples understood that He spoke unto them of John the Baptist." It was prophesied of John the Baptist, "He shall go before Him in the spirit and power of Elias," etc. (Luke 1 : 17), in fulfilment of Mal. 4 : 5), "Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." And in Matt. 11 : 14 our Lord says, "And if ye will receive it, this is Elias, which was for to come." It is yet a question whether Elias will not be one of the two witnesses (Rev. 11 : 3–6).

FOREIGN TOPICS.

The Question of who will be Prime Minister in England still occupies the attention of the British public. The desire of the people for Mr. Gladstone's leadership becomes daily more decidedly manifest, although leading politicians and members of Parliament are generally believed to be averse to committing the reins of government to his hands. Even Conservative journals acknowledge that Mr. Gladstone is the choice of the country, and confess that no government has much hope of permanence in which he is not a leader.

Now that the election returns have been analyzed, it is discovered that the Conservatives, although defeated at the polls, actually received more votes by 118,000 than they did at the last election when they were so decisively victorious. It is therefore evident that the votes which have now turned the scale against them were those of electors who were not entitled to vote at the former election or, being entitled, did not exercise their right.

Otero, the Man who tried to Murder the King of Spain, was executed April 14th. Persistent efforts were made to obtain a commutation of his sentence. Even the young Queen, whose nerves were so shaken by the attempted assassination, joined with the friends of the condemned man in pleading for mercy. It is understood that the King would have reprieved him but for the influence of the foreign ministers at his court, who represented to him that the alarming increase in the number of regicides throughout Europe would render leniency in this instance unwise. It gives a favorable impression of the young King's character that he consented with reluctance to his assailant's execution.

Mr. Gladstone and the Church of Scotland.—As the disestablishment of the Irish Church was the work of Mr. Gladstone, some apprehension was felt by the Scottish electors lest he should deal in a similar way with the Church of Scotland if he had the power. The question was therefore put to him by one of his present constituents. In reply Mr. Gladstone pointed out the distinction between the two churches. He said: "The Church of Ireland represented a miserable minority of the people, but the Church of Scotland represented a very large majority of the people. When the question of the Church of Scotland came to be discussed it would be calmly discussed by men meeting on a footing of equality. It was to the sentiment of the people of Scotland they must look when it came to be discussed. The decision must be a real manifestation of the wishes of the people, in order to bring about a fresh issue in regard to the question."

The Serious Illness of Prince Gortschakoff, the Russian Chancellor, is announced. He has been for twenty-four years the leading minister of the Russian Empire, and has directed both its domestic and foreign policy. The advanced age of the eminent statesman renders it extremely improbable that he will survive the attack by which he has been prostrated.

Fears for the Safety of the large British training-ship Atalanta are entertained in London. She carries eleven officers and 300 young seamen. She is a sister vessel of the Eurydice, which foundered off the Isle of Wight in the spring of 1878, having on board 325 officers and seamen. The Atalanta was last seen at Bermuda on January 29th, and is therefore seventy-three days out. She was expected at Portsmouth some weeks ago. She had water for sixty days. The Channel fleet have been ordered to search for her. Torturing anxiety reigns in many British homes as to the vessel and the young lives she had in keeping.

Missions in Zululand.—Although the ar-arrangements made for the resettlement of Zululand were not favorable to missions, there seems good reason to hope that the country will be really thrown open to the Gospel. John Dunn does not appear to be beyond the reach of Christian public opinion. The outcry raised against his intolerance has had influence with him, and he has been showing kindness to the missionaries of his neighborhood. Recent intelligence from that region is that the work of evangelization is about to be begun at Isandula. By a remarkable providence, the district containing the graves of so many British soldiers has been assigned to a chief who is not only favorable to the establishment of a mission among his people, but has for years shown his desire to be himself instructed by the church, and to have his followers brought under the influence of church teaching. To preach Christ in such a spot is indeed to take a sublime revenge on the authors of the massacre.

An Episode of the Occupation of Cabul.—The Pioneer says: Perhaps one of the most curious episodes of the occupation of Cabul by English troops, after well-nigh forty years' absence, is that a well-known Major in one of the Goorkha battalions finds himself again in Cabul, his birthplace in the days of the old occupation. Born in Cabul, he was carried by his mother, the wife of a staff officer of the army, through all the horrors of the dreadful retreat, was borne into captivity, released by British cavalry, and grew up to bear Her Majesty's commission, and again to enter Cabul. Stranger still, the jailor of his mother has come to Cabul, and visited his prisoner of bygone days.

A Prominent Hindoo Priest in Central India was baptized on a profession of faith in Jesus Christ in the beginning of February. He lost faith in idolatry about three years ago, but he was not brought to a knowledge of the truth till about eighteen months ago. He would have been baptized then, had it not been for his unwillingness to part with his poita, or Brahmanical thread. "Do let me," he entreated the missionary, "become a Christian and keep the poita. I will take it off," he continued, "while I am being baptized, and I will put it on again." It took him more than a year to overcome in the conflict. Blessed be God, at last His grace conquered. The man who had "believed with the heart unto righteousness" could not remain any longer without "confessing with the mouth unto salvation." His relatives were very angry with him at first, and his wife threatened to destroy herself. This priest was held in great repute by the people. "Now that Bisso Nath has become a Christian," they say, "we also will think of the religion of Jesus."

London Missionaries in North China write home that an extraordinary interest in their meetings is shown by the Chinese women. Mention is made of one who for several months walked a distance of five miles every Sunday in order to attend the services. Others have walked ten miles, and usually remain the entire day, returning home on the morrow. "With many of them," says a report, "all trust in idols is gone; a few have laid hold of the great facts of the Gospel."

The Cruelty of Fashion.—The Capture of bright-plumaged birds for feminine adornment is reducing the number of the beautiful Indian kingfishers. A correspondent of a Lahore journal, quoted by the Times of India, speaks of meeting two men bearing odd-looking baskets strolling along the shores of a lake in the evening, and who were birdcatchers from Madras. Their baskets contained the feathers of two hundred kingfishers, and they would sell for less than ten dollars at Madras, and the men stated that bands of their brethren were scattered over the country all the year round, their spoils being sent to England.

A New Gun, surpassing in Destructive Power any existing implement of warfare, has been invented by Sir W. Armstrong, of London. This fearful weapon is capable of firing a thousand shots per minute and killing a man on a horse at a mile range. It has a compact appearance, can be taken to pieces and easily carried about, can be applied to military and naval use, and the mechanism of it is simplicity itself; the revolving band has two compartments, into which, as they whirl around, metal cartridges drop from a tall oblong case fixed over the centre of the barrel. A quarter of a million of dollars to have been spent on experiments neces perfect the gun, which is now declared b military expert to be a complete s Prophetic expositors have expressed thei that the last few years of this dispensation marked by the appearance of new warlike ments of great power.

A Small Prize Won at a Great Cost.— cal contest is reported from Valparaiso b two rival pianists. For forty-eight ho Madrid Imparcial tells us, the anta pounded away at their pianos, stopping to eat, drink, nor rest, and bound by on conditions of the contest not to play a sin of dance music. One of the pianists pla "Miserere" from the "Trovatore" 150 and at the end he fell forward on the pia while his adversary was carried off to the in a precarious condition. Like the matches with which we have unfortuna come so familiar, this trial of endurance best but an instance of foolish and mis energy. A prize won at the cost of lif permanent injury to health is surely wo great a cost, unless it is such a prize as t apostle won (Phil. 3 : 13, 14).

A Man Entombed Alive in a Tree.— lar discovery was recently made in Styria woodcutters felled a venerable oak in th of Drömmling. It was found to be holl was soon brought to the ground. A skeleton, in excellent preservation, closed. Even the boots, which came a knee, were almost perfect. By its sid powder horn, and a silver watch on wh engraved the name "H. von Krackowitz It was the skeleton of a man between th forty years of age. It is conjectured th engaged in hunting, he climbed the some purpose and slipped incautiously hollow trunk, from which there was no and he probably died of starvation.

What Whiskey is Useful for.—The Guthrie, of Scotland, was a strong ten man. On one occasion he expressed his of whiskey in these words: "Whiskey is its place. There is nothing like whiske world for preserving a man when he But it is one of the worst things in the preserving a man when he is living. want to keep a dead man put him in wh you want to kill a living man put whi him."

A New Zealand False Christ has ap the person of the principal leader of t Maori, named Te Whiti, who is a reli thusiast and fanatic of the most advan a man of self-denying life. He is well re Holy Scriptures, particularly in the portions. He announces that he is Jesu that his second advent is at hand; th be accomplished by the crucifixion of h the Europeans, after which he will r restore to life all the Maories who h killed in the wars, drive all the Europ the sea, and will then become the King Zealand. Te Whiti has been, it is sai all through his career, adverse to the of blood, and declares that if the go were to allow him to be king he would his people from fighting.

Heathenism in England.—A writ English journal says: 'Visiting a co lage in Worcestershire, a few weeks called on a feeble old man, some sevent age, and found him totally ignorant of pel. I told him as simply as possible o who came from heaven on purpose to sinners, and I made him count on his fo the words, 'He died for me.' After several times he could just remember I shall never forget his look as he said, they be the most wonderful words I ev for one man to die for another; nob told me that.' With tears in his eyes he me to go down the village and tell t just what I told him, for he knew it them good."

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Pu shed at 63 Bible House, New York City, and 2 Ivy Lane, London. Edited in London by the Rev. M. Baxter, in New York by Mr. B. Aitken.
is Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr TA IAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also occasionally a Sermon by the Rev. W. MORLEY PUNSHON, LL.D., the celebrated Methodist Minister, Rev. W. M IA AITKEN, or some other Eminent Preacher; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

Single Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 1880. 14th Year. No. 18—New Series.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

PORTRAIT OF DR. CULLIS, OF BOSTON, WITH SKETCH OF HIS LIFE AND FAITH WORK.

VE HED. A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage.

THE LAST OF THE O'G.'s. A Short Serial Story by the Author of "Arnold Percival Montaigne."

Fileer's Death-bed—An Inconsistent Angler and Martha the Dressmaker.

WHAT COMING WARS MAY WE EXPECT? by Rev. M. Baxter (Continued).

CURRENT EVENTS: Congress—The State Conventions—The San Francisco Tragedy—A Town Destroyed by a Cyclone—The Madison Garden Catastrophe—A Check on the Liquor Traffic, etc.

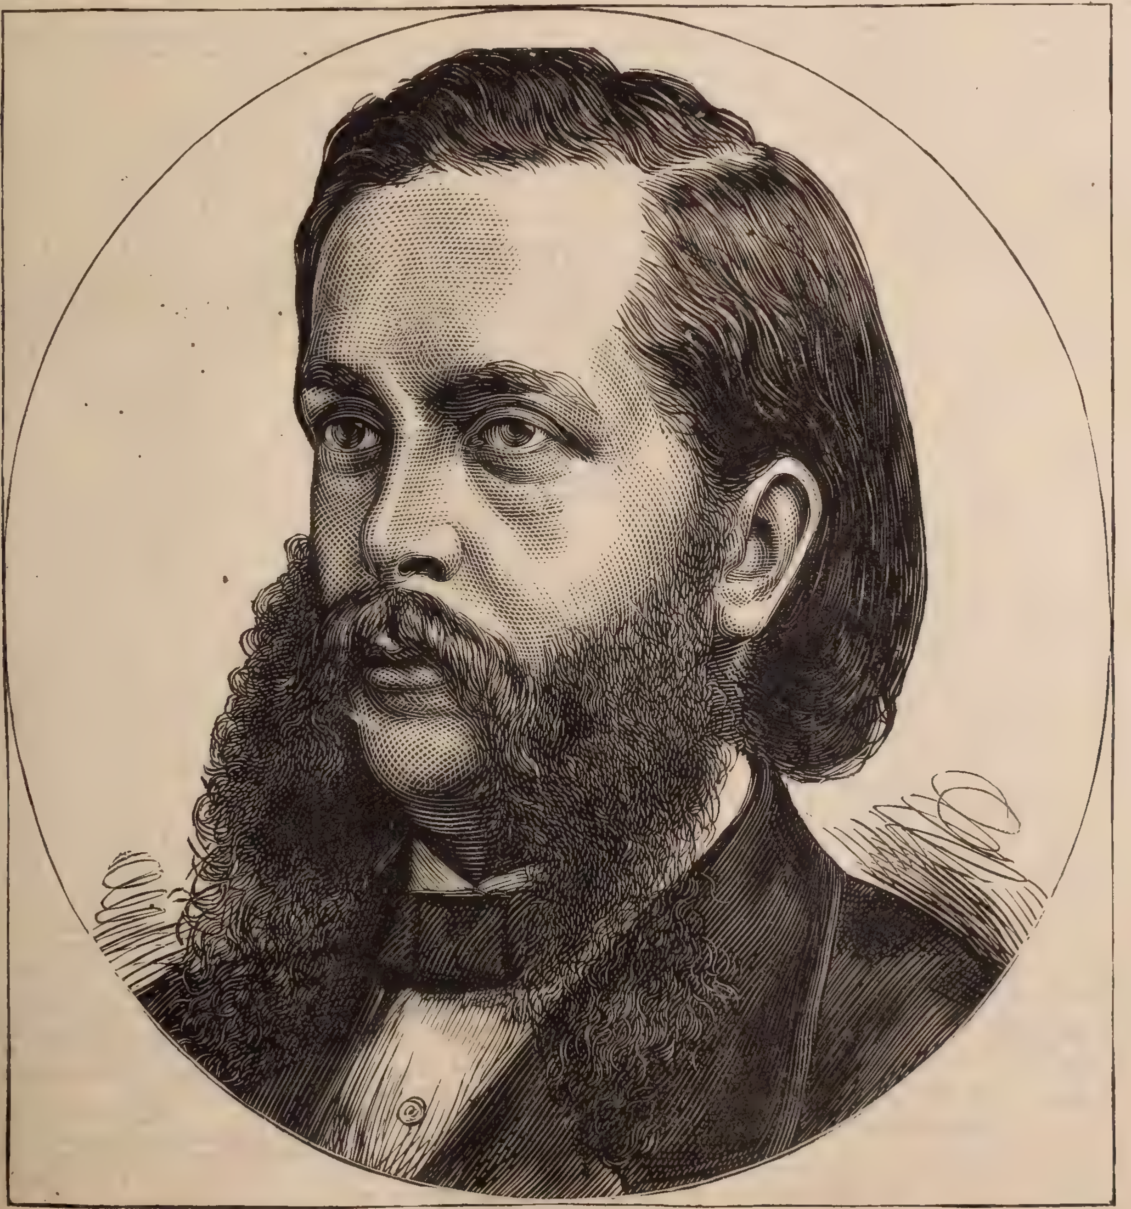
FOUR QUESTIONS ANSWERED. A New Sermon, with Anecdotes, by Rev. D. S. Moody.

AT SCHOOL. A Short Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH (Continued).

Jesus and the Young. S. S. Lesson by Mrs. M. Baxter.

FOREIGN TOPICS—The Newly Appointed Premier of Great Britain—The French Prime Minister on War—Defalcation of a Clerk of the Rothschilds—Christian Work Among London Ballet-Girls, etc.



DR. CULLIS, OF BOSTON, Founder of the Consumptives' Home.

DR. CULLIS, OF BOSTON.

His Wonderful Work of Faith.*

The Beginning of his Great Work—A Wrong Beginning—The Right Way—The Growth of the Work—Three Clusters of Buildings—A Branch Work in India—Two Heroines—Miss Wheeler and Miss Sisson—Dr. Cullis's Daily Habits—His Early Bereavement—His Dedication to God—Remarkable Answers to Prayer—The Ten Dollar Bill—A Child's Penny—Faith Cures.

SEVENTEEN years ago the idea was flashed upon Dr. Cullis of providing for homeless, penniless consumptives. He received it as from God, but leaned to his own understanding to carry it out (Prov. 3 : 5). His first plan was to have a grand hospital in a high place of Boston, built and sustained by appeals to the princely givers of the metropolis, and conducted under the direction of a noble Board of Managers. It took two years' experience to convince him that this human mode of procedure must be relinquished, and a plan of simple reliance upon God followed out.

As Father Mills said, "God inhabits eternity; therefore He is never in a hurry." He patiently waited, and let His young servant work his own idea out, until at last his high thought of a grand hospital was brought low, and God's lowly thought of a humble home was accepted in its stead. God Himself was also acknowledged as the only one to whom appeals were to be made for money, and whose direction should be taken in the management of this humble home. How far the example of George Müller, of Bristol, was instrumental in leading the Doctor to this conclusion we do not know.

At the end of two full years Dr. Cullis bought, on mortgage for twenty years, a common dwelling-house in Willard Street, one of the low places of Boston, for the comfortable care of twelve sufferers, with a matron and nurse. He most joyfully dedicated it to God on the 27th of September, 1864, as

THE CONSUMPTIVES' HOME.

This was the beginning. Dr. Cullis had no money of his own. He was a young physician, and desired this work that he might devote his own surplus earnings to its support, and for the rest ask and receive it all from God. He did not regard the mortgage as debt, because the house itself was security.

A second house was added, and soon a third and fourth, the four standing back to back with a space between, which was filled up by a building connecting all as one Home.

In due time all these were paid for, and three others were bought—one for a Children's Home, another for a Deaconesses' Home, and a third for a Mission Home and Chapel. Subsequently it became evident that this cluster of Homes must have larger space and a better place for expansion and perfection. The Divine Hand that founded and sustained it was not long in pointing out Grove Hall, on Boston Highlands, as the chosen locality.

The spot where that stood had been singularly overlooked by the keen-eyed speculators who were on the lookout for such places. It contained thirteen acres of ground, overlooking harbor and bay, and was more like a portion of an English nobleman's park, with its grand old trees, than like part of a crowded city. It was purchased for the low price of $90,000.

There are now

THREE CLUSTERS OF BUILDINGS

upon it, scattered at regular intervals among the old elm-trees. Centrally, in the first place, with an avenue on each side leading up to it from the road, stands the Grove Hall cluster, consisting of the original hall, four stories high, with its portico-tower and wings, a stately mansion occupied as the Consumptives' Home, and two new buildings known as the Spinal Home and the Chapel for the Dead.

On the right, in another cluster, are, first, Grove Hall Church, the mission church for the neighborhood, preached in from Sunday to Sunday by Dr. Cullis; and, second, the Deaconesses' Home. A little farther along is the third group, comprising the Children's Cottage Homes, No. 1 and No. 2, with ample room for cottages that are to come. The whole together make up a beautiful little village by itself, while round about the grounds, on all sides, are private residences, each in its own unwalled garden of flowers, shrubs, and trees.

How unlike this is to the castle in the air the barrack-like hospital first conceived in the mind of Dr. Cullis! It has come into existence so naturally that Topsy's answer to the question, "Who made you?" "I don't know—I 'spect I growed," suits it exactly.

The Children's Homes are real cottage homes, without a single line or angle of the military cut so often induced in orphanages, through overstrained orders in manners and dress; and the daily chapel services in Grove Hall and the Sunday worship in the church are much more like the home greetings, in the freedom of love, among children gathering around an adored father, than like the stately formalities of the assemblies of those very little acquainted with each other, and less so with Him whom they distantly worship.

Here, then, crowning one of the high places of the New England metropolis, is this beautiful village-like cluster of homes—a real crown, better than golden; one branch of the work commenced, thirteen years ago, so humbly in Willard Street in its one lowly dwelling-house.

Besides this wonderful cluster of Homes there are three other branches of the work.

There is, first, the Beacon Hill Branch, planted upon another of the high places of the town, within a stone's throw of the famous State House of Massachusetts. It comprises,

1. Willard Tract Repository, now grown from its small beginning thirteen years ago in Willard Street, Boston, to be a considerable publishing house, with branches in New York and Philadelphia.
2. Faith Training College, with an efficient corps of professors and a large number of men and women in training for various Christian work.
3. Beacon Hill Church, now in its sixth year, with its excellent pastor, the Rev. C. Squire.
4. Faith Chapel, in and around which the College, the Church, and the Repository are all accommodated.

Another important branch of the work is that of Foreign Missions, begun in 1875, at Basim, in Central India. Miss Lucy R. Drake was first sent out; and in a little more than a twelvemonth she so far mastered the Mahrattee and Hindoostanee languages as to begin to speak in them to the people. In the first two weeks of her public ministry she spoke to who had never heard of the Lord Jesus Christ. She also opened a Missionary Home in a large district unvisited by missionaries.

SIXTEEN HUNDRED PERSONS

About a year later this lady was joined by Miss Wheeler and Miss Sisson, who entered upon their work, and maintained their post with a fortitude probably unparalleled except in the annals of Christian heroism. Miss Drake's health failing, the two other ladies, ignorant of the language, inexperienced in the country, without a house, without money, and without sympathy, stood firm for eight months, actually "joying in the God of their salvation" (Heb. 3 : 18). Then their reward came.

The account of that period of trial is so graphic that it will reward any one who reads it. It is contained in the Fifteenth Annual Report, obtainable for twenty-five cents at any of the Willard Tract Repositories.

Still another branch of the work is a Cancer Home in the village of Walpole, fifteen miles from Grove Hall. It was opened in 1878, and has already made some progress.

"These four branches of this work," say writer we quote, "are the frame for the po of Dr. Cullis. The most life-like photogra him, apart from this framework, would c no idea of the man. Indeed, the man hi seen and heard, would give no idea of him he were not known by his fruits. One happened to me to be approaching Bosto train in company with Dr. Cullis and two very dear friends. Seated near, there stranger attracted to us who soon let us that one object he had in view was to s work of Dr. Cullis. 'Aye,' I said, 'how is that we have met you! One of our n is Dr. Cullis himself. Can you tell which is

"He indicated first one and then anothe til he came, last of all, to the right one youngest and most playful of all, and could believe us when we assured him that this w founder and conductor of the great wo which he had heard so much.

"The weight of the work does not o Dr. Cullis in the least. He takes no a thought for to-morrow, though there are scores of mouths to fill, and a world of w be done; but he is as playful as a child, for a romp with his children the moment h home, and full of pleasantry all the day Every Sunday, when at home, he preac the morning in and sometimes has meetings elsewhere afternoon or evening, or both. Every d sides worship in his own family, he h morning's cheery conference with the w of the Homes in the Highlands, and a in the Chapel of the Consumptives' Hom sees every inmate, besides directing as to affairs of the day. He reads his numero ters, answers some, and gives full instr about others; looks minutely after all r and expenditures; visits a large circle of p in and about town who cannot come to h ceives a still larger number some days office, and prays with many of them.

"GROVE HALL CHURCH,

"He keeps the record of all his work and reports it annually in detail; sees ma come to him to be shown the way of sa or instructed more perfectly as to the p rest of faith and power for service so bl exemplified by him. Once a week, on T afternoons, he holds a public meeting i Chapel. Often through the week he meetings in other places; during term eight months of the year, acts as Presi Faith Training College, and lectures once to the classes on Christian work; and mo month he manages editorially two mont pers—the Times of Refreshing, for Christia another journal for the unconverted; a the minute oversight of a large and growi of publications in the form of books and

"Any idea of him as a man robust f infancy, a prodigy of health and strength, be wholly untrue. He suffered immen childhood and youth from weakness an tration. Indeed, he had a sad and so young life of it all the way up to manhoo was obliged after an apprenticeship to b to give it up, though his heart was in it, of health and strength to pursue it; and constrained to study for his profession. his heart was not in it at first, simply for strength to engage in any other occupati

"More than the infirmities of age seem fallen to the lot of his youth, and now in t of maturity (he is now about 46 years of enjoys more than the ordinary freedom a piness of childhood. In fact, he is a real the solution of which can be found onl joyfulness of his Christan experience."

The story of his

EARLIER EXPERIENCE

and later consecration, and final entrance freedom and fulness of rest and blessing in our Lord Jesus Christ, has a spice of r and of sadness about it, all the more me for the gladness which has come out o him. The present Mrs. Cullis is the I nd wife. Like many another youth, he fell ve before the time that the wise and prudent ght fitting; and then, against all sage coun- land some strong opposition, he married the g lady of his choice.

---

* Many of the particulars in this sketch are taken from the valuable "Life of Dr. Cullis," by the Rev. W. E. Boardman, which may be obtained at any of the Willard Tract Repositories.

fore this he had been confirmed and be- a communicant in the Episcopal Church. oung wife had gone farther and become a believer in Christ. A little while only they together, when the wife wasted and died of nption—with the brightness of the glory ven beaming from her face, and with the s of joyful anticipation on her tongue. llis's anticipations from this world died ier, and at the bedside where her body was in death he gave himself in the dark to -to live and earn money in his profession, or himself, but for the advancement of the h of Christ.

was quite young, and only entering upon reer as a physician in partnership. Im- tely he separated himself from his partner et up on his own account. He grew in fa- d practice, and money flowed in upon him. id not hoard it or use it upon himself, but freely in such channels as commended elves to him, until one day the text, "To n his work," suggested to him the idea pecial work for every man, a special work n. Upon this he meditated until the time a stranger called to ask about some place oor homeless consumptive ready to die in eet for lack of some better place. Then d, "Here is my work. I will accept it."

he came, not very long after the conse- at the bedside where his wife's body was to apprehend the grace of God in giving n to die for sinners, and to see himself as f the sinners for whom Christ died. He sted most deeply of earthly bliss during time of his beloved wife; but now, for the me, he began to drink at the fountain of ly joy. Then followed the deep, sweet re- him in actual experience that it is better than to receive. Soon after came the ac- ce of the special work designated by the r him, and the disappointment of his hu- ethod of building the hospital.

came the work itself: and his whole nt out in it with joy and gratitude to God ry contribution in aid of it in answer to But cares grew with the work, and vexa- ame. If there had not been more for Christ than he had so far apprehended, ittle foxes, after all, would have spoiled es" (Cant. 2:15). He saw this, and be- rnestly desirous of a deeper experimental dge of Jesus, by which he should be de- from fret and worry and vexation, and p and carried foward in perfect peace.

st, in a moment, this came. He was re- or reading the Lord's Prayer, and came ords, "Lead us not into temptation, but us from evil. For thine is the kingdom, power, and the glory." This flashed upon e light and glory of the fact that it be- to the Lord alone to deliver us from evil. ly he transferred the responsibility for sent and perpetual deliverance from the t tormented and threatened him, from to the Lord, and began rejoicing in Him oy doubled over to him above all he had own before.

that time rivers of living water have ed to flow from his inmost being; and ow so great a work has grown up under d, and so great a joy has pervaded it, d it with the sunshine of God's glory.

evere trials of faith recorded in the An- ports which Dr. Cullis has issued for the een years remind one of the similar ex- s related in

GEORGE MÜLLER'S

Trust." And equally glorious are the s of God's faithfulness to His promises. one example:

ober 15th, 1878. This morning I had a elve dollars to pay for milk. The man at the Home yesterday that he would call for the money this morning. See how the Lord delivered. The mail brought from Philadelphia, Pa., five dollars; I had four dollars and fifty cents in my pocket, and this was all the money I possessed. I prayed that I might find the money at the Home; on reaching there I found in the box two dollars. I went to the Spinal Home, and found in that box twenty-five cents; this made eleven dollars and seventy-five cents; twenty-five cents more were needed. I went to both of the Children's Homes, and found not a cent in either box. I looked to the Lord and asked for the other twenty-five cents. I returned to the Home and found that in the ten minutes of my absence a visitor had dropped into the box twenty-five cents. Bless His dear name! That bill was paid. 'The mountains shall depart, and the hills shall be removed, but my kindness shall not depart from thee, saith the Lord'" (Isa. 54:10).

Every copy of the Annual Report contains the following STATEMENT

to stop the mouths of detractors:

"There is no Fund, Endowment, or known Pecuniary Provision whatever existing for the support of the Home; no human friend of it who has ever made any promise, express or implied, to preserve it or relieve its necessities; and no person in any way connected with Dr. Cullis who has the control of means sufficient to do more than render small contributions toward its maintenance." During the last year the Lord sent in cash thirteen thousand nine hundred and ninety-five dollars and fifty-eight cents; and for the fifteen years the Home has been established, without any solicitations from man, but in answer to prayer, God has sent the amount of three hundred and eighty-six thousand nine hundred and seventy-seven dollars and ninety cents! So does He honor those that trust in Him.

One gift of ten dollars from a poor widow came with this interesting story. The woman's husband died seven years ago; at his death a friend gave her ten dollars, saying, "You may need a little help now." She told the Lord that if He would take care of her, she would give the ten dollars to Foreign Missions, and as He had wonderfully cared for her, she sent Dr. Cullis the identical ten-dollar bill.

In another touching case the donor was a member of Dr. Cullis's own family: "My little four-year-old was present at Grove Hall on Sunday morning when Dr. Jewett preached. During the course of the sermon he exhorted all that had not done so to put a box for missions on their centre-table and train their families to systematic giving. When I next went into my sitting-room I found on the Bible, on the centre-table, without a cover, turned upside down, having a hole in the bottom of it of convenient size for dropping in money, and underneath was a penny. My little four-year-old had placed it there, and it contained her all."

A PASTEBOARD BOX,

Our space forbids our going into details regarding the extraordinary cases in which God has put forth His miraculous power to heal persons in hopeless sickness for whom Dr. Cullis prayed the earnest, fervent prayer of faith. It will be understood that Dr. Cullis, while earning his livelihood by the exercise of his profession, like any other physician, makes no charge to persons who, believing in God's power to heal, and in Dr. Cullis's strong faith, come to him with the request that he will simply intercede with God on their behalf.

Many of these cases are narrated in a volume, "Faith Cures." Others are published as they occur in Times of Refreshing, a well-printed monthly paper, which, together with Word of Life, another periodical by Dr. Cullis, may be obtained at the Willard Tract Repository, Boston, New York, or Philadelphia.

We shall be glad if this imperfect sketch interests Christian people in a man who is great in works of benevolence and great as a witness for God.

A FUSILEER'S DEATH-BED.

By John W. Russell (of the English Royal Artillery, Malta).

Sick—Groping for Light—Dawn—A Dying Question.

AFTER the lapse of five years I feel constrained to send forth this true account of the last moments of Private A——, 101st R.B. English Fusileers, in Citta Vecha Military Hospital, Malta, in the earnest hope that God in his great mercy may lead some of my comrades to decision for Christ.

He had been sent from the hospital at St. Elmo to the one in which he died, in the hope that the change from town to country might fully restore him, and until a week before he died he cherished a hope of again recovering, and thought that he might yet be spared to witness for the Lord Jesus.

But beautiful scenery, kind, skilful doctors proved of no avail. He who doeth all things well had ordered it otherwise. It was soon evident, not only to himself but to all who saw him, that his hours were numbered; that soon he must enter the presence of Him before whose throne we all must stand.

Though earnestly desiring to find peace, Satan seemed to throw difficulties in his path until the last day; then all was bright, all was plain; Satan was despoiled of his prey, and our comrade was enabled to cast himself body and soul on Him who careth for him. From this time till his death no dark shadows flung themselves between him and his God—no doubts obscured the presence of Him who was about to guide our friend through the dark valley safe to his Father's house of many mansions.

As he found his end approaching he desired us all to come round his bedside to hear his last, his dying words. There we stood, his wife and a few comrades, gazing on the face of one from whom all pain appeared to have vanished, upon whose countenance there was celestial calm and peace.

He shook hands with us all, saying he wished he had spent his whole life serving God, beseeching one and all to "seek the Lord while he may be found, to call upon Him while He is near."

With his last breath he put to all the question, "Will you meet me in that bright land above?" Our answer was scarce given when the last struggle was over.

What a change! Oh, how glorious! No longer on an hospital cot, his body sometimes convulsed with agony, but in the land where none shall say, "I am sick," and where there is no more pain; no longer in the uniform of H.M.'s 101st, but clad in robes of snowy white.

Five years have passed, and yet that question rings in my ear, "Will you meet me in that bright land above?" Comrade, don't you hear it? It comes from one like you, a soldier, from dying lips, with head propped up and but a moment to live. Don't you hear it? Listen, oh, listen! He asks through me to-day, "Will you—you—you—will you meet me?" Where? Not on the battle-field, not on earth, but in that bright land above.

An Earnest Desire for Spiritual Teaching has arisen in Spain. Wesleyan missionaries say that it is no unusual thing for their missionaries to receive a written requisition from villages signed by forty or fifty inhabitants, asking them to come and preach the Gospel to them. Like France, they have had about enough of Romanism, and begin to understand its hollowness.

Arrowroot Exchanged for the Bible.—In the Island of New Hebrides, in the Southern Ocean, three thousand seven hundred pounds of arrowroot were shipped recently for London by the native Christians who have been gathered in by the Gospel within the last thirty years. Their offering is to make payment for an edition of the Old Testament, as it is now being issued in their language. Silver and gold they have not, but what they have they freely give.

WEIGHED.

A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage, preached on Sunday Morning, April 25, 1880.

"Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting."—DANIEL–5 : 27.

The Work of Two Million Builders—O What a City!—The Balance Lifted—God's Balance the Only Perfect Balance—Religion should take Hold of This Life—God will Weigh the World—Churches—Nations—The Napoleons Weighed—The Balance of the Sanctuary—Who will be Weighed?—The Moralist—The Formalist—The Worldling—The Final Scrutiny—The Unforgiven, Weighed—The Christian in the Balances—Weights that do not Turn the Scale—The Christian Side Comes Down—Nothing Wanting—A Policeman's Courageous Act—Suffering for Others.

BABYLON was the paradise of architecture, and driven out from thence the grandest buildings of modern times are only the evidence of her fall. The site having been selected for the city, two million men were employed in the rearing of her walls and the building of her works. It was a city sixty miles in circumference. There was a trench all around the city, from which the material for the building of the city had been digged.

There were twenty-five gates on each side the city; between every two gates a tower of defence springing into the skies; from each gate on the one side, a street running straight through to the corresponding gate on the other side, so that there were fifty streets fifteen miles long. Through the city ran a branch of the river Euphrates. This river sometimes overflowed its banks, and to keep it from the ruin of the city, a lake was constructed into which the surplus water of this river would run during the time of freshets, and the water was kept in this artificial lake until time of drought, and then this water would stream down over the city. At either end of the bridge spanning this Euphrates there was a palace—the one palace a mile and a half around, the other palace seven and a half miles around.

The wife of Nebuchadnezzar had been born and brought up in the country, and in a mountainous region, and she could not bear this flat district of Babylon; and, so to please his wife, Nebuchadnezzar built in the midst of the city a mountain four hundred feet high. This mountain was built out into terraces supported on arches. On the top of these arches a layer of flat stones, on the top of that a layer of reeds and bitumen, on the top of that two layers of bricks closely cemented, on the top of that a heavy sheet of lead, and on the top of that the soil placed—the soil so deep that a Lebanon cedar had room to anchor its roots. There were pumps worked by mighty machinery fetching up the water from the Euphrates to this hanging garden, as it was called, so that there were fountains spouting into the sky.

Standing below and looking up it must have seemed as if the clouds were in blossom, or as though the sky leaned on the shoulder of a cedar. All this Nebuchadnezzar did to please his wife. Well, she ought to have been pleased. I supposed she was pleased. If that would not please her, nothing would.

There was in that city also the temple of Belus, with towers—one tower the eighth of a mile high, in which there was an observatory where astronomers talked to the stars. There was in that temple an image, just one image, which cost what would be our fifty-two million dollars.

O WHAT A CITY!

The earth never saw any thing like it, never will see any thing like it. And yet I have to tell you that it is going to be destroyed. The king and his princes are at a feast. They are all intoxicated. Pour out the rich wine into the chalices. Drink to the health of the king. Drink to the glory of Babylon. Drink to a great future.

A thousand lords reel intoxicated. The king seated upon a chair, with vacant look as intoxicated men will—with vacant look stared at the wall. But soon that vacant look takes an intensity, and it is an affrighted look; and all the princes begin to look and wonder what is the matter, and they look at the same point on the wall. And then there drops a darkness into the room and puts out the blaze of the golden plate, and out of the sleeve of the darkness there comes a finger—a finger of fiery terror circling around and circling around as though it would write; and then it comes up and with sharp tip of flame it inscribes on the plastering of the wall the doom of the king: "Weighed in the balances, and found wanting." The bang of heavy fists against the gates of the palace are followed by the breaking in of the doors. A thousand gleaming knives strike into a thousand quivering hearts. Now Death is king, and he is seated on a throne of corpses. In that hall there is

A BALANCE LIFTED.

God swung it. On one side of the balance are put Belshazzar's opportunities, on the other side of the balance are put Belshazzar's sins. The sins come down. His opportunities go up. Weighed in the balances—found wanting.

There has been a great deal of cheating in this country with false weights and measures and balances, and the government, to change that state of things, appointed commissioners whose business it was to stamp weights and measures and balances, and a great deal of the wrong has been corrected. But still, after all, there is no such thing as a perfect balance on earth. The chain may break, or some of the metal may be clipped, or in some way the equipoise may be a little disturbed.

You cannot always depend upon earthly balances. A pound is not always a pound, and you pay for one thing and you get another; but in the balance which is suspended to the throne of God, a pound is a pound, and right is right, and wrong is wrong, and a soul is a soul, and eternity is eternity. God has a perfect bushel and a perfect peck and a perfect gallon. When merchants weigh their goods in the wrong way, then the Lord weighs the goods again.

If from the imperfect measure the merchant pours out what pretends to be a gallon of oil and there is less than a gallon, God knows it, and He calls upon His recording angel to mark it: "So much wanting in that measure of oil." The farmer comes in from the country. He has apples to sell. He has an imperfect measure. He pours out the apples from this imperfect measure. God recognizes it. He says to the recording angel, "Mark down so many apples too few—an imperfect measure."

We may cheat ourselves and we may cheat the world, but we cannot cheat God, and in the great day of judgment it will be found out that what we learned in boyhood, at school, is correct: that twenty hundredweight make a ton, and one hundred and twenty solid feet make a cord of wood. No more, no less. And a religion which does not take hold of this life as well as the life to come is no religion at all.

But, my friends, that is not the style of balances I am to speak of this morning, that is not the kind of weights and measures. I am to speak of that kind of balances which can weigh principles, weigh churches, weigh men, weigh nations, and weigh worlds. "What!" you say, "is it possible that

OUR WORLD IS TO BE WEIGHED?"

Yes. Why, you would think if God put on one side the balances suspended from the throne—if on that side of the balances he put the Alps, and the Pyrenees, and the Himalayas, and Mount Washington, and all the cities of the earth—if He put them on one side of the balances they would crush it. No, no. The time will come when God will sit down on the white throne to see the world weighed, and on one side will be the world's opportunities, and on the other side the world's sins. Down will go the sins and away will go the opportunities, and God will say to the messengers with the torch, "Burn that world! Weighed, and found wanting!"

So God will weigh churches. He takes a g church. That great church, according to worldly estimate, must be weighed. He pu on one side the balances, and the minister the choir and the building that cost its hund of thousands of dollars. He puts them on side the balances. On the other side of scale he puts what that church ought to be, its consecration ought to be, what its symp for the poor ought to be, what its devotic all good ought to be. That is on one That side comes down, and the church, not able to stand the test, rises in the balances does not make any difference about your nificent machinery. A church is built fo thing—to save souls. If it saves a few when it might save a multitude of souls, will spue it out of His mouth. Weighed, found wanting!

So God estimates nations. How many He has put the Spanish monarchy into the s and found it insufficient and condemned it! French Empire was placed on one sid scales, and God weighed the French Empir Napoleon said, "Have I not enlarged Boulevards? Did I not kindle the glories Champs Elysées? Have I not adorned Tuileries? Have I not built the gilded House?" Then God weighed that natio He put on one side the scales the Empero the Boulevards, and the Tuileries, an Champs Elysées, and the gilded Opera-hous on the other side He put that man's abo tions, that man's libertinism, that man's s ness, that man's godless ambition. Thi came down, and all the brilliancy of the vanished. Weighed, and found wanting!

What is that voice coming up from S Weighed, and found wanting! Prince Im slain on the Zulu battlefield—the good E this moment on the way to find the spot he fell. Before leaving home giving her to the chief church in Paris. The goodn her heart and the goodness of the Prince Im not able to save that great house, which ha condemned in the time of Napoleon. We and found wanting!

But I must become more individual and personal in my address. Some people sa do not think clergymen ought to be sonal in their religious addresses, and th the Sabbath-day it ought to be a treatment jects in the abstract. I do not think tha What would you think of a hunter who go to the Adirondacks to shoot deer abstract? Ah! no. He loads the gun, the butt of it against the breast, he runs along the barrel, he takes sure aim, an crash go the antlers on the rocks. And so want to be hunters for the Lord, we mus sure aim and fire. Not in the abstract are treat things in religious discussions.

If a physician come into a sick-room, d treat disease in the abstract? No; h the pulse, takes the diagnosis, then he mal prescription. And if we want to heal so this life and the life to come, we do not treat them in the abstract. The fact is, y I have a malady which, if uncured by grac kill us forever. Now, I want no abstr Where is the balm? Where is the physic

People say there is a day of judgment c My friends, every day is a day of judgmen you and I this morning are being canv inspected, weighed. Here are the balance sanctuary. They are lifted, and we must weighed.

WHO WILL COME AND BE WEIGHED

Here is a moralist who volunteers. He of the most upright men in this city of Brc He comes. Well, my brother, get in—g the balances now, and be weighed. But gets into the balances, I say, "What is that you have along with you?" "Oh," h "that is my reputation for goodness, and ness, and charity, and generosity, and kin generally." "O my brother! we cannot that; we are going to weigh you—you. stand in the scales—you, the moralist. Pai es?" "Yes," you say, "paid all my debts." ave you acted in an upright way in com- ity?" "Yes, yes." "Have you been kind e poor? are you faithful in a thousand rela- in life?" "Yes." "So far, so good.

But now, before you get out of this scale, I to ask you two or three questions. Have thoughts always been right?" "No," you "no." Put down one mark. "Have you the Lord with all your heart, and soul, and , and strength?" "No," you say. Make er mark. "Come now, be frank, and con- hat in ten thousand things you have come —have you not?" "Yes." Make ten and marks. Come now, get me a book enough to make the record of that moral- eficits.

brother, stand in the scales, do not fly from them. I put on your side the scales e good deeds you ever did, all the kind you ever uttered; but on the other side cales I put this weight which God says I put there—on the other side the scales pposite to yours I put this weight: "by eds of the law shall no flesh living be jus- " Weighed, and found wanting.

, the balances of the sanctuary are sus- d, and we are ready to weigh any who Who shall be the next? Well, here is comes and he gets into the balances, and ets in I see that all his religion is in genu- s and in outward observances. As he nto the scales I say, "What is that you n this pocket?" "Oh!" he says, "that stminster Assembly Catechism." I say, good. What have you in that other ?" "Oh!" he says, "that is the Heidel- atechism." "Very good. What is that ve under your arm, standing in this bal- f the sanctuary?" "Oh!" he says, "that urch record." "Very good. What are se books on your side the balances?" he says, "those are Calvin's Institutes." brother, we are not weighing books: we ighing you. It cannot be that you are ing for your salvation upon your ortho- Do you not know that the creeds and ms of religion are merely the scaffolding building? You certainly are not going ake the scaffolding for the temple. Do t know that men have gone to perdition catechism in their pocket?"

A FORMALIST.

t," says the man, "I cross myself often." Ah that will not save you." "But," says n, "I am sympathetic for the poor." will not save you." Says the man, "I he communion table." "That will not u." "But," says the man, "I have had e on the church records." "That will you." "But I have been a professor of forty years." "That will not save tand there on your side the balances, ill give you the advantage—I will let you the creeds, all the church records, all istian conventions that were ever held, ommunion tables that were ever built, side the balances. On the other side nces I must put what God says I must e. I put this one-hundred-pound weight other side the balances: 'Having the godliness, but denying the power there- om such turn away.'" Weighed, and anting!

he balances are suspended. Are there rs who would like to be weighed or who eighed? Yes; here comes ts into the scales. I can very easily see s whole life is made up of. Stocks, s, percentages, "buyer, ten days," thirty days." Get in, my friend, get se balances and be weighed—weighed for and weighed for the life to come. He I find that the two great questions in are, "How cheaply can I buy these and "How dearly can I sell them?" I dmires heaven because it is a land of money must be "easy."

A WORLDLING.

I find from talking with him that religion and the Sabbath are an interruption, a vulgar interruption, and he hopes on the way to church to drum up a new customer! All the week he has been weighing fruits, weighing meats, weighing ice, weighing coal, weighing confections, weighing worldly and perishable commodities, not realizing the fact that he himself has been weighed.

On your side the balances, O worldling! I will give you full advantage. I put on your side all the banking houses, all the storehouses, all the cargoes, all the insurance companies, all the factories, all the silver, all the gold, all the money vaults, all the safety deposits—all on your side. But it does not add one ounce, for at the very moment we are congratulating you on your fine house and upon your princely income, God and the angels are writing in regard to your soul: "Weighed, and found wanting!"

But I must go faster, and speak of

THE FINAL SCRUTINY.

The fact is, my friends, we are moving on amid astounding realities. These pulses which now are drumming the march of life, may, after a while, call a halt. We walk on a hair-hung bridge over chasms. All around us are dangers lurking ready to spring on us from ambush. We lie down at night, not knowing whether we shall arise in the morning. We start out for our occupations, not knowing whether we shall come back. Crowns being burnished for thy brow, or bolts forged for thy prison. Angels of light ready to shout at thy deliverance, or fiends of darkness stretching up skeleton hands to pull thee down into ruin consummate.

Suddenly the judgment will be here. The angel, with one foot on the sea and the other foot on the land, will swear by Him that liveth forever and ever that time shall be no longer. "Behold, He cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see Him." Hark to the jarring of the mountains. Why, that is the setting down of the scales, the balances. And then there is a flash as from a cloud, but it is the glitter of the shining balances, and they are hoisted, and all nations are to be weighed.

The unforgiven get in on this side the balances. They may have weighed themselves and pronounced a flattering decision. The world may have weighed them and pronounced them moral. Now they are being weighed in God's balances—the balances that can make no mistake. All the property gone, all the titles of distinction gone, all the worldly successes gone; there is a soul, absolutely nothing but a soul, an immortal soul, a never-dying soul, a soul stripped of all worldly advantages, a soul—on one side the scales. On the other side the balances are wasted Sabbaths, disregarded sermons, ten thousand opportunities of mercy and pardon that were cast aside. They are on the other side the scales, and there God stands, and in the presence of men and devils, cherubim and archangel, He announces, while groaning earthquake, and crackling conflagration, and judgment trumpet, and everlasting storm repeat it: "Weighed in the balance, and found wanting."

But, say some who are Christian: "Certainly you don't mean to say that we will have to get into the balances? Our sins are all pardoned, our title to heaven is secure. Certainly you are not going to put us in the balances?" Yes, my brother. We must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, and on that day you are certainly going to be weighed.

O FOLLOWER OF CHRIST! YOU GET INTO THE BALANCES.

The bell of the judgment is ringing. You must get into the balances. You get in on this side. On the other side the balances we will place all the opportunities of good which you did not improve, all the attainments in piety which you might have had, but which you refused to take. We place them all on the other side. They go down, and your soul rises in the scale. Cannot weigh against all those imperfections.

Well, then, we must give you the advantage, and on your side the scales we will place all the good deeds you have ever done, and all the kind words you have ever uttered. Too light yet! Well, we must put on your side all the consecration of your life, all the holiness of your life, all the prayers of your life, all the faith of your Christian life. Too light yet! Come, mighty men of the past, and get in on that side the scales. Come, Payson, and Doddridge, and Baxter, get in on that side the scales and make them come down, that this righteous one may be saved. They come and they get in the scales. Too light yet! Come, the martyrs, the Latimers, the Wickliffes, the men who suffered at the stake for Christ. Get in on this side the Christian's balances, and see if you cannot help him weigh it aright. They come and get in. Too light yet! Come, angels of God on high. Let not the righteous perish with the wicked. They get in on this side the balances. Too light yet!

I put on this side the balances all the sceptres of light, all the thrones of power, all the crowns of glory. Too light yet! But just at that point, Jesus, the Son of God, comes up to the balances, and He puts one of His scarred feet on your side, and the balances begin to quiver and tremble from top to bottom. Then He puts both of His scarred feet on the balances, and the Christian's side comes down with a stroke that sets all the bells of heaven ringing. That Rock of Ages heavier than any other weight.

But says the Christian, "Am I to be allowed to get off so easily?" Yes. If some one should come and put on the other side the scales all your imperfections, all your envies, all your jealousies, all your inconsistencies of life, they would not budge the scales with Christ on your side the scales. Go free! There is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus. Chains broken, prison-houses opened, sins pardoned. Go free! Weighed in the balances, and nothing, nothing wanting.

Oh! what a glorious hope. Will you accept it this day? Christ making up for what you lack, Christ the atonement for all your sins. Who will accept Him? will not this whole audience say: "I am insufficient, I am a sinner, I am lost by reason of my transgressions, but Christ has paid it all. My Lord and my God, my life, my pardon, my heaven. Lord Jesus, I hail Thee." Oh! if you could only understand the worth of that sacrifice which I have represented this morning to you under a figure—if you could understand the worth of that sacrifice, this whole audience would this moment accept Christ and be saved.

We go away off, or back into history, to get some illustration by which we may set forth what Christ has done for us. I shall not go off this block. I shall not go to last year. I go to last night in front of this church, when a vehicle behind a runaway horse dashed through the street, a mother and her two children in the carriage. The horse dashed along as though to hurl them to death, and a mounted policeman—that brave fellow you and I have often seen passing up and down every day in front of this church—that mounted policeman, with a shout clearing the way, and the horse at full run, attempted to seize those runaway horses and to save a calamity, when his own horse fell and rolled over him. He was picked up half dead.

Why were our sympathies so stirred? Why was I not content until I went last night and got the whole story? Was it merely because a man was hurt? No. It stirs our sympathies to have a man hurt, but more because this one was hurt for others. That was self-sacrifice. No one heard that story without having the tears start.

But I tell you another story this morning—how Christ, the Son of God, on the blood-red horse of sacrifice came for our rescue, and rode down the sky and rode unto death for our rescue. Are not your hearts touched? That was a sacrifice for you and for me. O Thou who didst ride on the red horse of sacrifice! come this morning, and ride through this assemblage on the white horse of victory.

THE LAST OF THE O'G.s; OR, THE LOST INHERITANCE RESTORED.

By Mr. Henry Martin, author of "Felicia Cufie," "Arnold Percival Montaigne," etc.

(Continued from page 262.)

Mrs. O'G.'s Surprise about Mr. Martin's Restored Patrimony—His Explanation—Her Reluctant Abandonment of her Earthly Longings.

MRS. O'G. was a woman of about forty years of age—tall, dark-haired, of black piercing eyes and regular features, now somewhat flushed from the excitement of her recent peril. Her dress was neat and simple, and of the most inexpensive materials; but there was about her whole appearance and bearing that undefinable dignity and refinement, which, among all races, Saxon or Celtic, appertain to persons of gentle birth.

After the interchange of some remarks of a general character, I said to her, "Under the pretence of ignorance I will not ask you the meaning of that emerald tuft which you are so carefully carrying on your arm. I have been told the history of your family in these parts, and of the annual ceremony which this summer morning you have been performing."

"Ah, yes," she replied, "all these lands, and that fine old castle yonder, were once the possession of my ancestors. They were our own by absolute right—none could claim hold upon them. Independent as kings, and as proud, were the O'G.s, in the grand old times in Ireland. But the English foreigner came in, coveted a dominion to which he had no right, envied my fathers their possession and their princely rule, and by the law of the strongest we have long been despoiled of our patrimony and power.

"Not but that we have had our revenge," she added. "On many a blood-stained field, the O'G.s, foremost in the fight, have laid the Saxon, steeped in gore, at their feet. Especially was it so at the battle of Fontenoy, when the English ranks, bearing all the French columns in distraction and panic before them, had the tide of victory borne back upon themselves by the well-timed and impetuous onslaught of the Irish Brigade. It was a day of glory for the Celt, long to be remembered."

As Mrs. O'G. spoke, there was a flash of triumph in her eyes, and her words were so graphic and well-spoken, that no one could doubt she was describing a scene which often before had passed across her imagination.

"Do you take a pleasure," I inquired, "in contemplating those dreadful days of carnage? Have you no pity for human misery, even though it be in the case of those whom you account your foes? There has been heard in this world a Voice Divine which teaches us to leave vengeance with God, to love our enemies, to be 'tender-hearted,' and if any man have a quarrel against any, to 'give no place unto wrath.'"

"Well," she answered, "perhaps as a woman, who ought to have a gentle heart, I should stand rebuked before you, and as a rule I have disciplined myself to submission and patience; but when my thoughts run upon the wrongs which, as an ancient family, we have known, I cannot keep my anger down, and the fire of an indignation, which I had imagined almost dead, flashes up hot and fierce within me.

"Of late, too," she went on to say, "I have perhaps brooded more than usual over the loss of our inheritance. You have been told, I dare say, that for long generations the O'G.s have never despaired of getting back their own. We have always kept ourselves in contact with our patrimonial soil; for centuries we have retained a portion of it near us, and have thus been able to feel that our hands, as it were, have never been parted from it. These cuttings from our ancient demesne"—and she pointed to the green tuft she carried—"have perpetuated our ownership, and have been as earnests to us of full possession in the future.

"But then again," she continued, and her voice faltered, "I am now the only survivor of the O'G.s. When I die, our race will be extinct; and even though it were not so, recent statutes, confirming the title-deeds of every landed proprietor in Ireland, make it hard to believe that the English Government could, even if they would, make restitution to us of our rightful domains."

The sadness of her tone, as she expressed this long-cherished but now all but vanished hope, was rather touching.

Giving her a look of sympathy, I said, "Mrs. O'G., would you wonder to hear that he who stands before you was also once dispossessed of a great inheritance?"

"Indeed!" she quickly responded; "how was that? Where did your family property lie? I hope you will tell me your story, for, somehow, there is a consolation in the history of another's trouble."

I answered, "The inheritance I speak of, without the least disparagement to the one you have in your thoughts—which I confess is a singularly noble one—I can assure you far surpassed it in importance and value."

"I can never believe that," she warmly replied; "it is impossible. Why, for miles on this hand and on that, far as your eye can see, the lands of the O'G.s extended—lands the most picturesque and fertile in all this region; and as to power, it was as kings the O'G.s ruled the sept, which, in this neighborhood, owned their sway. But, not to dispute the matter with you, upon what plea were you deprived of your patrimony?—one, I have no doubt, as false and wicked as that which served the tyrant in our case. Lawless power has never yet been thwarted in its designs of plunder for want of an excuse."

"Ah," I responded, "I have never been able to lay the flattering unction of such a persuasion as that to the forfeiture over which I, and the family to which I belong, once mourned. We deserved to lose our patrimony. With shame and self-reproach I have to admit it, for we were false and recreant to our good and rightful King. We owed all we had to His noble generosity; but we rebelled against Him, and gave our allegiance to His sworn foe. He could not but act as He did—our base ingratitude more than justified His conduct."

As I uttered these words, Mrs. O'G. scrutinized my face as if to see whether they sprang from real conviction and feeling. Apparently satisfied with the result of her inquiry, she observed:

"I think you seem to say that, however just was the forfeiture of your family estate, it has been restored to you. Is that the case? If it be so, you and yours have experienced a far better fortune than has been ours. We never have confessed, and never shall confess, that we were rebels or traitors. We gave allegiance where we believed it was rightly due—the brand of falsehood or treachery has never been borne by an O'G.; and yet to this hour we have been outcasts from our own. Ah! what of justice or equity is there in this world?"

I replied, "You have understood me quite correctly. Our forfeited inheritance has been fully restored. Indeed, more than that, privileges greater than we had formerly known have been added to the original estate, and we stand higher in our Sovereign's esteem to-day than before we failed in our allegiance to Him. Not that I myself have personally entered into actual possession of all that has been secured to our family—my time has not yet quite come for that. I am, however, an heir to it, and have this hour, as a living man, sure and valuable pledges of what must without fail come to me in a day not far distant."

"Well, that is surprising," Mrs. O'G. exclaimed when I informed her that the title of my lost inheritance had been restored to me. "And how different your case is to mine—no pledge of our inheritance have I, except this little 'grass sod.' But tell me, has the restoration of your inheritance been accompanied with no unpleasant conditions imposed upon you—no humiliations hard for a proud mind to sto Such is the usual practice, you know. An was the restoration brought about? You est and yet perplex me."

"The terms of our reinstatement," I r "is one of the most singular things about fact there are no conditions, or, if there they are only these—that we simply cla birthright, mentioning the name of Him purchase regained it."

"Oh, then," she broke in, "it was chased for you, was it? Indeed, I was beg to imagine that in some such way the affa have been managed. Free and magna concessions are rather scarce things in th and grasping world."

"Yes, our patrimony has been regai purchase," I replied; "but still the rest of the family estate to us has been an act told generosity on the part of our Sov The purchaser was a close connection family, but the ransom He paid was fr treasure of the King."

It was evident, from the fixed look th O'G. fastened on me, that the more I a her inquiries the more was she perplexed. ing gained my purpose of arousing her cu I resolved now to speak to her plainly, longer in parables.

"It is evident, Mrs. O'G.," I said, "t do not understand me. My words hav meaning which your thoughts, runnin different direction, have not perceived. been speaking not of this world's estate that inheritance which, as His children, t Father in heaven put us in possession He called us into being, but which sin h ped from us.

"It was a sad day when your ancesto ruthlessly driven from yonder castle day, no doubt, of dismay and weeping; was their cup of sorrow to that bitter woe which man as a transgressor was f taste, when from his first abode of innoc love he was cast forth from the presence as a fugitive and vagabond, into a wilder sin-stricken world!

"But need I tell you, Mrs. O'G., of th which, through the grace of God, h wrought in man's position and prospec Christ, the Son of man and the Son o Divine, yet human—one having our ver and yet the Eternal Word—the Elder B our race, our Lord, and yet our nearest —by Him—glory forever to His n family inheritance lost by transgression restored; and more than that, for by Christ we are begotten to 'an inherit corruptible and undefiled, and that fa away'" (1 Peter 1:4).

My words at first had rather a startli upon Mrs. O'G.—they ran counter to t current of her ideas. There was somet a mental shock and collision in her mi yet I could see that a shade of disapp soon passed over her features—for it is fact of human nature, that affairs of even when mere trifles, are discussed wi fold keener zest than those which perta immortal existence.

"Oh, I perceive," she said, "it is of things you are speaking. Well, yes—it no doubt, to turn the thoughts to such but I quite supposed it was some intere sode of your own family history you w to favor me with."

"And is not your supposition tru joined. "It is of my family history I speaking—of my family, and yours, f all the children of God by faith in Chr And why should it not be fraught with est possible interest to both of us? A poor and vain and perishing is the gr heritance of this world. 'Vanity of and 'Passing away,' are written upon and fairest objects of earth. 'The thi are seen are temporal; but the things not seen are eternal'" (2 Cor. 4:18).

(To be concluded.)

WHAT COMING WARS MAY WE EXPECT.*

By Rev. M. Baxter.

(Continued from page 269.)

THE Final Three and a Half Years—The Predicted Trouble—The two Witnesses—The Demon Horseman under the Sixth Trumpet—A great Religious Revival—The Double Fulfilment—Armageddon—The Wrath of the Wilful King.

THE latter three and a half years† of the seven years will be the period spoken of in the last chapter of Daniel as "THE TIME OF TROUBLE, such as never was since there was a nation, even unto that same time," continuing for three and a half times, or years, after the idolatrous abomination of desolation is set up;‡ and it will also be the period predicted by our Lord in the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew, in the words:

"When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, then let them which be in Judæa flee into the mountains, for then shall be GREAT TRIBULATION, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be; and except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved, and woe unto them that are with child and to them which give suck in those days" (Matt. 24 : 15–22 ; Mark 13 ; Luke 21).

This will also be the time of desolation foretold in the twenty-fourth chapter of Isaiah and the twenty-fifth of Jeremiah:

"Behold the Lord maketh the earth empty, and maketh it waste, and turneth it upside down, and scattereth abroad the inhabitants thereof. And it shall be as with the people so with the priest, as with the servant so with his master, as with the maid so with her mistress, as with the buyer so with the seller, as with the lender so with the borrower, as with the taker of usury so with the giver of usury to him. The land shall be utterly emptied and utterly spoiled, for the Lord hath spoken this word. The curse hath devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate, therefore the inhabitants of the earth are burned, and few men left. The mirth of tabrets ceaseth, the noise of them that rejoice endeth, the joy of the harp ceaseth. The city of confusion is broken down, every house is shut up that no man may come in. There is a crying for wine in the streets, all joy is darkened, the mirth of the land is gone. The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard; and it shall come to pass in that day the Lord shall punish the hosts of the high ones that are on high (the evil spirits), and the kings of the earth upon the earth and they shall be shut up in the prison (of the bottomless pit).

"A noise shall come even to the ends of the earth, for the Lord hath a controversy with the nations. He will plead with all flesh; He will give them that are wicked to the sword. Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, Behold, evil shall go forth from nation to nation, and a great whirlwind shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth. And the slain of the Lord shall be at that day from one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth; they shall not be lamented, neither gathered nor buried, they shall be dung upon the ground" (Jer. 25).

Throughout all this period of three and a half years the Two Witnesses clothed in sackcloth (probably Elias and another) will bear testimony as predicted in the eleventh chapter of Revelation, and preach upon the earth, and have power to smite it with plagues, and to turn waters into blood, and to shut heaven, so that it may not rain during those three and a half years. If any man attempts to hurt them, he is to be slain by fire breathed from their mouth. But at the end of this period Antichrist is to kill them, and after their dead bodies have lain unburied in the streets of the great city for three and a half days, and been spitefully gazed upon by the exultant multitudes, they are to be raised up, and ascend to heaven in a cloud. At the same hour an earthquake will cause the tenth part of the city to fall, and destroy seven thousand men of distinguished names.

This final crisis of three and a half years will also be the period of the literal fufilment of

THE THIRD, FOURTH, AND FIFTH SEALS

in the sixth chapter of Revelation—the third seal, during the commencing year and a half, being a time of mighty famines; the fourth seal, during the following year, being a period when death and hell, prefigured as seated upon a pale horse, will have power given them over the fourth part of the earth to kill with the sword, and with hunger, and with pestilence, and with the beasts of the earth; and the fifth seal, during the next final year, being a time of continued martyrdom of the myriads of Christians that are to be slain by command of the Wild Beast and False Prophet, and also the season of approaching retribution.

During the same crisis the fifth trumpet, beginning about three and a half months after the commencement of the three and a half years, will cause swarms of demons in the form of *supernatural scorpion locusts to come out of the bottomless pit of hell, and, without at all injuring the grass or trees, to continue for five months to torment with their stings those who have not the seal of God on their forehead, so as to drive them to seek for death, but death shall flee from them (Rev. 9 : 1–12).

The sixth trumpet, beginning about a year and six months after the commencement of the three and a half years, will cause two myriads of myriads of infernal monsters—lion-headed horses and demon horsemen with breastplates of fire and jacinth and brimstone—to come up near the Euphrates from the bottomless pit, and led by four evil angels, to go forth during thirteen months slaying the third part of mankind by fire and smoke and brimstone breathed out of the mouths of the horses, which will also have tails, like serpents, injuring people. Whether these monsters will be visible or invisible, the effect will be like that of a plague, and the slaughter apparently at the rate of several hundred thousand every day during thirteen months (Rev. 9 : 13–21).

At the close of these thirteen months of unparalleled slaughter there will be, according to the tenth chapter of Revelation, a considerable religious revival, or Protestant Reformation, in many parts of Europe, particularly in England, Germany, and Switzerland, just as at the Reformation formerly under Wickliffe, Luther, and Calvin, although most people still remain impenitent. A large company of Christians will escape these various tribulations and massacres by remaining hidden during the three and a half years in a wilderness, and being there miraculously fed, as described in the twelfth chapter of Revelation.

Thus the Pentecostal Revival and the subsequent papal persecution of 1260 years, and the Crusades, and the Reformation, will be acted over again within the final 1890 days, just as they have historically been acted within 1890 years, there being a double fulfilment of Revelation, first within 1890 year days, and secondly within 1890 literal days.

THE COMING BATTLE OF ARMAGEDDON.

Immediately at the close of the three and a half years (the latter half of the covenant seven years), during which the Great Tribulation and Persecution is to continue, there will be a great earthquake, and brief darkening of the constellations; and the sign of the Son of Man will begin to appear (Rev. 6 : 12 ; 11 : 13 ; Matt. 24 : 29 ; Joel 2 : 31).

The Great Antichrist will then also become indescribably exasperated and troubled with "tidings out of the East and out of the North," apparently relating to the discovered approach to Jerusalem from the north-east of Asia of the "Kings from the East," or lost ten tribes of the Jews, who will be led by Providential guidance—perhaps by the sign of the Son of Man—to march back from their remote Asiatic retreat, where they have been hidden for so many centuries, and to cross over the literally dried up river Euphrates, in order to take possession of their ancient home in Palestine (Dan. 11 : 44. Literal-day, Rev. 16 : 12 ; Isa. 11 : 15 ; 44 : 27 ; 19 : 23 ; Zech. 10 : 11). At the same time, most likely, symptoms of disaffection among those of the other two tribes that were previously restored to Palestine by the seven years' covenant will be reported (Zech. 12 ; 14 : 14).

The wrath of this Wilful King will be still further kindled by the miraculous resurrection of the two slaughtered witnesses a few days previously, and of the consequent repentance of the affrighted spectators, and their unanimous ascription of glory and worship to the God of heaven instead of to himself (Rev. 11 : 7–14). His anger will, moreover, be inflamed by the dreadful plagues of grievous sores, and the rivers and seas becoming as blood, and the scorching of the sun and subsequent thick darkness, produced by the first five vials in their literal-day fulfilment during the month subsequent to the three and a half years (Rev. 16).

Perceiving, then, that some desperate exploit must be accomplished in order to retrieve his waning reputation, and to reassert his endangered supremacy, he will issue an urgent and imperative summons to his satrap princes in every land to assemble such an overwhelming and invincible array of military forces as to make of Jerusalem and of the Jews a signal monument of his terrible vengeance, by sweeping from the face of the earth every Israelitish man, woman, and child, and razing to its lowest foundations their metropolitan city (Dan. 11 : 44 ; Ps. 83 : 4 ; Ezek. 39 : 2 ; Zech. 12 : 2, 3 ; Joel 3).

Among his numerous battalions summoned to this war of extermination will be found the military hosts of the ten vassal kings of the revived Roman Empire, and contingents and auxiliaries from divers regions of Asia, Africa, and America, for "miracle-working spirits shall go forth to the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them together to the battle of that great day of God Almighty—into a place called, in the Hebrew tongue, Armageddon" (Rev. 16 : 13, 14, 16 ; 17 : 13, 14 ; 19 : 19).

Breathing out threatenings and slaughter, and resolved in his fury to destroy and utterly to make away many, this second Sennacherib will go forth with irresistible impetuosity, and, pressing onward, will "plant the tabernacles of his tents between the two seas (the Mediterranean and the Dead Sea), upon the glorious holy mountain," little recking that he is here speedily to "come to his end, none helping him" (Dan. 11 : 45 ; 2 Kings 19 : 21–31).

Gazing with sullen pride upon the massive legions of his mighty men of war, he will doubtless begin in anticipation to exult over victory as within his grasp; when lo! a dense darkness will unexpectedly supervene (Joel 3 : 1–15 ; Ezek 32 : 1–8 ; Isa. 13 : 4–10 ; Mark 13 : 26 ; Matt. 24 : 31 ; Luke 21 : 27 ; Rev. 1 : 7 ; 7 : 9 ; literally Rev. 11 : 15, 18 ; 14 : 15, 16 ; 16 : 15 ; Dan. 8 : 13), and presently the midnight gloom be as suddenly succeeded by the preternatural dazzling appearance of the Lord Jesus and the heavenly hosts coming in the clouds.

(To be continued.)

---

* Extracted from "Coming Wars," by Rev. M. Baxter, in two pamphlets—five cents each by mail. First pamphlet contains "Ten Signs of the End, and Description of Approaching Events," with two maps and four large diagrams. Second pamphlet contains whole quotations from Forty Expositors on these events. Address, 63 Bible House, New York.

† Dan. 7 : 25 ; 12 : 7 ; 11 : 2, 3 ; 12 : 6, 14, speak of the three and a half years. A time means a year, just as seven times, in Dan. 4 : 32, meant seven years.

‡ The periods of 1290 and 1335 days mentioned in the last chapter of Daniel are respectively thirty and seventy-five days longer than the 1260 days. This additional interval of seventy-five days will be the period of Antichrist's overthrow by the seven vial plagues of Rev. 16. These 1260, 1290, and 1335 days are typically fulfilled as so many years in the history of the Papal Antichrist from 547 A.D. to 1885–6.

* These locusts will be evil spirits assuming that form, like Satan appeared as a serpent to Eve.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

THE aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50 per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to MR. BENJAMIN AITKEN, 63 Bible House, New York. The paper may also be obtained weekly from all newsdealers in the United States and Canada.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of specimen copies to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

SUBSCRIBERS frequently write to us for single copies of the CHRISTIAN HERALD. We always endeavor to oblige them, but single and occasional copies can more easily be obtained from a newsdealer. Sometimes we receive complaints that the CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer. Such complaints are promptly attended to, when made to us; but in all cases we desire that our friends will give the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

LAST week's edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, April 21st, at 12.15 P.M., at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Democratic Convention of the State of New York assembled at Syracuse, April 20th. The rival—or Tammany—convention also met at the same time in the same city. The efforts to promote a union between the two, and thus to produce harmony in the party in view of the approaching Presidential election, utterly broke down, and there will in consequence probably be two sets of delegates sent from the State to the National Convention. The regular convention voted for the unit rule, but abstained from instructing for Mr. Tilden. It was, however, believed that the instruction would have been a mere matter of form, as out of the seventy delegates appointed, sixty are known as Tilden men, and the unit rule thus secures the whole delegation. When the National Convention meets at Cincinnati it seems probable that Mr. Tilden's influence may be strong enough, if dexterously used, to give him the power to select the candidate, if not to secure the nomination for himself. The Democratic Convention of Vermont chose delegates who are supporters of General Hancock, but instructed them to observe the two-thirds rule, and not to vote as a unit.

Republican State Conventions have been held in Georgia, Virginia, and Oregon. In Georgia the delegates go uninstructed, and are to act in the best interests of the party. They are believed to be mainly men who are opposed to a third term. In Virginia the delegates are instructed for General Grant, and the unit rule is adopted. In Oregon the instruction is for Mr. Blaine.

The Bill Providing for a World's Fair in New York in 1883, which passed the Senate some weeks ago, was passed by the House on Monday, April 19th, by a vote of 144 to 56, the opposition being composed of the Democratic members from the South. In the Senate the Geneva Award Bill has again been under consideration, the contested point being the claims of the insurance companies on a share of the money recovered from Great Britain. Ultimately the Senate decided that the settlement of the disposition of the sum lying in Treasury should be indefinitely postponed.

A Town in the West was Utterly Destroyed by a hurricane on April 18th. The tornado which swept through Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, and Indiana produced a scene of devastation at Marshfield, Mo., of a heart-rending character. Eyewitnesses of the approaching storm say it was a frightful-looking black cloud, lined with fleecy white, funnel-shaped, and moving with wonderful velocity, blowing away every thing in its path, which was about half a mile wide at this point. Trees three feet in diameter were twisted off, telegraph wires snapped, and houses were blown from their foundations. Cattle, hogs, sheep, horses, and poultry were whirled into the air and carried a great distance. The noise of the storm, the crash of falling houses, and the cries and screams of terrified people made a moment of horror that defies description. What was a beautiful, peaceful town of 800 inhabitants twenty-four hours before is now a waste of desolation. Out of 200 dwelling-houses, not more than twenty are left standing, and few of these are uninjured. The ruins were on fire in several places, and property of the value of $350,000 was destroyed. One hundred dead bodies were extricated and buried. About 200 hundred persons are reported to have received serious injuries, and 150 families are homeless.

A Distressing Calamity Occurred at Madison, Garden, New York, on Wednesday, April 21st in which four persons were killed and many others seriously injured. A grand charity fair in aid of the fund for providing free beds in the Hahnemann Hospital was being held in the building, which was crowded by fashionable ladies and gentlemen. About nine o'clock in the evening large pieces of plaster were observed to fall from the ceiling of a room where dancing was going on, and shortly afterward a wall eighteen feet high, which had been recently built to increase the accommodation of the garden, fell with a loud crash. It was calculated that over three thousand persons were in the building at the time and an indescribable scene of confusion ensued. Every one made a rush for the doors, and many ladies were injured in the stampede. Within a comparatively short space of time the building was clear, and then the firemen, who had been summoned, began clearing away the débris. The richly dressed bodies of three ladies were found under the fallen wall. Twenty-two injured persons were also found, and those whose cases were serious were removed to the hospital. One gentleman, well known as a writer of considerable ability, who was passing along the street at the time of the catastrophe, was so seriously crushed by the falling timbers, that he has since died from the effects of his injuries. Another sufferer, a lady who was only slightly injured, died April 24th from the nervous shock she sustained at the time of the accident. The sad calamity is another of those solemn warnings, continually sent to us, of the uncertainty of life and the necessity of being always prepared for the hour of death.

The Murder of Charles de Young, Editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, on April 23d, by Rev. I. M. Kalloch, the assistant minister of the Metropolitan Temple of San Francisco, is one of those shocking crimes which show to what depths of moral degradation men are hurried by uncontrolled passion and the craving for revenge.

It will be remembered that, last August, Charles de Young shot Rev. I. S. Kalloch, the Mayor-elect of San Francisco, injuring him seriously, though not fatally. He was to be brought to trial for the offence at the next session of the courts, and in the interval had taken a journey to Kansas and Massachusetts to collect evidence in his defence. This evidence related to Mayor Kalloch's past life, and bore more particularly on a trial in which the Mayor had been arraigned for the commission of a detestable crime, and in which he escaped conviction by a disagreement of the jury. Reports of the trial were circulated in the city soon De Young's return, and acrimonious a simultaneously appeared in De Young's which so exasperated the Mayor's eldest that he resolved to murder his father's ass He lay in wait for him at the Chronicle and as soon as he saw the editor there, tered and deliberately shot him dead.

The crime is very deplorable in itself, evidence of the spirit of lawlessness e among certain classes of society; but rendered especially lamentable by the fac the murderer is a minister of the Gospel. enemies of Christ will doubtless make crime an occasion to blaspheme, forgettin in all ages men have called themselves name of Christ who have never given hearts to Him, or received the baptism Holy Spirit.

More than Twenty Men, Women, and dren came forward as seekers for salvation meeting of the Salvation Army, on S night, April 25th. It is sometimes obje the conversions at regular revival service they take place under circumstances of ab excitement. But up to the moment of for seekers on Sunday night there was symptom of sensation or excitement, excep was caused by the misbehavior of some la came there to make fun. There was n meeting at which the silent power of G more manifestly present. See John 16: the Holy Ghost had not been working the audience, not a soul would have ask way of salvation. It will be an honor to Christian to identify himself, in thought deed, with this great work, which is alre dounding to the glory of God. And we b the prayers of all readers of the CHR HERALD that God will continue to give and strength to the weak women who hav day to face the determined opposition world and the devil in this arduous work.

An Efficient Check on the Liquor Traf operation in St. Johnsbury, Vt. In tha only liquor for medicinal purposes can b and that only by an appointed agent, wh keep an accurate record of the date of s name of the buyer, and the "denominati the liquor, which record is to be ins weekly by an auditing board from the men of the town, and published in the newspaper.

The Tide of Immigration to these from Europe promises to exceed during t rent year that of any single year in the of the country. During the first three of the present year ending March 31 number of emigrants arriving was over th thousand as against only eleven thous the corresponding period of three month year, and if this ratio is kept up for the ing nine months of the year, the total over four hundred thousand in all. The is not from Ireland, as was expected, but pally from Scandinavia and Germany.

Irish Famine Relief Fund.—Contril received up to Monday, April 26th:

S. Svenson, Georgetown, Col...............
Miss Hadig Ostergreen, Georgetown, Col...
Miss C. Anderson, Georgetown, Col........
Mrs. Anderson, " " ....
Mrs. A. Johnson, " " ....
Miss A. Nelson, " " ....
Mrs. Delew, " " .. ..
A Friend, West Hampton, N. Y.............

Forwarded to N. Y. Herald........

The Debt on Dr. Talmage's Church tributions received during the week endin day, April 24th: Mrs. Thos. Sinclair Ingers $1; D. A. Sinclair, Dayton, O., $1; Mrs. W thews, Centre, Ralls Co., Mo., $1; A Frien nebago, Ill., 2; A Friend, Millen's Bay, N. C. H. McFarland, Brownsville, Oreg., $1; A Santa Fé, N. Mex., $1; J. F. Sproul, Picto ing, Ca., $1; Walter Lock, Pawnee City, N Mrs. Thos. M. Joseph, Galveston, Tex., $ forwarded to Dr. Talmage, $11.

The Mission in Baxter Street, New York, here several ladies have for some time labored votedly for Jesus, has been signally owned and essed by God. The meetings are held in a use which was formerly notorious as the ndezvous of the most dissolute and desperate aracters in the city, and the surroundings are, en now, so vicious and depraved that they uld repel the delicate and refined ladies who rk there, if these were not moved to the labor love for Jesus and for perishing souls. Several markable cases of conversion have taken place re recently among the abandoned classes, and ch good is being done. One case is that of a young man who had fallen into vicious ways, was induced to attend the meeting, where he was touched by the power of the Holy Spirit and brought to the feet of Jesus. A respectable merchant, hearing of the circumstance, took him into his employ, and he is now an honest and efficient clerk. But for the intervention of God through the Baxter Street Mission, he acknowledges he would now have been one of the worst among the vicious criminals of the city. Funds are needed to give temporary assistance to such outcasts as stand in need of help, and to aid in defraying the necessary expenses of the Mission. Donations in aid of this deserving work may be sent to Mrs. Doolittle, 42 Baxter Street.

Rare Spirit of Acquiescence in the Divine Will was recently displayed by a poor woman in Atlanta, Georgia, whose last moments are described in The Index. She was a poor woman, supported entirely by charity; she had scarcely an education, but she had learned a lesson many highly-cultured people have failed to learn. Having endured great bodily affliction for many years, her disease reached its last stage, and she lay apparently at the point of death for four or five weeks. Every day and almost every hour was thought to be the last, but to the astonishment of all she continued to breathe. Her sufferings were very severe, and knowing her to be ready for the great change, her friends were almost hoping for the moment of her release. Said one of them to her, "Well, M——, are you ready to go?" "Yes," said she, "ready to go, but willing to wait!"

The Quadrennial General Conference of the M. E. Church will meet (God willing) at Cincinnati on May 1st. There are 450 delegates from all parts of America, and from every part of the world where the Church has a Conference. Ba o Ramchunder Bose, a converted Brahman, represents the lay membership of the North India Conference. The Conference may sit for four or six weeks, and the proceedings will be fully reported in The Daily Christian Advocate, which is to be issued by the Methodist publishing house as long as the Conference lasts. The Bishops of the Church will preside one after another in the order of their seniority. We expect to give a portrait and life of Bishop Simpson in next week's Christian Herald.

A Wife's Prayers Answered.—At one of the n Street prayer-meetings last week a gentleman said: "The last time I was here, one of the requests for prayer read thus: 'Pray for my husband's salvation; I shall pray for him as long as I live.' That was my wife's petition. Her heart was set on my salvation. For twenty long years she had been praying for me, and told me repeatedly that if she died before I became a Christian, she would spend her last breath in prayer to God in my behalf. My friends, God has heard that faithful wife's prayers, and has heard the prayers you offered for me, and I am here to-day, a saved man."

One of those Shocking Accidents which result from trapeze performances has occurred at the [illegible] Philadelphia. The Davene family—father, mother, and daughter—perform a daring feat, the great attraction of it being the danger which attends it. Mrs. Davene hangs head downward, with her feet in two small rings fastened at the top of the standard. Fastened over her shoulders and about her arms she holds the ropes of a small trapeze, from which her husband suspends himself, likewise head downward. In this position he catches his daughter Lucy, a slender child, as she swings from a trapeze fifty feet distant. She is first caught by the hands, then by the feet, and a third time by the hands, turning a somersault in the last feat as she swings from her trapeze. As she was about to perform the feat on April 14th, she fell from the trapeze, striking at full length on the ground. When picked up she was senseless and bleeding. It is almost impossible to tell the result of her injuries as yet, as the spine may be injured. It is notorious that the largest crowds are attracted to performances where the danger is most imminent. It is therefore obvious that much of the responsibility rests on those who witness the feats.

Mr. Francis Murphy, the Popular Temperance lecturer, has received from his friends the gift of a house in Philadelphia. Mr. Murphy took possession of his new home April 10th, and for the first time in ten years gathering his six children under one roof. "The last time they were together," says The Record, "was a year after Mrs. Murphy died, and when the father had given up his life of dissipation, and had begun, in a feeble way, to preach temperance. He was too poor then to support them, and placing the girls in an orphan asylum and the boys on farms, he started out on his crusade. When he had saved forty dollars he removed the girls from the asylum and placed them in Christian homes, where he maintained them."

Fire has Devastated whole Districts of New Jersey since April 13th. There have also been extensive woodland fires in parts of Pennsylvania and Virginia. Providentially no lives are reported lost, though there has been a great destruction of property. Several valuable mills, farm buildings, and private residences have been swept away; and if the inhabitants of the threatened districts had not vigorously fought the conflagrations it is not improbable that many villages and smaller settlements would have been reduced to ashes. Large districts, some of them covering over a hundred square miles, are described as looking like a vast charcoal pit. The roar of the fire could be heard a mile away, and people in the track of the wind watched day and night to extinguish any conflagration that might be caused by the sparks it carried. The origin of the fires is not thought to be incendiary, but they may have been caused by carelessness, as at this time of the year the undergrowth is crisp and dry, and a spark will easily ignite a large fire in the resinous forests.

Mrs. M. Baxter, on whose Behalf Prayer was requested in a recent number of the Christian Herald for her recovery from a painful illness, is now holding meetings in Germany, at which she is assisted by two English ladies, much blessed. After suffering intensely from neuralgia some hours every day for forty-three days, she has been completely freed from pain from April 3d up to the present time, without any other remedy than faith and prayer.

The Second Volume of the Christian Herald, comprising Nos. 37 to 62 (July to Dec. 1879), may be had, elegantly bound in cloth, at No. 63 Bible House, New York. Price $1.75.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works.—We have much pleasure in announcing that another large consignment of volumes by this eminent author and preacher has been received. They are now on sale at the office of the Christian Herald, No. 63 Bible House, New York, and are offered at prices so low as to bring them within the reach of every one. Twelve Sermons on various subjects, with photograph of Mr. Spurgeon, price 35 cents. John Ploughman's Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents; in cloth, 60 cents. The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, a volume of fifty sermons, $2.50. The Treasury of David, a homiletical exposition of the book of Psalms, five vols., as far as Psa. 118, $3 per vol. Spurgeon's Birthday-Book. This popular gift-book contains a suitable passage selected from Mr. Spurgeon's writings for every day in the year, with a blank space opposite for autographs. The signatures of Mr. and Mrs. Spurgeon appear at their respective birthdays. The book is elegantly bound, and the price is 75 cents. Remittances should accompany orders.

AT SCHOOL.

A Short Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"Teach me to do Thy will; for Thou art my God."—Ps. 143:10.

A Prayer about Doing—The Prayer of a Man already Saved—A Blameless Life the Best Defence against Slander—I. The Prayer Itself—1. What it Means—A Holy Prayer—A Humble Prayer—A Believing Prayer—A Practical Prayer—2. The Intention of the Prayer—God's Will to be done Thoughtfully—Immediately—Cheerfully—Constantly—Universally—Spiritually—Intensely—3. What is Involved in the Prayer—Decision of Character—Courage—Humility—Spiritual Life.—II. Its Answer—1. A Reason for Expecting it—2. The Need for the Answer—3. How the Answer Comes—The Example of Christ—Of Christians—By the Holy Spirit.

This is a prayer about doing, but it is perfectly free from legal taint. The man who offered it had no idea of being saved by his doings, for in the second verse of the psalm he had said, "Enter not into judgment with Thy servant: for in Thy sight shall no man living be justified." This is not the prayer of a sinner seeking salvation, for salvation is not by doing the will of God, but by believing in Christ. It is the prayer of the man who is already saved, and who being saved devotes himself to the service of God, and wishes to be taught in the fear of the Lord. "Teach me to do Thy will, O God!"

The connection leads us to make the remark that David looked upon the doing of God's will as his best escape from his enemies. He speaks of his cruel persecutors. He declares that though he looked all around he could find none who would help him. Then he prays, "Teach me to do Thy will; for Thou art my God." And, depend upon it, the surest way to escape from harm is to do no ill. If you are surrounded by those who would slander you, your best defence is a blameless life; and if many are watching for your halting and maliciously desiring your fall, your safety lies in holiness. The very best prayer you can pray for your own protection is, "Teach me to do Thy will." If you do right none can harm you.

This prayer was suggested by the perplexity of the psalmist's mind. He was overwhelmed, and did not know what to do, and therefore he cried, "Teach me to do Thy will, O God." He had come to a place where many roads met, and he did not know which path to take; and so he prayed God to guide him in the way appointed. I commend this prayer to all who may be sorely puzzled and anxious. You have exercised your own judgment, and you have, perhaps, too much consulted with friends, and yet your way seems entirely blocked up: then resort to God with this as your heart's prayer, "Teach me to do Thy will; for Thou art my God."

May the Spirit of God now bless us while we open up this short prayer that we may be helped to understand it, and use it. First, we will speak upon the prayer; and then, secondly, upon its answer.

I. And, first,

THE PRAYER ITSELF.

1. Let us notice its character.

It is a holy prayer. "Teach me to do Thy will." The man who utters this language desires to be free from sin, for sin can never be God's will. Under no circumstances whatever may I do wrong and fancy that I am doing God's will therein.

I have read of an extremely poor man who wanted fuel for the fire for his children, and the text came to his mind, "All things are yours." Armed with this text, he thought he would take a little wood from his neighbor's wood-pile; but very happily there came to his mind another text, "Thou shalt not steal." He was quite clear about its meaning, and so he let the wood alone; but he recollected afterward how that text had saved him from a great transgression.

Depend upon it, whatever circumstances or impressions may seem to say, it is never God's will that you should do wrong. There are devil's providences as well as God's providences.

When Jonah wanted to go to Tarshish, he found a ship going thither; and I dare say he said "How providential!" Yes, but no providence can ever be an excuse for sinning against God. We are to do right, and therefore we pray, "Teach me to do Thy will."

It is a humble prayer—the prayer of a man of deep experience, and yet, for all that, and perhaps because of that, a man who felt that he needed teaching as to every step he should take, When you do not want teaching, brother, it is because you are too stupid to learn: you may depend upon that. It is only a very young lady fresh from a boarding-school, who has "finished her education," and it is only a great fool of a man who thinks that he can learn no more.

Those who know themselves best, and know the world best, and know God best, always have the lowest thoughts of themselves. They have no wisdom of their own except this, that they are wise enough to flee from their own wisdom, and say to the Lord, "Teach me to do Thy will." This is a holy prayer and a humble prayer, and commends itself to every holy and humble heart.

And then notice that it is a believing prayer—"Teach me to do Thy will; for Thou art my God." There is faith in God in this claim. "Thou art my God;" and there is faith in God's condescension that he will act as a Teacher. Brethren, we have two faults. We do not think God to be so great as He is, and we do not think God can be so little as He can be. We err on both sides, and neither know His height of glory nor His depth of grace. We practically say, "This trial is too mean; I will bear it without Him." We forget that the same God who rules the stars condescends to be a Teacher, and teaches us to do His will.

We heard once of a President of a great nation who nevertheless taught in a Sunday-school: it was thought to be great condescension, but what shall I say of Him who, while He sits amid the choirs of angels and accepts their praises, comes down to His little children and teaches them to do His will!

Let us now notice what the actual request is. In so many words it says, "Teach me to do Thy will." So, brethren and sisters, it is a practical prayer. He does not say merely, "Teach me to know Thy will"—a very excellent prayer that; but there are a great many who stick fast in the knowing, and do not go on to the doing; these are forgetful hearers, deceiving themselves. An ounce of doing is worth a ton of knowing. The most orthodox faith in the world, if it be accompanied by an unholy life, will only increase a man's damnation. There must be the yielding up of the members and of the mind unto God in obedience, or else the more we know the greater will be our condemnation.

The psalmist does not say, "Lord, help me to talk about Thy will," though it is a very proper thing to talk about, and a very profitable thing to hear about. But still doing is better than talking. If t's were w's there would be more saints in the world than there are; that is to say, if those who *t*alk uprightly would also *w*alk uprightly it would be well; but with many the talk is better than the walk. Better a silent tongue than an unclean life. Practical godliness is preferable to the sweetest eloquence.

The prayer is, "Teach me to do Thy will." There are some who long to be taught in all mysteries; and truly to understand a mystery aright is a great privilege, but their main thought seems to be to know the deep doctrines, the mysterious points. Truly, it would be a good thing to understand all knowledge, "and yet show I unto you a more excellent way;" and that excellent way is to live a life of humble, godly dependence and faith, and to show forth in your life the love that was in Christ Jesus. Lord, I chiefly long to know Thy will: teach me that, and I am content.

I have already said that this prayer asks that we may do God's will, not our own. Oh! how naturally our heart prays,

"LORD, LET ME HAVE MY OWN WAY."

That is the first prayer of human nature when it is let alone; "Who is the Lord that I should obey His voice? Let me have my own way." That desire will sometimes enter the Christian's heart, though I hope it will not long remain there. We may be praying, "Lord, not my will, but Thine be done," and yet the wicked, rebellious heart may be saying inside, "But do let it be my will, Lord: do let it be my will." Still do we cling to self.

What does he mean by doing God's will? Does he not mean, "Help me to do as Thy word bids me"? For the will of God is put before us very plainly in His law, and, especially, in that law as viewed in the hand of Christ. "This is the will of God, even our sanctification." To serve Him devoutly, and to love our neighbor as ourselves—this is the will of God. May His Spirit help us! "Teach me to do Thy will, O God!"

That will also takes the form of providence. Out of two courses equally right we sometimes have to ask the question, "Lord, what is Thy will here?" There is nothing immoral in either the one or the other, and hence our difficulty, and then we come to the Lord and say, "Here is a case in which Thy law does not guide me, otherwise I should decide at once, but wilt Thou now show me what Thou wilt have me to do?"

The prayer seems to me to have all that compass, and much more.

2. But I would answer another inquiry. What is the intention of the prayer as to manner? It does not say, "Lord, enable me to do Thy will," but, "Teach me to do Thy will," as if there were some peculiar way of doing it that had to be taught, as when a young man goes apprentice to acquire a trade. Lord, I would put myself under indentures to Thy grace that Thou mayest teach me the art and mystery of doing Thy will.

HOW OUGHT GOD'S WILL TO BE DONE?

It should be done thoughtfully. A great many Christians are not half as considerate as they should be. We should go through life, not flippantly like the butterfly that flits from flower to flower, but like the bee that stays and sucks honey, and gathers sweet store for the hive. We should be seriously in earnest; and one point of earnestness should be

"With holy trembling, holy fear,
To make my calling sure,
Thine utmost counsel to fulfil,
And suffer all Thy righteous will,
And to the end endure."

Lord, help me to do Thy will, seriously bending all my soul to the doing of it; not trifling in Thy courts, nor making life a play, but loving Thee with my understanding.

The Lord's will should be done immediately. As soon as a command is known it should be obeyed. Lord, suffer me not to consult with flesh and blood. Make me prompt and quick of understanding in the fear of God. Teach me to do Thy will as angels do, who no sooner hear Thy Word than they fly like flames of fire to fulfil Thy behests.

His will should be done cheerfully. Jehovah seeks not slaves to grace His throne. He would have us delight to do His will: yea, His law should be in our heart. O brothers and sisters! you need to pray this: "Teach me to do Thy will!" or else you will miss the mark.

Teach me to do it constantly. Let me not sometimes be Thy servant, and then run away from Thee. Keep me to it. Let me never weary. When the morning wakes me may it find me ready, and when the evening bids me rest may I be serving Thee until I fall asleep.

Teach me to do it also, Lord, universally, not some part of it, but all of it, not one of Thy commands being neglected, nor one single part of my daily task being left undone. I am Thy servant; make me to be what a good servant is to her mistress, neglecting none of the cares of the household. May I be watchful in all points.

Teach me to do Thy will spiritually, not making the outside of cups and platters clean, but obeying Thee within my soul. May what I do be done with all my heart! If I pray, help me to pray in the spirit. If I sing, let my heart make music unto Thee. When I am talking others about Thy name, and trying to spread t savor of Jesus, let me not do it in my o strength, or in a wrong spirit, but may the H Ghost be upon me!

Teach me to do Thy will intensely. Let t zeal of Thy house eat me up. Oh that I mig throw my whole self into it! This little pray grows, does it not? Pray it, brothers and s ters, and may the Lord answer you!

3. Once again, there are necessary qualit which we must seek if we would sincerely p this prayer, "Teach me to do Thy will." Th you must have decision of character, for so never do God's will, though they wish they d and they regret, they say, that they cann they resolve that they will, and there it en O you spongy souls! Some of you are sa squeezable. Whatever hand grips you shape you. Decision is needed, for you can do God's will unless you know how to s "No," and to put your foot down, and decl that whatever may happen you will not t aside from the service of your God.

If the Lord shall teach you to do His will, y will also need courage. The prayer virtu says, "When my enemies ridicule me, teach to do Thy will. When they threaten me, te me to do Thy will. When they tempt me, te me to do Thy will. When they slander teach me to do Thy will, to be brave with bravery which resolves to do the right, leaves the issues with God."

It is a prayer that necessitates humility. man can pray it unless he is willing to stoop wash the saints' feet. "Teach me to do will." Let me be a scullion in Thy kitchen i I may glorify Thee. I have no choice but t Thou be all in all.

It is a prayer, too, for spiritual life, and m of it, for a dead man cannot do God's w Shall the dead praise Him? Shall they tha down to the pit give Him thanks? Oh brothers and sisters; you must be full of li you are to do God's will. Some professors not quickened one third of the way up yet hope they have a measure of quickening, bu does not seem to have reached the extremiti

There may be a little quickening in the he but it has not quickened the tongue to con Christ, nor quickened the hand to give to Ch or to work for Christ. They seem to be l dead. O Lord! fill me with life from the so my foot to the crown of my head, for how c do Thy will unless Thy Spirit saturates through and through, till every pulse is co crated? I would be wholly Thine. "Teach to do Thy will."

THE ANSWER TO THE PRAYER

II. I will not detain you many minutes the second part of our sermon, in which we a say a little upon its answer. There is the pr "Teach me to do Thy will." Will it ge answer? Yes, brethren, it will assuredly o an answer of peace.

1. For, first, there is a reason for expectin "Thou art my God." Oh, yes, if we were ing this of some one else we might fear "Thou art my God" is blessed argun When I think of what the Lord is, I am ce that He will be willing to teach me to do will. Moreover, He has promised to do it. will instruct thee, and teach thee in the way thou shalt go. I will guide thee with eye." And, again, He is glorified by so d for it brings glory to God when His peopl His will; therefore may I expect for all reasons that He will teach me to do His wil

2. Again, dear friends, it needs to be answ "Teach me to do Thy will. Lord, there i body who can ever teach me Thy will e Thou do it. I shall never learn it of m This scholarship I shall never pick up by ch Lord, unless Thou hold me fast, and teac with Thy supremest art, I shall never learn Thy will as I desire to learn it." You s turns away from every other teacher to his he puts himself to school to God alone. And is the prayer, "Teach me to do Thy will hou art my God." Brother, you must have is teaching, or else you will never do God's ll. No strength of nature, no wit of nature, n ever suffice to serve the Lord aright; you ust be taught from above.

3. There are many ways in which God gives is answer to this prayer—"Teach me to do y will." We have received one wonderful swer to it already. He has given Jesus Christ be our Example. There is no teaching like tual example. If you want to know the will God, study the life of Christ.

The Lord is pleased to give us fainter copies that same will of His in His saints. Read the red biographies of the Scriptures. Watch the y lives of those who are among you, who live ar to God, and follow them so far as they fol- w Christ. They are not complete copies; re are blots and blunders: still, the Lord es teach young people by the godly lives of ir parents, and He instructs all of us by the graphies of devoted men and women.

loreover, the Lord has a way of teaching us His own Spirit. The Holy Spirit speaks in ret whispers to those who are able to hear n. It is not every professing Christian that the visitations of the Spirit of God in per- al monitions, but there are saints who hear a ce behind them saying, "This is the way, k ye in it." God guides us with His eye as l as by His Word. Opened eyes can see in a ment what the Lord means.

le has gentle means. His daily dealings in ng tenderness are guides to us. Every mercy is star to pilot us to heaven. When we are willing to be guided so easily, He will teach y rough means. The Lord has a bit and a p for those who need them. He will restrain by affliction and infirmity, and sometimes sten us very sore with losses, bereavements, ression of spirit, and the like: but in some or other He will hear the prayer for teach- for it is a covenant promise, "All thy chil- shall be taught of the Lord."

trust we have, all of us who know the Lord, ed the prayer, "Teach me to do Thy will; Thou art my God." Now, mind, my dear nd, mind that you do it sincerely, and know t you are at, because after offering such a ion as this, you dare not go into sin. You ot say, "Teach me to do Thy will," and go off to frivolous amusements, or spend evenings in vain and giddy society, because would be an insolent mockery of God. ach me to do Thy will," you say, and then p and do what you know to be clean con- to His mind and will: what defiant pro- y is this!

not offer this prayer with a reserve. Do say, or mean, "Teach me to do Thy will in oints but one. That is a point in which I Thee have me excused." I am afraid that in believers do not want to learn too much. e known them not like to read special pas- of Scripture. Perhaps they trouble them inally, or as to the ordinances of the Chris- faith, or as to matters of church discipline; y do not paste those pages together to hide bnoxious passage, yet they do not like them ed too much. They would rather read a which looks more to their mind. But, er, if thou and a text have a quarrel, make directly. Thou must not alter the text; thy creed, alter thy life, alter thy thought, the Holy Spirit helping thee; for the text ht, and thou art in the wrong. Search the of God and abide by what you find there, y nothing else. Where the Bible leads you ound to follow, and following its guidance hall not walk in darkness. Seek to know ill of God; and when you know it, carry it nd pray the Holy Ghost to take away the st idol you have known—the thought that s you best—out of your mind, if it is con- to the supreme will of the eternal God. ord grant we may thus pray, and thus be .

s! unconverted people cannot pray after shion of my text. They have, first of all, to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ before they can do the will of the Lord. May you all be led to believe in the Saviour, and when you have so done then may the Holy Ghost lead you to pray, "Teach me to do Thy will; for Thou art my God."

The Lord bless you, for Christ's sake. Amen.

[Portions of Scripture read before Sermon—Psalms 142 and 143.]

THE INCONSISTENT ANGLER AND MARTHA, THE DRESSMAKER.

By Mrs. G. S. Reaney, Author of "Life Scenes and Life Stories," "Friendly Words," etc.

A Day's Fishing—A Miniature Beer-Barrel—The Drunkard kept in Countenance—The Blacksmith's Prayer—"I Will if you Will"—The Devil's Work—Martha, the Dressmaker—The Lady of "Broad Views"—A Fatal Influence.

It is quite possible for worthy and well-meaning persons to weaken rather than strengthen the lives around them, in consequence of failing to realize the force of their own influence and example. Such persons will probably sooner or later find that little matters which seemed but "trifles light as air" have had important effects in making or marring the lives of others.

Mr. F—— is a Christian of many years' standing. He has preached by word and by life the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour, and is looked up to as a most "consistent Christian." While deploring the evils of drink, he feels it his duty to take his glass of sherry regularly for dinner. If spoken to on the subject by teetotalers, he assures them that as a Christian man he takes his stand on the side of temperance rather than of total abstinence, and on no occasion where it is necessary to warn or counsel does he lose the opportunity; and so far from the position he takes hindering any good he might do, he feels it strengthens his influence, as the one spoken to knows that he is admonished by a man holding no extreme views, and therefore will the more willingly allow himself to be reasoned with.

Mr. F—— has had a Sunday from home, preaching twice to crowded village audiences. Many eyes have rested upon his face, eager hearts have waited on his words, and in the village homes that night grateful voices have uttered many an earnest "God bless him!" Monday morning comes, and Mr. F—— accepts his host's invitation to have "a day's fishing before he returns to town." Under the escort of a little lad, Mr. F—— starts off for some neighboring "Mills."

The eyes which rested upon his face yesterday behold him now as he passes through the village, and the eager hearts which waited so hungeringly for his words are waiting now to gather to themselves any and every influence of his life. Mr. F—— smiles and nods to one and another of his village friends, who, in their earnest gaze on the young preacher, do not fail to note that the lad who accompanies him, with fishing tackle and a little hamper of provisions, carries under his arm a miniature barrel of beer.

"Ah, he's none of your straitlaced, I see," says a drunkard; "I shan't mind going to hear that chap preach again now I know he belongs to our side. Ah, Mary, lass, you thought you had got me in a corner last night when you were on at me to give up the drink, and you said there was no being good without giving it up, but I've caught you now. You would be quite contented like now, wouldn't you, if I were as good as him?" and the drunkard points with his thumb over his shoulder in the direction of Mr. F—— and laughs a low, drunken laugh.

And "Mary, lass," weeps in secret to feel how an earnest Christian man has stood in the way of her husband ever becoming a Christian. Last night "John" promised to give up the drink as the first step toward "better things;" this morning he takes comfort from the fact that Mr. F—— sees no harm in it, and—the sequel is yet to come.

Mr. F—— is just passing the village blacksmith's shop, and he pauses to say "Good-morning." Joe Thurston is at the forge. He was at the "meeting" yesterday, and something was stirred up within his heart—the heart which some people had pronounced hardened beyond power of softening—a thought of bygone years, his early boyhood so joyous and innocent, his mother's teaching and her prayers! He had not gone to rest that night without a prayer: "Lord, keep me from the drink, and help me to begin life afresh." He meets Mr. F——'s "Good-morning" with a beaming smile.

Then, as his eyes droop in bashfulness lest Mr. F—— should think he is "making too free," or "putting himself forward," since it was to his master, not to him, he spoke, he catches sight of the little ale-cask under the small boy's arm, and the heart that prayed last night, "Lord, keep me from the drink," prays to-day, "Lord, let me keep from taking too much drink." Too much! Poor fellow! How useless the prayer, when the very first half-pint quite kindles a fire within him which burns up any power of reasoning as to where the "little" ends and the "much" begins.

Quite unconscious of the fact that he himself is sowing tares among the seed he scattered on the Sabbath, Mr. F—— reaches the "Mills," and prepares himself for the full enjoyment of the day's fishing. At the first draught of ale—"the delicious home-brewed," supplied by the Christian host whose guest he has been since Saturday—Mr. F—— generously asks his boy attendant if he will like a glass? With a flushed cheek the lad says, "No, thank you, sir;" and then, when pressed, says, "I'm a teetotaler, sir!" "That's right, my boy," says Mr. F—— warmly (patting his own conscience gently in feeling so ready to sympathize with the boy's position). "When did you sign the pledge?"

"Oh, I haven't signed no pledge," says Jimmie cautiously; "I only put it down in my pocket-book the day I started, and since then father and brother have joined me, and uncle Tom does say he'll begin too when the hay harvest is in."

Mr. F—— is pleased with the boy's frankness, and, anxious to lose no opportunity of doing good, he continues softly, keeping his eye fixed upon his float, and thereby unable to note the varied expression on Jimmie's face while he is speaking,

"Well, Jim, I should advise you by all means to sign the pledge. It has many advantages. It will keep you firmer to your promise, it will spare you a little taunting from your companions, who will think more of your being pledged than merely promised, and it will help you to be firmer in inducing others to follow your example. Do you see my argument?"

"Oh, yes, quite, sir," replies Jim; "and what you say is very right, sir. I can't make no objections to what I know to be truth. Well, sir," Jim continues, after a moment's pause, "I'll tell you what I'll do: I'll sign if you will!"

Mr. F—— is very much taken up with his float at this moment, and soon discovers that his hook requires a fresh bait. It is some minutes before he can give Jim any attention, and then he merely says, "You see, Jim, I am not a drinking man, so I have no need to sign the pledge. If I were a—"

"Christian, sir?" interrupts Jim; "I thought you was a Christian, sir, because you preaches; and I thought Christian folks were over-particular to keep clear of things which do the devil's work? Beg pardon, sir, but it was a Christian man that made a teetotaler of me, and though I haven't signed no pledge, I'm in earnest to be a Christian myself."

"I hope I'm a Christian too" says Mr. F——, with just a shade of annoyance in his otherwise good-tempered voice.

"Well, sir," replies Jim meditatively—he has no float to divide his attention, so he gives all his thought to the point under discussion—"if I thought I could be a drinking Christian like you I'd rub that mark out of my pocket-book, for it does cost me something, I can tell you, to refuse a glass of beer, say a morning like this, you know, sir!"

Mr. F—— does not know, or does not care to know, what it costs Jim. He is beginning to feel a little uncomfortable. Has he not given up himself, body, soul, and spirit, to work the works of his Lord and Master, Jesus Christ, and is he not giving just one little bit of influence on the side of the "works of darkness" which belong to another master, and he not a saviour, but a destroyer?

MRS. L. DE C—— AND MARTHA, THE DRESSMAKER.

Mrs. L. de C—— has long felt it to be her mission in life to gather about her the young servant-girls and others of the neighborhood on the Sunday afternoon. From forty to fifty assemble weekly in her dining-room, and over these Mrs. L de C—— exercises an influence as powerful as it is beautiful.

The question of total abstinence comes up. One of the class, Martha, a young dark-eyed girl of twenty—a dressmaker—has given up the use of stimulants on account of a drink-loving father. Many admire her for this, but some are cruel enough to sneer. Mrs. L. de C—— is brought into a discussion upon the subject, and while praising the daughterly love which leads to self-denial, gently affirms that, as a principle, "moderation" in all these matters is much more consistent with a truly Christian character than total abstinence.

Mrs. L. de C—— is very decided in her opinions. She is a woman of large heart and broad views. She cannot bear to "trammel" or "bind down." She argues that there is strength of character in freedom of action, and weakness in narrow or circumscribed practices.

Mrs. L. de C—— talks most fluently, and her class hang upon her every word. Possibly her theories would have been substantially less prone to mislead could those to whom she dealt them forth have been able to fight the battle of life on the spot where they listened to her words of counsel, namely, in her dining-room.

But, alas! for Mrs. L. de C——'s theories, life and its temptations had to be met in the rough by-ways of a rough world, and one and another yielded upon points where they were weakest, when but for Mrs. L. de C——'s influence they might have been the strongest.

Martha, the good daughter who had given up her stimulant to help to total abstinence a drunken father, fell herself a victim to the love of drink ere she reached thirty years of age. As a heavy-hearted wife she flies to that of which she has been taught to think it right to take a little. The "more" grows upon her so stealthily that she does not realize her position until, too late, she finds she is fighting for dear life with an appetite—a thirst—as cruel as it is torturing.

Crushed to the earth, she wails in her woe. Separated from husband and children, she curses all and every influence which has made sinning thus more possible, more easy. Mrs. L de C—— is by her side to help, but of what avail to-day the pleading, urging, and exhorting? The influence which could have touched with splendid might the impressionable heart of girlhood fails to reach the heart of womanhood, hardened by a cruel and subtle habit.

Alas, for lost opportunities! Alas, for the use of an influence possible of such direful results!

Mrs. L de C—— would like to live her life over again, but—she cannot.

Reader, are you so living in every detail of Christian life and influence as in the hour of death you would wish you had lived? You cannot live your life when it is passed over again, but you can to-day live it well, and give to its closing hours fewer regrets and lamentations: "No man liveth to himself." For the sake of others and of Him whose name you bear, examine well your life with all its blessed opportunities, and see if your influence ever misdirects those whom you yearn to help and guide into safe paths.

FOUR QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

A Sermon, with new Anecdotes, by Rev. D. L. Moody, preached at St. Louis.

I. How Can I be Saved To-day?—Mr. Moody on the Wrong Road—The First Step after Discovery is Right About Face—A Change in Politics—II. How May I Know whether I am in the Right Way or Not?—A Journey according to Guide-Book—III. Shall we have to Stop Trying?—Not Doing, but Believing—God's Religion in Four Letters—A Vessel on Fire—A Man Carrying Coal—IV. What is it to Believe?—An English Nobleman's Offer—The Night before the Chicago Fire.

I WANT to answer four questions to-day. The first, How can I be saved to-day? Next, How can I be sure that I am saved? And the third, How can I be saved if I stop trying? And the fourth, What is it to believe? Now, these are some questions that I have had letters written to me about, and friends have spoken to me often, and I thought to-day I would like, if I could, to just answer these questions.

A week ago to-day I was speaking of instant salvation—how a person could be saved all at once—and during the past week I have had quite a number speak to me and say I didn't make that quite plain; they couldn't understand how a person could be saved all at once. Now, to-day, I want, if possible, to help those that are anxious to be saved; and I don't know as I can do it any better than by some illustrations.

I. HOW CAN I BE SAVED TO-DAY?

I was going off to preach one day last summer, and it was in a strange country that I had never been in before, and I crossed a river, and when I got across the bridge I found two roads—one went this way, and another started off and ran that way—one up the river, and another down. There was no guide-post, and I took the road that I thought was right. I felt that that was the right road; I went on a little way, and I began to think. "Well, now, perhaps I am wrong; I am going by my feelings altogether, and I think I better just make some inquiries;" but I thought I was all right; I felt pretty well, and so I went on.

But I began to be uneasy again and I said, "Well, now, I will just stop and inquire." So I reined my horse up to the first house I came to, and I said, "Does this road lead to Conway?" And the man said, "No, sir; it is just taking you straight away from Conway; you ought to have gone up the other road." Well, Conway was right back of me; I was going right away from it. Now, I felt that I was right part of the time, but when I got uneasy and felt as if I might be wrong, there were some misgivings about it, and I hadn't the assurance that I wanted. I then stopped and made some inquiries, and the moment that the man told me I was wrong, I believed his testimony, I took his word, and I didn't say, "I will now consider what I will do;" I didn't drive on and say, "I hope this road will twist around and get into the right road;" but I turned my horse right straight around. It was a pretty short turn, too; almost tipped the buggy over, I remember that; but I turned the buggy round and I got done following my feelings. I took the man at his word, and I reined my horse right back, turned my face and the horse straight about, and started and went right toward the town that I was to preach in.

Now, that is repentance. If you are convinced to-day that you are in the wrong road, you don't want to stop to discuss what you are to do, but just do what God tells you to do—turn right straight about. As some old divine has said, when a man is born, he is born with his back toward God, and when he is converted God turns him right around with his face toward Him. That is conversion; and you can do that to-day. That is conviction. You are convinced that you are in the wrong way.

That is what it is to be a Christian, and that is what it is to take the first step—

RIGHT ABOUT FACE.

Suppose I was a member of some polit party, and there was an election coming off n week, and I had been in that party for ye and this afternoon in this meeting I hear so thing that convinces me that the party is wro and if that party should succeed at the polls get into power—the party that I belong to— they should carry out their principles, it wo be ruin to the government; and I am a v patriotic man, and I want to save the gove ment; I am fully convinced that the princi are wrong: what do I do? I leave that pa and go to the other party; I not only do th but go to work and bring over every one th can; that is sudden; that is quick.

Now, there are two parties in this world: party that belongs to the kingdom of dark and the party that belongs to the kingdon light—those that are fighting for God and th that are fighting against Him. There are two parties in this world. The Cross of Cal divided the world, and it has been divided since.

II. Now, the next question—

HOW MAY I KNOW WHETHER I AM IN RIGHT WAY OR NOT?

Now that is a very important question; I will give you an illustration. Supposin wanted to go to New York. Supposing I never been out of Stoddard's Addition, an wanted to go to New York. I go and get a way guide and that guide tells me to go to Union Depot. I go down to that depot, a get on to a train, and the guide-book tell that that train will cross the Mississippi R on a very expensive bridge, and it will take to Indianapolis, in the State of Indiana, then it will take me to Cleveland, in Ohio; then that I will come to the Niagara River, that I will cross the Suspension Bridge. Th tells me I will come to a very important cit the State of New York, Rochester, and that I will go a few hundred miles farther East, I will come to Albany, and then I will turn so ward from that city, and go right down banks of the Hudson River.

Now, I find that the guide-book corresp with my experience exactly. I get on that and I come to all these towns and to all t places, that the guide-book speaks about, a have very good reason to believe I am o right way. If I have never been to New or have never seen a man that ever came New York, I still have very good reason t lieve that I am on the right way, and that going to New York.

Now, people tell us, how do you know this book is reliable? How do we know we can rely upon it? Why, this book just responds exactly with our experience. If will just look at the book, you will see that just as true as any guide-book you have seen, and you will find that it will be a safe through this dark world.

I went to God twenty odd years ago to be given of my sins, and God spoke peace t soul, and there was a sense of forgiveness came to me that I had never known be And so I find as I look all through this that it corresponds exactly with my experi and I have very good reason to believe that in the right way. I don't want any more a ance than I have got, that heaven is at the e the road, no more than I should if I were down the Hudson that I was on the way t city of New York. I have passed station station, and I found that it was all accordi the guide-book.

III. Now, another thing that has troubl many is,

SHALL WE HAVE TO STOP TRYING?

I made a remark here some time ago, t a person wanted to be saved he had got to up trying and let the Lord save him; as lo he tried he could not be saved. And I found a good many have stumbled over saying, and it has made some people a deal of trouble.

Now, I want to explain to you, and I think I can, how it is important for you to stop trying if you are to be saved. It is to him that worketh not, but believeth. Some one has said that man's religion is in two letters—d-o; and you will always hear a man who knows nothing about grace talking about doing; do, do, do, that is man's religion. But God's religion is in four letters—d-o-n-e; He has done it all. When Christ cried on the cross, "It is finished!" it meant that, that salvation is finished, it is complete, it is worked out; and all I have got to do is to accept it. It is a gift, and I haven't got to work for it; I can't buy it; it is to him that worketh not but believeth.

Now let me give you children an illustration which I think you can understand. Suppose this platform to be the deck of a vessel, and we are out a thousand miles from land, at sea. The vessel is on fire, and we go to pumping the water up to get water to put out the fire, and we work hard, but the flames gain on us instead of our putting out the fire.

The vessel is bound to go down. We are lost—every hour, every minute, it is becoming more hopeless. But up comes a lifeboat, and the captain of the lifeboat cries out, "Leap into the lifeboat! leap into the lifeboat! you can't save that wreck; it is going down—it is going to burn up. Well, Mr. Whittle says, "Moody, I am going to leave this, I am not going to wait any longer; it will not be possible to save the vessel and he leaps into the lifeboat. But I say, "I'm going to try harder; I am going on pumping and pumping;" and I go on pumping and pumping, and the lifeboat leaves me and I go down, and I am lost because I try to save myself I am lost because I keep on trying and will not give up.

Now, what we want is just to leap out of the old wreck and just take a leap toward God. God has stamped this life with death; God says that no flesh shall stand in His presence; He has stamped it with death, and there isn't any hope for those who are working all the time trying to patch up this old Adam nature; they are losing time, and the quicker they give it up the better. It is out of self and into Christ; it is just to leap out of that old wreck and into the lifeboat. That is not working, is it? It is just leaving your own works, your own righteousness, and just stepping out of every thing and taking Christ as the lifeboat.

When Mr. Sankey and I were walking the street of Sunderland, in England, one day, there was a few hundred yards ahead of us, and before we got to him we noticed that he fell down; they took him up and carried him off into a drug-store and when we got there we made inquiries and found the man was dead; he fell dead.

A MAN CARRYING COAL

A few days afterward I was walking up another street in that city and I saw a man carrying in coal, and I stepped up to him and put my hand upon his shoulder and I said, "I was walking up this street the other day and I saw a man carrying in coal just as you are here. He seemed to be perfectly well when I was within a few hundred yards of him, but by the time I got to where he was he was a dead man;" and I said, "Now suppose you were to fall dead here, what would become of your soul?"

The man's face was all covered with crock, all black, but he smiled and said, "I am trusting another for my salvation." I did not need say any thing more. He had the idea: "I am trusting in another for my salvation." Behold, God has become my salvation, and I will trust and not be afraid; for the Lord Jehovah is my strength; He has also become my song and my salvation."

Now we have trust in another, and He will [illegible] Christ never betrayed a trust yet, and He never will and He never can. And what we want to do to-day is to trust in Him and believe that He will do just what He has promised to

Now the question comes up, you say, "Believe or trust;

IV. WHAT IS IT TO BELIEVE?"

"He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." It is believing God's record of His Son; it is to believe that Jesus Christ will do just what He has promised to do. And what does He promise to do? He promises to save all that come to Him; to save all that call upon Him; to take every one that will come to Him and that trusts Him for salvation; for he says He will in no wise cast out—"Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out." Well, then, I will come; and He gives me the power to come: He don't bid me come without giving me the power to come.

Suppose I should say to my little child, who is eleven months old and can't walk, suppose I should bid it to walk, to come to me, and the child wouldn't come. Why? Because it couldn't. Suppose I should punish that child for not doing it, wouldn't you say that I was a very unjust and cruel father to do such a thing as that? Now, do you believe that God in heaven bids you or I to come to Him and that He don't give us the power to come? Do you believe that He commands all men, now, everywhere, to repent and don't give them the power to repent? Do you believe that He commands us to believe on Him and then does not give us the power to believe?

There was

ONE OF THE NOBLEMEN OF ENGLAND

who was converted a few years ago, and when he got a taste of this living water he wanted to publish the tidings, and he went to his castle. Nearly every one in the town lived on his land, and he gave out that he would preach the Gospel. Well, being a wealthy nobleman, and having been a very wild man, his tenants were greatly excited at the idea that his lordship should preach, and there was a great turnout to hear him; but he wasn't a very fluent speaker, and that really isn't what we want; it is men who will tell you the truth, not the most flippant and fluent speakers; the man who has the most influence with a jury is the man who tells the truth; so this man stood there and he told the truth, the best he could; but because it wasn't very eloquent, and they didn't believe it—that's what the trouble was, they didn't believe the Gospel—when the next meeting came off there were not many there, and about the third meeting he didn't have a hearer.

But he was not going to be disappointed that way, and so he got out posters and had them circulated all through the town, and he stated in those posters that if there was any man living in that parish that was in debt, if he would come to his office between 9 and 12 o'clock in the morning, and bring around vouchers proving that he was in debt, that he would pay his debts.

Well, the people began to read, and men began to talk about it; and it was talked about all over town. One says, "John, do you believe that statement that his lordship is going to pay our debts?" "No," the other says, "I don't believe a word of it; it is a joke; there is nothing true in it." But when the day came there was a good deal of talk as to whether any one was going around to get their debts paid; and men were on the lookout to see if any men did go, in order that they might make sport of them; they thought it would be a good joke on them.

But about 11 o'clock a man was seen walking by the office, and he was looking all around over his shoulder to see that no one saw him; and all at once he slipped in; he went in as if he was guilty of some wrong act; and he says when he found his lordship there, "Is it true that you will pay any man's debts?" "Yes," his lordship replied, "it is quite true; are you in debt?" "Yes." "Have you brought the necessary vouchers?" "Yes." He looked them over, and he said, "Is this all you owe?" "Yes." And he drew a check, and handed it to him; and now he said, "I want to talk with you;" and he kept him there until 12 o'clock—didn't let him out before 12; and, meantime, two other men came and had their debts paid, and when 12 o'clock came he let them go.

When the men got outside they found the outsiders were there waiting for them, and they said to them: "Well, he paid your debts, didn't he?" "Yes," they said; "he paid them." "You don't mean it?" they said. "He didn't, did he?" "Oh, yes," the men said; "he paid our debts; we mean it." "You don't say so—paid all your debts?" "Well, let us see it." They wouldn't believe it, and then the men pulled the checks out of their pockets and showed them, and said: "There is the evidence." "Well, what fools we were that we didn't go in and get ours paid," and they wondered if it was too late now; and they went in; but it was too late. The nobleman had said that he would pay all debts from 9 to 12 o'clock, just three hours: but these men didn't believe it. Well, now, the fact was the same; he would pay their debts; he was able to do it, and the fact was the same; and it didn't change the fact because those men didn't believe it.

Now, men tell us that believing on the Lord Jesus Christ will not save us. They say there is no truth in that, but that don't change the fact. God says it will: man says it won't. Who are you to believe? Will you believe man who lies, or will you believe God who cannot lie? Do you believe that God will do what He has promised to do?

NOW, WILL YOU BE SAVED?

I remember preaching in Chicago one night; it was a Sunday night in October; I had been preaching for five Sunday nights on the life of Jesus Christ. I had commenced clear back in Bethlehem, and had followed Him along until I got to the text, "What shall I then do with Jesus, which is called Christ?" Christ was then in the hands of Pilate; and I made that night one of the greatest mistakes of my life. I said to that audience, I want you to take this text home with you; and I gave that audience until next Sunday night to decide that question. I gave the audience a week to decide that question. And do you know from that night to this I have never been guilty of such an act.

I have no right to give you another hour. As the messenger of God, I am to bring you to a decision, if I can, this very moment. I don't know what a night may bring forth. As I closed that meeting with those remarks, giving that audience a week to decide that question, the Court-House bell, not more than half a block away from that hall, was tolling out the death-knell of that city. I didn't know it then, and Mr. Sankey did not; and the last time his voice rang out in that hall he sang the words:

"To-day the Saviour calls:
For refuge fly;
The storm of justice falls,
And death is nigh."

And so it was. Little did we know what was going to take place. I went home that night, and before 12 o'clock that hall was in ashes; before 2 o'clock the church where I worshipped was in ashes; before 3 o'clock my own home was in ashes; and do you know I have never met that audience since. Right around Farwell Hall there were quite a number of people perished in the flames, and I have very good reason to beleve that some of those men who heard me that night perished that night; and one of them, in order to hide away from the flames, crawled into a great iron water-pipe and was roasted right near the hall.

I want to urge you people to-night to settle this question: What will you do with the Son of God? Will you accept Him or will you reject Him? If you will receive Him here, He will receive you yonder. If you reject Him here, He will reject you yonder. If you confess Him here, He will confess you yonder. If you will believe on the Lord Jesus Christ now, He will save you. Will you be saved?

A WEIGHT OF WEALTH.

(Continued from page 271).

ROSE'S ORDEAL.

"How much do you reckon the estate is worth?" asked Charles one morning as he and Ernest stood on a high point and could see a goodly portion of it stretching round them.

"In hard cash it is worth £50,000," answered Ernest; "to me it is worth more than any money you could name."

"By George!" exclaimed Charles, "I cannot make out why you gave it up; not out of love to me, I know. Look here, Ernest, I can't bring myself to make any charge on the estate for you or my mother; I must be free to do what I like with my own. But I promise to take care of her; and if you are ever in want of ten or twenty pounds—I don't mean once or twice, but as often as you like—you just let me know, and you shall have it. I'll stand by that."

He grasped his brother's hand in a close grip that spoke more than his words, which had expressed his thoughts more awkwardly than he had intended. He was neither eloquent in speech nor refined in feeling, but Ernest knew from that moment that he possessed a good deal of influence over his half-brother.

It was not in Ernest's nature to linger at Clifford after having installed Charles as its proprietor. It was better to bear the pang of leaving his old life than dally with it. He had no oppressive cares for the future, uncertain and untried as it was. He was still in the prime of life—only a year or two over forty—and from his active, out-of-door mode of living, young for that age. He dwelt with some satisfaction on the creditable appearance he had made in London at several of the spring meetings, and relied with some confidence on the favorable impression he had made. To London he resolved to go. Where else, indeed, could he seek his living?

He was obliged to leave Rose behind him, and for the first time in her life the child felt herself alone. It was yet but a few weeks since she had received the letter on which her hopes were still living, though they were growing fainter and fainter every day. She had written to Robert Fortescue a girlish letter, full of shy hopes and fears; but there had come no answer to it.

Her father had been in communication with Sir Robert; but he had not shown her any of the correspondence. There was a blank, void feeling of disappointment and inexperience in her heart. She did not know what to think, what to believe. One thing she could not believe—that he would desert her.

Poor little Rose! Her father was not only gone away, but she had altogether lost the father she had blindly idolized and reverenced. He was more worthy of her love than before; but she felt he was not the pattern of mankind, without a flaw, that she had fondly thought him. Was she not even now suffering for his sin? Her home, too, was lost, had crumbled away under her feet, carrying into ruin her charmed childhood.

Even herself was gone down in this earthquake; for instead of being the queen of the little fishing-village, heiress to one of the loveliest spots of earth, and, as a result of this, worthy of being the chosen wife of the future Sir Robert Fortescue, what was she? The daughter of a penniless man, whose fair name was under a cloud, and who was held guilty by some of a crime approaching to dishonesty.

Here was ground for amazement and for deep anguish of spirit. Not one grief, but many griefs had met Rose's soul on its delicate and dainty paths, and turned it aside on to the dark mountains. As long as her father was with her she had hidden her anguish under a placid smile that had almost deceived him, in spite of his tender and vigilant love for her. He knew she could not but suffer; but he had no idea how deep and keen her suffering was. He dared not tell her there was no hope for her young love, trusting it would die away gently for lack of nourishment. As soon as he could make a home for her in London she was to go to him.

But as soon as Ernest was gone, and his quiet vision could no longer detect any change in her aspect, Rose began to droop. The frank, blithe face that had always been turned to him for sympathy grew worn and sad; the springing step became slow and languid, and all the mournful amazement of this dire calamity spread itself around her.

Jenny Britton was too gay to have much fellow-feeling for her, for her spirits were kept in a constant tumult of glad surprise by her mother's lavish liberality, and by the attentions of Charles, who expended a good deal of his idle time upon her. Rose held herself aloof from her uncle, whose return had worked all this wretchedness, and he felt somewhat sore at her avoidance of him. So she was bereft of Jenny's companionship.

Rose shrank even from Ruth Symonds. Her father had solemnly confided her to Ruth, who had come over frequently to Clifford Grange, notwithstanding Mrs. Clifford's coldness of demeanor, to see after her beloved charge. Next to Ernest, Ruth loved Rose more than any one else in the world; but the girl's sick heart turned away from her. In this hurricane all her trust had been destroyed, and her faith and love uprooted. Robert Fortescue had forsaken her; her father was not the demigod she had fancied. All was lost. She had not yet learned the great secret of laying up treasure in heaven. There was nothing before her to live for.

The old dames and the mothers in the village watched Miss Rose with open-eyed anxiety. They made much of her, and bewailed in her ears the change that had rendered her no longer Rose Clifford of Clifford. Old Dunnit and his wife spent many sleepless hours thinking of her, and devised little schemes for giving her pleasant surprises. But surprises had no longer their charm for Rose. They summoned a sad, faint smile to her pale face, which almost broke their hearts, and set them consulting with one another what they could do. It is not much that can be done for a bruised and wounded spirit.

"There's only One can comfort her," said old Dunnit mournfully, "Him as carried the lambs in His bosom. She's like a poor lost lamb wanderin' away from the fold, and I must seek her. I must comfort her some way, if the Lord 'ud only put it into my hands to do. For I reckon it's Christian folks that must do the Lord's work for Him—the outside work, such as givin' one another a kind word and a helpin' hand. He'll do all the deep work Himself."

"She's daunderin' along this moment to the lighthouse," said Mrs. Dunnit, in a pitiful tone; "all alone she is, poor blossom! It 'ud have been better for her if Master Ernest had stuck to bein' only a parson!"

That was the thought that was dwelling in Rose's mind, as she seated herself on the stone bench under the lighthouse. To her utter amazement, she found herself envying Jenny Britton's lot—that lot which had seemed so hard and poor to her only a few weeks ago. If only her father was the vicar of Clifford! Ernest's love for this quiet parish was deepened into a passion in Rose's girlish heart. Every thing about Clifford was glorified in her imagination. There were no cliffs, no bay, no landscape, no skies equal to those that had stretched around her and above her from her infancy. She gazed across the gloomy sea with still more gloomy eyes. She was almost glad there was a storm gathering. Storms seemed more natural than sunshine and soft breezes. Why should creation be joyful when she was in utter wretchedness?

"My dear!" said old Dunnit's voice close beside her, startling her out of her mood of solitary misery, "there's tempest in th' air. Come along, come along wi' me, down to your old mother Dunnit as is lookin' out for you."

"O Dunnit!" she cried, "I'm going away to-morrow, and I shall never live here again. Never mind the storm. I want to stay here till it's quite, quite dark; till the tide has go down and the sun has set. It is the last time

"You are going to your father, Miss Rose he answered. The voice in which he spoke w questioning, but there was a tone of reproach it. She was going to her father, yet she there in utter wretchedness.

"Yes," she said.

"Such a father as he is!" continued old D nit tenderly. "When you were a little lass t couldn't speak a word plain, I've seen him car in' you in his arms about wi' him wherever went, like a mother. Many and many a ti when I've met him hidin' you in his bosom agai the cold wind or a sudden storm, I've said myself, 'Ay! that's how my heavenly Fathe bearin' me and carryin' me, and hidin' me fr the tempest, though I don't know Him any b ter than that little lamb knows her fathe He's taught me many a lesson out of his l for you."

"O Dunnit!" exclaimed Rose, with a d sob of reviving tenderness toward her abs father.

"He's taught me many a precious lesso repeated Dunnit; "out o' church, out o' chur I say, for he wasn't altogether to my mind in pulpit. But out o' th' pulpit there never such a man, never! His life's been a grand o always stirrin', and encouragin', and bette everybody about him. It's been a rare grand so far, and it will be grander now he's got i the kingdom o' heaven.

"What do you know about my father?" as Rose timidly.

"I know everythin', my dear lamb!" he s touching his cap in token of respect for Ern "He came and told me all. It was a sore te tation, my dear, and he's broken through snare. He's a grander man to me, Master nest is, than if he'd kep' on bein' parson. wasn't cut out for a parson, and he was cut for a squire. I can barely see the mote in brother's eye, though it's been big enoug keep him in darkness. But he's in the ligh last, the clear light. 'He that loveth his bro abideth in the light, and there is none occa of stumbling in him.' Master Ernest stum but he is on his feet again, and runnin' or race now."

"The world won't think so," moaned half to herself. She was stung by the tho of her father being blamed. But if she c only regain her old confidence in his good and wisdom she would not feel so very deso

"We've nothin' to say to the worl answered Dunnit cheerily, "the world is u our feet. It 'ud be a strange thing for the to stoop to listen to a crowd of chatterin' s rows findin' fault wi' his flight up to the Never mind the world, Miss Rose. Shut eyes to the world and keep 'em open to father. There's only two loves, and they ar one over against the other, as far as the ea from the west. There's the love of the w and the love of the Father! 'If any man the world, the love of the Father is not in h says John. There's no findin' a loop- through that. And Master Ernest has pa from the one to the other, bless the Lord!"

Rose felt greatly comforted. Old Dunnit looked upon as the oracle of the village—Mr. Britton spoke of him as an authority o ligious matters—if he praised her father ra than blamed him, there could be no reason she should refuse to restore him to his old in her love. There was another sorrow i heart of which Old Dunnit knew nothing guessed nothing. No one in Clifford susp that brief blissful dream of hers from whic was slowly and reluctantly awaking. She h they would never know it. She looked u old Dunnit after a long pause, with a wan on her face.

"I am not so sorry to go away now," sh simply. "I am going to my father, and not expect ever to know any one better th is."

"There you spoke a true word, Miss R cried Old Dunnit, "get a good grip o' that. Master Ernest's a good man and a grand man. Don't you hearken to the world, my dear; the world's always makin' mistakes. It crucified the Lord of glory. There's many more folks beside me as thinks Master Ernest one o' the best o' men. Not without his faults and flaws, my blossom! There never was but one man on earth that had no fault in him. But you be sure, whether your father's master of Clifford or earns his daily bread like one of us, he's a good good man. You hold fast by that, Miss Rose. You're like the apple of his eye to him, and if there's the smallest change in you he'll feel it. Whatever comes, you keep faithful to your father."

But when Old Dunnit was smoking his last pipe by his cottage fire, he shook his head sorrowfully as he recalled Rose's sad face and the dimness of her bright eyes.

(To be Continued.)

JESUS AND THE YOUNG.

S. S. Lesson for May 9.—Matt. 19 : 13–28. Golden Text, ver. 14. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

In our subject for to-day we learn how Jesus dealt with little children; the inexperienced, the simple and trusting ones; and also with young men. First we see that some, probably mothers, who had learned to know Him, "brought unto Him little children, that He should put His hands on them, and pray." It was so natural that they should long to bring their little ones into close and personal contact with the blessed Saviour. That their own children should have the touch of that hand which had healed so many, and be under the breath of that prayer which they saw had power with God—this was the ambition of these mothers in the lifetime of our Lord.

How about the mothers in our day? Those Christian mothers must come into personal contact with Him themselves, in order to bring the little ones to Him; and so it is with us: our surest method of leading little children to our Lord is to let them see and feel that we are often, nay, always, in His presence. Let them hear us speak of Him and to Him; let them know we hear when He speaks to us. Let them be conscious that He is Master of all we are and all we do. When they ask any thing of us, let them know that we cannot decide it without going to consult the Master as to whether it is His will; and by living thus near Him ourselves, we shall be bringing the little ones to Him. All our teaching of Jesus will be lifeless and powerless upon them if they do not see the power of it in our own experience.

"The disciples rebuked them." This is too often the case: disciples too often stand as a barrier between Jesus and the children, instead of bearing them in their arms to Him. On the other hand many believers doubt the reality of the conversion of children, and state it as a dogma that these early conversions do not last. They will even go so far as to inject doubt into the minds of children who have found Jesus, by saying, If you were really converted, you could not do this or that, instead of saying, Because you belong to Jesus you have power through His grace to conquer this or that, and a little Christian must never excuse a fault because Jesus gets the blame. On the other hand, many believers are a great stumblingblock to the little eyes and ears which are so quick to watch and listen to what surrounds them. Children are so literal in their faith that they cannot understand inconsistency. They have their own systems of theology, which are formed more or less from what they see. "Mother," said a little boy of [illegible] "It doesn't matter how often I sin, because Jesus died for all sin, so I can always get forgiven." How came he to such a conclusion? A converted servant in the house was frequently giving way to evil tempers. Let the mother live the hatred to sin, and the children will believe that sin is hateful.

"Mother, Jesus didn't bear our punishment," said a little boy of five. "How so?" was the reply. "Why, He didn't go down into hell and stop there always; He bore something else, but not our punishment." The little mind had not grasped the value of the Person who bore the chastisement, not only the just for the unjust, but the king for the subject, the Creator for the creature. That boy's mother, when in her childhood she asked questions of this nature, was always hushed as though it were a sin to think about holy things; but the boy's question made her feel how near the Person of the Lord she must live that her boy might grow up in an atmosphere of faith and of reality in divine things.

Never let us think that children are incapable of understanding divine truth: they seize it, on the contrary, more readily than others do. God could work with the simplicity of a Samuel, when Eli could not be trusted because of his weakness regarding his sons (1 Sam. 3). The little captive maid (2 Kings 5 : 2, 3), was worthy of the Christian dispensation, for she knew how, not only to "endure grief, suffering wrongfully," and take her exile and slavery without repining, but also how to put her worst enemy, by whose power she had been forced from her own land, in the way of being healed of his leprosy. God knew how to make the young Josiah a King of Judah such as might put many of his predecessors to the blush: "And like unto him was there no king before him, that turned to the Lord with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his might, according to all the law of Moses; neither after him arose there any like him" (2 Kings 23 : 23–25).

Perhaps the greatest danger in the spiritual teaching of children is to teach them only half the truth. If they learn how Jesus died to save them, and this is all, the natural tendency will be to make use of the grace of God in order to serve their own purposes, and the horrible suggestion of the wicked one to do this or that, because they can be forgiven afterward, will not be fruitless. If, however, they are taught that we are forgiven in order that we should live holy lives, that Jesus put away our sins in order that we should be able to follow Him and in order that we should be His property, to do henceforth His will and not our own, the conscience will be kept in exercise, and they will understand their relations to the Saviour far otherwise. Jesus laid His hands on the children; were they not sealed for God?

Apparently about the same time, a young man, an inquirer, came to Him and said, "Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may inherit eternal life?" We may gather from the fact that this incident appears in the first three gospels, that it conveys a teaching which is invaluable. He was "a young man" (ver. 20, 22). he was also in high position, a "ruler" (Luke 18 : 18), and "Jesus beholding him loved him" (Mark 10 : 21). His question shows that he is ready to make a sacrifice; he was rich, and perhaps had Jesus replied that he must give one half of his possessions he would have gladly done it. He seems to have lived in the fear of God, according to the light which he possessed, and something in the presence or in the teaching of Jesus seems to have struck him, for he says "Good Master." Jesus immediately inquires, "Why callest thou Me good? there is none good but One, that is, God"—as though to sound him whether he recognized Him as the Son of God, and He adds, "But if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." The young man rejoins, "Which?" and the Lord replies by quoting the sixth, seventh, eight, ninth, and fifth, summing them all up in the words of Lev. 19 : 18: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

This was the sum total of his duty toward man, and he fondly thought he had fulfilled it, for he said, "All these things have I kept from my youth up: what lack I yet?" And the Master only shows him the imperfection of his service in revealing the claims of God upon him. He said unto him, "If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell all that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come and follow Me." Some may object that this reply savors of the law more than the Gospel. But the question was not like that of the jailer who saw his danger and wanted to be saved. Here is a man who has heard of eternal life, who is not consciously guilty of any breach of the law of his God, but who sees that this eternal life has not taken possession of him.

As a Jew, one of God's chosen, he does not see God's gifts to be of grace, but a heritage, which calls nevertheless for certain requirements. But those requirements are too much for him: the call made upon him is to be nothing and to have nothing. He would seek eternal life that he might be something and possess something in spiritual attainment, and he had not understood that eternal life is life out of death. Oh how many there are like him, who have an earnest, zealous desire to live unto God and to lead holy lives! but there is a reserve in their hearts, a desire to inherit, to grow into, and so to gain credit for spiritual attainments. This gave rise to the Lord's words "Verily I say unto you, That a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven. And again I say unto you, It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God."

But riches do not always consist in earthly possessions. When Jesus says to the Laodicean church (Rev. 3 : 17), "Because thou sayest, I am rich, etc.," He is not speaking of temporal riches, but spiritual pride and fulness. Any feeling of self-satisfaction, of being any thing or possessing any thing, in a spiritual sense, is to be "rich;" self-consciousness, or any thing which fixes our eye on ourselves, savors of the same thing. It is when we lose sight of ourselves, seeing ourselves only in Christ, that we are poor in spirit. "Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be My disciple" (Luke 14 : 33). We must forsake all that we have and possess only that which Jesus has. As long as we build upon experience, spiritual gifts, knowledge, light, or any thing else which we possess, we are too rich to enter into the kingdom of God; we have in some measure a little kingdom of our own.

"When His disciples heard it, they were exceedingly amazed, saying, Who then can be saved?" Jesus beheld them, and said unto them, "With men this is impossible; but with God all things are possible." Man's nature will not be against itself, self cannot deny self. But when God comes in, He makes impossible things to be possible. "Ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God" (Col. 3 : 3). On every hand, in God's Word, we learn the same lesson—nothing for ourselves, nothing of ourselves, all for God, all of God.

Then answered Peter, and said unto Him, "Behold, we have forsaken all, and followed Thee; what shall we have therefore?" When Jesus "beheld them" (ver. 26) He could see in Peter's heart that which led to this question. Peter had not learned the lesson; he was priding himself that he, at least, and the other disciples, were not rich; had they not left all and followed Jesus? but the very saying so, and the very looking for reward, manifested the spirit of being something, of desiring to have something. Jesus answered, "Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed Me, in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of His glory, ye also shall sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." But lest they should think this was a monopoly, He adds, "And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for My name's sake, shall receive a hundredfold, and shall inherit everlasting life." But to follow Him there must be no more seeking of our own, but only His own. Then, possessing the nature of Christ, we become heirs and "inherit everlasting life." "He that overcometh shall inherit all things" (Rev. 21 : 7). "But many that are first shall be last, and the last first." Self pushes men to place themselves forward as Peter was doing, but God's first ones place themselves last.

FOREIGN TOPICS.

Lord Beaconsfield has Resigned, and Mr. Gladstone has been appointed Premier of Great Britain. The Queen, presumably acting under the advice of Lord Beaconsfield, requested Lord Hartington, the nominal head of the victorious party, to accept the position, but he declined, being convinced that he would be unable to enlist the hearty support of his party, in the face of the popular enthusiasm for Mr. Gladstone. The Queen is said to have urged the Marquis to accept the post, and to have expressed her belief that with the assistance of Lord Granville, the leader of the party in the House of Lords, he could form a cabinet the nation would approve. The Queen's importunity is stated to have been caused by her personal dislike of Mr. Gladstone, which was confirmed by the representations of Lord Beaconsfield and of foreign statesmen, that British influence abroad would be prejudicially affected if Mr. Gladstone were placed in power.

Lord Hartington was, however, firm in his refusal, but consented to confer with Lord Granville and communicate the result to the Queen. Both statesmen subsequently waited on her Majesty, and assured her that Mr. Gladstone's appointment was a necessity; he was accordingly summoned to Windsor and instructed to form a cabinet.

The result is significant, as indicating the advances made in Great Britain in the direction of popular government. The prejudices of the sovereign, the influence of foreign ministers, and the desires of the aristocracy were all arrayed on one side, and the will of the people emphatically expressed at the elections on the other. The will of the people triumphed; even under Republican institutions the people could not have won a more decisive victory.

The French Premier is Described as a Determined opponent of war. Conversing with a newspaper correspondent recently, he said: "I did my duty during that unfortunate campaign against Prussia. But it is precisely because I saw it face to face—because I felt the enormous sacrifice it had cost the country—that there is no more passionate adversary of war than myself. France must be in a position to defend herself, but she will never enter upon another war—never, so long as I remain at the helm. Neither is there a strong desire for a war of revenge among the French people. Since the well-to-do bourgeois is no longer able to buy out his son from service, a spirit of peace has entered every home and every heart."

The Proposed Expulsion of the Jesuits in France has been made the subject of protest by the Pope. The Nuncio representing him in Paris has handed President Grévy a letter defending the religious congregations. The Pope discountenances violence, but declares stubbornly for resistance in the law courts and elsewhere to the action of the state. He sides with the Jesuits, who are now indispensable to the Vatican. The cable states that not a single unauthorized congregation will demand Government sanction, and all those menaced are prepared for legal resistance, and are resolved if that fails to shut up and emigrate to Jersey, Belgium, or the Basque Provinces of Spain. The contest will be a fierce one, but France has suffered so much through their influence, that the Jesuits will not get much sympathy from the public.

Reforms in Asia Minor Appear to be Definitely abandoned. It will be remembered that by the Berlin Treaty the Sultan of Turkey pledged himself to introduce many reforms there, and England undertook the protection of his Asiatic dominions on those conditions. But the correspondents of English journals assert that there is no longer any question about introducing reforms into Asiatic Turkey. Nothing more has been heard of Baker Pasha's mission to Armenia, and it would appear that he has been sent there in order to be got rid of. Great dissatisfaction prevails among all classes of the Turkish and Christian population against their government. It is a fact that there is no government in that country, and as for security of life and property, especially in the interior of the country, it is a mockery to speak or think of such a thing. A gentleman who was captured some months ago by the Turkish brigands, near Smyrna, had to pay for his release a ransom of one thousand pounds Turkish; yet the government have not taken the least trouble to make any inquiry about it. The complaints of the people are directed against England as well as the local government.

The Recovery of the Train which was wrecked at the Tay Bridge, Scotland, on December 28th, was completed on April 7th. One of the third-class carriages is comparatively entire; the four wheels are standing, with part of the end of the carriage and a door. Of the guard's van nothing remains save the lower frame and the brake apparatus and the guard's seat. The brake is uninjured, and does not seem to have been applied. The whole of the ironwork is broken and twisted, and the axles of the carriages are in some cases bent into semicircular form. The coupling links are all broken and the buffers smashed, and the general state of the ironwork presents evidence of the terrible force of the shock caused by the fall.

A Clerk of the Great Financial Firm, the Rothschilds, at Vienna, has confessed to extensive defalcations. He thought that his early knowledge of the operations of the firm would render it safe to follow their example. He therefore appropriated the funds placed in his care, and bought stocks and shares when his employers bought, and sold when they sold. But he lost heavily, not having taken into account the possibility that the other branches of the Rothschilds were working in combination with the Vienna house, and that therefore the operations he knew of were only a part of the plan. Theclerk has been an industrious, frugal man, who has worked his way by many years' labor to an honorable position, which he has now lost in his haste to become rich. His ruin is a lesson to young men to withstand temptations to dishonesty, no matter how safe they may appear.

The U. S. Ship Constellation, laden with Gifts of American citizens for the suffering poor of Ireland, arrived at Queenstown on April 20th, after a very rough voyage. The Duke of Edinburgh, the second son of Queen Victoria, immediately started with seven gunboats to aid in the distribution of the provisions to the poor. A consultation between the Duke, the commander of the Constellation, and the members of the Herald Committee took place. The officers said that some parts of Galway had food for only five days, and that it was necessary to send thither at once. It was finally arranged that gunboats laden from the Constellation should go to North Donegal, to West Donegal, with the islands and headlands, to Sligo, to North-west Mayo, to the West Galway coast, to the West Galway Islands, and to South Galway and its islands. The object of the committee is to give the greater part of the food to those places where it is difficult to find provisions at any price, such as the islands. It is evident that where meal may be bought it is better to send money. This is what the committee is doing. After the fleet has been loaded the remainder of the cargo will be distributed by rail. It is expected that the Constellation will be entirely cleared out by May 15th or 20th.

Captain the Hon. R. Moreton, so Well Known in connection with the Conference Hall at Mildmay Park, London, is coming to this country to settle in Iowa. When he resigned the superintendence of the extensive and multifarious evangelistic operations that are carried on at the Conference Hall, the Christian workers and others engaged in connection with that religious agency presented him with a substantial token of regard and acknowledgment of his useful and valuable services. Rev. Dr. Edmond, of Highbury Presbyterian Church, on their behalf, presented Captain Moreton a purse containing £600, also a watch and a barometer; and the wives of the north-east London cabmen sented to him a compass and case in recogni of his services in promoting the erection of men's rests in that part of the metropolis.

Christian Work among the Ballet-girl the London theatres is making progress, several aristocratic ladies and gentlemen evinced a lively interest in the movement. a meeting of theatrical employés at Exeter on April 5th, the Countess Cairns, wife of Lord High Chancellor, the Marchiones Ailsa, and the Earl and Countess of Aberd were present, and took great interest in the ceedings. Lord Aberdeen, after expressing pleasure he and the Countess felt at among them, urged upon them the nece of seriously considering the advice given by Christian friends, from time to time. He fel deepest interest in their welfare, and concl by saying that the Countess had had a nu of books made into parcels, and it would her great pleasure if each person present w accept one. He could vouch for the books interesting. Every one present received Countess's present as she left the hall, the most satisfaction being manifested at her ness.

Mrs. Amanda Smith, who is now in I writes under date of February 12th: "I am in body and soul; have just held a week's tracted meeting at Nang-poor, where the gave us rich blessings. Some were conve and many of the Lord's people were sanct At the service held on Sunday—my last here—fifteen rose for prayers. Many na came during the week, and I believe that Spirit of the Lord moved on the hearts of of them. Poor things! It costs them a sacrifice to be Christians. My heart cries o God for them, that they may accept of C and a full salvation."

Blessing the Decanters.—A well-known odist preacher was invited to occupy the pit of a chapel in a country village not miles from Bradford, England, one Su evening. After service the chief inhabita vited the minister to supper at his hous which he had also asked several other fri The supper table was laden with good th among which decanters and glasses fi prominently. When all were seated at the the host requested the minister to ask a ing. The latter rose, and quietly taking al glasses and decanters placed them at one e the table, opposite the host, remarking th would ask a blessing on the eatables if the would do the same on the drinkables. Th appreciated this practical reproof, and refr from asking a blessing on the liquors; the per was eaten, but only one glass was touch

A Prince Physician.—In a Recent Num the German official Gazette is recorded th nouncement that Prince Charles Theodo Bavaria has qualified for and been duly adm to the right to practise as a medical man the limits of the German Empire. He has tised in Bavaria for some years past wit siderable success, especially in cases inv delicate surgical operations, and has been disposal of his many patients at all hours night and day. He is a specialist of so nown in eye diseases. Alike wealthy and ous, he relieves the necessities of his poor ents, besides curing their ailments.

The Mayor of Leeds, England, Mr. Ta is a decided temperance man. He recent tertained the Town Council at an official d at which no intoxicating liquors were pro At the dinner to the judges of the Assize the same rule was observed. In mentionin circumstance publicly, he observed: "E Her Majesty Queen Victoria visited Leed might be well entertained on the same prin at least she would be if she visited the hal ing the time that it was my official hon have had no wine in my house for forty and I made no exception in the mayor's at the town-hall."

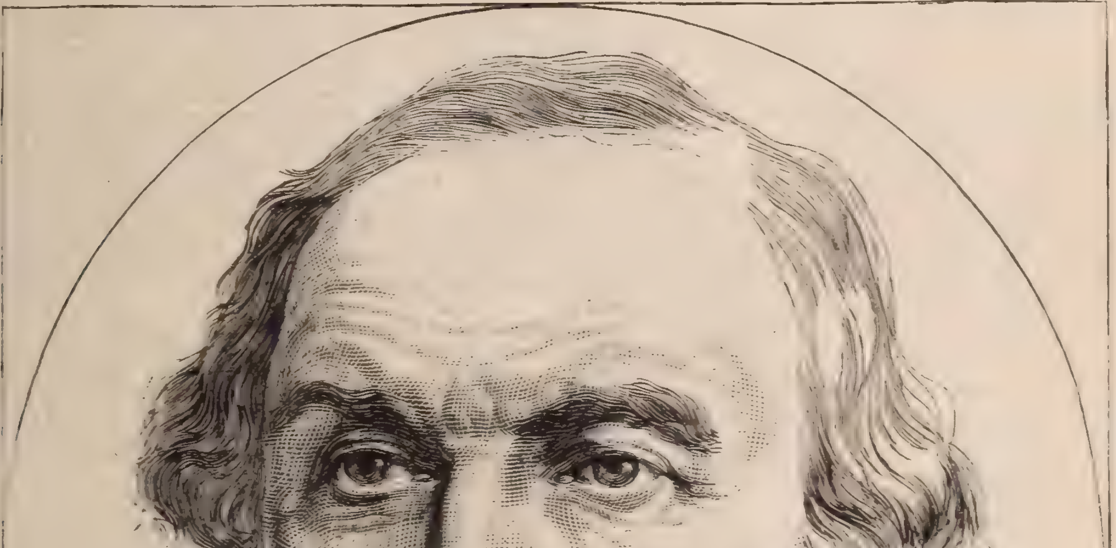
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Pu shed at 63 Bible House, New York City, and 2 Ivy Lane, London. Edited in London by the Rev. M. Baxter, in New York by Mr. B. Aitken.
is Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr TA AGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also occasionally a Sermon by the Rev. W. MORLEY PUNSHON, LL.D., the celebrated Methodist Minister, Rev. W. M HA AITKEN, or some other Eminent Preacher; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

Single Copies, Three Cents. THURSDAY, MAY 6, 1880. 14th Year. No. 19—New Series.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

PO RAIT AND LIFE OF THE RT. HON. W. E. G DSTONE, the New Prime Minister of Great B ain—Finding "Girl" in the Bible.
CO ON-SENSE IN RELIGION. A New Sermon by D Talmage.
Mr. ody's Illustration of a Rescued Fly.
TH LAST OF THE O'G.'s. A Short Serial Story by he Author of "Arnold Percival Montaigne."
WHAT COMING WARS MAY WE EXPECT? by Rev. M. Baxter (Continued).
Mary White's Song and What it Did.
CURRENT EVENTS: Congress—The Conventions—Special Services in Utah—Unprecedented Immigration—An Interesting Relic—Restitution Made by a Horse Thief—A Traveller Caught in a Snow-storm—A Man Guillotining Himself, etc.
A MIDSHIPMAN'S FIRST VOYAGE.
ON WHOSE SIDE ARE YOU? A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
A Faithful Christian Slave—A Kindness which Killed a Man—A Man Drowned in Lake Michigan.
A WEIGHT OF WEALTH (Continued).
The Marriage Feast. S. S. Lesson by Mrs. M. Baxter.
FOREIGN TOPICS: The British Cabinet—An Atheist's Difficulty—Fighting in Afghanistan—The Sultan's Embarrassments, etc.



The Rt. Hon. WILLIAM EWART GLADSTONE, the new Prime Minister of Great Britain.

THE RIGHT HON. WILLIAM EWART GLADSTONE, M.P.,

Prime Minister of Great Britain.

His Birth and Parentage and Education—He enters Parliament—His Appointment to Office—His First Political Works—His Latin Version of "Rock of Ages"—He Resigns his Office and his Seat for Conscience' Sake—He is Elected Member for Oxford University—He Leaves the Conservative Party in 1851—His Successful Appeal for the Oppressed Neapolitans—He becomes Chancellor of the Exchequer in 1853—Prime Minister in 1866—The Irish Church Disestablishment Bill—The Liberals go out of Office in 1874—His Private Habits.

THE statesman to whom has been intrusted the responsible and honorable task of guiding the affairs and framing the policy of the British Empire, is admitted by both friends and enemies to be a man of no ordinary ability. He has been more enthusiastically praised and more bitterly assailed than any living politician in England, but the question of his eminent capacity has never been disputed, even by those who differ most widely from the principles which guide his public life. From a friendly or a hostile standpoint, his character is remarkable; it teaches lessons useful alike to the ordinary citizen and the statesman. A man of indefatigable industry, indomitable energy, and profound learning, he is at the same time a brilliant orator and a financier of extraordinary skill.

As a parliamentary leader he is less successful. Intensely in earnest himself, he is negligent of the small acts and graces of life which would win to his side less earnest men. With scant courtesy or consideration for the feelings and prejudices of others, he takes the straight course to his point, and those who are in the way get uncomfortably crowded. The easy grace of Lord Palmerston, who would take the sting from an opponent's speech with a jest, or smooth the irritation of a discontented or dissatisfied supporter with a genial, humorous explanation, has no part in Mr. Gladstone's character. With a perfect greediness for labor, he takes out of the hands of his subordinates duties belonging to their office, and even if he performs them more efficiently than they would have done, he alienates their regard and abates their enthusiasm for him as their leader.

The want of tact, the hasty, impatient temper which characterize Mr. Gladstone, render him peculiarly unfitted for the position of leader of a party—a position in which tact and patience are even more requisite than the most brilliant abilities. When in 1870 he was at the height of his power, he took no pains to conciliate the Nonconformists, whose exertions had materially contributed to return his party at the elections. While he enraged his opponents by what they termed robbery and confiscation, he neglected to attach his friends to himself and his policy by concessions of small importance in his eyes, but which they considered essential as principles. It thus happened that when he dissolved Parliament in 1874 and appealed to the country for a verdict on his policy, he was opposed by a party united into a compact phalanx by hatred of him and his measures; while his followers, although they acknowledged the brilliance of his achievements, were chilled into apathy by discourtesy and neglect of their wishes in minor matters. Defeat followed, and Mr. Gladstone in a fit of chagrin refused even to lead the party whom his own blunders had involved in discomfiture, and retired to sulk like a child in his tent.

The Marquis of Hartington, the eminently respectable statesman whom the Liberal party elected to lead their defeated, disorganized forces, has since that time conducted its affairs with rare patience and far-sighted skill. He made no brilliant speeches, he initiated no remarkable movement, but he made no enemies, and he won the confidence and regard of his followers; and now that the voice of the people once more calls for Mr. Gladstone, he steps down from his post of leadership with a cheerfulness and a grace Mr. Gladstone is incapable of displaying.

Such a man, in his strength and in his weakness, is the eminent statesman who is at present the most popular politician in Great Britain, and on whom has devolved the duty of shaping the policy of his country during the next few years. The leading events of his history are as follows:

The Right Honorable William Ewart Gladstone is the fourth son of the late Sir John Gladstone, Bart., of Fasque, Kincardineshire. Sir John was well known on the Exchange at Liverpool, where he was extensively engaged in business when the subject of our sketch was born there on December 29th, 1809.

Mr. Gladstone's mother was the daughter of Mr. Andrew Robertson, Provost of Dingwall, whose descent the genealogist Burke traces from Robert Bruce, the patriot king of Scotland. The name, it appears, was originally spelled Gladstanes or Gledstanes, gled meaning, in the Scottish Lowland dialect, a hawk, and stanes meaning rocks. The practice of calling a man by the place of his abode instead of his proper name still obtains in many of the rural parts of Scotland. In early times such names often adhered permanently to the individuals to whom they were given. To these circumstances the ancient Gladstone family doubtless is indebted for its name.

His early

EDUCATION

was acquired at Eton, and he entered Christ Church College, Oxford, as a student in 1829, remaining there until 1831, leaving at Michaelmas in that year with distinguished educational honors—a Double First in Classics and Mathematics. While there he exhibited an almost superhuman industry and a wonderful aptitude for learning, neither of which has in the least abated or become dimmed in his subsequent career, but on the contrary they have increased with his years.

After leaving the University of Oxford he spent a year in a Continental tour, which period was devoted to the study of men, manners, and things in the various countries of Europe. In 1831 he entered Parliament as a conservative member for Newark. He had been in "the House" but two years ere Sir Robert Peel, then Prime Minister, saw in his mercantile origin, in the success of his university studies, his habits of business, and his high character, a commingling of traits which go to make a successful statesman. He therefore appointed him to the unimportant post of a junior Lordship of the Treasury. In the next year, 1835, he was appointed Under-Secretary for Colonial Affairs. But as Sir Robert Peel's ministry was only four months in office, Mr. Gladstone, with his chief, was soon sitting on the opposition benches.

HIS FIRST BOOK.

Relieved of official duties, Mr. Gladstone devoted his leisure to the production of a book which at its appearance created a profound sensation throughout Great Britain. It was entitled "The State in its Relations with the Church." It was received by the whole Conservative party as a masterpiece of reasoning, and as conclusively proving the necessity for the existence of an established church under a Christian government. He argued that one of the principal ends of government as government was the propagation of religious truth, and to that end it was its duty to build and endow churches and support a body of clergy. The enthusiasm with which the work of the young politician was received, unbounded as it was at first, abated when Lord Macaulay reviewed it in the Edinburgh Review. The great reviewer showed how utterly nonsensical Mr. Gladstone's arguments were, apart from their conclusion; and to demonstrate their absurdity, applied them to other corporations which, like governments, were organized for special purposes—such as a stage-coach company or a body of railroad directors. Going carefully through the book, and using Mr. Gladstone's abstract propositions in the affairs of daily life, he proved their absurdity and laughed the book into oblivion.

During the same period of exclusion from office he devoted himself with delight classical studies. He was then, and sti superlative master of the language and lit of Greece and Rome. He has published sacred verses not appreciably inferior in g those of Buchanan or Milton, and as a H student his "Studies of Homer and th meric age" entitles him to a well-earned among scholarly critics. Classical study him a delightful pleasure, and it is rel him that on one occasion when his seat liament hung in the balance, and he was t of torturing anxiety, he shut himself in hi on the decisive polling-day, and spent t ious hours in translating Homer. He is c with having written the most elegant Lati lation of Toplady's hymn, "Rock of while sitting on the Government benches i House" at night, to relieve the wearine dull debate.

OFFICIAL WORK.

In 1841 Mr. Gladstone came back to again under the leadership of Sir Rober and occupied for two years the subordin sition of Vice-President of the Board of He then stepped into the office of Presi the same department, a position in wh ability began to have weight in the min councils. It was also required of him, by of his office, to state to the House of Co
the commercial policy of the Governme once his aptitude for dealing with fina discovered. The revision of the tariff i known as Free Trade, proved his ability, principles which he laid down as co therewith have served to guide every subs Chancellor of the Exchequer.

When the Government, in 1845, pro
grant to Maynooth Roman Catholic Col Ireland, Mr. Gladstone, objecting, resig office in the Ministry; and to show furth the aim of his life has not been place-hunt during the next year, when the Repeal of Laws was brought forward by the "Peeli the moderate Conservatives were then resigned his seat for Newark, because th of Newcastle, who owned the borough, a was his patron, held anti-repeal views.

Upon his re-entering Parliament for t versity of Oxford, he threw the weight great debating power into the scale in University Reform and the Removal of Disabilities. Up to that time no Jew co cupy a seat in Parliament or hold any offic the Crown. Mr. Gladstone asked for p the disloyalty of the Jews as a people, w alleged should be the only reason for clusion of a race. His claims have bee dantly justified by the use which the Jew made of the privileges then gained for th

Up to this period Mr. Gladstone ha known as a Conservative, and a conten writer of authority wrote of him, "He is man of unblemished character and of guished parliamentary talents, the rising stern and unbending Tories." Those Tori rested their hopes on Mr. Gladstone in 18 an opportunity to moralize on the muta hopes placed on men, and especially on cians, when they look at Mr. Gladstone the leader of the ultra-Whigs.

In 1851 Mr. Gladstone severed himself from the great Conservative party; and same year he was called by purely dome cumstances to Naples. There his huma stirred to its very core by the unheard-talities of King Bomba, who had imp 20,000 of his subjects without trial. His ate cry for redress sounded through civilized world. In a letter he then wrote was translated into every language in and sent to the various Courts, he sa have seen and heard the strong and pression used, 'This is the negation erected into a system of government.'
him Lord Palmerston was on the side of and the sword of Garibaldi eventually out for the Neapolitans the just vengeanc
Mr. Gladstone had invoked on their tyra n 1852, when Lord Derby became Prime Min- r, Mr. Gladstone declined to join his Min- y; and the Budget, which was propounded Mr. Disraeli, who was then Chancellor of the hequer, was so severely criticised by Mr. dstone, that Lord Derby's Conservative Min- was overthrown. Lord Aberdeen then ned a Liberal Government, of which Mr. lstone became Chancellor of the Exchequer, in 1853 he made his first great financial ch, bringing forward a Budget. After the olution of Lord Aberdeen's Cabinet in 1853, Gladstone did not take any prominent part 'arliamentary affairs for several years, but pied himself a good deal in literary studies. vas invited in 1859 to join Lord Derby's Ad- stration, but declined. He, however, un- ok the delicate diplomatic task of Commis- r to the Ionian Islands, the object of which to negotiate the transfer of those islands British ownership to Greece. In this un- king he was entirely successful.

the Administration of 1859 Mr. Gladstone, ancellor of the Exchequer, was instrumen- the repeal of the paper duty and in con- ng the commercial treaty with France.

the general election of 1865 he was defeated e University of Oxford by Mr. Gathorne , now Lord Cranbrook, but he was elected outh-west Lancashire. In the election of however, he lost his seat after a fierce con- which excited the most intense interest ghout the country. His victorious oppo- as this time Mr. Cross, who became Secre- or the Home Department. This event, er, did not exclude him from Parliament, electors of Greenwich had a few days pre- returned him by a large majority.

n the death of Lord Palmerston took place 6, Mr. Gladstone became leader of the of Commons, and Prime Minister of Eng- nd brought in a Reform Bill. He was, er, displaced by Mr. Disraeli's Ministry for ears; but again, in December, 1868, be- Prime Minister, and in 1869 the Irish Disestablishment Act was passed.

anuary, 1874, Mr. Gladstone dissolved nent, and at the General Election which the votes were, for the first time, taken et ballot. The result was that 351 Con- e members were elected, and only 302 s. Hence Mr. Gladstone at once re- and Mr. Disraeli, now Lord Beaconsfield, Prime Minister, a position he occupied st month, when on the result of the entary elections being made known, he , and Mr. Gladstone has succeeded ladstone is an early riser, and when at en Castle, his country residence, may be ortly after eight o'clock in the morning, down to prayers in the village church, is son ministers. Early devotion and t over, he gives the remainder of the , till the gong sounds for luncheon at ock, to work, reading, writing, medita- o the performance of arithmetical feats Cabinet Minister has ever surpassed, proper season, to a bout of tree-felling, he is an expert. After luncheon, more ollows, and in due time he shows him- nner to be "a singularly temperate man nd drink."

PRIVATE LIFE.

gh he is the best controller of the Na- chequer that England has ever had, oriously by no means a wealthy man, his charities are almost reckless. In the his long walks in the neighborhood of his pockets have an astonishing knack ng themselves, and amusing stories are having had to walk home inconvenient of ten and twelve miles in the dark be- his inability to raise so much as a rail- As Prime Minister he refused an in- salary, and it is not generally known s never drawn the pension to which he entitled since his retirement from wing plainly that he has no desire to become rich or even to increase his comforts at the nation's expense.

His piety is, in its manifestations, of a humble and unaffected character. Even when Prime Minister of England he has been found in the humblest houses, reading to the sick or dying consolatory passages of Scripture in his own soft, melodious tones.

As an orator, he has, perhaps, no equal except it may be Mr. Bright. He can marshal the multitudinous details of any question on which he may be speaking with greater power than any debater in the English Parliament. It is this unique characteristic which gave him the power which even his opponents are willing to accord to him—to make the dry facts of his Budgets eloquent. Figures beneath his manipulation acquire a lofty significance. He has not the wit of Lord Beaconsfield, and his words are more copious than his rival's; but when delivered in his usual melodious tone, as clear as a bell, there is a fulness and a beauty in the sentences as they trip rapidly from his tongue.

Under Mr. Gladstone's former administration exceptional commercial prosperity was enjoyed by the British people, and when he resigned he left a surplus of $30,000,000 in the National Exchequer. He now takes office at a period of sore commercial depression, and with a deficiency in the Budget of $10,000,000. It is to be hoped that Mr. Gladstone's advent to power may be the signal for a revival of former prosperity.

A FAITHFUL CHRISTIAN SLAVE.

NEAR the close of the civil war a gentleman residing in a Southern State deemed it prudent, the Northern army being within four miles of his residence, to conceal his State bonds, plate, and other valuables. He decided on burying them in the woods; but as this concealment required assistance, it was necessary to take one of his slaves into his confidence. The man he selected was one whom he knew to be a consistent Christian. With this slave's aid he buried his treasure, and only he and his master knew the hiding-place. When the Northern troops came two days afterward, they were informed by the slaves, then emancipated, which of their number knew of the buried treasure. The man was ordered to disclose the spot where it was hidden, but he knew if he did so his former master would be ruined, and he refused. Six men with loaded pistols pointed at his head repeated the order, and gave him twenty minutes to decide whether he would obey or die. Life was very sweet, and the slave burst into tears, but told them he would rather die than break his word to his master. The rough soldiers were touched by the faithful fellow's heroism, and released him unharmed. It is often said that religion makes men weak and unmanly, but this Christian slave is an instance of the injustice of the charge. He was faithful even in peril of death. The above facts were furnished to the CHRISTIAN HERALD by the man's master, Mr. Samuel N. Stevens, of Asheville, N. C.

A KINDNESS WHICH KILLED A MAN.

SOME time ago the glad message of the love of God to sinners was received by one who for many years had been enslaved by the dreadful habit of drinking to excess. But the grace of God had prevailed, and he had given it up as part of the sins of his past life, thus proving to those around that he was on the Lord's side. What a change it was! Now his comrades heard from his lips the grand old story of redeeming love; and as God's precious word never returns to Him void, it may have been used of Him to the salvation of some souls.

For some time he did run well as a Christian. He was intelligent, earnest, consistent, never so much as touching that which had been such a curse to him in his unconverted days. Some time after he went to visit Christian friends. He was asked during his stay to take some intoxicating drink, which he decidedly refused, on the ground that as it had been his besetting sin it would be unwise to touch it. His friends urged him to take it again and again, but he stood firm in rejecting it.

"But," said one, "you are a Christian now, and you are at liberty to take it in moderation, if you withstand the temptation of drinking to excess." He yielded to the tempter, and at once the old appetite returned, and the craving came on with renewed power. A sleepless night followed, and he longed for morning to dawn that he might get out and seek to satisfy the awful thirst.

Morning came at length, and as soon as the door of the house was open he got out, and the first public-house he came to he began eagerly to drink. Now down the steep incline he went with rapid strides, until, after lying out one night in the rain, consumption began to do its deadly work, and soon he was found on a bed of sickness, weak and helpless, diseased and dying. Conscience lashed him now for giving way to this terrible passion. The tempter mocked him, and there, in all his suffering, was a spectacle over which angels might weep—a Christian dying, and dying from the effects of drink.

His friend, through whom he had received the message of mercy, was sent for. She came, read with him, and prayed; but what could be done? Excuses were made: he had been asked to take it, a Christian had given it to him. He said to the friend who had been the means of blessing to him, "I know that I am saved. I know that Jesus died for me, and I am His for eternity. But I have sinned, grievously sinned, and dishonored His holy name. But I would not have done it for my comrades, I would not have taken it from any ungodly man; but a Christian gave it to me."

From day to day his strength became less, and it was seen that the end had come. Shortly before he passed away he wrote a dying letter to the friend who had visited him, closing with these solemn words, "A Christian gave it to me."

A MAN DROWNED IN LAKE MICHIGAN.

By Mr. Moody.

A few years ago a couple of friends of mine went out into Lake Michigan bathing; I think my friend Mr. Whittle remembers them—Mr. Wells and Mr. Baker. It was the 4th of July, and both of them were very fine swimmers, but Mr. Wells was taken with the cramps and the water was very cold. Mr. Baker swam out to him at once to rescue him, and the moment he got near him (he was a strong man) he put both arms around him, and they both went down under the water. Mr. Baker managed to get away from him under the water, and when they rose, Mr. Baker says, "Now, Wells, there is no trouble about my rescuing you; I can save you, if you will only just give up trying to save yourself. I can take you by the hair of the head and I can pull you to the shore, and there will be no trouble; now if you will just make me a promise that you will not attempt to save yourself and not seize me again, I will rescue you;" and the drowning man promised that he would yield himself up; and my friend Baker swam to him again, and the moment he got near him Wells seized him again, and they both went down, and it was a great struggle for life; but under the water Baker managed to get away from the drowning man a second time, and when he r he swam out to where he could touch h and got his head above the waves and stood and saw his friend die withi him; he heard his dying to saved him without an stopped trying to s

And so, my ing to sav all up, an —the I here saved i

COMMON-SENSE IN RELIGION.

A New Sermon by Dr. Talmage, preached on Sunday Morning, May 2, 1880.

"The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light."—ST. LUKE 16 : 8.

The Great Want of the World—A Praying Christian in a Sleeping Car—More Common-Sense Wanted—I. In the Building and Conduct of Churches—II. In Obtaining Religious Hope—The California Gold Fever—Gold in God's Love—Fatalism applied to Religion but not to Business—No Conscript in the Army of Christ—III. In Building and Enlarging Christian Character—Investing the Soul—Declared Dividends ought to be Looked After—IV. In Reading the Scriptures—A Man Lost on the Mountains—V. In the Matter of Prayer—A Merchant Waiting for Goods—VI. In Doing Good—A Faded Picture Restored.

THAT is another way of saying that Christians are not so skilful in the manipulation of spiritual affairs as worldlings are skilful in the management of temporalities. I see all around me people who are alert, earnest, concentrated, and skilful in monetary matters, who in the affairs of the soul are laggards, inane, inert.

The great want of the world is more common-sense in matters of religion. If one half of the skill and forcefulness employed in financial affairs were employed in disseminating the truths of Christ, and trying to make the world better, within ten years the last juggernaut would fall, the last throne of oppression upset, the last iniquity tumble, and the anthem that was chanted over Bethlehem on Christmas night would be echoed and re-echoed from all nations and kindred and people: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will to men."

Some years ago, on a train going toward the South-west, as the porter of the sleeping-car was making up the berths at the evening-tide,

I SAW A MAN KNEEL DOWN TO PRAY.

Worldly people in the car looked on, as much as to say, "What does this mean?" I suppose the most of the people in the car thought that man was either insane or that he was a fanatic; but he disturbed no one when he knelt, and he disturbed no one when he arose. In after conversation with him I found out that he was a member of a church in this city, that he was a seafaring man, and that he was on his way to New Orleans to take command of a vessel.

I thought then, as I think now, that ten such men—men with such courage for God as that man had—ten such men would bring the whole city to Christ; a thousand such men would bring this whole land to God; ten thousand such men, in a short time, would bring the whole earth into the kingdom of Jesus. That he was successful in worldly affairs, I found out. That he was skilful in spiritual affairs, you are well persuaded. If men had the courage, the pluck, the alertness, the acumen, the industry, the common-sense in matters of the soul, that they have in matters of the world, this would be a very different kind of earth in which to live.

I. In the first place, my friends, we want more common-sense in the building and conduct of churches. The idea of adaptiveness is always paramount in any other kind of structure. If bankers meet together, and they resolve upon putting up a bank, the bank is especially adapted to banking purposes; a manufacturing company put up a building, it is to be adapted to nufacturing purposes; but adaptiveness is always the question in the rearing of
s. In many of our churches we want more room, more ventilation, more ums of money are expended on es, and men sit down in n how he likes the ery well, but I factory were wls. The he pillars.
Gothic
etting
m-

O my friends! we want more common-sense in the rearing of churches. There is no excuse for lack of light when the heavens are full of it, no excuse for lack of fresh air when the world swims in it. It ought to be an expression, not only of our spiritual happiness, but of our physical comfort, when we say: "How amiable are Thy tabernacles, O Lord God of hosts! A day in Thy courts is better than a thousand."

II. Again I remark: We want more common-sense in the obtaining of religious hope. All men understand that in order to succeed in worldly directions they must concentrate. They think on that one object, on that one subject, until their mind takes fire with the velocity of their own thoughts. All their acumen, all their strategy, all their wisdom, all their common-sense, they put in that one direction, and they succeed. But how seldom it is true in the matter of seeking after God! While no man expects to accomplish any thing for this world without concentration and enthusiasm, how many there are expecting after a while to get into the kingdom of God without the use of any such means.

A MILLER IN CALIFORNIA,

many years ago, picked up a sparkle of gold from the bed of a stream which turned his mill. He held up that sparkle of gold until it bewitched nations. Tens of thousands of people left their homes. They took their blankets, and their pickaxes, and their pistols, and went to the wilds of California. Cities sprang up suddenly on the Pacific coast. Merchants put aside their elegant apparel, and put on the miner's garb. All the land was full of the talk about gold. Gold in the eyes, gold in the ears, gold in the wake of ships, gold in the streets—gold, gold, gold.

Word comes to us that the mountain of God's love is full of gold; that men have been digging there, and have brought up gold, and amethyst, and carbuncle, and jasper, and sardonyx, and chrysoprasus, and all the precious stones out of which the walls of Heaven were builded. Word comes of a man, who, digging in that mine for one hour, has brought up treasures worth more than all the stars that keep vigil over our sick and dying world.

Is it a bogus company that is formed? Is it undeveloped territory? Oh no; the story is true. There are hundreds and thousands of people in the house this morning who would be willing to rise and testify that they have discovered that gold, and have it in their possession. Notwithstanding all this, what is the circumstance? One would suppose that the announcement would send people in great excitement up and down our streets, that at midnight men would knock at your door asking how they may get those treasures. Instead of that, many of us put our hands behind our back, and walk up and down in front of the mine of eternal riches, and say: "Well, if I am to be saved, I will be saved; and if I am to be damned, I will be damned, and there is nothing to do about it."

Why, my brother, do you not do that way in business matters? Why do you not to-morrow go to your store and sit down and fold your arms, and say, "If these goods are to be sold, they will be sold; and if they are not to be sold, they will not be sold: there is nothing for me to do about it." No, you despatch your agents, you print your advertisements, you adorn your show-windows, you push those goods, you use the instrumentality. Oh that men were as wise in the matter of the soul as they are wise in the matter of dollars and cents!

This doctrine of God's sovereignty, how it is misquoted and spoken of as though it were an iron chain which bound us hand and foot for time and for eternity, when, so far from that, in every fibre of your body, in every faculty of your mind, in every passion of your soul, you are a free man—a free man, and it will no more to-morrow be a matter of choice whether you shall go to New York by South Ferry or Fulton Ferry; it will be no more a matter of choice with you to-morrow whether you shall go to Boston or Philadelphia, or stay at home, than it is this morning a matter of free choice wh you will accept Christ or reject Him.

In all the army of banners there is, n conscript. Men are not to be dragoone heaven. Among all the tens of thousa the Lord's soldiery, there is not one m will tell you, "I chose Christ; I wanted I desired to be in His service; I am not script—I am a volunteer." Oh that me the same common-sense in the matters ligion that they have in the matters of the
—the same concentration, the same pus same enthusiasm! In the one case, a s enthusiasm; in the other, a consecrated siasm.

III. Again, I remark: We want mor mon-sense in the building up and enlargin

OUR CHRISTIAN CHARACTER.

There are men here who have for fort been running the Christian race, and the not run a quarter of a mile!

No business man would be willing to h investments unaccumulative. If you in dollar you expect that dollar to come bringing another dollar on its back. What you think of a man who should invest ten sand dollars in a monetary institution, t off for five years, make no inquiry in re the investment, then come back, step up cashier of the institution and say, "Ha kept those ten thousand dollars safely lodged with you?" but asking no question interest or about dividend? Why, yc "that is not common-sense." Neither is that is the way we act in matters of the s

We make a far more important inve than ten thousand dollars. We invest o Is it accumulative? Are we growing in Are we getting better? Are we getting God declares many dividends, but we collect them, we do not ask about them, not want them. Oh that in this matter mulation we were as wise in the matters soul as we are in the matters of the world

IV. How little common-sense in the of the Scriptures! We get any other bo we open it, and we say, "Now what d book mean to teach me? It is a book on omy; it will teach me astronomy. It is on political economy; it will teach me economy." Taking up this book, do we selves what it means to teach? It mean just one thing: get the world converted, us all to Heaven. That is what it pro do.

But instead of that we go into the Bibl anists to pick flowers, or we go as pugilist something to fight other Christians with go as logicians trying to sharpen our faculties for a better argument, and we like this about the Bible, and we do that, and we do not like the other thing.
would you think of

A MAN LOST ON THE MOUNTAIN

Night has come down; he cannot find home, and he sees a light in a mountain he goes to it, he knocks at the door; the taineer comes out and finds the travel says, "Well, here I have a lantern; you it and it will guide you on the way hom suppose that man should say, "I don't lantern, I don't like the handle of it, there or fifteen things about it I don't like; if y give me a better lantern than that I wo any"?

Now, God says this Bible is to be a our feet and a lantern to our path, to through the midnight of this world to t of the celestial city. We stop and say w like this about it, and we do not like t we do not like the other thing. Oh, ho wiser we would be if by its holy light w our way to our everlasting home!

Then we do not read the Bible as we re books. We read it perhaps four or five just before we retire at night. We ar and sleepy, so somnolent we hardly kno end of the book is up. We drop our eye on the story of Samson and the foxes, some genealogical table, important in its place, but stirring no more religious emotion than the announcement that somebody begat somebody else and he begat somebody else, instead of opening the Book and saying, "Now I must read for my immortal life. Heaven and hell are involved in this Book."

How little we use
COMMON-SENSE IN PRAYER!

We say, "Oh, Lord, give me this," and "Oh, Lord, give me that," and "Oh, Lord, give me something else," and we do not expect to get it, or getting it, we do not know we have it. We have no anxiety about it. We do not watch and wait for its coming.

As a merchant, you telegraph or you write to some other city for a bill of goods. You say, "Send me by such express, or by such a steamer, or by such a rail-train." The day arrives. You send your wagon to the depot or to the wharf. The goods do not come. You immediately telegraph, "What is the matter with the goods? We haven't received them. Send them right away. We want them now, or we don't want them at all." And you keep writing, and you keep telegraphing, and keep sending your wagon to the depot, or to the express office, or to the wharf, until you get the goods.

In matters of religion we are not so wise as that. We ask certain things to be sent from heaven. We do not know whether they come or not. We have not any special anxiety as to whether they come or not. We may get them and may not get them. Instead of at seven o'clock in the morning saying, "Have I got that blessing?" at twelve o'clock, noonday, asking, "Have I got that blessing?" at seven o'clock in the evening saying, "Have I received that blessing?" and not getting it, pleading, pleading—begging, begging—asking, asking until you get it. Now, my brethern, is not that common-sense?

If we ask a thing from God, who has sworn by His eternal throne that He will do that which we ask, is it not common-sense that we should watch and wait until we get it?

But I remark again: we want more COMMON-SENSE IN DOING GOOD.

O how many people there are who want to do good, and they are dead failures! Why is it? They do not exercise the same tact, the same ingenuity, the same stratagem, the same common-sense in the work of Christ that they do in worldly things. Otherwise they would succeed in this direction as well as they succeed in the other.

There are many men who have an arrogant way with them, although they may not feel arrogance in their soul. Or they have a patronizing way. They talk to a man of the world in a manner which seems to say, "Don't you wish you were as good as I am? Why, I have to look clear down before I can see you, you are so far beneath me." That manner always disgusts, and always drives men away from the kingdom of Jesus Christ, instead of bringing them in.

When I was a lad I was one day in a village store, and there was a large group of young men there full of rollicking and fun, and a Christian man came in, a very good Christian man, and without any introduction of the subject, and while they were in great hilarity, said to one of them, "George, what is the first step of wisdom?" George looked up and said, "Every man mind his own business!" Well, it was a very rough answer, but it was provoked. Religion had been hurled in there as though it were a bombshell. We must be natural in the presentation of religion to the world.

Do you suppose that Mary, in her conversations with Christ, lost her simplicity? or that Paul, thundering from Mars Hill, took the pulpit tone? Why is it people cannot talk as naturally in prayer-meetings and on religious subjects as they do in worldly circles? For no one ever succeeds in any kind of Christian work unless he works naturally. We want to imitate the Lord Jesus Christ, who plucked a poem from the grass of the field.

We all want to imitate Him who talked with farmers about the man that went forth to sow, and talked with the fishermen about the drawn net that brought in fish of all sorts, and talked with the vine-dresser about the idler in the vineyard, and talked with those newly affianced about the marriage supper, and talked with the man cramped in money matters about the two debtors, and talked with the woman about the yeast that leavened the whole lump, and talked with the shepherd about the lost sheep.

Oh, we might gather even the stars of the sky and twist them like forget-me-nots in the garland of Jesus. We must bring everything to Him—the wealth of language, the tenderness of sentiment, the delicacy of morning dew, the saffron of floating cloud, the tangled surf of the tossing sea, the bursting thunder-guns of the storm's bombardment. Yes, every star must point down to Him, every heliotrope must breathe His praise, every drop in the summer shower must flash His glory, all the tree branches of the forest must thrum their music in the grand march which shall celebrate a world redeemed.

Now, all this being so, what is the common-sense thing for you and for me to do this morning? What we do I think will depend upon three facts—

THREE GREAT FACTS:

The first fact, that sin has ruined us. It has blasted body, mind, and soul. We want no Bible to prove that we are sinners. Any man who is not willing to acknowledge himself an imperfect and a sinful being is simply a fool and not to be argued with. We all feel that sin has disorganized our entire nature. That is one fact. Another fact is that Christ came to reconstruct, to restore, to revise, to correct, to redeem. That is a second fact. The third fact is that the only time we are sure Christ will pardon us is the present. Now, what is the common-sense thing for us this morning to do in view of these three facts? You will all agree with me to quit sin, take Christ, and take Him now.

Suppose some business man in whose skill you had perfect confidence should tell you that to-morrow, Monday morning, between eleven and twelve o'clock, you could by a certain financial transaction make five thousand dollars, but that on Tuesday perhaps you might make it, but there would not be any positiveness about it, and on Wednesday there would not be so much, and Thursday less, Friday less, and so on less and less—when would you attend to the matter? Why, your common-sense would dictate, "Immediately I will attend to that matter, between eleven and twelve o'clock to-morrow, Monday morning, for then I can surely accomplish it, but on Tuesday I may not, and on Wednesday there is less prospect and less and less. I will attend to it to-morrow."

Now, let us bring our common-sense in this matter of religion. Here are the hopes of the Gospel. We may get them now. To-morrow we may get them, and we may not. Next day we may and we may not. The prospect less and less and less and less. The only sure time now—now. I would not talk to you in this way if I did not know that Christ was able to save all the people, and He could just as easily save all the people in the Tabernacle as though there were only one person here. I would not go into a hospital and tear off the bandages from the wounds if I had no balm to apply. I would not have the face to tell a man he is a sinner unless I had at the same time the authority of saying he may be saved.

Suppose in Venice there is a Raphael, a faded picture, great in its time, bearing some marks of its greatness. History describes that picture. It is nearly faded away. You say, "Oh, what a pity that so wonderful a picture by Raphael should be nearly defaced!" After a while a man comes up, very unskilful in art, and he proposes to retouch it. You say, "Stand off! I would rather have it just as it is; you will only make it worse. After a while there comes an artist who was the equal of Raphael. He says, "I will retouch that picture and bring out all its original power." You have full confidence in his ability. He touches it here and there. Feature after feature comes forth, and when he is done with the picture it is complete in all its original power.

Now God impresses His image on our race, but that image has been defaced for hundreds and for thousands of years, getting fainter and fainter. Here comes up a divine Raphael—I shall call him a divine Raphael. He says, "I can restore that picture." He has all power in heaven and on earth. He is the equal of the one who made the picture, the equal of the one who drew the image of God in our soul. He touches this sin and it is gone, that transgression and it is gone, and all the defacement disappears, and "where sin abounded grace doth much more abound." Will you have the defacement, or will you have the restoration? I am well persuaded that if I could by a touch of heavenly pathos in two minutes put before you what has been done to save your soul, there would be an emotional tide overwhelming.

"Mamma," said a little child to her mother, when she was being put to bed at night, "mamma, what makes your hand so scarred and twisted, and unlike other people's hands?" "Well," said the mother, "my child, when you were younger than you are now, years ago, one night, after I had put you to bed, I heard a cry, a shriek up-stairs. I came up and found the bed was on fire, and you were on fire, and I took hold of you and I tore off the burning garments, and while I was tearing them off, and trying to get you away, I burned my hand, and it has been scarred and twisted ever since, and hardly looks any more like a hand; but I got that, my child, in trying to save you."

O man! O woman! I wish to-day I could show you the burned hand of Christ—burned in plucking you out of the fire, burned in snatching you away from the flame. Aye, also the burned foot, and the burned brow, and the burned heart—burned for you. By His stripes ye are healed.

AN INCREDULOUS CAPTAIN.

An Incident Related by Mr. Moody.

WHEN France and England were at war, and a French vessel had gone off on a long voyage—a whaling voyage; and when they came back they got out of water, and they came near an English port, and they wanted to get some water, but they were afraid that they would be taken if they went into that port. But some people in the port saw them—saw their signal of distress and sent word to them that they need not be afraid; that the war was over and peace had been declared. But they couldn't make those men believe, and they didn't dare to go into port, although they were out of water.

But at last they made up their minds they had better go in and surrender up their cargo, and surrender up their lives to their enemies, than to perish at sea without water; and when they got in they found out that peace had been declared, and that what had been told them was true.

There are a great many people that don't believe the glad tidings that peace has been made. Jesus Christ made peace when He perished on the cross. He satisfied the claims of the law; this law that condemns you and I has been satisfied by Jesus Christ. He has made peace, and now He wants us just to enter in, just to believe it. And there is not a thing to hinder us from doing it if we will.

We can just enter into that peace this minute if we will. We can get perfect peace. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee.

Faith is an outward look. Faith does not look within: it looks without. It is not what I think nor what I feel, nor what I have done, but it is what Jesus Christ has done, and so I will trust in Him with all my strength, and that strength will never fail. There is an inward peace; there is an outward peace. There is a peace with God and there is a peace with man. We can have all four kinds if we will.

THE LAST OF THE O'G'S; OR, THE LOST INHERITANCE RESTORED.

By Mr. Henry Martin, author of "Felicia Cuffe," "Arnold Percival Montaigne," etc.

(Concluded from page 278.)

"SPIRITUAL Matters," Mrs. O'G said, "are things unseen, you know, and are so impalpable and shadowy. I look, but cannot realize them—as mere ideas, without body or form, they float before the mind, and are to me like mocking phantoms. But, see! Look out there!" and pointing to the landscape glowing in sunlight, while she moved her arm in a circle, she said, in an excited tone, "These lands, and that lordly old castle, are palpable to the senses—I see and feel them. Even if I would, I cannot get rid of their presence. Ah! they haunt me in my very dreams."

"There have been those in the world, however," I answered, "to whom the heavenly kingdom, though unseen and spiritual, was as real and visible as this domain of your ancestors is to you. Of the patriarchs we read—'These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth' (Heb. 11 : 13); and you and I are required to be like them, for the inspired injunction is, to be 'followers (imitators) of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises.'"

Looking on the ground, she remained for some time silent; and, as I saw that her thoughts were busily engaged, I was careful not to disturb her. After awhile, half to herself and half to me, she said, "It is hard, very hard, to abandon a long and deeply cherished hope—one around which the longings and pride of the spirit have clustered for years. How is it possible for me to free myself from that around which my thoughts, day and night, have entwined themselves, and to fling the forces of my being upon a new and distant object, even though it be full of the glories of an endless life?

"As well ask that old oak there"—and she pointed to a noble tree that was near—"to unwind and loosen his roots and fibres from the soil and deep rock-crevices into which for long centuries he has pushed them, and to submit to be transplanted to another and a foreign region, and to take kindly and vigorously to it, as if it were his native soil. No, it cannot be done."

"But the first part of your supposition," I observed, "has occurred—at least, if you have not given up your long-cherished hope it has of itself all but receded from you, and you have confessed as much. Why cling to an expectation which, you must know, can never be realized? These lands are gone from the O'G.s for ever. Forgive the assertion, but, as the last of your race, it is certain that my words are true. Well will it be if that fact lead you to seek the inheritance which can be yours, purchased by Christ for all mankind, and put into the possession of each one who will accept it.

"The rebellion of your ancestor has never found an earthly sovereign able or willing to condone it; but it has not been thus in God's kingdom of grace. 'When we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son.' Through the offence of one many were dead, but 'the grace of God, and the gift by grace, which is by one man, Jesus Christ, hath abounded unto many.' Sin once reigned unto death; but grace now reigns 'through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord'" (Romans 5).

"But how am I to make these words—which you say are not yours, but God's—an actual truth in my own case?" Mrs. O'G. asked. "If I were disposed to act upon them, how am I to realize them? what work must I do? what consideration am I to offer to heaven? what task or what penance must I undergo or endure?—there is surely some equivalent demanded."

"There is none," I replied, "and could be none. To make God our debtor is, in its pride and blindness, the great impulse of the human heart; but it is a delusion and an impossibility. We must take heaven as we do the sunshine and the rain, as a gift, or never enter it. The equivalent has been paid apart from us by 'the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot.' By simple faith in Him, by loving trust upon His boundless grace and infinite merit, we become the children of God, and 'if children' (it follows, argues St. Paul from the very relationship, and therefore the notion of an equivalent is absurd), 'then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ,' who Himself, as the Son of God, 'inherits all things.'"

Taking her hand I said, with an earnestness that was sincere, "Mrs. O'G., as one who knows by experience something of the power of faith in Christ to kindle in the human bosom the sure expectation of a glorious immortality, and also as one who feels in some degree the earnest and foretaste of the good life to come, namely peace and love and joy, let me entreat you to abandon your clinging to hopes which must perish in despair, and to 'seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God.'

With these words I bade her farewell, and each going in a different direction, along the lights and shadows of the grand colonnade of trees, standing out so distinctly upon that glorious summer day in the once demesne of the proud O'G.s, we parted.

. . . . . .

A few days afterward I left K——, and some years passed away before I had occasion to revisit it. In the course of conversation one day, with my friend there, the name of the O'G. family was introduced.

"What did you say to Mrs. O'G.," asked my friend, "upon the day you met her in the demesne when you were last in K——?"

Before giving him the substance of what passed, I inquired the cause of his question.

"Because," he answered, "it seems to have had a wonderful effect upon her. She—who like all her race about here, according to the remembrance of the oldest inhabitant, was amongst the most worldly of the worldly, forever hankering after the earthly possessions which her ancestors had lost, never, to all appearance, able to lift a single thought heavenward—some time after you left began to manifest deep interest in religious things.

"She has become quite a useful member of society in K——, busying herself in all good works in the place, so that from being disliked for her bitterness and pride, she has become quite popular. And a wonderful change it has wrought in her very appearance—her face, once morose and melancholy, has become a region of cheerfulness and smiles.

"She still goes on the appointed day to take from Lord N——'s demesne the customary grass turf, because, she says, she does not wish to give up an old traditional practice, but declares that to be her only motive now, as she has found out the secret of securing the earnest of an inheritance immeasurably excelling what her fathers once owned. She visits the demesne, however, far oftener than before; we frequently observe her pass this way toward the gate. On many a fine day she is to be seen under the shade of some great tree, seated upon its root-slope, intently reading a book, and common report says it is a Bible."

While we were talking, one of the keepers of Lord N——'s demesne was observed to move with unusual haste up the main street of K——, and on arriving at the door of Dr. Boland's, to knock violently, as though the messenger of some urgent call. It was an occurrence of sufficient magnitude to arouse the still and quiet little town from its normal state of drowsiness, and the report soon spread that an accident had happened in the park, and that the subject of it was Mrs. O'G., a fact which a good deal startled my friend and myself, as we had just been speaking about her. Such coincidences, however, are so frequent in human life, as every one knows, that though strange they should not prise us.

Along with some others we hastened tov the park, and from the gatekeeper learned Mrs. O'G., as was not unusual, had visited demesne about noon, and for a quiet perus her book had seated herself under a tree;
the oak-tree she had chosen that day was, happened, one of the oldest and most decaye the grounds; that right over her stretch great leafless bough which, though withe had retained its position as long as any o the place could remember; but the time o fall had come at last, for without warning it descended with a crash upon Mrs. O'G., when one of the keepers hurried up, was f beneath it bruised and wounded, and in a sw

When my friend and myself hastened to spot pointed out by our informant, Mrs.
had recovered her consciousness, but to our tress we could see was in considerable pain.
I stooped down to assist Dr. Boland in his e ination of her injuries, she, to my surprise pleasure, recognized me and feebly said, w smile, "The things which are seen are temp but the things which are not seen are eter
(2 Cor. 4 : 18).

The result of Dr. Boland's examination unsatisfactory—a limb was broken, and she received grave internal injury. He requ means of removing her to her home, and o
Lord N——'s carriages was placed at her ser

Before leaving the place of the accide picked up the book she had been perusing, open at the page she had been reading by a mark fastened in the leaves. It was a Bibl the open page contained the 4th chapter Corinthians—the one at the close of whic found the words which some years before been quoted to Mrs. O'G., and which a minutes before she had faintly repeated.

The hurt which Mrs. O'G. had so sing received, though not immediately destructi life, in a day not distant proved fatal. I several opportunities of conversing with her to my joy discovered that the words which before I had spoken to her had proved, i good providence of God, "the savour o unto life."

"Pondering your words," she said, "I a woke as from a dream. I was given to see grasping at phantoms, I had been sacrificir alities—that clinging with a mad and desp hold to one family inheritance, I had been gether oblivious of another, the heavenly— pared with which the former, at best, was feeble type and faint shadow.

"I am fully conscious," she added, "th recovery is hopeless. In not many days the summons will come; but it is my assur as a child of God, by faith in His Son, I enter the Father's kingdom to claim my mony—my great birthright. And is it not derful," she continued, "the call I receiv enter it came to me while seated in the e forfeited inheritance of my ancestors, and over it was in a carriage, yes, and one of N——'s, our supplanter, that I commenc it were, the journey after the accident shall end in my restitution to my eternal h
But so it is, and I see the hand of a loving in it."

Mrs. O'G.'s anticipations were well-fou
In a fortnight after the accident she died her last words were—"God shall wipe aw tears from their eyes; and there shall more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, n shall there be any more pain: for the f things are passed away;" and "He that cometh shall inherit all things, saith God
I will be his God, and he shall be My son" 21 : 4, 7).

I followed her remains to the grave, which, at Lord N——'s expense, a table since been erected, with this inscription:

"To the memory of Rosa, the last of the who in death was introduced to what she h deemed her real and truest family inheritan

MARY WHITE'S SONG, AND WHAT IT DID.

The Promise—The Sick Child—The Mother's Thought—A Loving Errand—A Song in the Street—An Answered Prayer—A New Supplication—Father's Return Home.

"O MOTHER, I'm so thirsty!" and a feverish little face was held up to the poor worn-looking woman who brought a broken glass containing water to the side of the bed as the child called her.

"I wish father would come; he said he would bring me an orange;" and Jessie sank back, and began again her restlessg tossin from side to side while every sound on the stairs brought an eager, expectant look on her painfully pinched features, as if she were waiting for some one.

The mother sighed. Her soul—her whole life burden was in that sigh. Poor woman! She had long since lost all trust in her husband's many old promises, for a passionate love of drink had taken hold of him—such a hold, that it brutalized the man, and he could bear to see his patient wife and pretty children suffer rather than deny himself the indulgence which was rapidly ruining both soul and body, as it had already ruined his prospects and his home.

Hours went wearily by, but no father came to little expectant Jessie, who moaned with pain, and turned away from the dry bread which was all her mother had to give. Not a penny was in the house—no firing, no food for the sick child; and poor Mary White sat with her infant in her arms trying to hush its cries, as she pondered over the thought which had been in her heart all day.

That thought was this—how she might earn a few pence to get food for little Jessie; she could not leave the little ones and go to work, even if she had been strong enough. She had not a friend in all the great city to help her, for she was a stranger, and country-bred. Only a month ago her husband had brought her to London, with the promise of keeping from the vice which had disgraced him in his own village. That month had been a time of worse suffering than before. Not only had James White given way to drink, but Mary herself had been ill, and now she grew worse daily for the want of proper food.

All this the agonized mother thought over in the long day-hours, and she could see but one course before her. She had still a clear, sweet voice; and, shameful and degrading as it seemed to her, she resolved as evening fell to go into the streets, and try thus to earn a trifle with which to buy Jessie her orange.

"Mother 'll not be long, darling," she said, bending down to the sick child as she fastened her shawl round her with trembling fingers. "Mother is going to get you an orange, and she'll soon be back."

A faint smile passed over the pinched little face, and Jessie lay still listening as her mother went down the dark, creaking stairs with the baby in her arms, and out into the sharp, keen night air. The child was content, knowing that the promise would be kept.

Once in the street, poor Mary White walked a few yards in doubt where to go. It must be somewhere away from her wretched room, in some road where mothers lived with happy, well-fed children in comfortable homes—mothers whose hearts God might touch with pity for the singer. On she went, till streets and dirt and dirty, fever-stricken alleys were left behind. Turning into a quiet road where she saw lights shining from behind the drawn curtains, she began, with a trembling voice, to sing that ballad she had sung in her happy girlhood many a time as she cheerily worked by her mother's side in her country home.

No one heeded the singer. Her song was ended, and no voice called her. What should she do? The picture of Jessie lying on her miserable bed rose before the brave, broken-hearted mother—of Jessie crying with pain and weariness.

"O God! have mercy on me. Send help to me in my great need," was the cry of the burdened heart, and once more, with tearful eyes and quivering voice, Mary sang—an old plaintive song. The tones of her voice grew less agitated, for something seemed to assure her she had not asked God's help in vain. Presently a curtain was drawn back from a window, and a fair little face appeared.

Mary White saw the small hand pointing her out, but she could not hear the child's appeal to its mother for "the poor woman and the little baby." She felt, as she was called to the door, that God had answered her prayer.

Back, now, to the narrow streets and passages; but, oh, how light and thankful was her heart! Sixpence in her hand, besides pieces of meat, bread, and other things wrapped in a parcel, and carried under her shawl. What riches it seemed!

Entering a shop, Mrs. White bought two oranges, and took them up to the waiting child, who smiled with almost inexpressible gladness at the sight.

"It was God's doing, Jessie, darling," said the poor mother. "I'm afraid I have been forgetting Him a long time, and yet He is good to me. I asked Him to touch some one's heart, and He did it."

"Perhaps He would make father good if you asked, mother," said the dear child, forgetting for a moment her unaccustomed delight.

Far into the night Mary White thought of those words, as she waited for her husband's staggering step, yet waited in vain. Never yet had she made that prayer to God; but she offered it then; and asked, oh, so earnestly, that her husband might be brought back to his old self—the steady, honest man he was when she married him.

A week went by, and nothing was seen of James White. Again and again his wife went out in the evening to sing, for thus only could she find a way of earning bread; and though sometimes she merely brought back a few pence, she never came in empty-handed. But her oft-repeated prayer for her husband remained unanswered. God's time had not yet come.

Meanwhile Jessie's little, flickering life failed fast. "No food, no care could help her now," the doctor said, as he went away one evening from the cheerless and desolate attic. All that night Mary White sat by the dying child, with hot tears falling down her thin, sorrow-stained cheeks. As morning dawned heavy footsteps came up the narrow stairs straight to the room where Jessie lay half-unconscious; but the sound roused her.

"Father! father!" she cried, as the door opened, and White stumbled drunkenly in. "You didn't bring my orange, but mother did. She went out and sang, and God made the rich people sorry for her. O father! be good to her, for she has been praying for it; and there'll be no one but you left, except the baby, for I'm dying, the doctor says;" and the dear child sank back exhausted.

That last word went a good way to sober White. Dying! His little Jessie dying! He had cared for her once, until the cruel drink had drowned every good and fatherly feeling. Now he went with unsteady steps to the bedside.

"Jess, look at me," he said. "I'll bring you an orange. I don't want to be a bad father to you. I'll mind, that I will." But the child's eyes had closed forever to this world, and she would need no love or care from parents again.

For days James White sat in heavy, silent grief in the darkened room, thinking remorsefully of the past. It was then he saw the sin and folly of the course he had been following; it was there, by his dead, coffined child, that he promised in the power of the Divine might never again to give way to the vice which had brought misery and suffering and an early death to little Jessie. Nor did he promise in vain, for that was the beginning of better days, and Mary White could soon rejoice that God had heard her prayer and saved her husband.

It was not long before once more they had their tidy rooms, in which several other children were born to them; and though they were often hard pressed and anxious, they never again sank down into the misery and distress which had taken Mary White out as a singer in the London streets to get an orange for little feverish Jessie. Now her voice is heard only in soothing her young children, in singing songs and hymns which she learned in her own early days and in the house of God on Sundays, where she loves to utter the praises of the Father in heaven who has been so good to her, and heard and answered the prayer she made when she was burdened with so great a load of misery.

Sometimes the children wonder why "mother" can always spare a halfpenny for a poor street-singer when she hears one. They do not know the story we have told, and how "mother" feels as if perhaps her little help may be part of the answer God is giving to the cry of suffering which goes up from an aching and troubled heart.

AN ILLUSTRATION OF A RESCUED FLY.

By Mr. Moody.

I REMEMBER going home one night when we were in England preaching; we went home rather late from church, and I was very thirsty and I sat down to a little lunch, and the lady of the house says, "Mr. Moody, is there any thing you want that is not on the table?" "Well," I said, "if it is not too much trouble I would just like a glass of water;" and instead of their bringing water in pitchers as they do in this country, they generally have it in glass jugs; and she went and got a jug of water, and I took it and turned out a glass, and I saw a little fly in the water, that was just struggling faintly, as if it had been there some time and had just given up all hope of getting out.

I set the jug down and I thought that I would not trouble the lady to get any more water; but finally the lady said, "I notice, Mr. Moody, you haven't drank the water; I thought you said you were thirsty; shall I get you some more water?" I said, "No, madam, I will not trouble you to-night;" and the lady said, "Is there any thing the matter with the water?" I said, "To be honest, there is a fly in the water." "Ah," she said, "if Edith was only up she would have had that fly out." Edith was her little daughter, about ten years old; and she said, "Edith was very merciful; she never would see any thing suffer." I said, "She shall not be any more merciful than I," and I took a pickle fork and put it in the water where the poor fly was just giving up the struggle, I suppose—just giving up to die, and the moment I put that fork right to the place where the fly was, it laid hold of the fork and I just drew it out of the jaws of death, and I put that little fly into my warm hand; it was cold, and it began to move a little, and by and by it began to move its little wings, and at last it flew away, and I suppose if it could have spoken it would have said, "Thank you; you redeemed me."

Now that fly couldn't save itself. There it was; it had given itself up to die; it couldn't get out, and some power outside of itself had to save it. And so, my friends, we are helpless; we can't save ourselves; we have to have some power outside of ourselves to save us; and when we discover that truth and give up trying to save ourselves; when we give up struggling and trying, and say, "Lord, I will trust you; I will trust you; now save me;" and just fall into His arms. He will save us. So it is to him that trieth not; we are to give up all trying.

A Project for Opening up the Dark Continent, as Africa has been called, has been proposed by Mr. Arthington, of Leeds, England. The project is to build a steamer and place it on Lake Tanganyika, with a commission to visit the people on its shores and along the banks of the rivers connecting it with the Nile, and to carry the gospel to the heathen tribes there. He offers to donate a sum equivalent to $15,000 for the purpose. This is not the first large sum he has given toward the cost of evangelizing Africa.

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.
OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

THE aim of this journal is to make known the way of salvation, and to keep alive the expectation of our Lord's return to the earth.

SUBSCRIPTION-PRICE, $1.50 per annum, payable in advance. Money orders and cheques should be made payable to MR. BENJAMIN AITKEN, 63 Bible House, New York. The paper may also be obtained weekly from all newsdealers in the United States and Canada.

Special terms to Ministers, Clubs, and Agents.

We shall be happy to forward, postage-paid, a package of specimen copies to any minister who will distribute them among his congregation.

SUBSCRIBERS frequently write to us for single copies of the CHRISTIAN HERALD. We always endeavor to oblige them, but single and occasional copies can more easily be obtained from a newsdealer. Sometimes we receive complaints that the CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be obtained from a particular newsdealer. Such complaints are promptly attended to, when made to us; but in all cases we desire that our friends will give the name and street address of the dealer who does not keep it for sale.

LAST week's edition of the CHRISTIAN HERALD was mailed to subscribers on Wednesday, April 28th, at 2.10 P.M., at the Post Office, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Senate has Devoted Much of its Time to the discussion of the condition of the West Point Academy. Energetic protests have been made by several senators against the ostracism to which Whittaker, the colored cadet, is reported to have been subjected. The conviction was expressed that if proper discipline and gentlemanly conduct could not be enforced under so experienced an officer as Gen. Schofield, it would be better to revert to the former system of management. Senator Burnside delivered an earnest speech on April 29th, in which he insisted that West Point should be a national institution, in which all inmates should receive fair and equal treatment.

A caucus meeting of Republican Senators was held on April 30th, in which the question of adjournment was considered. No action was taken on the subject, but an impression prevailed that Democratic Senators desired to adjourn by June 1st, and it was decided that if such an attempt was made, the caucus would co-operate with them. The meeting of the National Convention being fixed for June 2d, an early adjournment was considered desirable.

The Republican Conventions of the States of Ohio, South Carolina, California, and Arkansas assembled on April 28th. In Ohio the Convention adopted a resolution presenting John Sherman to the country "as a fit candidate for President, and respectfully urging upon the Republican Convention at Chicago his nomination, and requesting the district delegates to vote for his nomination." The unit rule was not adopted, and as at least ten delegates pledged to Mr. Blaine were elected, the vote of the State at Chicago will be divided. The Convention was decidedly anti-Grant.

In South Carolina the Convention was enthusiastic in the cause of the ex-president, and the delegation to Chicago was instructed to vote for him, to vote as a unit, and to continue to vote so, throughout all the ballots.

The California Convention was unanimous for Mr. Blaine, and instructed the delegates to vote for him as a unit. Mr. Blaine's record on the Chinese Question has probably increased the enthusiasm felt for him on the Pacific coast.

The Arkansas Convention sat up all night at Little Rock on April 28th, discussing the Presidential question. After an exciting debate, the delegates were instructed to use their individual and collective efforts, so long as General Grant's name was before the Convention, to secure his nomination. This adds twelve votes to the Grant body. At the head of the delegation are two ex-senators who had some experience under the first and second terms. They are expected to work energetically for a third term.

Democratic Conventions have been Held in Pennsylvania and Connecticut. In Pennsylvania the unit rule gave rise to an acrimonious debate which lasted several hours. Ultimately it was rejected by a majority of three. The platform adopted is chiefly concerned with the charge of fraud in the last Presidential contest. Delegates were not instructed, and their preferences are variously estimated. The general belief is that they are about evenly divided between Tilden and Hancock. At Hartford the delegates were also left uninstructed. It was remarked that Mr. Tilden was held in great respect by the Convention, but his nomination was apparently regarded as undesirable.

A Destructive Tornado Struck the City of Macon, Miss., on the evening of Sunday, April 25th. Twenty-two persons lost their lives in the storm and thirty-two were seriously injured. A man and his wife and his whole family were among the killed, and the body of one of the children was found a quarter of a mile away from the scene of the disaster. So violent was the wind that the depot and surrounding buildings, consisting of railroad shops, roundhouse, telegraph office, stores and residences, were blown to atoms, and thirteen loaded cars lifted bodily off the track. The path of the cyclone was 150 yards wide. The body of a woman was found without the head. One family took refuge in a cellar and escaped, all except a negro girl, who was killed before reaching the place of refuge. A car on a railroad track was blown through a house occupied by Mr. J. Blackwell and family, injuring all, but not dangerously. A number of animals were killed. So terrible are the forces at God's disposal for destroying all the works of man at the last day. (2 Pet. 3 : 10.)

A Fine of a Thousand Dollars and One Year's imprisonment in the penitentiary was the sentence pronounced, April 26th, on each of five men convicted of attempting to purchase votes with money bribes in Pennsylvania. The accused were men moving in respectable society, who hoped to escape punishment on account of their social position and political influence, but Judge Pearson, in passing sentence, said, "The Court must issue its mandate in accordance with the law, whether it is in the case of a man worth a million of dollars or the beggar in rags who steals a loaf of bread." A judge who holds this view of his duties is an honor to the bench.

After the convicts had spent four days in jail, the Board of Pardons of the State intervened and they were released. The fine, however, was not remitted, nor can the shame of having been sentenced to the Penitentiary be effaced.

A Munificent Donation has been Made by ex-Governor Joseph E. Brown, of Georgia toward the endowment of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky. He has given $50,000 in cash, which will yield an annual income of $3000, for the special purpose of founding another professor's chair. The ex-Governor's example has stimulated another liberal donor, who offers to give to the same cause $10,000, providing fourteen other persons will each contribute the same amount, or miscellaneous contributions can be raised to the amount of $140,000. The income of the institution during the past year has only sufficed to cover one half of the expenditure, and a special effort is being made to establish this new endowment fund, so that with a regular and assured income the institution, whi is giving a sound training to upward of eigh students, may continue and extend its usef work. Earnest efforts are being made to fi fourteen persons liberal enough to give $10,o each, so that the offer may be utilized.

The Twenty-third General Conference of t Methodist Church duly assembled at Cincinn on May 1st. Three hundred and fifty-thr delegates answered to their names when the r was called. It was noticed that the delegat were younger men than have hitherto attend these quadrennial conferences. An address welcome was delivered by Bishop Wiley, wh official residence is in Cincinnati, to whi Bishop Simpson responded. Dr. Woodruff,
New York East Conference, was unanimou elected secretary.

Special Christian Services have been H among the Mormons in Utah during the past t weeks. The missionary conducting them wri to New York asking for the prayers of Christi for a blessing on his work. He preaches crowded congregations every night, and ma have been converted, some of whom have b Mormons, and these have, in consequence of th becoming Christians, been forsaken by their r atives. They relate a piteous story of their p secutions, but they declare that if they starv death they will not forsake Christ. There scores of people now under conviction, but s is the power of Mormonism and the influenc others over them that they tremble, fearing cross the line. Their position is similar to t of the Jews who in the time of Jesus feare follow Him. The converted Mormons have their comfort and encouragement the promis reward, as true to-day as when Jesus uttered (Luke 18 : 30.)

A Practical Mode of Celebrating the Rob Raikes Centennial has been suggested by Cherry-street Baptist Sunday-school of Phila phia, which has voted that all the Baptist S day-schools in the United States should be quested to celebrate the Robert Raikes Sun school centennial by contributing ten cents each teacher and five cents for each scholar ward a permanent fund for the American tist Publication Society, the interest to be in establishing Sunday-schools in this cou and in other lands.

The Largest Number of Immigrants on Re landed at Castle Garden during the past mo Up to the evening of April 30th the mon arrivals were 45,274. The significance of t figures lies in the fact that they increase d and that the prospect for May is for an eq large immigration. This is at the rate of half a million a year, and while there is no ticipation that our accessions from abroad reach that enormous aggregate, it is quite w in reason to suppose that it may equal 400,0

The resources of Castle Garden, ample as have always been, are now taxed to the utm
The officers and clerks of the Emigra Commission have scarcely time to eat or sl being frequently kept busy until nine o'cloc night in receiving and registering immigr and caring for their trunks and boxes as the landed from the barges which bring them the steerages of the steamers.

"Not for New York," was the Reply by a converted actor recently to an offer large sum of money if he would return to theatrical profession. The reply indicates ex-actor's estimate of the difference betwee present position as a Christian and the pos he occupied in the world (Heb. 11 : 26).

The Debt on Dr. Talmage's Church.—Co butions received during the week which ended S day, May 1st: Mr. J. T. Taylor, Gilmantown, Wis
Robert Mortland, 29 Ninth Street, Pittsburgh
$1; Mrs. Jane Irving, Mystic Bridge, Conn.,
C., Baltimore, Md., $1. Total amount, forward
Dr. Talmage, $5. Two letters, from Walker, and Philadelphia, Pa., directed to Dr. Talmage, been received and sent to him.

Two letters have been sent to the Fulto Prayer-Meeting in accordance with the requ their writers.

An Interesting Relic of Revolutionary Days was presented to the government on Thursday, April 22d. It is a little mahogany writing-desk, about 18 inches long, 12 inches wide, and 3 inches deep, upon which the Declaration of Independence was written by Thomas Jefferson. The desk bears an appropriate inscription, which was placed upon it by Mr. Jefferson. It was presented by the children of the late Joseph Coolidge, Jr., of Massachusetts, who married Mr. Jefferson's granddaughter, and to whom the desk was given by Mr. Jefferson. Resolutions thanking the donors were passed, and it was decided that the desk should be carefully preserved in the State Department.

Restitution has been Made by a Converted horse-thief. A Washington journal states that the President recently received the following letter inclosing $130: "My compliments to Your Honor. Dear Sir, I was in the army of the late war, a Union soldier, and I did a great wrong by taking a horse belonging to the government and sold him and kept the money. I became convicted for the deed, joined the M. E. Church, and asked God for mercy, and I had to promise him to pay for the horse, and I did so, and he forgave my sins, and now I am able to pay the money in to your hand, as it belongs to the government. Please find enclosed $130, which you will please accept."

A Traveller was Caught in a Snow-Storm on the Cascade Mountains on March 25th. He knew that his life depended on his exertions, but the snow retarded his progress so that he was seven days making a distance of fifteen miles—all the time in snow from twenty to thirty feet deep. His little sack of provisions in the meantime became exhausted, and he was compelled by hunger to kill his old and faithful hunting dog, and devour the carcass. He arrived at his destination at Albany, Oregon, in a state of utter exhaustion. His terrible experience, in constantly battling with physical weariness and prostration, fearful of taking rest lest he should not again awake, is a type of the lives some men lead who are the victims of evil habits and who have to be ever watchful lest they be overcome by their own passions.

The Injuries Entailed on Youthful Smokers have been investigated lately by an eminent physician, who reports that of 38 boys, aged from [illegible] to 15, who had been in the habit of smoking, 22 suffered from various disorders of the circulation and digestion, palpitation of the heart, and more or less craving for strong drink; 12 boys were frequently troubled with bleeding at the nose; 10 had disturbed sleep; 12 had slight ulceration of the mucous membrane of the mouth, which disappeared after discontinuation of tobacco for ten or twelve days. The physician prescribed for them the usual remedies given for weakness and nervousness, though with no appreciable success until they had relinquished smoking, when health and strength were speedily restored.

Temperance in the International S. S. Lessons.—At the meeting of the Chicago Presbytery, April 12th, Judge S. M. Moore moved a resolution, which was adopted, that the International Committee on Sunday-school Lessons for 1881 be requested to prepare one lesson on Temperance for the thirteenth Sunday in each quarter. The opinion is becoming general and emphatic that the causes of Temperance and of missions should be taken more prominently into account in the scheme of Christian training in all our Sunday-schools.

How Murders are Caused.—A Leading Southern Journal observes: "Whiskey and the practice of carrying deadly weapons are at the bottom of nine out of ten of bloody offences perpetrated by the people. The carrying of concealed weapons is bad enough in itself. A passionate impulse, a crook of the finger, and—death! It is killing in haste and repenting at leisure. When he who has a weapon in his pocket is excited by whiskey, arousing the savage instincts which are found in every breast, his control over himself is gone. His brother man is hurried into eternity with as little concern as a fly is crushed on the wall."

Readers of the daily press and persons familiar with the proceedings of criminal courts can confirm this testimony. It is folly to speak compassionately of a man who commits a murder as having acted on a sudden impulse, if he has deliberately placed a deadly weapon in his pocket and thén excited his passions with liquor. A man who acts so is morally guilty of premeditated murder, for he has taken effective measures toward the commission of the crime.

The American Baptist Missionary Union's receipts from donations and legacies during the past month amount to $95,000, which sum exceeds the receipts of the corresponding month of the previous year by $35,000, and is the largest sum ever received in one month. The total receipts for the year, from donations and legacies, are $191,043.85, which amount will no doubt be increased by at least $50,000 from other sources. The debt has been reduced to $8000.

A Man Guillotined Himself at Chelsea, Mass., a few days ago. He had been depressed in spirits owing to ill-health. With strange eccentricity he chose as the means of death the guillotine, the instrument which obtained such notoriety in the first French Revolution. He secretly constructed it in his barn. Two joists served for the uprights, and he fastened a solid block of wood between their lower ends, with a hollow for his neck. A piece of plank was arranged to slide between the joists. On the lower edge of this plank the blade of a broad axe was securely fastened, and on the top rested fifty pounds of stone in a box. A tin pail with holes punctured in its bottom was so fixed, that being filled with water at the outset, it would release the axe when a certain quantity of water had leaked out. It is supposed that the man had experimented carefully with his guillotine, for it seems to have worked exactly as intended. He was found under the instrument with his head cut off. The heinous crime of self-murder was in this case deliberately planned and carefully executed.

A Novel Method of Overcoming a bad Habit is said to have been adopted by Chief-Justice Oliver Ellsworth, who resolved to cure himself of the habit of snuff-taking, which had acquired undue power over him. He took his snuff-box to an unoccupied room in the garret of his house and left it there. When he wanted a pinch of snuff he had thus to ascend and descend several flights of stairs in order to obtain it. The judge soon became tired of taking snuff under such self-imposed difficulties.

Mr. Williams, who Assisted Mr. Moody at St. Louis, and who was charged with abandoning his wife, but was subsequently proved to be entirely innocent of the charge, has instituted a suit for libel against a newspaper. The article complained of purported to give an accurate account of Mr. Williams' married life, with strong comments on his desertion of his wife. Some woman had claimed the preacher as her husband, who had deserted her long before, but Mr. Williams was proved to have been a boy four years old at the time the woman's marriage was contracted. The newspaper has confessed damages to the extent of $5000, and has offered to pay that sum to Mr. Williams. This will perhaps make the writers for the secular press more careful in publishing infamous, and groundless charges against the ministers of God (Psa. 7:15).

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Works are on Sale at the office of the CHRISTIAN HERALD, at prices so low as to bring them within the reach of every one. Twelve Sermons on various subjects, with photograph of Mr. Spurgeon, price 35 cents. John Ploughman's Talk, in paper cover, 40 cents; in cloth, 60 cents. The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, a volume of fifty sermons, $2.50. The Treasury of David, a homiletical exposition of the book of Psalms, five vols., as far as Psa. 118, $3 per vol. Spurgeon's Birthday-Book. This popular gift-book contains a suitable passage selected from Mr. Spurgeon's writings for every day in the year, with a blank space opposite for autographs. The signatures of Mr. and Mrs. Spurgeon appear at their respective birthdays. The book is elegantly bound, and the price is 75 cents. Remittances should accompany orders.

ON WHOSE SIDE ARE YOU?

A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"Then Moses stood in the gate of the camp, and said, Who is on the Lord's side? let him come unto me."—EXODUS 32:26.

The Question of Moses—The Secret of his Power—One Man Saved the Cause—I. The Decision—1. On a Most Important Theme—2. Should be Taken as Early as Possible—3. It will Influence all Future Decisions—4. The Decision should not be Difficult—5. It Involves but One Alternative—II. The Avowal—1. It Implies a Coming Out—2. A Coming to the Leader—3. To One Another—III. With the Avowal should come Consecration—Every Man on the Lord's Side should Obey His Will—Serve Him with Energy and Activity—At all Hazard and Cost—The Worship of the Golden Calf pretty General Now—What a Man is Worth—Beware of Superstition in Association with Worship—Of Sinful Amusements.

DURING the last few days, in which the stir of a general election has moved the most quiet of our streets, every one of you must have been asked many times on which side you are. Some are enthusiastic on this side, and some are quite as warm on the other, and the interest of all ranks and classes is aroused. Now that the Lord's day has come I hope you will forget all about politics and listen to me while I ask a far more important question, namely, "Who is on the Lord's side?" May God grant us grace to give an honest answer, and may that answer be, "Yea, Lord, thou knowest all things, thou knowest that I love thee."

Before I enlarge upon this exceedingly personal and practical question, I must ask you to remember the man who asked it. It was Moses who put this question, "Who is on the Lord's side?" and he put it to Israel when sin was rampant in the camp. It is well to remember that he stood there as a lone man, the solitary champion of Jehovah, and challenged the whole nation to decide for God. His own brother had practically deserted him, and become the means of making the golden calf; the seventy elders who ought to have been by his side were none of them present with him; except his lieutenant Joshua, he stood alone in the midst of the multitude just when they were intoxicated with their lustful pleasures and their fanatical worship.

He was equal to the emergency. Thoughtless altogether of his own safety, dauntless, brave, and bold, he dashes down their idol, and commands it to be ground small and cast into the water of which the nation would drink. He upbraids them to their faces, and strides among them, as much superior to them all as a shepherd is superior to the flock he tends. You admire his courage, you wonder at his supreme power, and you inquire for the secret of such sovereign strength.

Moses must have worn about him a dignity most commanding, a royalty far superior to that which comes of birth or office. Know you not whence he derived that majesty? He had been for forty days alone with God. Heavenly communion makes a man strong. He had been in the secret place of the Most High: he had spoken with God face to face, as a man speaketh with his friend, and it was not likely that he should fear the face of man after having seen the face of God.

There stood Moses, like a lone rock in the midst of the tempestuous sea. The tumult of the people raged around him, but he was firm and unmoved. He became indeed the one fixed point upon which the very existence of true religion depended. All the partisans of godliness remaining in the camp, hidden and concealed, rallied to his call, and the one man saved the cause.

So has it been in history, not once nor twice, but many a time. A single determined man, full of God's Spirit, has confronted the whole mass of the people, has breasted the rushing torrent of popular prejudice, and has not only stemmed the current, but turned it in the opposite direction, even as Moses did. Being girt with the power of God, and having learned to dwell on high, the one believer has become the heroic leader of a band of earnest hearts.

Thus much concerning Moses. God make us to be like him. Let us now consider Moses' question and command: "Who is on the Lord's side? let him come unto me." I think I see here three very important points. The first is decision—a man must be on the Lord's side. Secondly, here is avowal, "Let him come unto me:" if he be on the Lord's side, do not let him skulk away in his tent, but let him confront the adversary. And, thirdly, here is consecration, for those on the Lord's side were to come to Moses, that they might do the Lord's bidding, and fight the Lord's battles at all hazards.

I. First, then, here is

THE DECISION,

or being on the Lord's side.

1. It is a decision upon the most sublime and important theme which can ever come under a man's notice. Here are the two camps, God and Satan, truth and falsehood, holiness and sin. On which side are we ranged? When I see a man pausing as it were between the two hosts, and saying to himself, "Which shall have my heart? Which shall command my service?" I feel that he tarries in a position at once hazardous and sublime, for whichever that choice shall be it means eternity; it means heaven and all its glories, or it means hell with all its terrors.

About all other matters you should go to work with such a measure of consideration as they deserve, but to this business you must bring your weightiest thought; you must concentrate all your wit and wisdom, and judge and decide upon this matter with all calmness and deliberation, but with all solemnity of resolution and sternness of determination, so that having once made your choice by the directing grace of God you may stand to that choice world without end.

Are there any here who have not decided upon this point? It is time you did, for it is a dreadful thing for a man to be standing there, midway between God and the devil, between Christ and Belial, between heaven and hell, for, whether he knows it or not, that midway place which he thinks he occupies is really on the wrong side. So our Lord Jesus judges it—"He that is not with me is against me, and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad."

2. This decision, dear friends, so important and weighty, should be made as early as possible. It is not a matter which we can afford to leave in the balances, hanging in suspense. Oh that young people would think of this, and not waste the best part of their lives in halting between two opinions! When Agesilaus came to the borders of Macedon he sent the laconic message, "As friends or as enemies?" The answer was, "We must stop awhile, and take advice." His reply was, "While you advise, we march."

Happy is that young man who can say to others, "While you are considering, I have decided; while you are hesitating, I have pushed on and given my heart to God; while you are temporizing, I have already entered into conflict with sin, and death, and hell; while you are counting the cost, I have already reckoned the reproach of Christ to be greater riches than all the treasures of Egypt." Happy he who first crosses the Rubicon of decision, drawing his sword against sin, and throwing away the scabbard, that he may never make truce or treaty with the foe.

3. This is a decision of the greatest importance, for it will influence every subsequent decision throughout life. If God's grace shall lead me to say, "Yes, write my name down in the roll of champions on the Lord's side," then from that day forth every other question will be read in the light of that decision. If you are on God's side, whatsoever things are pure, honest, and of good report will find a friend in you. You will never be on the side of drunkenness, nor on the side of oppression, injustice, or war; for in being on the side of God you are the advocate of sobriety, justice, and peace.

True religion is meant for field and street, for polling-booth and market: it gives a tincture to everything with which the man comes in contact, and, find him where you will, you see that he is on the Lord's side, because he is on the right side. The follower of Jesus takes that side which for a season may be unpopular, but which is, according to the law and to the testimony, right in the sight of God. Take care, then, how you make your decision as to God, since on that pivot your whole character will turn.

4. As to this decision there ought to be no possible difficulty. A man should decide for God, since He is his Creator. Dare you think of being opposed to Him that made you, and who can crush you as easily as a moth? He is our Redeemer, the Lord that bought us with His blood: is it possible that we can be on any other side than His? He is our daily Preserver, in whose hand our breath is, and can we live in antagonism to Him? Our relation to our God ought to be an easy question to decide when we recollect our obligations.

Who wants time to debate when the way is plain? And yet it is sadly true that, through our sinfulness, an honest, sincere, practical decision is not soon arrived at. No, it never will be arrived at except the Holy Spirit shall influence our minds and deliver us from the thraldom of our sinful lusts.

5. One other remark must be made: this decision involves but one alternative. If we are not on God's side, we are on the opposite side. All through the word of God there is no preparation made for a third party. There is a very numerous body of people who try to inhabit the Betweenites. They will, if they can, go on both sides, or on neither side; they want to be let alone: they wish to keep themselves to themselves, and say nothing and do nothing either way.

Now, there is no preparation made for you either in this world or in the next: there is no synagogue of the undecided on earth, and no purgatory of middle men in the unseen world. As to this world, there is no comfort held out to you; you are not praised, but you are denounced by the Scriptures, and even cursed most bitterly, for not coming to the help of the Lord against the mighty. You are regarded as enemies to God until you are His friends; and it must be so, for he that is not honest is dishonest, he that is not chaste is impure, and he that is not for God is necessarily against Him.

It is a matter about which a soul cannot be colorless: so far from this being possible, this matter is one about which there is usually much intensity of feeling one way or another; for God hath fervent friends and bitter foes. All great questions raise in men's minds strong movements one way or the other, and this greatest of questions is sure to do so.

II. Secondly, let us consider

THE AVOWAL.

"Who is on the Lord's side? let him come unto me." The Hebrew is more sharp. It reads like this: "Who is on Jehovah's side? To me." It is like the cry of one who strikes the first blow in war, and, unfurling the standard, summons men to enlist. "For God—to me." "If you really are His servants, come and gather to me."

1. In this avowal there is, first of all, a coming out. They were to come out from amongst the idolaters. You who are on the Lord's side, away in your tents, whither you have gone that you might not join with the riotous crowd—come to me! You that are away there in the furtherest limits of the camp, who have gone to be quiet from all this noise and uproar—come into the gate of the camp to me, and show yourselves. None must hide their colors this day.

Now then, I say this morning to you who are on God's side, do not conceal your religion; be not wickedly reticent; be not ungratefully retiring, but come forward. "Come ye out from among them; be ye separate; touch not the unclean thing." There is too little separation from the world nowadays among Christian professors.

I do not wonder at the question a little girl asked of her mother when she had been read the New Testament: "Mother, don't you th it would be very nice if we could all move aw and go and live where there are Christians Her mother said, "Why, there are many Ch tians around us." "Oh no, mother—not l those I have been reading of in the New Te ment." I am afraid the child was right, thou there are some New Testament Christians e here. I wish there were many more who in things followed not the fashions of the world: the follies of the times, but walked with Go the separated path where Jesus' footsteps seen.

2. This avowal, however, was not a mere c ing out only: they were to come to the lea Moses stood there and said, "Let him come me." He stood there as God's representat and seemed to say, "I am on God's side; t is no question about that, though I stand alo now let others who are on God's side com me." "Ah!" you say this morning, "we we had a leader bold and brave to whom could come." I reply, you have such a lea Where is he? He is gone into the hig heavens, but your faith may see Him. It is Lord Jesus Christ who is first and foremos God's side: He proved it by His life, and pr it by His death, and this morning He bids that are on God's side to come to Him.

3. And yet there is this much more abo Those who were to come to Moses were of co to come to one another. When Moses said, " is on the Lord's side? Let him come unto He was virtually gathering a church, and listing an army of men whose hearts God touched. Such came forth at Moses' Come, then, ye that love the Lord, come join with others who think as you do. Do birds of a feather flock together?

Friend, if I am on the Lord's side, and art on the Lord's side, why should w strangers to one another? There are few en to stand up for Christ; surely they ought knit together in closest affection. Unit strength, and as we have no strength to s let us be united. Come forth you that kno Lord, and avow your allegiance by joining others who love your King: enlist unde same Captain, and inscribe your names i same muster-roll.

III. In the third place, with this avowal sl come

CONSECRATION.

Those who are on the Lord's side shoul merely give their names, but give thems When we are on the side of Christ, we belo Christ. Every man who really is on the l side should feel that he is bound to obey God's

I thank God that I learned this lesson first I knew the Saviour. I did not think in matters of religion I was to follow my f or any other good man. It seemed to m God had put into my hand the Bible, and to read it, I was to find out with diligent s ing whatever the Lord taught me in that and I was to believe and to do as His taught me. I feel it now to be a great co to my heart that I took nothing at second- I received my doctrine not of men, neither taught it, but I went directly to the well- and drank from the source itself, by the ing of the Spirit of God. I want you all this.

Do not follow a church; do not follo great preacher; pin yourself to no man's To the law and to the testimony, if they not according to this word it is because t no light in them. If everybody would there might still remain diversities of judg but I am inclined to think that unity in do and in practice would be far sooner attai this habit than by any other means. If ea would go to the Word for himself, and no settle down in an "ism" learned from so else, we should know the truth and come to in our views of it. A Spartan in the mi battle was about to kill his foe; his swo uplifted as the trumpet sounded a retreat, back his weapon ; and when one said, " Why you allow him to escape?" he replied, " I ld sooner obey my general than kill an nny." For a Christian there is nothing like bedience. " To obey is better than sacrifice, n to hearken, than the fat of rams." Let us that.

hen we come to be on the Lord's side we not only to be willing to obey His will, but re to serve Him actively and energetically. des said to these men, " Gird every man his d upon his thigh." You are not to enlist he Lord's side to idle away your time. s of people think when they get into osom of the church that they are to sleep like babes in their mothers' arms. The coach goes by, and they climb to a box f they can, and ride ; but the idea of ever ng the coach, the idea of working for the r, enters not into their heads. It must e so with us. We must throw our activities ur energies into the side which is God's, as the tribe of Levi fought valorously st the rebellious people.

we must do this at all hazards and costs. men had a very painful duty to perform. were made executioners of their brethren, vere found guilty of high treason against heir King. It cost their hearts much to ery man his brother or friend, but if they them obdurate in their idolatry they were manded to slay them without mercy, and id so. Their hand did not spare, neither eir eye have pity upon any who persisted ellion. They were thorough with God, must we be. When you join Christ's there must be a cutting off of right arms plucking out of right eyes if necessary ; nust be a mortifying of the flesh with its ons and lusts. We are called to a battle must prepare for it, and not be afraid.

, because these men were thus faithful to ey were made the teachers of Israel ever rd. They were to be preserved and made han conquerors because of their stern ness. They had smitten through the f God's enemies, and now the prayer of n of God breathes this blessing over them ss, Lord, his substance, and accept the f his hands : smite through the loins of hat rise against him, and of them that im, that they rise not again." Levi God's enemies. God will smite His enemies. Those who mind God's work shall find d works for them.

ld have every man who is on the Lord's d who has avowed it, follow the Lord's all things, cost what it may. You will he Bible doctrines which the world will e as harsh : hold them, and let them cruel if they please. You will have to stern doctrines which will smite the tall human pride, and thwart the pleasing ons of fleshly minds ; publish them less. God will justify you in so doing, dicate you from all aspersions. Allow vations. Make no provision for the fulfil the lusts thereof. If you are " a f the cross, a follower of the Lamb," it to do what God bids you.

in conclusion to show the suitability of ct to this present time. I am sure it is of season. " Who is on the Lord's et him come to Christ and consecrate his day to Him. For first, e esteemed according to the amount of hich they possess ; indeed, we say a worth so much." Though the man be worth a pair of old shoes, yet if he house, a fair estate, and a huge capital, d to be worth so much. Poor little In many cases his worth might be your thumb-nail. It is not the man worth : his house, his lands, and his the worth, but not the man.

SHIP OF THE GOLDEN CALF IS PRETTY GENERAL NOW.

ant that none of us may ever be found ng the golden calf. Yet to get into society the meanest things are done. I do not know what sort of thing society may be, but I have heard that it is a very wonderful achievement to get into society ! to have the privilege of enjoying the empty ceremonies and hollow shams of stupid splendor ! To have the privilege of talking to those persons who spend more on their dress than on their religion. From what little I do know of this wonderful thing called " society," I have felt no ambition to partake in its felicities ; and yet to get into society I have seen men fling away their principles, forsake their friends, stifle their consciences, abandon their church fellowship, and become traitors to their God. The Lord save those of you who are prosperous from being thus degraded.

The next thing you need to be firm and strong about is the superstitions which are too often associated with religious worship. Remember, God is to be worshipped, and God only. That is the essence of the first commandment ; but God is to be worshipped in His own way—that is the essence of the second commandment. The first is, " Thou shall have no other God," and the second virtually is, " Thou shalt not make any graven image to represent God, nor bow down to it, nor worship it."

Moses made the rebellious people drink their God, as a punishment, but in these times persons live among us who literally eat their God as an act of devotion. The high spiritual mystery in which we are described as spiritually feeding upon our Lord Jesus has my deepest and most solemn reverence, but the superstitious opinion that men can and do literally eat the flesh of Christ under the form of consecrated bread arouses my abhorrence and disgust.

The worship of what is called the Blessed Sacrament is as vile an idolatry as the worship by the Egyptians of onions and other pot-herbs which grew in their own gardens. There is not a pin to choose between the one and the other : and yet this is getting to be common. Bread, which is nothing but bread, and when you have said all you can say over it still remains bread, must not be produced in a court of law ; or if it be so produced, a great bishop, who should know better, assures his brethren that he has taken care that it is reverently consumed. I wonder what became of the mouldy bread ?

Oh, that ever I, an Englishman, should be forced to believe that another Englishman in this nineteenth century reverences the baker's paste ! Great God in heaven, is this the country of Latimer ? is this the land of Gospel light ? or have we clean gone back to Rome, and all its idolatries ? I want you to be very stiff and straight about this. Do not pay religious honor to any thing which can be seen by the eyes ; worship no symbol, however ancient : worship God only. Abhor every act which approximates to reverence paid to pictures, images, crucifixes, pyxes, wafers, chalices, or altars. Away with the whole idolatrous business : no epithet of scorn will be misapplied if it be turned against these superstitions.

I will not now quote the words of ridicule which our fathers poured upon this wickedness, but I beseech you follow them in sternly refusing by word, or look, or sign to pay the slightest regard for objects of superstitious reverence, lest by mingling with the heathen you incur their guilt. These idolatrous Israelites would have pleaded that they did not worship the golden calf, but they worshipped Jehovah, under the figure of a bull ; and then they said, " See what a beautiful emblem it is ! The bull is the image of strength, and God is almighty. How instructive it is ! The ox ploughs our fields, and so produces our harvests—what a teaching symbol of the goodness of God ! Many of the common people will learn more from this than from a sermon."

Certain artistic people would add, each one in his own manner, " This symbolic worship is so tasteful that it helps me to worship. When I was in the camp, and there was no golden image, I could never enter into such a bare worship, but I greatly admire this decorous and hearty service. The extemporary prayers of Moses and his brother were too poor for me. That beautiful bull is æsthetic, and arouses thought and emotion, and the ceremonial of Apis is to my mind quite a model. Give me a little of Israelitish-Egyptian, in which you have the old embellished by the new, and by the help of music and genuflections I can indeed adore." You know who they are who talk in this fashion nowadays.

The next point is, I would to God we were on the Lord's side in view of the

SINFUL AMUSEMENTS

which appear to have such charms for many that even Christian people go quite as far as they should in reference to them. When they had bowed before this golden calf they " rose up to play," and very pretty play it was. It does not bear explanation. There is about the world a good deal of this " playing." Beware of every amusement which prevents your redeeming the time, or tends to pollute the mind.

We have better joys than the wanton and the foolish can bring to us. We say of a pastime—if this is pure and clean, if this is health-giving to the body, or restful and invigorating to the mind, we are not led by any old-fashioned whim to denounce it, and we do not denounce it : but if about it there is a taint of vice or a temptation that way, or if it be mere folly, we cannot endure it. We venture not where Jesus could not have gone. We would not go where we should be afraid to die, or should tremble to hear the trumpet announcing the coming of the Lord. Stern teaching this. Are you enough on the Lord's side to bear it ?

I pray God to put backbones into modern professors. Every other part of their bodies seem to grow firm except their spinal column, which remains soft and easily distorted. We want to be made resolute and faithful on the Lord's side. " Oh," says one, " these are small points." Yes, but I want you to be like the Spartan who painted on his shield a fly. " Your escutcheon is very small," said one. " True," said he, " but I hold it very close to the enemy." If our points of conscience seem to be small, so much the more need that we hold them in the very faces of those who think little of the things of God.

Lastly, we need firm decision for God, and bold avowal of it in this day of general tampering with principle. Numbers of people whom we meet say, " You are right, no doubt, but—" Now, the Christian way of talking is, " If it be right we know no ' but ' !" " Oh, yes," says one, " I agree that it is the straight thing, and yet—" A genuine Christian has no " and yets." If words plainly mean such and such a thing, he uses them in that sense, and not in an unnatural sense, and he never dares to say, " I know that such and such things are wrong, and they trouble my conscience, but still you see I am doing a vast amount of good, and we must submit to a little evil in order to gain a great good."

The plain Christian will do no evil that good may come : he loathes the Jesuitical notion. He believes that it is a great evil to attempt to do good by doing evil. To him truth, right, the teaching of God, the will of Christ, are supreme objects. Oh that you all possessed this spirit and were steadfast in it ! In your family circle, in your business everywhere, be true, be thorough, be upright, be godlike, be Christlike, and may the divine Spirit help you to this, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

[PORTION OF SCRIPTURE READ BEFORE SERMON—Exodus 32.]

[The prayers of the readers of this Journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors in America and England, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it ; and for its weekly circulation of more than 175,000 copies to be blessed by the Holy Spirit to the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people, Mr. Spurgeon and Dr. Talmage especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

A MIDSHIPMAN'S FIRST VOYAGE.

By Commander W. H.

I WAS thirteen years of age when I was recommended, about half a century ago, as a first-class volunteer to Commander P. C. Handfield, who was at that time appointed to commission H. M. brig Delight, at Plymouth. I arrived at Plymouth by the tender which conveyed pressed seamen and the sweepings of gaols to man the numerous ships of our navy. I was sent on board the receiving frigate, where all these men had to be examined, and from thence drafted to different men-of-war ships. My captain was on board selecting men, and I was introduced to him.

He was a fine, tall, handsome man, and very kind; but he and the other captains laughed heartily at my dress, for I was rigged out by my dear mother as an Hibernian Marine schoolboy. He sent me on board the Delight to his clerk, and directed him to take me to a tailor and put me in proper uniform.

Shortly after we sailed for the Mediterranean with despatches, and encountered severe contrary gales at S.W., in the Bay of Biscay. I was dreadfully sick, and was in the master's (now navigating officer's) watch: he was a fine sailor and a middle watcher, but fond of his grog, which he sent me down to the gun-room to bring up to him. If I had shown a taste for it, I would, no doubt, have contracted the same unfortunate propensity. When we arrived off Valetta, Malta, it was evening, and we had to wait, not having enough light to enter the harbor. The master had the first watch, from 8 P.M. until midnight; he was not sober, and did not keep the ship off the land: an awful gale came on, accompanied by thunder and lightning. In the second or middle watch the master was relieved by his mate, some of the guns broke loose, and the men who were employed to secure them observed by the flashes of lightning that we were quite close to land. All hands were piped up, and the anchor let go, and most providentially it firmly held.

Captain H. was sick in his cot bed; he came on deck in night clothes, and gave his orders with courage; and seeing that nothing else could save the ship and the lives of ninety-six men and boys, he at once ordered the masts and sails to be cut away, which was the means of preserving us all. The lightning flashes were so vivid that a pin could have been seen on the deck, and the thunder was truly dreadful. The first lieutenant had been suddenly awakened from his sleep by the captain's clerk, with the exclamation, "Mr. B., we are all lost!" When he came on deck he cried like a child, and was useless to the captain; from that night he lost his reason, and died insane a few months afterward, in the Greek Archipelago.

Strange to say, the captain himself was completely cured by the exertion and energy called forth by the peril. After the storm had subsided he summoned all the officers to his cabin, and offered up prayers for our preservation, which was indeed miraculous, for two days afterward, when the anchor was hove up, a strand of cable was found to be cut through by rocky anchorage. The monks in the island—near where St. Paul was shipwrecked—were seen offering up prayers for our safety. When the gale ceased the brig was towed into the harbor of Valetta. Sir Thomas Duckworth arrived about this time at Malta with a fleet of men-of-war, on his way to pass up the Dardanelles, for we were then at war with the Turks. The carpenters of the fleet were set to work to remast the Delight; and in an extraordinary short space of time she was rigged, sails bent, and we sailed for Milo, in the Archipelago, to hire pilots, to join the squadron, to take it to Constantinople.

While we were making the best of our way, the new rigging stretched, our topmasts were carried away, and the fleet passed us by, and went up the Dardanelles; we had to wait at the island of Tenedos until they reurned; we were then sent to Salonica and Corfu, and ultimately returned to England with despatches.

Captain H. always made the young midshipmen attend prayers in his cabin on Sunday, and as I could find out the usual prayers in the Prayer-book—of which others appeared ignorant—I became his gig midshipman and aide-de-camp, and he was my friend and patron. My second voyage to the Mediterranean was more disastrous. I have written this little narrative from a standpoint which looks back on a long vista of years. I am now an old man, and, dear reader, there is a day coming when we must all pass through a voyage which may prove either a storm or a calm according as we are prepared to meet it—I mean the last great passage of the soul from time into eternity. There is only one Pilot who can guide us in safety into the haven of rest, and that is—"JESUS CHRIST, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever." He passed through the deep waters of death, and rose victorious over them. He is willing and waiting to pardon sinners, and save unto the uttermost.

FINDING "GIRL" IN THE BIBLE.

THE following incident, narrated by The Evangelist, shows that events which are often called "coincidences" are really the fulfilment of God's promises to His children (Prov. 3 : 6).

An English town missionary often passed a lodging-house in his district which he had long desired to enter, but was deterred from so doing by his friend, who feared that his life would be thereby endangered. He became at length so uneasy, that he determined to risk all consequences, and try to gain admission. So one day he gave a somewhat timid knock at the door, in response to which a coarse voice roared out, "Who's there?" and at the same moment a vicious-looking woman opened the door and ordered the man of God away.

'Let him come in and see who he is and what he wants," growled out the same voice. The missionary walked in, and bowing politely to the rough-looking man whom he had just heard speak, said:

"I have been visiting most of the houses in this neighborhood to read with and talk to the people about good things. I have passed your door as long as I feel I ought, for I wish also to talk with you and your lodgers."

"Are you what is called a town-missionary?"

"I am, sir," was the reply.

"Well, then," said the fierce-looking man, "sit down and hear what I am going to say. I will ask you a question out of the Bible. If you answer me right, you may call at this house and read and pray with us or our lodgers as often as you like; if you do not answer me right, we will tear your clothes off your back and tumble you neck and heels into the street. Now what do you say to that?—for I am a man of my word."

The missionary was perplexed, but at length quietly said:

"I will take you."

"Well, then," said the man, "here goes. Is the word girl in any part of the Bible? If so, where is it to be found, and how often? That is my question."

"Well, sir, the word girl is in the Bible, but only once, and may be found in the Book of Joel 3 : 3. The words are, 'And sold a girl for wine, that they might drink.'"

"Well," replied the man, "I am dead beat: I durst have bet five pounds you could not have told."

"And I could not have told yesterday," said the visitor. "For several days I have been praying that the Lord would open me a way into this house, and this very morning, when reading the Scriptures in my family, I was surprised to find the word girl, and got the Concordance to see if it occurred again, and found it did not. And now, sir, I believe that God did know, and does know, what will come to pass, and surely His hand is in this for my protection and your good."

The whole of the inmates were greatly surprised, and the incident has been overruled to the conversion of the man, his wife, and two of the lodgers.

WHAT COMING WARS MAY WE PECT?*

By Rev. M. Baxter.

(Continued from page 279.)

The Second Ascension—Apostary Reachin Climax—A Chaotic Conflict and Mutual Sla ter—The Dismay of Antichrist—The Christian Trinity—Seven Months of Bur
The Commencement of the Millenium.

At this critical juncture in the battle b angels will be seen in rapid flight descendin taking up to the heavens in

THE SECOND ASCENSION

the great multitude of all true Christians surviving on the earth, including 144,000
verted Jews.†

So far from trembling at these visible t of impending retribution, the latter-day Ph will become more hardened in his determin to struggle to the very last against the p and the power of the Most High. No l purposing simply to fight against human such as the Jews, he now deliberately resol
"stand up against the Prince of princes, to "make war with the Lamb," their I Messiah, whom he perceives to be descend contest with him the sovereignty of the (Dan. 8 : 25 ; Rev. 17 : 14 ; 19 : 19).

An interval of two or three days is thei cated to ensue; while human apostasy r its most daring climax, in Antichrist, wi armies, preparing personally to oppose and the descent of Christ and His armies earth; another Goliath in very deed enteri lists against the Son of David; the Man challenging to combat the God of heave creature offering battle to his Creator. Tl Antichristian hosts stand marshalled in h defying desperation, with a lurid phos glare reflected upon their ghastly counte from above, when unexpectedly a fright mult arises from all quarters of their can confusion, as confounding as that of B heard on every side.

The mutual hatreds and jealousies th long been fermenting among the vario tions of the heterogeneous and ill-as troops will burst forth in a tempest of irr ble fury. "Every man's sword will be his fellow." Syrians, Turks, Greeks, Egy English, French, Spaniards, Italians, Ge Lybians, Russians—all will be mingled chaotic, fierce, and sanguinary conflict of slaughter. "Every horse will be smitte blindness and his rider with madness.' cavalry soldiers, changed in a moment i ing maniacs, and mounted upon frenzied rendered unmanageable by instantaneou vation of sight, will naturally discharg fire-arms and unsheath their swords with ferocity against their fellow-companions right hand and on the left, as if contendi their most mortal foe (Zech. 12 : 4 ; Ezek. 38 : 21).

The battle-field will speedily resemble mense shambles swimming in blood, strewn with reeking masses of palpitatir

---

* Extracted from "Coming Wars," by Baxter, in two pamphlets—five cents each
First pamphlet contains "Ten Signs of the Description of Approaching Events," with t
and four large diagrams. Second pamphlet
valuable quotations from Forty Expositors
events. Address, 63 Bible House, New Yor

† In the literal fulfilment of Revelation d five years between the First and Second As at Christ's Second Advent, the 144,000 i are entirely Jews caught up in the Secon sion after the three and a half years' persec the 144,000 in Rev. 14 are not stated to be all, but are the Wise Virgins (verse 4, see a 25), and are evidently caught up in the cension before the three and a half years' tion. Thus the 144,000 in Rev. 7 are to tinct from those in Rev. 14. The seve seventh trumpet, and seventh vial in their fulfilment last during the final five years, an literal day fulfilment extend over the final
The seventh seal, mentioned in Rev. 8 : 1 described throughout in Rev. 19.

according to the prediction " that the blood shall come up even unto the horses' bridles by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs" (Rev. 14 : 20).

THE CARNAGE

will be most terribly appalling. Gushing torrents of the purple tide of life will flow profusely over the grassy plain, like the bubbling cataracts of the antediluvian inundation, when the fountains of the great deep were broken up. In strange unison with the war-whoops and din of strife will be heard the shrill scream of the eagle, the wild cry of the vulture, and the hoarse croak of the raven, as dense swarms of birds of prey wheel overhead, and expectantly contemplate this transition of the flower of earth's armies into food for the fowls of the air and beasts of the field. And lions and tigers and leopards will hasten from their mountain lairs to revel upon the unwonted feast (Ezek. 39 : 17 ; Rev. 19 : 17 ; Ezek. 29 : 5).

Nor will the sword alone devour the vast majority of these warriors that are predicted then to meet their doom. Great hailstones, and fire and brimstone, will be rained down upon the horror-stricken combatants, and an earthquake, greater than ever before known, will violently shake the globe from its centre to its circumference, casting down the cities of the nations and every wall to the ground, and imparting to Megiddo's plains a spasmodic shudder, by which, in many places, hundreds may be engulfed, like Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, in the yawning chasm. And the flesh of many of them shall consume away while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes shall consume away in their holes, and their tongues shall consume away in their mouth" (Rev. 16 : 21, 18 ; 11 : 19 ; Ezek. 38 : 20, 22 ; Zech. 14 : 12).

Meanwhile the Imperial Antichrist, gazing upon the scene with emotions of the deepest dismay, like those of his famed ancestor at Waterloo, when the line of the Old Guard wavered and broke, is suddenly seized by the celestial executioners of the judgment written, and, together with his inseparable companion, the Roman Pontiff, hurled headlong—precipitated alive into the flaming lake of Tophet. Thus will the two confederate political and ecclesiastical heads of the apostate Roman empire descend into the lake of fire, in their bodies, without dying, many centuries before Satan or the resurrected wicked are cast into it : just as Enoch and Elijah have ascended to heaven in their bodies, without dying, many centuries before the resurrection of the righteous (Rev. 19 : 20 ; Isaiah 14 : 22 ; 30 : 27–33 ; Dan. 7 : 11 ; 8 : 25 ; [illegible]5 ; 2 Thess. 2 : 8).

But although two out of the three persons of the Antichristian trinity of the dragon, the wild beast and the false prophet, then sink down side by side into everlasting burnings, yet the first of them, Satan the Dragon, will at that time undergo a different fate by being bound with a great chain, and condemned to spend the Millennium separately in the bottomless pit—there to brood in gnawing despair over the ignominious discomfiture of his nefarious plots (Rev. 20 : 1–3 ; Isa. 24 : 21, 22).

At the closing crisis of the above-mentioned battle of Armageddon, the Lord Jesus having visibly descended upon Mount Olivet with all His saints, who had previously been caught up in the first and second Ascensions, and having in the greatness of His strength rent asunder that ancient mountain, from its summit to its base, will be looked upon and acknowledged by the beleaguered Jews in Jerusalem, with deep contrition for their past unbelief, as the promised Messiah whom their forefathers wickedly pierced. And becoming then suddenly converted, according to the typical example of the Apostle Paul, by the personal manifestation of the long-rejected Saviour, they will afterward most zealously preach the Gospel of Christ to those who are left alive among the Gentile nations (Zech. 14 : 4 ; 12 : 9, 10 ; Jude 14 ; Isaiah 63 : 1 ; 61 : 6 ; 11 : 9, 10 : 60 : 3, 11).

Comparatively few survivors will be found anywhere, except among the heathen ; for at this crisis the incorrigible and unrepentant will be cut off by devouring fire being sent upon them. But even some of the combatants at Armageddon will be spared in the general slaughter, and converted and sent as missionaries to the unevangelized communities afar off, and will be instrumental in persuading them to " cast their idols to the moles and to the bats," and to bow down and worship before Jesus only. Simultaneously the dispersed Jews, wheresoever found, will be brought in triumph to Jerusalem as a present to the Lord of hosts (Ezek. 39 : 6 ; Isaiah 66 : 16, 19, 20 ; 2 : 20 ; Dan. 7 : 27 ; Zech. 9 : 10 ; Rom. 11 : 15 ; Isaiah 60 : 9).

The herculean task of burying the slain that fall at Armageddon will occupy the Jews for seven months, and they will not finish the work of burning all the wood found amid the wreck and fragmentary ruins of the battlefield until the end of seven years. Jerusalem will become the earth's millennial metropolis, to which multitudes from every nation will make annual pilgrimages, and Rome, the long-established centre of the world's apostasy, will, by a volcanic earthquake, be rendered a permanent lake of sulphurous flames, in which the Antichristian leaders will apparently be placed during the Millennium, as visible monuments of the enkindled wrath of the Anointed Lamb (Ezekiel 39 : 9, 12 ; Isaiah 51 : 2, 3 ; 9 : 14 ; Micah 4 : 1 ; Zech. 14 : 16 ; Rev. 18 ; 19 : 3 ; Isaiah 66 : 23, 24 ; Ps. 2 : 12).

The few remaining inhabitants of the earth will rapidly increase and multiply during the ten centuries of the Millennium, under the government of the Lord Jesus and the glorified saints, who will come down from day to day from the Heavenly Jerusalem visibly to reign over them, and " the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea" (Rev. 20 : 21 ; Ezek. 40 to 48 Isaiah 11 : 9).

THE MILLENNIUM.

The condition of the earth at the commencement of the Millennium of a thousand years spoken of in the twentieth of Revelation, is also described in the twenty-fourth of Isaiah. " The inhabitants of the earth are burned, and few men left." The few unconverted that are thus left and spared after the two ascensions of the righteous will become, for the most part, truly converted, and constitute the nucleus of the new population that will speedily refill the entire globe.

As the general conflagration, depicted by St. Peter, does not take place until the end of these thousand years of the Day of the Lord, the state of society and of the nations during that period will be somewhat the same as now, except that, instead of " the whole world lying in wickedness," as at present, it will then come to pass that " the earth will be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea" (Ezek. 39 : 6 ; Isaiah 24 : 6 ; 66 : 16 ; Jude 15 ; 2 Thess. 1 : 8 ; 2 Peter 3 : 10 ; 1 John 5 : 19 ; Isaiah 11 : 9 ; Habak 2 : 14).

Then shall Christ have " the heathen for His inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for His possession ;" and " the idols He shall utterly abolish ;" " He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth ;" " for all nations shall come and worship before Him ;" and there shall be given to the Son of Man " dominion and glory and a kingdom, that all people and nations and languages should serve him ;" and " the kingdom, and dominion, and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High ;" " and they shall reign with Christ over the earth for a thousand years" (Psalm 2 : 8 ; Isaiah 2 : 18 ; Zech. 9 : 10 ; Psalm 72 : 8 ; Rev. 15 : 4 ; 11 : 15 ; 20 ; Psalms 86 : 9 ; 66 : 3, 4 ; Dan. 7 : 14, 27 ; 2 : 44 ; Rev. 20 : 6 ; 5 : 10).

People will then cease to maintain standing armies, or formidable navies : for " they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks ; nation shall not lift up sword against nation ; neither shall they learn war any more ; but they shall sit every man under his vine, and under his fig-tree, and none shall make them afraid." The fertility of the soil will be also greatly increased : for " the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose" (Micah 4 : 3, 4 ; Isaiah 2 : 4 ; Hosea 2 : 18).

Venomous reptiles will become innocuous, and the beasts of prey will lose their savage natures ; and the lion and bear shall graze peaceably beside the flocks and herds ; " the wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock" (Isaiah 11 : 6, 7, 8 ; 65 : 25 ; Ezek. 34 : 25 ; Hosea 2 : 18).

Mankind will, however, still continue subject to death, which does not cease until after the Millennium ; but patriarchal length of life will specially be allotted to the Jews ; for amongst them " the child shall die a hundred years old," and " their days shall be as the days of a tree" (Rev. 20 : 14 ; Isaiah 65 : 20, 22). All the Jews surviving Antichrist's persecution will have been restored to Palestine, and will become all righteous and truly converted, and shall all " know the Lord, from the least even unto the greatest," as will also a very large proportion of the Gentiles (Isaiah 60 : 21 ; Jer. 31 : 31–34 ; 32 : 36-44 ; 33 : 7–16; Ezek. 11 : 17–20 ; 28 : 25, 26 ; 34 : 13, 25, 26 ; 36 : 24–28, etc., and in the minor prophets).

According to the fourteenth of Zechariah, there will, however, always remain among the Gentiles some feigned and insincere converts to Christianity, coercively ruled by Messiah, " with a rod of iron," and sometimes insubordinately refusing to attend the annual feast of tabernacles at Jerusalem, to which multitudes from every nation will make yearly pilgrimages ; and at last, after the Millennium, these feigned converts will break out into the Gog and Magog rebellion (Psalm 2 : 9 ; Rev. 19 : 15 ; Zech. 14 : 16–19 ; 8 : 20, 22 ; Isaiah 2 : 1, 3 ; 66 : 23 ; Rev. 20 : 8, 9). This second rebellion of the Magog nations is plainly after the Millennium ; but their first insurrection, described in Ezek. 38, is at the Armageddon War before the Millennium.

